RIGHTS IN ANOTHER'S LAND.

CHAPTER I.

PROFITS.

ANONYMOUS.

COMMON PLEAS. 1534.

[Reported Year-Book 26 Hen. VIII. 4 pl. 15.]

Note that Hales, Apprentice, said : “ Common appendant is of common right, and so it begins at first, and it shall not be appendant except to arable land ; for a man shall not have common appendant to a house, nor to any other land but arable land, and this common a man shall not have except by prescription. For a man cannot make common appendant, for it begins only before time beyond memory, and in it a man shall have sufficient common for his beasts which manure his land to which it is appendant.” To which FITZ-HERBERT [J.] agreed, and said : “ And it is otherwise with common appurtenant ; for a man can make common appurtenant at this day, and can alienate it, and sever it from the land to which it is appurtenant, but so he cannot with common appendant.” And note that it was agreed in the same case that if a manor descends to two parcelers or more, and they make partition, so that each of them has part of the demesne and part of the services, each of them has a manor. Quod nota.

Co. LIT. 122 a. There be four kinds of common of pasture ; viz., common appendant, which is of common right (and therefore a man need not prescribe for it), for beasts commonable, that is, that serve for the maintenance of the plough, as horses and oxen to plough the land, and for kine and sheep to compester the land, and is appendant to arable land.

The second is common appurtenant, that is, for beasts not commonable; as swine, goats, and the like. If a man purchase part of the land wherein common appendant is to be had, the common shall be apportioned, because it is of common right; but not so of a common appurtenant, or of any other common of what nature soever. But both common appendant and appurtenant shall be apportioned by alienation of part of the land to which common is appendant or appurtenant; and for common appurtenant one must prescribe.

The third is common per cause de vicinage, which differeth from both the other commons, for that no man can put his beasts therein, but they must escape thither of themselves by reason of vicinity; in which case one may enclose against the other, though it hath been so used time out of mind, for that it is but an excuse for trespass.¹

The last is common in gross, which is so called, for that it appertaineth to no land, and must be by writing or prescription. Of common appendant, appurtenant, and in gross, some be certain, that is, for a certain number of beasts; some certain by consequent, viz., for such as be levant and couchant upon the land; and some be more uncertain, as commons sauis nōber in gross, and yet the tenant of the land must common or feed there also.²

There be also divers other commons, as of estovers, of turbary, of pischary, of digging for coals, minerals, and the like. If common appendant be claimed to a manor, yet in rei veritate it is appendant to the demesnes, and not to the services; and therefore if a tenancy escheat, the lord shall not increase his common by reason of that. If a man claim by prescription any manner of common in another man's land, and that the owner of the land shall be excluded to have pasture, estovers, or the like, this is a prescription or custom against the law, to exclude the owner of the soil; for it is against the nature of this word common, and it was implied in the first grant, that the owner of the soil should take his reasonable profit there, as it hath been adjudged. But a man may prescribe or allege a custom to have and enjoy solam vesturam terrae from such a day till such a day, and hereby the owner of the soil shall be excluded to pasture or feed there; and so he may prescribe to have separalem pasturam, and exclude the owner of the

² "Amongst the older authorities there appears, certainly, some difference of opinion as to the meaning of the expression 'levant and couchant.' There is one set of cases in which it is laid down, that the term 'cattle levant and couchant upon enclosed land' means such cattle as are actually used for the purpose of manuring and cultivating the enclosed land. The rule now is, that such cattle only are to be holden levant and couchant upon the enclosed land, as that land will keep during the winter. It has been argued, that the rule includes such as the land will keep during the whole, or any part, of the year; but that is not so. The real question is, Has this defendant soil from feeding there.¹ Nota diversitatem. So a man may prescribe to have separalem pischariam in such a water, and the owner of the soil shall not fish there; but if he claim to have communiam pischariae, or liberam pischariam, the owner of the soil shall fish there. And all this hath been resolved.

Co. Litt. 164 b. The Lord Mountjoy, seised of the manor of Canford in fee, did by deed entended and inrolled bargain and sell the same to Browne in fee, in which indenture this clause was contained. Provided always, and the said Browne did covenant and grant to and with the said Lord Mountjoy, his heirs and assigns, that the Lord Mountjoy, his heirs and assigns, might dig for ore in the lands (which were great wastes) parcel of the said manor, and to dig turf also for the making of allome. And in this case three points were resolved by all the judges. First, that this did amount to a grant of an interest and inheritance to the Lord Mountjoy, to dig, &c. Secondly, that notwithstanding this grant, Browne, his heirs and assigns might dig also, and like to the case of common sauns nōmber. Thirdly, that the Lord Mountjoy might assign his whole interest to one, two, or more; but then, if there be two or more, they could make no division of it, but work together with one stock; neither could the Lord Mountjoy, &c., assign his interest in any part of the waste to one or more, for that might work a prejudice and a surcharge to the tenant of the land; and therefore if such an uncertain inheritance descendeth to two coparceners, it cannot be divided between them.²

THE king's grantee or patentee of the herbage of a forest shall have trespass against any one who consumes or destroys the grass, but not the trees nor the fruit of them; and also shall take beasts damage-feasants there; and the writ of trespass shall be quare clausum fregit, as well as if it had been of land. And by the opinion of three judges in B. R. in Trin. Term, 2 H. 8 [Keilw. 159 b], the patentee may inclose the forest by such grant, &c.³

turned more cattle upon the common than the winter eatage of his ancient tenement, together with the hay and other produce obtained from it during the summer, is capable of maintaining?" Per PARKE, B., in Whitelock v. Hutchinson, 2 Moo. & R. 205 (1839). And see Carr v. Lambert, L. R. 1 Ex. 168.

TYRRINGHAM'S CASE.

[Reported 4 Co. 36 b.]

IN trespass between Pheasant, plaintiff, and Salmon, defendant, the case was such: Tho. Tyrringham was seised of an house, 44 acres of land, 7 acres of meadow, and 2 acres of pasture, in Titchmersh in the county of Northampton; to which house, land, meadow and pasture, he and all those whose estate he had, had used to have common of pasture for oxen, cows, and heifers levant and couchant upon the house, land, meadow, and pasture, as well in 30 acres of land in the same town (whereof one John Pickering was then seised in fee), as in 40 acres of land and pasture in Titchmersh aforesaid (whereof one Boniface Pickering was then seised in fee) as to the said house, land, meadow, and pasture appertaining. And afterwards the said Boniface Pickering being seised as aforesaid, of the said 40 acres, purchased to him and his heirs the said house, 44 acres of land, 7 acres of meadow, and 2 acres of pasture, to which, &c., and being so seised as well of the said 40 acres in which, as of the said tenements to which, &c., demised the house, land, meadow, and pasture to which, &c., to Pheasant, who put in two cows into the said 30 acres to use the said common, and the said Salmon, who was farmer of the said John Pickering, with a little dog, leviter et moliter drove out the said cows, and the said Pheasant brought his action of trespass for chasing his cattle. In this case divers points were resolved by WRAY, C. J., SIR THOMAS GAWDY, et totam curiam: First,¹ . . . 2. It was resolved that common appendant may be apportioned for two reasons: 1. Because it is of common right, and therefore if the commoner purchases parcel of the land in which, &c., yet the common shall be apportioned; as if the lord purchases parcel of the warren, with which the defendant has nothing to do. So if one grants the vesture of his land for a term of years, if the grantor, who has the freehold in the land, takes the vesture or the profit which was his [the grantee's] by reason of the grant, he shall have an action; for he does not bring the action of the land, but of the chattel. And the law is the same of a grant made of trees, and the grantee cuts them down, and the grantor takes them, a good action of trespass quare vi et armis lies for taking the trees, because they are his chattels. And so where one has a liberty or profit in a freehold, and he who has the freehold does an injury to this liberty or profit that he has in his land, it is right that he should be punished vi et armis; for he has nothing to do with them, but with his land and freehold, of which the other does not bring his action. And so as the lessee has a term, which is not now part of the defendant's freehold, it is right that he [the lessor] should be punished for entering the close, because he has given the close to another for the time, and the lessee will not use the action for the freehold. And all the cases put were held for law." Anon., 5 Hen. VII. 10 (1490).

¹ The first resolution, in which it was held that the common was appurtenant, not appendant, is omitted.

the tenancy, the rent shall be apportioned ; so if A. has common appendant to 20 acres of land, and enfeoffs B. of part of the said 20 acres to which, &c., this common shall be apportioned, and B. shall have common pro rata. And where it was objected : 1. that the prescription fails in both the cases ; for in the first case he never had common in part of the land only, but entirely in all ; and it would be now a prejudice to the terre-tenant if he should have common in the 30 acres only for all the cattle levant and couchant upon all the tenements to which, &c. And in the latter case, no common was ever appendant to part of the land, but entirely to the whole ; also, 2. In assise of common all the terre-tenants ought to be named, and that cannot be when the commoner himself has purchased part of the land. As to these objections, it was answered and resolved, that as to the 1st, the prescrip. ought to be special, sc., to prescribe to have common in the whole till such a day, and then to show the purchase of part, and from that time that he has put in his cattle into the residue pro rata portione ; as in the cases, when a corporation has liberties by prescription, and within time of memory the corporation is altered, there ought to be a special prescription ; as to the second case, sc., when part of the land to which, &c., is aliened, there, every of them may prescribe to have common for cattle levant and couchant upon his land, and in none of these cases any prejudice accrues to the tenant of the land in which the common is to be had, for he shall not be charged with more upon the matter than he was before the severance ; and God forbid the law should not be so, when part of the land to which, &c., is aliened ; for otherwise many commons in England (which God forbid) would be annihilated and lost ; and it was agreed, that such common, which is admeasurable, shall remain after the severance of part of the land to which, &c. But in the case at bar, forasmuch as the court resolved, that the common was appurtenant and not appendant, and so against common right, it was adjudged, that by the said purchase all the common was extinct ; for in such case, common appurtenant cannot be extinct in part, and be in esse for part by the act of the parties. And as to the last objection, it was answered and resolved, that if upon the matter the common appendant should be apportioned, then the terre-tenant should be only named out of the land charged with the residue of the common, as in case where a rent-charge is apportioned in case of descent, the tenant of the land shall be only named out of which the residue of the rent which remains issues. And it was said, in this case, this word (pertinens) is Latin as well for appurtenant as for appendant, and therefore subjecta materia, and the circumstance of the case ought to direct the court to judge the common to be appendant, or appurtenant.¹

TOTTELL v. HOWELL.

COMMON PLEAS. 1595.

[Reported Noy, 54.]

It was held by the court that herbagium, for years, cannot be granted without deed. Note 17 E. 4, 6.¹

DRURY v. KENT.

KING'S BENCH. 1603.

[Reported Cro. Jac. 14.]

REPLEVIN. Upon a special verdict the case was, A man prescribes to have common appurtenant to the manor of B. for all his beasts levant and couchant upon it: he grants this common to A. Whether this grant were good or no? was the question. And adjudged, that he could not grant it over, for he hath it quasi sub modo, viz., for the beasts levant and couchant; no more than estovers to be burnt in a house certain: but common appurtenant for beasts certain may be granted over. Wherefore it was adjudged ut supra.

SMITH v. GATEWOOD.

[Reported Cro. Jac. 152.]

TRESPASS in a place called Horsington Holms. The defendant justifies, for that Stixwold is an ancient vill adjoining to the place where, &c., and that within the said vill is, and time whereof, &c., hath been such a custom: that every inhabitant within any ancient messuage within the said vill, by reason of his commorancy therein, hath had common in the place where, for all his great beasts, at all times of the year, &c.; and so justifies as an inhabitant. And it was thereupon demurred, Whether such a prescription and usage in a vill for the inhabitants for common and matter of profit be good?

After argument at bar and bench, it was resolved, that it was not good; for inhabitants, unless they be incorporated, cannot prescribe to have profit in another's soil, but only in matters of easement, as in a way or causey to church, or such like: so in matters of discharge, as to be discharged of toll, or of tithes, or in modo decimandi, or the like: but to have interest it cannot be; for that ought to be by persons enabled, who are always to have continuance: for if there should be such prescription, then, if any of the inhabitants depart from their ancient houses, and the house continues empty, the inheritance of the common should be suspended; which cannot be. Nor can such a common be released; for if one inhabitant should release, another which succeeded him might claim it; which is against the rules of law, that an inheritance in a profit should not be discharged: and by such prescription a maid-servant or child who resides in the house is said to be an inhabitant, and to have the benefit of the common; which would be inconvenient. Wherefore they all resolved, that such a custom alleged by way of usage (not otherwise) is not good; and adjudged it for the plaintiff. It was said to be so resolved in Trinity Term, 33 Eliz. Roll. 422, Lawrence v. Hull; and Coke cited, that in 19 Hen. 8, in Spelman's Reports, it was adjudged accordingly in this court. Vide 7 Edw. 4, pl. 26; 15 Edw. 4, pl. 29; 18 Edw. 4, pl. 3; 20 Edw. 4, pl. 10; 9 Hen. 6, pl. 62; 18 Hen. 8; pl. 1.¹

PITT v. CHICK.

[Reported Hutt. 45.]

MATTHEW PITT brought replevin against Chick; the defendant avow, for that the place contains five acres, which lie between the lands of Sir George Speck: and that the said Sir George Speck and all his ancestors, de temps d'out, &c., have used to have herbage and pasture of the said five acres, viz. if they were sown, then after the reaping until re-sowing; and if they were not sown, then for the whole year, and convey title to the said herbage by lease in writing to him, and avow damage feasant.

And it was urged, that he which had all the profit for a time, and the sole profit, had the freehold; and that is not a thing which lie in prescription semble al common, or to pasture for a certain number of years: and it was said, that a grant de vestura terræ, or de herbag. terræ for one and twenty years, is a good lease. But it was adjudged, that it is a good avowry, and he had only profit a prender, and that

[Reported 11 M. & W. 33.]

CASE for an injury to the plaintiff's reversion in certain closes or parcels of land in the occupation of one Gill, as tenant thereof to the plaintiff; alleging, that without the leave or license of the plaintiff, the defendants dug and excavated divers holes and pits, and erected and fixed divers engines, gins, buildings, and posts on the said closes and parcels of land, and dug, worked, and won therein divers large quantities of coal, and carried away and converted the same, and also prostrated, subverted, and injured the crops, fences, earth, and soil of the said closes or parcels of land, and cut down certain trees growing on the same, and undermined a portion thereof, &c.

Second plea, as to the cutting, digging, excavating, and making the holes, pits, and trenches in the declaration mentioned, and erecting and fixing the engines, gins, buildings, and posts in the declaration mentioned in and upon the said closes and parcels of land, and digging, working, and winning the quantities of coal in the declaration mentioned, and drawing, carrying away, converting, and disposing of the same to their the defendants' own use, and prostrating, subverting, and injuring the crops, fences, and earth and soil in the declaration mentioned, and undermining a portion of the same closes and parcels of land in the declaration mentioned; that John Proud deceased, and all his ancestors, whose heir he was, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary until the time of making the indenture hereinafter mentioned, have had, and have been used and accustomed to have, and of right ought to have had, for himself and themselves, all the coals and veins of coal in and under the said closes and parcels of land in which, &c., and full and free liberty at all times of the year to enter into and upon the said closes and parcels of land in which, &c., and to cut, dig into, and excavate the same for the purpose of searching for, mining, and winning the coals in and under the same, and to make adits, shafts, and entrances into the mines of coal and veins of coal in and under the said closes and parcels of land in which, &c., and to do all necessary acts therein and thereon for the purpose aforesaid. The plea then alleged, that by deeds of lease and release, dated the 2d and 3d of September, 1841, the said John Proud bargained and sold the said coal, mines of coal, veins of coal, and premises to one William Richardson, and the defendants then justified the trespasses as the servants of Richardson.

The third plea was framed upon the Stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, § 2, and alleged, that for the full period of thirty years next before the commencement of this suit, the said John Proud, deceased, and his ancestors, whose heir he was, and the said William Richardson, that is to say, the said John Proud and his ancestors, whose heir he was, before and up to the time of making the indenture first hereinafter mentioned, and the said William Richardson from the time of making the same indenture, have actually taken and enjoyed, as of right and without interruption, all the coals and veins of coal, and mines of coal, in and under the said closes and parcels of land, and have during all that time, as of right and without interruption, at all times of the year, entered into and upon the said closes and parcels of land in which, &c., and then cut, dug into, and excavated the same for the purpose of searching for, mining, and winning the coals in and under the same, and made adits, shafts, and entrances into the said mines of coal and veins of coal in and under the same closes and parcels of land, and done all necessary acts therein and thereon for the purpose aforesaid, &c.

Special demurrer to each of these pleas, and joinder in demurrer.

The points marked for argument in the margin were as follows: As to the second plea: that all the coals, veins of coal, and mines of coal in and under the said closes in which, &c., and full and free liberty to enter upon the said closes in which, &c., to dig, &c., the same, as claimed by the defendants, are corporeal hereditaments, a title to which cannot be made by prescription. As to the third plea: that the defendants claim a corporeal hereditament, and that to such a claim the Stat. 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71, does not apply.

W. H. Watson, in support of the demurrer.

Martin, contra.

LORD ABINGER, C. B. I think this is clearly a prescription to land. A vein of coal is land, unless distinguished from the land by the deed of conveyance. I have little doubt that if Mr. Martin were to search the Year-Books, he would find cases to show that such a claim is contrary to law. The defendants may amend on payment of costs.

PARKE, B. This is not a claim of a prescriptive right to take coal in the plaintiff's close, but a prescription for all the strata and seams of coal lying under it, that is, for a part of the soil itself, and not for the right to get the coal, which would be the subject of a grant. Possibly the defendants may be able to amend, by pleading a seisin in fee in the strata of coal, or by prescribing for the right to take coals in the plaintiff's close. With respect to the last argument urged on behalf of the defendants, according to that a man might set up a prescriptive right to a farm and lands, together with a right of way over an adjoining close.

ALDERSON, B., and GURNEY, B., concurred.

Leave to the defendants to amend on payment of costs, otherwise,

RACE v. WARD.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1855.

[Reported 4 E. & B. 702.]

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J.,² now delivered the judgment of the court.

The first count of the declaration is for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close in the township of Horbury, and committing various trespasses therein. The defendants justify under an immemorial custom in the said township for all the inhabitants for the time being in the said township to have the liberty and privilege to have and take water from a certain well or spring of water in the said close in which, &c., and to carry the same to their respective dwelling-houses in the said township, to be used and consumed therein for domestic purposes.

The plaintiff demurs: and it has been argued before us that the plea is bad, because it claims a right for all the inhabitants of the township to take a profit à prendre in alieno solo.

But we are of opinion that no such right is claimed by the alleged custom. The action is not for taking water, the property of the plaintiff; and no such action could be supported unless the water were contained in a cistern or some vessel in which he had placed it for his private use. The defendants have to answer the charge of having unlawfully broken and entered the plaintiff's close, and trampled and injured his grass growing there, &c. In doing so they certainly claim a right by immemorial custom, in all the inhabitants of the township, to take water from a spring issuing from the close, and to carry it to their dwelling-houses for domestic purposes; but this claim is made with the view of excusing the alleged trespasses in entering the close and injuring the grass, &c.

The water which they claim a right to take is not the produce of the plaintiff's close; it is not his property; it is not the subject of property. Blackstone, following other elementary writers, classes water with the elements of light and air (vol. 2, p. 14). Afterwards, having stated that a man cannot bring an action to recover possession of a pool or other piece of water, either calculating its capacity, as for so many cubical yards, or by superficial measure for twenty acres of water, he gives the reason: "For water is a movable, wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature." Ib. p. 18. It is not disputed that this would be so with respect to the water of a river or any open running stream. We think it is equally true as to the water of a spring, when it first issues from the ground. This is no part of the soil, like sand, or clay, or stones; nor the produce of the soil, like grass, or turves, or trees. A right to take these by custom, claimed by all the inhabitants of a district, would clearly be bad; for they all come under the category of profit à prendre, being part of the soil or the produce of the soil; and such a claim, which might leave nothing for the owner of the soil, is wholly inconsistent with the right of property in the soil. But the spring of water is supplied and renewed by nature; it must have flowed from a distance by an underground channel; and, when it issues from the ground, till appropriated for use, it flows onward by the law of gravitation. While it remains in the field where it issues forth, in the absence of any servitude or custom giving a right to others, the owner of the field, and he only, has a right to appropriate it; for no one else can do so without committing a trespass upon the field; but when it has left his field, he has no more power over it, or interest in it, than any other stranger.

For these reasons it has been considered that the inhabitants of a district may, by custom, have a right to go upon the soil of another to take or to use water. On examining the Year-Book, Trin. 15 Ed. 4, fol. 29 A, pl. 7, cited at the bar, it would appear that Genney, as counsel, says it would be a good prescription that all the inhabitants in such a vill have used from time immemorial to have the water in such a pond to drink, &c. Catesby, then a judge,¹ assents to this, and he likens it to a custom for all the fishermen,² inhabitants in a particular vill, to have a right to dry their nets on a particular close. There the word "prescription" is used; but there is no prescription stated in a que estate; and a customary right by reason of inhabitancy in a particular district is evidently described and intended.

In Weekly v. Wildman, 1 Ld. Raym. 407, we find certain obiter dicta upon this subject which are entitled to some weight. "Blencowe, J. Inhabitants may have a custom to have pot water, which is an interest, and not barely an easement. But Powell, J., denied that, and said that it is only an easement." Both these learned judges agree that inhabitants may have a right to enter the soil of another to take pot water; and only differ as to the name to be given to it.

Manning v. Wasdole, 5 A. & E. 758, appears to be an express adjudication in favor of such a custom. The first count of the declaration claimed a right in the plaintiff, as occupier of an ancient messuage within the parish of St. Ives, to wash and water his cattle in a certain pond, and also to take and use the water of the said pond for domestic purposes, for the more convenient use and enjoyment of the said messuage, at all times, at his free will and pleasure. But, in the second count, the plaintiff claimed the same right merely as an inhabitant householder of the parish. After a very learned and powerful argument from my brother Wightman, then at the bar, and counsel for the defendant, to the effect that the plaintiff claimed a profit à prendre in alieno solo, and that both counts were bad, Lord Denman said: "It is not consistent with ordinary language to call the taking of water a profit à prendre." He then (without adverting to the second count) said that at all events the declaration was good, the claim being made in respect of the plaintiff's house. Patteson, J., was proceeding to give judgment on the same ground, when, his attention being directed by the defendant's counsel to the second count, he says: "It is then necessary to decide the other question; and I am of opinion that this is not a profit à prendre, which must be something taken out of the soil." And now he goes on to lay down the position that "inhabitants of a parish might have a right to an easement of this sort." Williams, J., agreed that this did not appear to be a profit à prendre, and my brother Coleridge, who, from the questions he puts during the argument, shows that he had very deliberately considered the subject, says: "My judgment rests upon a ground which makes the difference between the two counts immaterial. I think the right claimed in each is a mere easement."

The authorities relied upon by Mr. Unthank are not inconsistent with this doctrine. His quotation from Bracton does not prove that the right to take water when flowing in its natural course is a profit à prendre; and the learned author of that treatise, by the words he uses immediately after, shows that he was well aware of the distinction between such water and water in a cistern, which is the subject of private property.

In Wickham v. Hawker, 7 M. & W. 63, the Court of Exchequer held that a "liberty, with servants or otherwise, to come into and upon" lands, "and there to hawk, hunt, fish, and fowl," is a profit à prendre within the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 W. 4, c. 71; but that liberty and a liberty to take water are so different that they furnish no safe analogy to guide us in this case.

In Blewett v. Tregonning, 3 A. & E. 554, this court held an alleged custom to be bad for all the inhabitants occupying lands in a district to enter a close and take therefrom reasonable quantities of sand which had drifted thereupon, for the purpose of manuring their lands. The reason was that the drifted sand had become part of the close, so that the claim was to take a profit in alieno solo; but the water to be taken never had become part of the close ; nor was it the produce of the close.

The plaintiff's counsel lastly referred to the recent decision of the House of Lords in Dyce v. Lady James Hay, 1 Macqueen, 305, in which the Lord Chancellor said that neither by the law of Scotland or of England can there be a prescriptive right, in the nature of a servitude or easement, so large as to preclude the ordinary uses of property by the owner of the lands affected. But no such consequence will follow from the customary easement claimed in the present case ; and it does not interfere with the ordinary uses of the plaintiff's close so much as the custom would which was held to be valid in Tyson v. Smith, 6 A. & E. 745 ; 9 A. & E. 406, that, at fairs holden on the waste of a manor, every liege subject exercising the trade of a victualler might enter, at the time of the fairs, and erect a booth, and continue the same a reasonable time after the fairs, for the more convenient carrying on his calling.

As to customary rights claimed by reason of inhabitancy, the distinction has always been between a mere easement and a profit à prendre. A custom for all the inhabitants of a vill to dance on a particular close at all times of the year, at their free will, for their recreation, has been held good, this being a mere easement, Abbot v. Weekly, 1 Lev. 176 ; and we held, last term, that, to a declaration for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close and taking his fish, a custom pleaded for all the inhabitants of the parish to angle and catch fish in the locus in quo was bad, as this was a profit à prendre, and might lead to the destruction of the subject-matter to which the alleged custom applied.¹

For these reasons we think that in the present case the plea to the first count is sufficient.

There is a second count in the declaration, very informally drawn, which, when examined, appears to be likewise a count in trespass quare clausum fregit ; and the plea to it is substantially the same as that pleaded to the first count. We are therefore of opinion that upon the whole record there must be judgment for the defendants.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J. We must act upon that salutary law which distinguishes between a mere easement and the right to take a profit. It is a good custom for all the inhabitants of a parish to dance in a particular spot, or the like ; but a custom to take as a profit what is valuable would be very injurious to the owner, and of but little benefit to the inhabitants, and is bad. Such being the settled law, we are to apply it to this case. It is clear to me that the custom claimed on this plea is to angle for, catch, and carry away the fish ; but, supposing it were limited, as Mr. Brown argues, to a claim to angle for and catch the fish, without claiming a right to carry them away, I think it would be equally destructive of the subject-matter and bad.

BAILEY v. STEPHENS.

[Reported 12 C. B. N. S. 91.]

THE first count of the declaration stated that the defendant, on the 1st of November, 1861, and on divers other days and times between that day and the commencement of the suit, broke and entered a certain close of land of the plaintiff called Short Cliffe Wood, enclosed by a hedge-fence, and bounded on the northwest by other lands of the plaintiff, and on the southeast by lands in the occupation of one James Emery, situate in the parish of Blagdon, in the county of Somerset; and that the defendant then felled, cut down, prostrated, and destroyed two trees of the plaintiff in the said close called Short Cliffe Wood, there then standing and growing, and took and carried away the same and converted and disposed thereof to his own use.

There was also a count for money lent, money paid, money had and received, and money found due upon accounts stated.

The defendants pleaded, — first (to the first count) not guilty; secondly, that the said close and trees were not respectively the close and trees of the plaintiff.

Third plea, — that at the time of the alleged trespass, William York was seised in his demesne as of fee of and in a certain close called Bloody Field, immediately adjoining the said close of the plaintiff, and that the said William York and all those whose estate he had, and his and their tenants, had from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary enjoyed the right, at their free will and pleasure, to enter by themselves and their servants upon a part or strip, to wit, a lugfall¹ of the said close of the plaintiff, adjoining the said close of the said William York, for the purpose of cutting down and carrying away, and to cut down and carry away and convert to his and their own use the trees and wood growing and being on the said strip or lugfall, as to the said close of the said William York appertaining; and that the said William York before the alleged trespass demised the said Bloody Field, with its appurtenances, to James Emery, for a term of years not yet expired, who entered into possession of the same, and was before and at the time of the alleged trespass in possession thereof under the said demise as tenant thereof to the said William York; and that the said trees in the declaration mentioned were growing and being on the said strip or lugfall, and that the alleged trespass was committed by the defendant as the servant and by the authority of the said James Emery, and on his behalf, on the said strip or lugfall, and not elsewhere in the said close of the plaintiff, in the exercise of the said right, and was a user by the said James Emery of the said right.

Fourth plea,—that the said James Emery, at the time of the alleged trespass, was possessed of the said land called Bloody Field, immediately adjoining the said close of the plaintiff as aforesaid, and that the occupiers thereof for sixty years before this suit enjoyed, as of right, and without interruption, the right to enter at their free will and pleasure, by themselves and their servants, into a part or strip, to wit, a lugfall, of the said close of the plaintiff, next adjoining the said land of the said James Emery, for the purpose of cutting down and carrying away, and to cut down and carry away and convert to their own use, the trees and wood growing and being in the said strip or lugfall, as to the said land of the said James Emery appertaining; that the said trees in the declaration mentioned were growing and being on the said strip or lugfall; and that the said trespass was committed by the defendant as the servant and by the authority of the said James Emery, and on his behalf, in the said strip or lugfall, and not elsewhere in the said close of the plaintiff, in the exercise of the said last-named right, and was a user by the said James Emery of the said right.

Fifth plea,—that the said James Emery, at the time of the alleged trespass, was possessed of the said land called Bloody Field immediately adjoining the said close of the plaintiff as aforesaid, and that the occupiers thereof for thirty years before this suit enjoyed as of right and without interruption the right to enter at their free will and pleasure, by themselves and their servants, into a part or strip, to wit, a lugfall, of the said close of the plaintiff, next adjoining the said land of the said James Emery, for the purpose of cutting down and carrying away, and to cut down and carry away and convert to their own use, the trees and wood growing and being in the said strip or lugfall, as to the said land called Bloody Field appertaining; that the said trees in the declaration mentioned were growing and being in the said strip or lugfall; and that the said alleged trespass was committed by the defendant as the servant and by the authority of the said James Emery, and on his behalf, in the said strip or lugfall, and not elsewhere in the said close of the plaintiff, in the exercise of the last-named right, and as a user by the said James Emery of the said right.

Sixth plea,—that, at the time of the alleged trespass, the said William York was seised in his demesne as of fee of and in the said close of land called Bloody Field, immediately adjoining the said close of the plaintiff as aforesaid, and long before the time of the alleged trespass, by a deed made between the then owner of the said close now of the plaintiff, and which said owner was then seised thereof in fee, and the then owner of the said land called Bloody Field, who was then seised in fee of the said last-named land, and whose estate therein the said William York at the time of the said alleged trespass had (but which deed had been lost or destroyed by accident), the said then owner of the close now of the plaintiff granted to the said then owner of the said land called Bloody Field, his heirs and assigns, the right for himself and themselves, and his and their tenants, occupiers of the said land for the time being, at their free will and pleasure, by themselves and their servants, to enter upon a certain strip of the said close of the plaintiff, next adjoining the said close called Bloody Field, to wit, a lugfall of the said close of the plaintiff, measured from the boundary of the said two closes, for the purpose of cutting down and carrying away, and to cut down, carry away, and convert to his and their own use, the trees and wood growing and being in the said strip or lugfall, as to the said close called Bloody Field appertaining; that the said James Emery was at the time of the alleged trespass tenant to the said William York of the said close called Bloody Field, and as such tenant, and by virtue of the said grant, was entitled to the right, at his free will and pleasure, by himself and his servants, of entering into the said strip or lugfall for the purpose aforesaid, and of cutting down, carrying away, and converting to his own use the trees and wood growing and being in the said strip or lugfall; that the said trees in the declaration mentioned were growing and being in the said strip or lugfall; and that the said trespass was committed by the defendant as the servant and by the authority of the said James Emery, and on his behalf, in the said strip or lugfall, and not elsewhere in the said close of the plaintiff, in the exercise of the said last-named right, and was a user by the said James Emery of the said right.

Seventh plea, to the residue of the declaration, never indebted.

The plaintiff demurred to the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth pleas, the ground of demurral stated in the margin being, "that the plea shows no defence to the action, and claims too large a right." Joinder.

Prideaux, contra.

ERLE, C. J. We are much obliged to Mr. Prideaux for the assistance he has afforded us; but, after giving the best attention I could to his able argument, I come to the conclusion that the pleas are bad, and therefore that our judgment must be for the plaintiff. The pleas set up a right in the occupiers of the close of the defendant to go upon the close of the plaintiff and to take all the wood that shall be growing there. It is a claim, therefore, of a right appurtenant to the land of the defendant, to take all the profits of the land of the plaintiff, wholly unconnected with the defendant's land; and to take that as passing with the estate of the defendant. Now, all the diligence and all the learning that Mr. Prideaux has brought to bear upon the matter have failed to enable him to produce any authority for such a right as that which the defendant here claims. The case of Douglas v. Kendal, Cro. Jac. 256, was a prescription for the owner of an estate to take, as appurtenant to that estate, all the thorns that should grow upon the land of the plaintiff, to be used at the house and in the tenement of the defendant; and it falls within a class of cases perfectly well known to the law, that the owner of an estate may claim, as appurtenant to that estate, a profit to be taken in the land of another, to be used upon the land of the party claiming the profit. But that does not bear upon the present case, because this is a claim by the owners or occupiers of the defendant's close to cut down the trees on the plaintiff's land, and to sell and dispose of them at pleasure, wholly irrespective of the land of the defendant. Mr. Prideaux has further cited the case of Sir Francis Barrington, 8 Co. Rep. 136; Liford's Case, 11 Co. Rep. 46 b, and several other cases, which show that the owner of land may grant to a man and his heirs the right to take, for instance, all the wood or all the grass that shall grow upon the land of the grantor. That would be what we call a grant in gross passing to him and his heirs; and it may be construed to mean all the land or all the pasture, that is, the surface of the land; or it may be construed to be a profit à prendre, — a profit taken out of the land, and lying in grant. All the cases to which our attention was drawn as supporting the defendant's argument have been cases where the grant is in gross, to a man and his heirs, and not to a man and all who may thereafter occupy a certain close. That class of cases, therefore, can have no bearing on this. The case of Hoskins v. Robins, 2 Wms. Saund. 323, has been much pressed. There, there was a prescription very nearly to the effect of that claimed here; but I think the distinction which I pointed out in the course of the argument was one that is fully justified by our law: it was a claim to have the pasture by one of the customary tenants of a manor against the lord of the manor. There are many rights well known in manors, and capable of being supported, which arise entirely out of, and are dependent upon, the peculiar relation between the lord and the copyholder; but the analogy cannot be borne out between those cases and a case like this. All cases of grants are supposed to pass between the tenant in fee simple of the servient tenement and the tenant in fee simple of the dominant tenement, wholly irrespective of the rights of any other. The case of Stanley v. White, 14 East, 332, and other cases stand upon the reservation of a right, — the reservation of a right (construed to be a reservation of the land itself) in the trees. It is a claim of the land, not a claim, as this is prescribed, of a right as appurtenant to the estate, and yet wholly unconnected with the estate, — a right to take all the growth of a certain kind upon the land. I cannot find any authority for such a claim. The case of Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164, cited for the plaintiff, is strong to show that the owner of the dominant tenement cannot claim, as appurtenant to that tenement, a profit wholly unconnected with the enjoyment of the right of property in the dominant tenement. I therefore think the claim set up upon the present occasion is not supported by any authority, and that our judgment must be against the defendant.

WILLES, J. I am of the same opinion. With reference to the first plea, which sets up a prescriptive right, it amounts to this, that, before the time of legal memory, some one made a grant to some one else, whereby the occupiers of the defendant's close for the time being, ad infinitum, were to be entitled to cut all the trees growing in the close of which the plaintiff was in possession at the time the trespass was committed. The simple answer to that, is, that it is not an incident which can be annexed by law to the ownership, much less to the occupation, of the land. I wish to guard myself against being supposed to deny that there may be a grant by A. to B. of the right to enter and cut trees in a given close, analogous to that which one has seen in mining setts, of the right to enter and to work mines within a given area, and to take away the minerals there found,—a grant of a right to work and take minerals, unaccompanied by a grant of the mines themselves. I also wish to guard myself against being supposed to say that the interest in either of those grants cannot be assigned over, so that the assignee could not exercise it against the original grantor. It is unnecessary to express any opinion upon that. But, for all these positions, when it may become necessary to decide them, it may be well to refer to the case of Muskett v. Hill, 5 N. C. 694, 7 Scott, 855, where it was held that a license to search for and raise minerals, and also to carry them away and convert them to the licensee's own use, passes an interest which is capable of being assigned. In the judgment in that very important case, which appears to have received great consideration, a passage is cited from Vaughan's Reports (Thomas v. Sorrel, Vaughan, 351), where it is said: “A dispensation or license properly passeth no interest, nor alters or transfers property in anything, but only makes an action lawful which without it had been unlawful; as, a license to go beyond the seas, to hunt in a man's park, to come into his house,—are only actions which, without license, had been unlawful. But a license to hunt in a man's park, and carry away the deer killed to his own use; to cut down a tree in a man's ground, and to carry it away the next day after to his own use,—are licenses as to the acts of hunting and cutting down, but as to the carrying away the deer killed and tree cut down, they are grants.” And, that such a grant to a man and his assigns carries an interest which is assignable, appears from the cases which are referred to in that judgment. But assuming such grants have been made, I apprehend it is clear they can only be made in gross. They convey an interest to the grantees, which grantees, if they wish to convey, must convey by the ordinary conveyances known to the law; and it is not because the grantee may happen to be the owner of the close at the time at which the grant is made to him, that such a conveyance may be dispensed with in favor of the person who may from time to time thereafter become the owner of the freehold of the close, or take the license of the owner of the freehold in the close. And the reason is a simple one, and it will be found in that class of cases now not often referred to, because the law depends principally upon the Statute of Henry the Eighth. I mean the case of a conveyance by which a certain incident is granted which, though beneficial to the grantee of the land so long as he remains the owner of it, and beneficial in respect of his ownership of the land, can be of no benefit to any other person. And the authorities are to this effect, that at common law, a benefit of that description went into whosesoever hands the land might pass. The exception was the case of landlord and tenant, where the benefit runs, but, in the case of the freehold interest, the benefit only runs, and the burden does not,—a distinction which has been overlooked at least on one occasion. But in order to enable the assignee of the land to take advantage of such a benefit, it must be a benefit falling within the definition I have given,—a definition frequently given with reference to the question whether a covenant runs with a reservation in cases arising under the Statute of Henry the Eighth, whether it was beneficial to the land and beneficial in respect of the ownership of the land, and not beneficial to any other person. Probably a further limit may be put, namely, whether the incident was an incident of the ordinary and usual kind. With these limits, there is no doubt the benefit granted to the owner in fee of the land might pass to the owner in fee who succeeds him, either by inheritance or by grant. The occupier might well plead by way of prescription such a right, because it might have been acquired by grant; but, in respect of a matter that does not fall within that description, it is perfectly clear it cannot be made appurtenant; and, if it cannot be made appurtenant, you cannot of course prescribe a claim in respect of it, but must claim by showing there has been a conveyance of the right. This plea does not show any conveyance of the right to him, but simply shows that the tenant or occupier has the surface of the land to which it is alleged to be annexed. The law on this subject is adverted to, I observe, in the 3d edition of Gale on Easements, in the notes in pp. 10-13; and also in the case of Welcome v. Upton, 6 M. & W. 536, where the question arose whether the Prescription Act does or does not apply to a case of easement in gross. There is no doubt an easement in gross could not be claimed by an occupier under the Prescription Act, because under the Prescription Act, as has been pointed out already, the claim is by custom, prescription, or grant; and there is no doubt that a right could not be acquired under that Act, by twenty, thirty, or sixty years' enjoyment, according as it might be, whether an easement or a profit à prendre, except it was capable of being annexed to land within the rule I have mentioned. But the question has arisen whether it is not possible to plead a right in gross in the manner pointed out by the subsequent section, not a section giving the right, but a section giving the mode of pleading. It is perfectly clear to my mind that it cannot be so pleaded without showing something more than that the person is in possession as occupier; it must be shown that he is heir or assignee of the person to whom the right in gross has been granted. The mere fact of his being in possession does not show that. Therefore, notwithstanding the learned discussions that have taken place as to whether the right of an easement in gross may be pleaded in the form given under the Prescription Act, it is quite clear to my mind that nothing has passed affecting the right of prescription, and the fourth and fifth pleas are invalid. With respect to the sixth plea, that falls under the same principle as the third. It speaks of an express grant, and the third plea speaks of prescription. The result is that an absurdity and an anomaly in the law is excluded by this judgment. Can any one conceive anything more absurd than that B. should purchase from A. in 1800 the right to all the trees in Black Acre, and that there should have been put into the conveyance these words, for the sake of caution, "heirs, assigns, and occupiers or tenants of A.," then in the year 1862, A. should let his close of White Acre to a tenant from year to year, and that tenant should be allowed to grant to his successor any title to cut down the trees which had been purchased by B. of his ancestors by a distinct conveyance of which he might have had no notice whatsoever? I think all the pleas are bad.

BYLES, J. I am of the same opinion. Mr. Prideaux's best plea, as it seems to me, is a plea of a lost grant, and that may be considered in this stage of the discussion as an existing grant; and the effect of it is, that at some distant period the owner of the servient tenement granted to the owner of the adjoining dominant tenement, and to his heirs and assigns, the right to cut down all the trees and wood of every description, for any purpose, to be used where he pleased; and I think the authorities adduced by Mr. Prideaux clearly bring him half-way towards the goal. They show that this is a profit à prendre, in which a man may have an inheritable estate; and my Lord Chief Justice pointed out in a very early stage of the argument what was the real difficulty. This may go to a man's heirs; but how can it go to his assigns? It is in no way connected with the enjoyment of the dominant tenement. There is really no more connection here, than if the owner of an estate in Northumberland were to grant a right of way to the owner of another estate in Kent; because, as has been stated (see the case of Ackroyd v. Smith), an incident of this nature cannot, even by express words in an existing deed, be connected with the estate by the mere act of the parties. It must, in addition to that, have some natural connection with the estate, as being for its benefit, or, as has been expressed, it must inhere in the estate. Therefore, if an express grant to this effect had been produced between the grantee and grantor, and going as between the heirs of the grantee and grantor, it cannot run with the estate. Lord Brougham observed, as quoted in that case, that no new incident can be connected with the estate. I own it seems to me there is a further objection to the plea of prescription, and also to the thirty years' plea and the sixty years' plea; and I agree with my Brother Willes, and I adopt his expression to the full extent, that such a claim of prescription as this is very absurd. That being so, it is unreasonable; and it is laid down that prescriptions must be reasonable. It is not enough to say it is possible to be granted. Even if this could by law be granted, I think it falls within the objection to a prescription, that it is unreasonable, and not only ought not to be inferred by a jury, but cannot be inferred in point of law, when such a right is claimed. I think, for these reasons, and I have no doubt whatever that Mr.

Prideaux has laid before us all the cases upon the subject, that all the four pleas are bad, and the first three worse than the last.

KEATING, J. All the pleas demurred to in this case speak of a claim to exercise upon the land of another a right having no reference to the occupation of the land to which the right so sought to be exercised is alleged to be attached. That seems to be, in a legal point of view, very like a contradiction in terms, and not supported by any authority; and therefore I think the pleas are bad.

HALL v. LAWRENCE.

[Reported 2 R. I. 218.]

IN equity. The bill prayed an injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing or hindering the plaintiff or his tenant, or the servants or agents of such tenant, in passing and repassing over a certain path or drift-way to the shore or beach, and procuring sand, gravel, and sea-weed from said shore or beach upon or adjoining the defendant's farm, and stones (below high-water mark) thereon, and tipping sea-weed on the bank of said defendant's farm, as they had the right and had been accustomed to do. The bill further prayed an account of sea-weed taken by the defendant from said shore, and for damages for obstructions to the use of the way aforesaid.

The plaintiff claimed the right of way (which was a way passing over the defendant's land), and the privileges of the shore, by virtue of a certain indenture of partition and various conveyances, and by virtue of an uninterrupted user for more than twenty years. The cause coming on for hearing, it was agreed that the court, without considering the question of user, should first determine the rights of the parties under said indenture of partition, and the conveyances by which they respectively claimed title to said lands.

Said indenture of partition, dated Nov. 7, 1776, recites that Nicholas Taylor and Joseph Wanton Taylor are sons of Robert Taylor, deceased, and his devisees in common of a certain farm in Newport, containing one hundred and thirteen acres, of which farm they, by said indenture, make partition by metes and bounds, assigning the south part of said farm, containing fifty-nine acres and three quarters of an acre, to said Nicholas, and the north part, containing forty-nine acres and three quarters of an acre, to the said Joseph W. The indenture then proceeds: "And the said Joseph Wanton Taylor doth also covenant, promise, and agree that the said Nicholas Taylor, his heirs and assigns, shall have a drift-way through the meadow-land of him the said Joseph Wanton Taylor, where the path or drift-way now is, and the said Nicholas Taylor and the said Joseph Wanton Taylor do hereby agree that they, their heirs and assigns, shall and will at all times forever hereafter be at equal charge and expense in maintaining and keeping in good order the gates and lanes that are adjoining on said drift-way, and the said Nicholas Taylor doth grant free liberty of carrying away gravel and sea-weed off the beach belonging to his part of said farm, and also stones below high-water mark on said beach, to the said Joseph Wanton Taylor, his heirs and assigns, as also the liberty to tip the sea-weed on the bank on his part of said land."

By a deed dated March 12th, 1803, Joseph W. Taylor conveyed to Nicholas Taylor in fee, from the south side of the tract of land assigned to him, a tract of land containing thirty acres, describing the same, "together with all and singular the ways, waters, fences, improvements, rights, profits, privileges, and appurtenances to the same belonging or in any way appertaining, with the reversions thereof, and all the estate, right, title, claim, and demand whatever of me, the said Joseph W. Taylor, of, in, and to the same."

By deed, dated August 4th, 1812, the said Joseph W. conveyed all the residue of the land assigned to him by said indenture of partition to George Armstrong, together with all rights and privileges, &c. "And all the privileges and appurtenances which I, the grantor, now have, of taking and carrying away gravel and sea-weed off the beach belonging to Nicholas Taylor, and all stones below high-water mark on said beach, and also to tip the sea-weed on the bank of the said Nicholas Taylor's land."

By deed dated July 31st, 1813, Nicholas Taylor mortgaged to the President, Directors, and Company of the Bank of Rhode Island the tract of land of thirty acres which he had purchased in March, 1803, of Joseph W. Taylor, describing the same by metes and bounds, and as "the same estate which I purchased of my brother, the said Joseph W. Taylor — To have and to hold the said granted and bargained premises, with all the appurtenances, privileges, and commodities to the same belonging, &c." And, March 19th, 1819, the mortgagees were let into possession of the premises under their mortgage, as provided by the Statute, and held the same down to 1822. On January 4th, 1822, the said mortgagees transferred to the said George Armstrong their mortgage deed and all their right, title, &c., which they had in and to the lands therein described and thereby pledged and mortgaged, subject to the equity of redemption therein of said Nicholas and the right of dower of his wife.

By deed dated July 4th, 1835, the said George Armstrong conveyed to the plaintiff, David P. Hall, the above-named lot of land of thirty acres, and the lot of land of nineteen and three quarters acres, which he purchased of Joseph W. Taylor, being the whole of the land of forty-nine and three quarters acres, assigned to the said Joseph W. under the indenture of partition between him and said Nicholas — "To have and to hold the said granted premises, with all the appurtenances, privileges, and commodities to the same belonging or in any way appertaining."

The defendant deduced his title as follows: —

By deed dated September 5th, 1808, the said Nicholas Taylor mortgaged to Elisha Coggeshall the said fifty-nine and three quarters acres, set off to him by the aforesaid indenture of partition, and on March 7th, 1818, the executor of said Elisha took possession of said premises, by virtue of a writ of possession, and, February 12th, 1835, the administrator de bonis non of the estate of said Elisha conveyed to the aforesaid George Armstrong, and to one John Wilbour, all the right, title, and interest of said Elisha in the aforesaid premises, and assigned to them the mortgage thereof, and the judgment of court rendered for possession of said premises.

By deed dated January 7th, 1836, the said George Armstrong granted, released, and quit-claimed all his right, title, and interest in and to the said Nicholas Taylor farm to the said John Wilbour.

By deed dated September 5th, 1836, the said John Wilbour (his wife relinquishing dower) conveyed to the defendant, William Beach Lawrence, the whole of the said Nicholas Taylor farm in fee. And the deed contained the following reservation: "Also saving and excepting a right which the proprietor of the adjoining farm has to take, carry away, and tip sea-weed, and to carry away stones from below high-water mark from the south shore of said farm, and any claim which George Armstrong may have personally, by virtue of an agreement heretofore entered into between myself and said Armstrong, and said Armstrong's subsequent deed, to use of one half of the afore-described premises."

The agreement above referred to was an agreement dated February 17th, 1835, between said Wilbour and Armstrong, by which said Armstrong agreed that he would not, within six years, sell his undivided half of the Nicholas Taylor farm to any one except said Wilbour, and that Wilbour should at any time within six years have the right to purchase the same, upon paying the sum which said Armstrong paid for the same; and it was agreed, "if said Wilbour shall purchase as aforesaid, the said Armstrong, his heirs and assigns forever, shall have an equal privilege to get sea-weed on the east and south shores of said farm,—that is, the said Armstrong, his heirs and assigns, to get the sea-weed one week at the east shore, and in that week the said Wilbour, his heirs and assigns, to get sea-weed at the south shore," and the next week vice versa, and so alternately; "the said Armstrong, his heirs and assigns, to have the privilege of tipping up sea-weed on the bank of the east shore, the said Wilbour, his heirs and assigns, to forever have a right of way for carting, &c., from said farm as follows: to keep the drift-way towards said Armstrong's house until it comes into the way leading into town. It is also agreed that said Armstrong, his heirs and assigns, when getting sea-weed, is to keep the way or path westerly to meet the old path generally used from the east shore."

It further appeared that the plaintiff, on the 14th of October, 1843, conveyed the said Joseph W. Taylor farm to one Thomas R. Martin, who, on the 27th of October, 1847, reconveyed the same to the plaintiff; and that on the 18th of September, 1850, the plaintiff conveyed to Robert H. Ives about nine and a quarter acres of said farm, being part of the nineteen and three quarters acres retained by Joseph W. Taylor when he made the conveyance of March 12, 1803, to Nicholas, but by said deed expressly reserved the said privileges of sand, gravel, and sea-weed upon the south shore of the said Taylor farm, and of tipping the sea-weed on the bank thereof, as appurtenant to the residue of the said Joseph W. Taylor farm, retained by the plaintiff.

Carpenter and Turner, for the plaintiff.

Ames, for respondent.

BRAYTON, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The plaintiff claims in this case a right to enter upon the land of the defendant, being the farm set off to Nicholas Taylor in the deed of partition of 1776, and to take and carry away from the shore thereof, mentioned in the deed of partition, sea-weed, gravel, and stone in any quantity without limit at his will and pleasure, and to make merchandise thereof for his profit, and a right of way to pass and repass to and from said shore over the defendant's land for that purpose.

This right he claims as a right in gross, though, by the deed of partition, he claims that it was originally made appurtenant to the north farm set off in said deed to Joseph W. Taylor, under whom he claims.

The arguments both for the plaintiff and defendant proceed upon the assumption that the right of taking sea-weed, gravel, and stone, whatever it was, was originally appurtenant to the estate of Joseph W. Taylor; and, indeed, if it were not appurtenant, it is evident the plaintiff has no title, for his deed from Armstrong describes no such right, and unless it was appurtenant at the time, he takes nothing by his deed.

In order to ascertain what the rights of the plaintiff now are, it is necessary to inquire, first, what were the rights originally granted in said deed to Joseph W. Taylor.

By the terms of the deed, after setting off to Nicholas the south part of the original farm, upon which portion was all the beach, and setting off to Joseph the north part, which was less in quantity, and we may presume, without a beach privilege, less in value, the deed then proceeds and says: "And the said Nicholas Taylor doth grant free liberty of carrying away gravel and sea-weed off the beach, belonging to his part of said farm, and, also, stones below high-water mark on said beach, to the said Joseph W. Taylor, his heirs and assigns, and, also, liberty to tip the sea-weed on the bank on his part of said land."

This grant is made doubtless to equalize the partition, to render the north part (which had no shore where sand and sea-weed might be obtained for improving and fertilizing the land, and it may be less facilities for obtaining stone for building and fencing) equal in value with the south part.

It will be seen, also, that the grant is not limited in terms as to quantity, nor is it defined in terms to what uses it shall be applied, or for what purposes taken, so as to furnish a just measure of the amount which Joseph might take.

We must, however, presume that it is not to be entirely without limit, extending to the entire quantity of gravel, sea-weed, or stone upon the shore, and thereby excluding Nicholas; but that the right of Joseph, was to be a right in common with Nicholas. So it must have been the intent of the parties, that, as the right was created for the benefit of the north shore, and as it must have some limit as to the amount, it should be limited in extent to the uses of the land set off to Joseph, and so it must necessarily become appurtenant; Joseph would not, however, be confined to so much only as might be necessary of necessity to the estate, but as the grant was liberal—"free liberty"—might take so much as he might have occasion to use for any purpose upon the estate.

The plaintiff's counsel contends that under this grant, upon a just construction of it, Joseph originally had a right to take for sale and profit, without regard to any use; and the case of Phillips v. Rhodes, 7 Met. 322, is cited to that point, in which it is held, that under a right of common to take sea-weed appurtenant to the estate and intended for a dressing for the land, it might when taken be applied to that use or sold. No reason is given, nor authority cited, and we are left upon the authority of the case alone. It is not easy to perceive the reason, if the extent of the right were to be measured by the use and purposes of the estate. But without determining whether when once taken for use, the party might not forego the benefit of it to his estate and sell to another, the conclusion we think is warranted that the sale would not give him a right to take more than reasonably he might have taken had he thought fit to use it upon the estate.

The effect of the grant in the deed of partition is to create a right of common for sea-weed, gravel and stone, in favor of the north farm set off to Joseph, and as appurtenant thereto, to be exercised on the shore of the estate set off to Nicholas, giving a right to take so much as the owner of the north shore might think proper or profitable to use on the estate.

There passed also, as incident to this grant, a right of passing and repassing to and from the shore over the land of Nicholas, in some convenient place for the purpose of taking the profit. This was necessary to the enjoyment of the right of common granted, and would therefore pass by an implied grant, and accompany and follow the principal grant so long as it existed, and only become extinguished with the extinction of the common itself.

So also a grant of land, over which the grantor has a way of necessity to him for the enjoyment of another estate, does not extinguish the way, but the way is by implication reserved.

This right of way incident to the right of common falls under the head of secondary easements; and the objection raised, that it was not appurtenant to the north farm, and would not pass under the term "appurtenance," is not tenable.

Did these rights pass to the plaintiff? George Armstrong, by his deed of July 4th, 1835, conveyed to the plaintiff all the land originally set off to Joseph W. Taylor in the deed of partition of 1776, with the appurtenances; and whatever rights of common were then appurtenant to the lands conveyed, or to any portion of them, passed to the plaintiff. Our inquiry then must be directed to the title which Armstrong had to the common.

Armstrong's title to the land is derived to him by two separate conveyances. By the deed from Joseph W. Taylor, of August 12, 1813 [4, 1812], he acquired title to nineteen and three quarters acres, a portion of the land originally set off to Joseph, "and all the privileges and appurtenances which I, the grantor, now have of taking and carrying away gravel and sea-weed and all stones below high-water mark on said beach, and also to tip the sea-weed on the beach of the said Nicholas Taylor's land." Such are the words of the grant.

But whether any right of common then remained appurtenant to the nineteen and three quarters acres, must depend upon the effect which is to be given to the conveyance of Joseph W. Taylor to his brother Nicholas, of March 12, 1803. By that deed Joseph conveyed to Nicholas thirty acres, part of the share set off to him, to which the whole right of common was made appurtenant.

The defendant's counsel claims that the effect of the conveyance of the thirty acres portion of the dominant estate is the extinguishment of the whole common.

The first question here raised is whether this right of common was divisible, and might or not be apportioned to the several parts of the dominant estate upon a severance of the estate. In regard to rights of common which by law are indivisible, a conveyance of any portion of the dominant estate will extinguish the whole, as in the case of common of estovers, Van Rensselaer v. Radcliff, 10 Wend. 639; Livingston v. Ketchum, 1 Barb. S. C. R. 592; and the reason assigned is that the service is entire and appurtenant to an entire estate, and not being divisible, it cannot be appurtenant to part of the estate as an entire service.

There are, however, other rights of common which are in law divisible; and in all such cases it may be apportioned to the several parts of the dominant estate upon its severance by different conveyances. A right of pasture for cattle sans nombre is of this kind. In such case it is held that though the right be unlimited in terms, yet it is intended for the use of the estate and limited to such cattle as may be kept upon the dominant estate or upon any portion of it, and equally upon any portion, so that upon a division of the dominant estate and upon apportionment of the service to the several parts, the servient estate is not charged to any greater extent than before or with more cattle. And the rule is that wherever the common is admeasurable, the common is apportionable. Tyrringham's Case, 4 Co. 35. But the right, being measured by the uses of the estate, cannot be severed from the estate and granted over. Drury v. Kent, Cro. J. 15.

The right in the present case is of the same nature. It is intended for the use of the estate and for every acre of it, and that equally; and whether the right be divided or not, the measure is the same. It may therefore be divided, and, by a conveyance of a part of the dominant estate, it would be apportioned to the part conveyed, and so much might well pass with it under the term "appurtenance."

This conveyance may be affected by another rule, for though the common may be in its nature divisible and apportionable, yet, if the effect of the conveyance is to surcharge the servient estate, it shall not only not be apportioned, but shall become extinct for the whole.

And for the same reason it is, that a release of a portion of the servient estate or purchase of part of the servient by the sole owner of the dominant shall extinguish. In Rotherham v. Green, Cro. E. 593, there was a release of part of the land in which, &c. In Kimpton v. Bellamy, Leonard, 43, the owner of the dominant purchased two acres of forty of the servient estate. In these cases the effect was to surcharge the residue. So, in Tyrringham's Case, 4 Co. 35.

In Wild's Case, 8 Co. 156, there was a conveyance of five acres of the forty contained in the dominant, and on the same reasoning it was held that the servient estate was no more chargeable upon the severance of the dominant estate than before, for that the five acres were entitled to common for the cattle levant and couchant thereon as before, and for no more.

And the rule deducible from all the cases is, as before stated, that if the effect of the conveyance is to surcharge the common, and burden to a greater extent the servient estate, it shall extinguish; if otherwise, there shall be an apportionment, and such portion will pass as appurtenant.

By this rule the portion of common belonging to the thirty acres would become severed from the residue, which would remain appurtenant to the nineteen and three quarters acres retained by Joseph Taylor, and the thirty acres would become a distinct dominant estate.

But inasmuch as the title to the dominant estate, by virtue of the conveyance, became united in the hands of Nicholas with the servient estate, all the common appurtenant to the thirty acres thereby became extinguished by unity of title. It has not been revived by any of the conveyances so as to pass by the term "appurtenance" in the deed of Armstrong to the plaintiff.

The defendant's counsel claims that, although such would be the effect of the deed to a stranger, who immediately conveys to the servient owner, yet, if made directly to the servient owner, the whole is extinguished.

Now, bearing in mind the reasoning on the cases generally upon the subject, and the rules deducible from them, we should not expect to find a case in which it should be held that, where the conveyance does not directly surcharge the common remaining, and where the servient owner can in nowise suffer injury, the whole common should become extinguished, and that against the apparent intent of the parties, but that effect would be given in such case to the clear intent.

There is, however, in Tyrringham's Case, the annunciation of such a rule as the defendant's counsel claims. It is this: that common appurtenant cannot be extinct in part and in esse for part by act of the parties, for that common appurtenant was against common right. Taken in the broad sense which counsel gives it, and independent of the connection in which it is used, it might support the ground which the counsel assumes. But taken with its connection, it is evident that it was not applied, or intended to apply, to such a case as is now before us. The same rule exists in relation to rent-charge, which is said to be against common right as distinguished from rent-service, which is deemed of common right.

The only American case cited upon this point is that of Livingston v. Ten Broeck, 16 Johns. 14; and as this is claimed to conclude this point, it will be necessary to examine it with a little particularity.

The statement of the case shows that a certain estate, called the Vosburg farm, was entitled to common in a large pasture within the manor of Livingston, and that Henry Livingston was sole owner of fifty acres of land, parcel of the tract in which common was to be taken ; but as it did not appear whether or not the conveyance to Henry Livingston comprehended a portion of the Vosburg farm, a new trial was necessary, and Mr. Justice Spencer, who delivered the opinion thereupon, says he does not see how the question can now be raised ; but, in view of a new trial, it is proper that the court should express an opinion, and he proceeds to give it. He then deduces the general rule, and says the governing principle is, that injustice shall not be done to the servient estate ; and if it shall be found that Henry Livingston purchased part of the Vosburg farm (which was the dominant estate, he being owner of a portion only of the servient), the whole common should be extinguished, because he is then interested in discharging his own land, and surcharging the residue.

There is nothing in the case, or in the opinion delivered, which indicates any intention in the court to go beyond the Case of Tyrringham. The whole opinion is based upon that case, which, as Justice Spencer remarks, was affirmed for good law in Wild's Case, and had never been overruled.

Now Tyrringham's Case, when carefully examined, it will be seen, does not come up to the point made by the defendant's counsel. That was a case involving the same principles as that of Livingston v. Ten Broeck. It was this : Boniface Pickering was the owner of forty acres, part of a tract of seventy acres, which constituted the servient estate (the residue, thirty acres, being owned by one John Pickering). He purchased the whole of the dominant estate. It was resolved "that when part of the land to which, &c., is aliened, then every of them may prescribe to have common for cattle levant and couchant upon the land ; and in none of these cases any prejudice accrues to the tenant of the land in which, &c., for he shall not be charged with more upon the matter than before the severance ; and God forbid" (say the court) "the law should not be so, when part of the land to which, &c., is aliened, for otherwise, many commons in England would be extinguished and lost." And it was agreed that such common as is admeasurable shall remain after severance of part of the land to which, &c. But inasmuch as the court resolved that the common was appurtenant, and not appendant, and so against common right, it was adjudged that by the said purchase the common was extinct ; (and the reason) "for in such case common appurtenant cannot be extinct in part and in esse for part by act of the parties." Now, the case was ; the owner of part of the servient became owner of the whole dominant, and so interested in surcharging the residue of the servient.

But, in order fully to understand the case and the point immediately before the court, it must be borne in mind that so far as the severance and apportionment of the common to the dominant estate is concerned, there is no difference in the rule of law applicable to common appurtenant or common appendant. In either case, upon severance of the dominant estate the common was apportionable. The difference between the two related to the servient estate, and the court in a preceding part of the case had resolved that common appendant, being of common right, might not only be apportioned to the land to which, &c., but would also be apportioned upon the severance of the estate in which, &c.; and they say, that as to this kind of common, if the commoner aliene part the land in which, &c., yet the common shall be apportioned. But it was not so with common appurtenant. In such case there could be no apportionment to the servient estate. And, therefore, the court were obliged to say, referring particularly to the part of the case before them, that by this purchase the common was extinct for the whole, for in such case common appurtenant could not be extinct in part and in esse for part by act of the parties.

There never was any difficulty in releasing a portion of the service charged upon the servient estate. The only difficulty was in releasing any portion of the servient estate wholly from all service, and that, because it could not be apportioned.

The points resolved in Tyrringham's Case might then well be affirmed for good law as they were in Wild's Case, where it is said: "It was well agreed that common appendant was of common right severable; and although the commoner in such case purchase parcel of the land in which, &c., yet the common shall be apportioned; but in such case common appurtenant and not appendant by purchase of parcel of the land in which, &c., is extinct, for the causes and reasons given in Tyrringham's Case;" and as a further reason: "It was folly for the commoner to intermeddle with part of the land in which, &c., which belonged not to him; but when he intermeddled but only with his own land by alienation thereof, it shall not turn to his prejudice, for that it is not against any rule of law, as the other case."

The agreement entered into between Armstrong and Wilbour, July [Feb.] 17, 1835, which was referred to as affecting this right, we do not see has any effect to vary the rights of the parties in this respect. That agreement is intended to create a new right in the contingency that Wilbour should purchase the right of his co-tenants. There was no conveyance of any lands to which it could be appurtenant by implication, and it is not expressly made appurtenant to any. It must have been when it came in esse a right in gross, and, had it been intended to be appurtenant, it was not in esse at the time of Armstrong's conveyance to the plaintiff, so as to pass by the deed.

Neither can the exception in the covenant of warranty made by Wilbour in his conveyance to the defendant vary those rights. There was a right of common in the estate conveyed, appurtenant to the nineteen and three quarters acres, and he excepts,— "a right which the owner of the adjoining farm has;" and his exception was equally necessary to his protection, whether the right were appurtenant to the whole farm, or to the smallest portion of it only. It is a recognition of such right to some extent, and is sufficiently answered by the smallest extent.

We are then, upon the whole, of the opinion that the deed from Joseph W. Taylor to Nicholas Taylor of the thirty acres operated as a severance and apportionment of the common, and that the part apportioned to the thirty acres became extinguished and lost; but that the conveyance did not operate to extinguish the residue of the common apportionable to the nineteen and three quarters acres, and that so much passed by Armstrong's deed of July 4th, 1835, to the plaintiff, with a right of way as incident to it and necessary to the enjoyment.

Had the plaintiff remained owner of the whole of this lot of nineteen and three quarters acres, he would still have been entitled to the common appurtenant. But his right has again been affected by his conveyance to Robert H. Ives of nine and three quarters acres, part of the nineteen and three quarters acres. Had he made no reservation of the common in that deed, there would have been an apportionment, and Ives would have taken the portion belonging to nine and three quarters acres; for though such common may be apportioned, it could not be severed from the estate and granted over, Drury v. Kent, Cro. J. 15, and, because it could not be severed, the plaintiff could not retain it to himself. If it exist at all, it must exist with the estate, the uses of which it is to attend and minister to.

The plaintiff, then, at the time of filing his bill in this case, had a right of common to take from the shore of the defendant's estate seaweed and gravel, and stones below high-water mark, at all times at his will and pleasure, for such purposes as he might think proper to use them upon his estate; but this right did not extend to the thirty acres to which Armstrong derived title under the mortgage of Nicholas Fry [Taylor] to the Bank of Rhode Island, all right being extinguished as to that, but was limited to that portion of the nineteen and three quarters acres conveyed by Joseph W. Taylor to Armstrong, by deed of August 12, 1813 [4, 1812], which the plaintiff has not conveyed to Robert H. Ives; and he had also a right of way to and from his said land to the shore for the purpose of exercising this right as incident and necessary to its enjoyment.

This is the extent of his right in our view upon the deeds and conveyances put before us.

NATURAL RIGHTS.

MORLEY v. PRAGNEL.

KING'S BENCH. 1638.

[Reported Cro. Car. 510.]

ACTION on the case. Whereas the plaintiff is owner of a common inn in Eastgestock, that the defendant maliciously erected a tallow-furnace, and boiled therein much stinking tallow, to the great annoyance of him and his guests; and by reason of such stench, arising thereupon, many of his guests left his house, and many of his family became unhealthful. Upon not guilty pleaded, a verdict was found for the plaintiff.

Germyn, Serjt., moved in arrest of judgment, that an action lies not, for he, being a tallow-chandler, ought to use his trade, which cannot be said to be a nuisance.

By all the court held, that as the declaration is penned, the action is maintainable; for every one ought sic uti suo, quod alienum non laedat: then when the plaintiff is an innkeeper, the defendant erecting a tallow-furnace annoyed his house with stenches, especially by boiling stinking stuff: and so in Tohayles's Case, who erected a tallow-furnace across the street of Denmark-house in the Strand, it was found a nuisance upon the indictment, and adjudged to be removed. Whereupon judgment was here given for the plaintiff.

BLISS v. HALL.

[Reported 4 Bing. N. C. 183.]

THE declaration stated that the defendant wrongfully and injuriously exercised and carried on in and upon the messuages of the defendant, being contiguous and near to the messuage of the plaintiff, the trade or business of a candle-maker or manufacturer of candles; and did then and there, to wit, on, &c., in and upon the said messuages of the defendant, wrongfully and injuriously melt and prepare, and caused to be melted and prepared for the making and manufacturing of candles, divers large quantities of grease and tallow; and did then and there, to wit, on, &c., in and upon the said messuages of the defendant, wrongfully and injuriously make and manufacture, and cause and procure to be made and manufactured, divers large quantities of candles; by means of which several premises, divers noisome, noxious, and offensive vapors, fumes, smells, and stenches, on the several days and times aforesaid, arose, issued, and proceeded from the said messuages of the defendant, and spread and diffused themselves over and upon and into and through and about the said messuage of the plaintiff; and the air in, over, through, and about the same was thereby then greatly filled and impregnated with the same noisome, noxious, and offensive vapors, fumes, smells, and stenches, and was then rendered and from thence hitherto had been, and still is, greatly corrupted, offensive, disgusting, unwholesome, and uncomfortable.

Plea, That the defendant was possessed of his said messuages for a long space of time, to wit, for the space of three years next before the plaintiff became possessed of his said messuage in the declaration mentioned, and before the plaintiff occupied, inhabited, and dwelt in the same; and that before and at the time when the defendant first became and was possessed of his said messuages, the said furnaces and stoves in the introductory part of this plea mentioned had been and then were erected, set up, and placed in and upon the same; that the defendant always, to wit, from the time at which he became so possessed of his said messuages, until and at and after the plaintiff so became possessed of his said messuage as in the declaration mentioned, and thence hitherto, had used, exercised, and carried on the said trade and business of a candle-maker, and had occasioned — the phenomena described in the declaration (enumerating them as above) — in the same manner and form, and degree, and to the same extent, and at the same hours, and times, and seasons, as at the said time when, &c., in the declaration and in the introductory part of this plea mentioned; and the same during all that time, and at the said time when, &c., were and still are requisite and necessary to enable the defendant to carry on his said trade and business, in and upon his said premises, in the same manner and form, and to the same extent, as the defendant carried on the same at the time when the plaintiff came to his said premises in the declaration mentioned, near and adjoining to the premises and business of the defendant, so carried on as aforesaid; that the defendant lawfully enjoyed his said premises, manufactory, and business, before the plaintiff came to, occupied, or was possessed of his said premises in the declaration mentioned, in the same condition, extent, manner, and form, as he enjoyed and possessed the same at the said time when, &c., in the declaration mentioned, and of right ought still lawfully to enjoy the same without interruption or suit of the plaintiff; and that, the defendant was ready to verify.

Demurrer and joinder.

Butt, in support of the demurrer.

Hoggins, contra.

TINDAL, C. J. In this case the declaration alleges that the defendant injuriously carried on, in messuages contiguous to the messuage of the plaintiff, the trade and business of a candle-maker, by which noxious vapors and smells proceeded from the messuage of the defendant and diffused themselves over the messuage of the plaintiff; and all that the defendant says in answer, is, that he carried on the business for three years before the plaintiff became possessed of the messuage he inhabits. That is no answer to the complaint in the declaration; for the plaintiff came to the house he occupies with all the rights which the common law affords, and one of them is, a right to wholesome air. Unless the defendant shows a prescriptive right to carry on his business in the particular place, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

PARK, J. In Elliotson v. Feetham [2 Bing. N. C. 134], the court said that the defendant should at least have alleged a holding of twenty years' duration: here he does not go beyond three.

VAUGHAN, J. The smells and noises of which the plaintiff complains are not hallowed by prescription, and under this plea the defendant cannot justify their continuance.

BOSANQUET, J. I am of the same opinion. The defendant has, prima facie, a right to enjoy his property in a way not injurious to his neighbor; but here on his own showing the business he carries on is offensive, and he makes out no title to persist in the annoyance.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

SIMPSON v. SAVAGE.

COMMON PLEAS. 1856.

[Reported 1 C. B. N. S. 347.]

THIS was an action for an injury to the plaintiff's reversion, by the erection of certain workshops and forges on land adjoining the plaintiff's houses, making fires therein, and causing smoke to issue therefrom, &c.

The declaration stated, that, before and at the time of the committing of the grievances thereafter mentioned, certain messuages and dwelling-houses, with the appurtenances, of the plaintiff, were respectively in the occupation of certain tenants thereof to the plaintiff, the reversion thereof respectively then and still belonging to the plaintiff: yet that the defendant, whilst the said messuages and dwelling-houses, with the appurtenances, were so in such occupation as aforesaid, wrongfully and unjustly, without the leave or license of the plaintiff and his said tenants, and against their will respectively, built and erected certain workshops, manufactory, and forges, and other permanent works, adjoining and close to the messuages and dwelling-houses aforesaid, for the purpose of working and permanently continuing to work the same in the manner thereafter mentioned, and then wrongfully and unjustly made and caused to be made and continued therein and thereon divers large and injurious fires against the will of the plaintiff and his said tenants, and made thereon wrongfully and injuriously and continuously loud, heavy, jarring, hammering, battering, and agitating sounds and noises ; and by reason of the premises, and of the smoke, blacks, and other gaseous effluvia arising from the said fires and forges entering into and diffusing themselves in, upon, over, and throughout the said messuages and dwelling-houses, the same had respectively become utterly and permanently uninhabitable, and the said tenants respectively had been and would be compelled to quit and leave the same respectively, and to cease to be the tenants thereof, and the plaintiff would be unable to let the same, or to turn the same to any beneficial or profitable account, and the same had become and were thereby greatly deteriorated in value, and the present market price thereof was thereby greatly diminished, and the plaintiff had been and was and would be permanently injured, prejudiced, and aggrieved in his reversionary estate and interest in the said messuages and dwelling-houses by reason of the premises : And the plaintiff claimed £500.

Plea, not guilty ; whereupon issue was joined.

The cause was tried before Lord Campbell, C. J., at the last assizes for the county of Norfolk. The facts were as follows :—

The plaintiff was the owner of a plot of ground in King's Lynn, in the county of Norfolk, upon which he built several houses in 1850, which were let to tenants at rents varying from £40 to £44 per annum. The defendant is an agricultural implement maker occupying premises consisting of workshops with a forge and chimney and yard closely adjoining the back yards of the plaintiff's houses. The workshops, forge, and chimney were erected (not by the defendant) in 1851, and were a few feet only from the back windows of the plaintiff's houses. The nuisance complained of consisted in the emission of smoke from the forge chimney, to such an extent that great quantities of soot entered the windows in the rear of the plaintiff's houses, dirtying and spoiling the furniture in the rooms, and of noises from the hammering, and offensive smells from the burning of old wood in the yard. It was proved, on the part of the plaintiff, that, in consequence of the nuisance, which was of a serious character, some of the plaintiff's tenants had given him notice to quit (though it did not appear that any of them had actually quitted) ; and that, in consequence of the nuisance, the plaintiff's houses would not realize as much rent as they would otherwise have done.

On the part of the defendant, it was submitted, on the authority of Mumford v. The Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company, 1 Hurlst. & N. 34, and Dobson v. Blackmore, 9 Q. B. 991, that, to entitle the plaintiff, as reversioner, to maintain this action, it was incumbent on him to show that the wrong complained of was in its nature permanent; and that there was no evidence here that the nuisances complained of were otherwise than of a mere temporary description.

For the plaintiff—conceding that, according to the cases cited, the fires in the yard and the noises would not constitute a cause of action—it was insisted that the smoke from the chimney was a nuisance of a permanent nature, and therefore an injury to the reversion.

His Lordship ruled that the nuisances which were merely of a temporary nature, such as the fires in the yard, and the noises, would not give a right of action; but with reference to the smoke issuing from the foundry chimney, he thought the case distinguishable from Mumford v. The Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company, and that there was evidence to go to the jury to prove injury to the reversion; but he reserved leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, if the court should be of opinion that there was no injury to the reversion.

A verdict having been found for the plaintiff, damages 40*s.*, O'Malley, Q. C., obtained a rule nisi accordingly.

Byles, Serjt., and Couch, showed cause.

O'Malley, Q. C., and D. D. Keane, in support of the rule.

Cresswell, J. This was an action for an injury to the plaintiff's reversion by erecting a manufactory on land adjoining the plaintiff's houses, and causing smoke to issue from a chimney, and making loud noises. The plaintiff also complained of a nuisance arising from the lighting of wood fires in the yard adjoining the factory.

The cause was tried before Lord Campbell, at the last assizes for Norfolk, when his Lordship ruled that the nuisances merely of a temporary nature, such as the wood fires and the noises, would not support the action: but, with reference to the smoke issuing from the foundry chimney, he thought the case distinguishable from Mumford v. The Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company, 1 Hurlst. & N. 34, and that there was evidence to go to the jury to prove injury to the reversion; but he reserved leave to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, if the court should be of opinion that there was no injury to the reversion.

A rule nisi having been obtained accordingly, cause was shown in the course of the last term, before my Brothers Williams and Crowder and myself.

The only point reserved for our consideration, was, whether there was evidence for the jury of any injury to the reversion in the premises of which the plaintiff was owner, but not the occupier, they being let to tenants.

The evidence was, that the defendant erected a factory with forges and a chimney within a few feet from the yards of the plaintiff's houses; that fires were lighted in the forges; and that the smoke issuing from the chimney caused annoyance to the plaintiff's tenants, the soot entering their windows and dirtying and spoiling the furniture in the rooms ; and that the tenants had in consequence given notice to quit.

On the argument, it was insisted that the injury done by the defendant need not be of a permanent nature, and that it was sufficient if proved to be of such a description as would cause the reversion in the premises to sell for a smaller sum if brought into the market.

After considering the authorities, we are of opinion, that, since, in order to give a reversioner an action of this kind, there must be some injury done to the inheritance, the necessity is involved of the injury being of a permanent character.

The earliest instances of such an action are, cutting trees, subverting the soil, and erecting a dam across a stream so as to cause it to flow over the plaintiff's land. In the two former cases, the thing done was not removable or remediable during the term : in the third, it was ; but, being of a permanent character, it was to be assumed that it would remain, and therefore was treated as an injury to the inheritance.

The decision in Jessel v. Gifford, 4 Burr. 2141, falls within the same principle. A window was obstructed ; the obstruction was of a permanent character, and would remain, unless something was done to remedy the evil. Tucker v. Newman, 11 Ad. & E. 40 ; 3 P. & D. 14, belongs to the same class.

Now, the building erected in this case did not injure the plaintiff's inheritance : but it is said that the use made of it did. The real subject-matter of complaint, therefore, is, not the erection of the building, but causing smoke to issue from it. If the fires had not been made by the defendant, he could not have been sued for an injury either to the possession or the inheritance : Rich v. Baxterfield, 4 C. B. 783. Now, making the fires and causing smoke to issue, was not an act of a permanent nature. It is very like the case of Baxter v. Taylor, 4 B. & Ad. 72, where a person trespassed, asserting a right of way ; and not distinguishable from Mumford v. The Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton Railway Company, where the action was brought against the defendants as occupiers of certain sheds, for making noises therein, which caused the plaintiff's tenants to give notice to quit.

The real complaint by the reversioner is, that he fears the defendant, or some other occupier of the adjoining premises, will continue to make fires and cause smoke to issue from the chimney : and, if the reversion would sell for less, that is not on account of anything that has been done, but of the apprehension that something will be done at a future time.

According to the authorities, we feel bound to say that this is not such an injury as will enable the reversioner to maintain an action. The rule for entering a nonsuit must, therefore, be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

HOLE v. BARLOW.

COMMON PLEAS. 1858.

[Reported 4 C. B. N. S. 334.]

THIS was an action for a nuisance. The declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of a certain messuage and dwelling-house, garden and appurtenances which he, the plaintiff, inhabited and still inhabits, and that the defendant, contriving and intending to injure and annoy the plaintiff, erected and made a certain brick-kiln upon the land of the defendant in front of the house of the plaintiff, and wrongfully and injuriously burned a large quantity of bricks, and caused a noxious and unwholesome vapour to arise, to the injury of the premises of the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff's house was thereby during all the time, and still was, rendered uncomfortable, unhealthy, unwholesome, and unfit for habitation, &c.

The defendant pleaded not guilty, whereupon issue was joined.

The cause was tried before Byles, J., at the sittings at Westminster after the last term, when the following facts appeared in evidence: — The plaintiff occupied a house in a newly formed road abutting upon a field belonging to the defendant, and upon which the defendant, preparatory to the building of certain houses thereon, had excavated the clay and converted it into bricks, which he caused to be placed in three "clamps" for burning, near to the plaintiff's dwelling-house, one of them being within thirty feet of it. There was abundant though conflicting evidence of annoyance.

On the part of the defendant, it was submitted that the thing complained of was not actionable, seeing that it was done in a convenient place, and not wantonly and with intent to injure or annoy the plaintiff.

In submitting the case to the jury, the learned judge in substance told them that, "to entitle the plaintiff to maintain an action for an injury of this nature, it is not necessary that the thing complained of should be injurious to health: it is enough if it renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable. If you are satisfied from the evidence that the enjoyment of the plaintiff's house was rendered uncomfortable through the instrumentality of the defendant, that is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to maintain this action. But that is subject to this observation, — that it is not everybody whose enjoyment of life and property is rendered uncomfortable by the carrying on of an offensive or noxious trade in the neighborhood, that can bring an action. If that were so, — as has already been observed by the learned counsel for the defendant, — the neighborhood of Birmingham and Wolverhampton, and the other great manufacturing towns of England would be full of persons bringing actions for nuisances arising from the carrying on of noxious and offensive trades in their vicinity, to the great injury of the manufacturing and social interests of the community. I apprehend the law to be this, that no action lies for the use, the reasonable use, of a lawful trade in a convenient and proper place, even though some one may suffer annoyance from its being so carried on. But it may be that it would not be justifiable to place clamps for brick-burning in the immediate vicinity of Berkeley, or Belgrave, or Eaton Squares. But it is a very different thing to say that the mere temporary burning of bricks, made from clay dug from the spot, in a new neighborhood in the outskirts of London, which no one could say was an inconvenient place for the purpose, though it might cause annoyance to one or two persons residing near, would afford a ground of action. If this were so, it would be exceedingly difficult to find any place within a reasonable distance at which this sort of trade could be exercised at all. It is, therefore, my duty to tell you that this action will not lie, although you should be of opinion that the nuisance complained of is such as to render the plaintiff's enjoyment of his life and property uncomfortable, if you should think that the place where the business is carried on was a convenient and proper place for the purpose. There is one further observation I must make, and it is this, — it used to be thought that, if a man went to reside near to a place where he knew there was a nuisance, he could not complain of it, inasmuch as he went to the nuisance. That was supposed to be the law many years ago; but it is not so now. Assuming that this plaintiff perfectly well knew that the defendant was about to burn bricks on his land, and knew the precise spot where the clamps would be placed, and knew what the result would be, when he came to reside there, still that would not disentitle him to maintain this action. The two questions which I purpose leaving to you are, — first, was the place in which these bricks were burned a proper and convenient place for the purpose? That seems to me to be not a question of law for me, but one of fact for you upon the evidence you have heard. If you think, looking at all the circumstances, it was a proper place, then, although the plaintiff's enjoyment of his property may have been rendered uncomfortable, he cannot maintain an action. Secondly, if you are of opinion that the place was not a proper place for the purpose, then was the nuisance such as to make the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable? These are the two questions which you have to decide, upon the evidence which has been laid before you."

The jury having returned a verdict for the defendant, · Aspland, on a former day in this term, obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the learned judge misdirected the jury, in telling them "that an action did not lie for the acts complained of as a nuisance, if carried on in a proper and convenient place, and that an action did not lie for causing annoyance by carrying on a lawful trade, if carried on in a proper and convenient place; and in directing the jury that there were two questions for them, — one being, was the place a proper place? and that, if so, although the plaintiff's enjoyment might have been rendered uncomfortable, he could not sue, — the other being, whether the nuisance was such as to make the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable ; and in directing the jury to find for the defendant, if they thought the place a proper place, although the plaintiff's enjoyment might have been rendered uncomfortable : and on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence."

Collier, Q. C., and Garth, now showed cause.

Shee, Serjt., and Aspland, in support of the rule.

CROWDER, J. I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged. It was moved upon two grounds,—first, that the verdict was against the evidence ; secondly, for misdirection. As to the first ground, there was evidence on both sides of an extremely conflicting character : but the question was one especially for a jury ; and the learned judge who tried the cause has not expressed himself dissatisfied with the result. That point, therefore, is disposed of. Then, with respect to the alleged misdirection,—The complaint is that the learned judge put it to the jury as an ingredient for their consideration whether the burning of these bricks was in a proper and convenient place. By the language he used, he evidently referred to the passage which has been cited from Comyns's Digest, Action upon the Case for a Nuisance (C), and which is to be found in Selwyn's Nisi Prius, 10th edit., 1115, and in Gale on Easements, 295. The question is, whether that is a misdirection. The passage from Comyns's Digest is as follows : “ An action upon the case does not lie for a reasonable use of my right, though it be to the annoyance of another ; as, if a butcher, brewer, &c., use his trade in a convenient place, though it be to the annoyance of his neighbor.” The instances given certainly are of trades ; and this defendant was not carrying on the trade of a brick-maker ; but he was burning bricks upon his own land, for the purpose of building houses, which are necessary for the habitation of man. It seems to me that the rule is as applicable to the burning of bricks under such circumstances, as to the carrying on of a trade. It must be a question for the jury in each case whether or not the burning was in a convenient place. Without, therefore, going into the facts of this case, I am of opinion that the direction of Brother Byles to the jury was consistent with all the authorities, and that we should be in effect overruling several of them if we were to make this rule absolute.

WILLES, J. I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons ; and I will only add a word or two to what has fallen from my Brother Crowder. The common law right which every proprietor of a dwelling house has to have the air uncontaminated and unpolluted, is subject to this qualification, that necessities may arise for an interference with that right pro bono publico, to this extent, that such interference be in respect of a matter essential to the business of life, and be conducted in a reasonable and proper manner, and in a reasonable and proper place. And this is not without analogy. Every man has a right to enjoy his character untainted and uncontaminated by the breath of slander : but that right is subject to the rule as to privileged communications, which justifies and permits a reasonable publication of defamatory matter, even though it should amount to a charge of felony. So, every man has a right to the enjoyment of his land; but, in the event of a foreign invasion, the Queen may take the land for the purpose of setting up defences thereon for the general good of the nation. In these and such like cases, private convenience must yield to public necessity. It seems to me that we shall be only acting upon that principle in discharging this rule.

BYLES, J., said nothing.

Rule discharged.

BAMFORD v. TURNLEY.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1862.

[Reported 3 B. & S. 62.]

THE first count of the declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of a messuage and dwelling-house and premises, with the appurtenances, situate at Norwood, in the county of Surrey, in which he dwelt, with his family and servants: and that the defendant, contriving and intending to injure and annoy the plaintiff, erected and made certain brick-kilns upon certain land of the defendant adjoining and near to the messuage and dwelling-house and premises of the plaintiff, and wrongfully and injuriously burned a large quantity of bricks in the brick-kilns, and caused noxious and unwholesome vapors, smokes, fumes, stinks, and stenches to rise and proceed from the brick-kilns, and to enter in, spread and diffuse themselves over, upon, into, through, and about the messuage and dwelling-house and premises of the plaintiff, and the air over, through, and about the same was thereby greatly impregnated and filled with the said noxious and unwholesome vapors, fumes, stinks, and stenches, and was rendered and became and was corrupted, offensive, unwholesome, unhealthy, and uncomfortable; and thereby the plaintiff had been greatly annoyed and inconvenienced in the possession and enjoyment of his messuage and dwelling-house, and also, by means of the corrupt, unwholesome, and unhealthy state of the air in and over and about the plaintiff's dwelling-house so occasioned, the plaintiff and his family and servants became and were sick and ill, and so continued for a long time, and the plaintiff had necessarily incurred a great expense in and about obtaining necessary medical advice, and was otherwise greatly injured and prejudiced.

The second count of the declaration complained of a similar nuisance by the defendant's placing a quantity of decomposed ashes and bones in the immediate neighborhood of the plaintiff's house.

The only material plea to both counts was Not guilty, upon which issue was joined.

On the trial, before Cockburn, C. J., at the Summer Assizes at Guildford, 1860, it appeared that in the month of June, 1857, some land at Norwood, part of the Beulah Spa Estate, was offered for sale in lots by public auction, in accordance with certain printed particulars and conditions of sale. The particulars were headed "Particulars of the first section of the Beulah Spa Estate, consisting of about fifty acres of Freehold Building Land, &c., in nineteen lots," and stated, among other things, that the property presented "splendid sites for the erection of first-class villas;" and it was added, "There is abundance of brick earth and gravel, which, combined with all the other advantages appertaining to this exceedingly beautiful property, present an unusually advantageous opportunity of carrying out safe and profitable building operations." Captain Edward Strode, the brother-in-law of the plaintiff, in the year 1857 purchased lot 11 of this property, containing 2 a. 1 r. 33 p., and built a residence thereon. The house was finished in the year 1858, and shortly afterwards the plaintiff became the tenant of the house and property. The defendant was a solicitor in London, and in the year 1858 he bought some other lots of the same property under the same particulars and conditions, being respectively lots 1, 10, 14, and 16. It was proved that building was going on in the neighborhood, the plaintiff's house being within ten minutes' walk of the new railway station at Norwood. It also appeared that, during the preceding year, bricks had been burned at certain spots in lots 13 and 15, and at a spot adjoining to lot 15. It further appeared, that during the last seventeen or eighteen years, bricks had from time to time been burned at various parts of the field, of which the site of the clamp in question then formed part, such field having been divided at the time of the sale into various lots. It also appeared that bricks had previously been made on the spot where the plaintiff's house stood.

In the month of June, 1860, the defendant, with the view of burning bricks made out of the brick earth found upon his land, and thereby obtaining bricks to build upon it, erected a clamp of bricks on lot 16, at a distance of 180 yards from the plaintiff's house. It was proved that there was an annoyance to the plaintiff arising from the erection and use of the clamp as complained of in the first count sufficient prima facie to constitute a cause of action; but it was also proved that the erection and use of the clamp by the defendant as complained of was temporary only, and for the sole purpose of making bricks on his own land and from the clay found there, with a view to the erection of dwelling-houses on his own land; and that the clamp for burning the bricks was placed on that part of the defendant's land most distant from the plaintiff's house, and so as to create no further annoyance than necessarily resulted from the burning of bricks; and the question was whether, under the circumstances so proved, an action could be maintained in respect of such annoyance.

The Lord Chief Justice intimated that the case came within the principle laid down in Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 334, and directed the jury, upon the authority of that case, that if they thought that the spot was convenient and proper, and the burning of the bricks was, under the circumstances, a reasonable use by the defendant of his own land, the defendant would be entitled to a verdict upon the first count, independent of the small matter of whether there was an interference with the plaintiff's comfort thereby. Upon this ruling a verdict was by arrangement entered for the defendant on the first count, leave being reserved to the plaintiff to move to set it aside, if the court should be of opinion that the above ruling of the Lord Chief Justice was erroneous.

Upon the second count, a verdict was by arrangement entered for the plaintiff, with 1*s.* damages, but no question arose on that count.

In the following Michaelmas term,

Petersdorff, Serjt., moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to show cause why a verdict should not be entered for the plaintiff on the first count for 40*s.* damages.

Per Curiam. (COCKBURN, C. J., WIGHTMAN, HILL, and BLACKBURN, JJ.) Rule refused, with leave to appeal.

The plaintiff having appealed against the above decision, a case setting forth the facts was stated, and concluded as follows: —

"If the court should be of opinion that, upon the facts as stated, the ruling of the Lord Chief Justice, founded upon the decision of Hole v. Barlow, was erroneous, the verdict found for the defendant on the first count is to be set aside, and a verdict entered for the plaintiff instead thereof with 40*s.* damages.

"If the court should be of a contrary opinion, the verdict entered for the defendant upon the first count is to stand."

The case was argued, in Easter vacation, May 14th, before ERLE, C. J., POLLOCK, C. B., WILLIAMS and KEATING, JJ., and BRAMWELL and WILDE, BB.

Mellish (with him Petersdorff, Serjt., and Garth), for the plaintiff.
Lush (with him Honyman), for the defendant.

WILLIAMS, J., delivered the judgment of ERLE, C. J., KEATING, J., WILDE, B., and himself. On the argument of this case, there was some contest as to what the true question was which the court had to consider. On the part of the plaintiff it was said to have been proved at the trial, beyond dispute, that the burning of the bricks in the kilns of the defendant was a nuisance, and that the point reserved was, whether it was legalized by the other facts which the jury must be taken to have found to exist. On the part of the defendant it was said that the true point was, whether, under all the circumstances of the case, the burning of the bricks amounted to an actionable nuisance.

It is not, perhaps, material which of these contentions is correct. For the Lord Chief Justice, at the trial, directed the jury, on the authority of Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 384, to find for the defendant, notwithstanding his burning the bricks had interfered with the plaintiff's comfort, if they were of opinion that the spot where the bricks were burned was a proper and convenient spot, and the burning of them was, under the circumstances, a reasonable use by the defendant of his own land. The jury, consequently, if they were of that opinion, would have been bound to find their verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding they were also of opinion that the brick-kilns of the defendant, by immitting corrupted air upon the plaintiff's house, had rendered it unfit for healthy or comfortable occupation.

It was therefore treated as a doctrine of law that, if the spot should be found by the jury to be proper or convenient, and the burning of the bricks a reasonable use of the land, these circumstances would constitute a bar to the action; and if there is, in truth, no such doctrine, there was a misdirection: it is the same thing as if there had been a plea averring the existence of these circumstances, and a demurrer to the plea. Such a plea, though it would admit all the allegations in the declaration, would be a good plea by way of avoidance, if the direction of the Chief Justice was right. And it is not material to inquire whether it would be good as averring facts which amount to a legalization of the nuisance stated in the declaration, or as superadding facts which, taken together with those stated in the declaration, show that the alleged annoyance was not an actionable nuisance. In either point of view the question for our consideration appears to be, whether the case of Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 334, was well decided. And we are of opinion that it was not.

That decision was plainly founded on a passage in Comyns' Digest, Action upon the Case for a Nuisance (C), which is in the following words: "So an action does not lie for a reasonable use of my right, though it be to the annoyance of another; as, if a butcher, brewer, &c., use his trade in a convenient place, though it be to the annoyance of his neighbor." It may be observed that, in the language of this dictum (for which no authority is cited by Comyns), there is a want of precision, especially in the words "reasonable" and "convenient," which renders its meaning by no means clear. And it may be doubted whether the court, in Hole v. Barlow, did not misunderstand it. What is a "convenient place"? Does this expression mean, as the court understood it in that case, that the place is proper and convenient for the purpose of carrying on the trade, or does it mean that it is a place where a nuisance will not be caused to another? It has been pointed out by Mr. W. H. Willes, in his valuable edition of Gale on Easements, p. 410, note, that this latter sense of the word "convenient" is the one adopted by Hide, C. J., in Jones v. Powell, Palm. 536, 539; s. c. Hutt. 135, where he says, "A tan-house is necessary, for all men wear shoes, and nevertheless it may be pulled down if it be erected to the nuisance of another: in like manner of a glass-house; and they ought to be erected in places convenient for them." In the original Norman-French it is "Un tan house est necessary, car touts wear shoes; et uncore ceo poit estre pull down, &c., si est erect al nusance d'auter: et issint de glass house; Et pur ceux doient estre erect in places convenient pur eux." The term appears to be used in the same sense when applied to questions as to public nuisances. Thus it is said in Hawkins, P. C., book 1, c. 75 (2 Hawk. P. C., by Leach, p. 146, s. 10), "It seems to be agreed, that a brew house, erected in such an inconvenient place wherein the business cannot be carried on without greatly incommoding the neighborhood, may be indicted as a common nuisance." It should seem, therefore, that just as the use of an offensive trade will be indictable as a public nuisance if it be carried on in an inconvenient place, i. e., a place where it greatly incommodes a multitude of persons, so it will be actionable as a private nuisance if it be carried on in an inconvenient place, i. e., a place where it greatly incommodes an individual.

If this be the true construction of the expression "convenient" in the passage from Comyns' Digest, the doctrine contained in it amounts to no more than what has long been settled law, viz., that a man may, without being liable to an action, exercise a lawful trade, as that of a butcher or brewer and the like, notwithstanding it be carried on so near the house of another as to be an annoyance to him, in rendering his residence there less delectable or agreeable, provided the trade be so conducted that it does not cause what amounts, in point of law, to a nuisance to the neighboring house.

In Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 334, however, the court appear to have read the passage as containing a doctrine that a place may be "proper and convenient" for the carrying on of a trade, notwithstanding it is a place where the trade cannot be carried on without causing a nuisance to a neighbor. This is a doctrine which has certainly never been judicially adopted in any case before that of Hole v. Barlow, and moreover the adoption of it would be inconsistent with the judgments pronounced in some of the cases cited at the bar during the argument, and more especially with the case of Walter v. Selfe, 4 De Gex & Sm. 315. And the introduction of such a doctrine into our law would, we think, lead to great inconvenience and hardship, because, as was forcibly urged by Mr. Mellish, in arguing for the plaintiff, if the doctrine is to be maintained at all, it must be maintained to the extent that, however ruinous may be the amount of nuisance caused to a neighbor's property by carrying on an offensive trade, he is without redress if a jury shall deem it right to find that the place where the trade is carried on is a proper and convenient place for the purpose.

It should be observed that the direction of the judge to the jury in Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 334, which was upheld by the Court of Common Pleas, was simply that the verdict ought to be for the defendant if the place where the bricks were burned was a convenient and proper place for the purpose. But in the present case, the Lord Chief Justice's direction to the jury pointed at a further condition, viz., if the burning of the bricks was under the circumstances a reasonable use by the defendant of his own land. It remains, therefore, to consider whether the doctrine adopted in Hole v. Barlow, if accompanied with this addition, is maintainable.

If it be good law, that the fitness of the locality prevents the carrying on of an offensive trade from being an actionable nuisance, it appears necessarily to follow that this must be a reasonable use of the land. But if it is not good law, and if the true doctrine is, that whenever, taking all the circumstances into consideration, including the nature and extent of the plaintiff's enjoyment before the acts complained of, the annoyance is sufficiently great to amount to a nuisance according to the ordinary rule of law, an action will lie, whatever the locality may be, then surely the jury cannot properly be asked whether the causing of the nuisance was a reasonable use of the land.

If such a question is proper for their consideration in an action such as the present, for a nuisance by immitting corrupted air into the plaintiff's house, we can see no reason why a similar question should not be submitted to the jury in actions for other violations of the ordinary rights of property; e. g. the transmission by a neighbor of water in a polluted condition. But certainly it would be difficult to maintain, as the law now stands, that the jury, in such an action, ought to be told to find for the defendant if they thought that the manufactory which caused the impurity of the water was built on a proper and convenient spot, and that the working of it was a reasonable use by the defendant of his own land. Again, where an easement has been gained in addition to the ordinary rights of property, e. g. where a right has been gained to the lateral passage of light and air, no one has ever suggested that the jury might be told, in an action for obstructing the free passage of the light and air, to find for the defendant if they were of opinion that the building which caused the obstruction was erected in a proper and convenient place, and in the reasonable enjoyment by the defendant of his own land. And yet, on principle, it is difficult to see why such a question should not be left to the jury if Hole v. Barlow was well decided.

We are, however, of opinion that the decision in that case was wrong, and, consequently, that the direction of the Lord Chief Justice, which was founded on it, was erroneous, that the verdict for the defendant ought to be set aside, and a verdict entered for the plaintiff.

POLLOCK, C. B. The question in this case is, whether the direction of the Lord Chief Justice, professing to be founded on the decision of the Court of Common Pleas in Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 334, was right, and in my judgment substantially it was right, viz., taking it to have been as stated in the case, viz., "that if the jury thought that the spot was convenient and proper, and the burning of the bricks was, under the circumstances, a reasonable use by the defendant of his own land, the defendant would be entitled to a verdict." I do not think that the nuisance for which an action will lie is capable of any legal definition which will be applicable to all cases and useful in deciding them. The question so entirely depends on the surrounding circumstances,— the place where, the time when, the alleged nuisance, what, the mode of committing it, how, and the duration of it, whether temporary or permanent, occasional or continual, — as to make it impossible to lay down any rule of law applicable to every case, and which will also be useful in assisting a jury to come to a satisfactory conclusion: it must at all times be a question of fact with reference to all the circumstances of the case.

Most certainly in my judgment it cannot be laid down as a legal proposition or doctrine, that anything which, under any circumstances, lessens the comfort or endangers the health or safety of a neighbor, must necessarily be an actionable nuisance. That may be a nuisance in Grosvenor Square which would be none in Smithfield Market; that may be a nuisance at midday which would not be so at midnight; that may be a nuisance which is permanent and continual, which would be no nuisance if temporary or occasional only. A clock striking the hour, or a bell ringing for some domestic purpose, may be a nuisance, if unreasonably loud and discordant, of which the jury alone must judge; but although not unreasonably loud, if the owner, from some whim or caprice, made the clock strike the hour every ten minutes, or the bell ring continually, I think a jury would be justified in considering it to be a very great nuisance. In general, a kitchen chimney, suitable to the establishment to which it belonged, could not be deemed a nuisance; but if built in an inconvenient place or manner, on purpose to annoy the neighbors, it might, I think, very properly be treated as one. The compromises that belong to social life, and upon which the peace and comfort of it mainly depend, furnish an indefinite number of examples where some apparent natural right is invaded, or some enjoyment abridged, to provide for the more general convenience or necessities of the whole community; and I think the more the details of the question are examined, the more clearly it will appear that all that the law can do is to lay down some general and vague proposition which will be no guide to the jury in each particular case that may come before them.

I am of opinion that the passage in Comyns' Digest, Action upon the Case for a Nuisance (C), is good law. I think the word "reasonable" cannot be an improper word, and too vague to be used on this occasion, seeing that the question whether a contract has been reasonably performed with reference to time, place, and subject-matter, is one that is put to a jury almost as often as a jury is assembled. If the act complained of be done in a convenient manner, so as to give no unnecessary annoyance, and be a reasonable exercise of some apparent right, or a reasonable use of the land, house, or property of the party under all the circumstances, in which I include the degree of inconvenience it will produce, then I think no action can be sustained, if the jury find that it was reasonable, — as the jury must be taken to have found that it was reasonable that the defendant should be allowed to do what he did, and reasonable that the plaintiff should submit to the inconvenience occasioned by what was done. And this gets rid of the difficulty suggested in the judgment just read by my Brother Williams ; because it cannot be supposed that a jury would find that to be a reasonable act by a person which produces any ruinous effect upon his neighbors.

With respect to the proposed judgment of the court, as the case does not state that leave was given by the consent of the defendant's counsel, or indeed at all, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 40s. damages, it appears to me that all that this court of error can do, if it disapproves of the direction of the Lord Chief Justice, is to award a venire de novo, that the jury may find a verdict under a proper direction ; for there is strong ground for contending that the entire plot of ground, of which the plaintiff's and the defendant's land formed a part, was sold in various lots, on the understanding that the brick earth should be made into bricks and burned, in order to erect houses on the defendant's lots, and it would seem not perfectly just that the purchaser of one of the lots should actually turn his brick earth into bricks, and build a house, and then deny the same advantage to his neighbors. I think therefore that, if my learned brothers are right in denying to the jury the power of finding that any act was an act reasonable to be done, still, on the statement of the present case, the court has not power to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 40s.

But in my opinion the judgment of the court below ought to be affirmed.

MARTIN, B., read the judgment of BRAMWELL, B.—I am of opinion that this judgment should be reversed. The defendant has done that which, if done wantonly or maliciously, would be actionable, as being a nuisance to the plaintiff's habitation by causing a sensible diminution of the comfortable enjoyment of it. This, therefore, calls on the defendant to justify or excuse what he has done. And his justification is this : He says that the nuisance is not to the health of the inhabitants of the plaintiff's house, that it is of a temporary character, and is necessary for the beneficial use of his, the defendant's, land, and that the public good requires he should be entitled to do what he claims to do.

The question seems to me to be, Is this a justification in law, — and, in order not to make a verbal mistake, I will say, — a justification for what is done, or a matter which makes what is done no nuisance ? It is to be borne in mind, however, that, in fact, the act of the defendant is a nuisance such that it would be actionable if done wantonly or maliciously. The plaintiff, then, has a prima facie case. The defendant has infringed the maxim Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. Then, what principle or rule of law can he rely on to defend himself ? It is clear to my mind that there is some exception to the general application of the maxim mentioned. The instances put during the argument, of burning weeds, emptying cesspools, making noises during repairs, and other instances which would be nuisances if done wantonly or maliciously, nevertheless may be lawfully done. It cannot be said that such acts are not nuisances, because, by the hypothesis, they are ; and it cannot be doubted that, if a person maliciously and without cause made close to a dwelling-house the same offensive smells as may be made in emptying a cesspool, an action would lie. Nor can these cases be got rid of as extreme cases, because such cases properly test a principle. Nor can it be said that the jury settle such questions by finding there is no nuisance, though there is. For that is to suppose they violate their duty, and that, if they discharged their duty, such matters would be actionable, which I think they could not and ought not to be. There must be, then, some principle on which such cases must be excepted. It seems to me that that principle may be deduced from the character of these cases, and is this, viz., that those acts necessary for the common and ordinary use and occupation of land and houses may be done, if conveniently done, without subjecting those who do them to an action. This principle would comprehend all the cases I have mentioned, but would not comprehend the present, where what has been done was not the using of land in a common and ordinary way, but in an exceptional manner—not unnatural nor unusual, but not the common and ordinary use of land. There is an obvious necessity for such a principle as I have mentioned. It is as much for the advantage of one owner as of another; for the very nuisance the one complains of, as the result of the ordinary use of his neighbor's land, he himself will create in the ordinary use of his own, and the reciprocal nuisances are of a comparatively trifling character. The convenience of such a rule may be indicated by calling it a rule of give and take, live and let live.

Then can this principle be extended to, or is there any other principle which will comprehend, the present case? I know of none: it is for the defendant to show it. None of the above reasoning is applicable to such a cause of nuisance as the present. It had occurred to me, that any not unnatural use of the land, if of a temporary character, might be justified; but I cannot see why its being of a temporary nature should warrant it. What is temporary,—one, five, or twenty years? If twenty, it would be difficult to say that a brick kiln in the direction of the prevalent wind for twenty years would not be as objectionable as a permanent one in the opposite direction. If temporary in order to build a house on the land, why not temporary in order to exhaust the brick earth? I cannot think then that the nuisance being temporary makes a difference.

But it is said that, temporary or permanent, it is lawful because it is for the public benefit. Now, in the first place, that law to my mind is a bad one which, for the public benefit, inflicts loss on an individual without compensation. But further, with great respect, I think this consideration misapplied in this and in many other cases. The public consists of all the individuals of it, and a thing is only for the public benefit when it is productive of good to those individuals on the balance of loss and gain to all. So that if all the loss and all the gain were borne and received by one individual, he on the whole would be a gainer. But whenever this is the case,—whenever a thing is for the public benefit, properly understood,—the loss to the individuals of the public who lose will bear compensation out of the gains of those who gain. It is for the public benefit there should be railways, but it would not be unless the gain of having the railway was sufficient to compensate the loss occasioned by the use of the land required for its site; and accordingly no one thinks it would be right to take an individual's land without compensation to make a railway. It is for the public benefit that trains should run, but not unless they pay their expenses. If one of those expenses is the burning down of a wood of such value that the railway owners would not run the train and burn down the wood if it were their own, neither is it for the public benefit they should if the wood is not their own. If, though the wood were their own, they still would find it compensated them to run trains at the cost of burning the wood, then they obviously ought to compensate the owner of such wood, not being themselves, if they burn it down in making their gains. So in like way in this case a money value indeed cannot easily be put on the plaintiff's loss, but it is equal to some number of pounds or pence, £10, £50, or what not: unless the defendant's profits are enough to compensate this, I deny that it is for the public benefit he should do what he has done; if they are, he ought to compensate.

The only objection I can see to this reasoning is, that by injunction or by abatement of the nuisance a man who would not accept a pecuniary compensation might put a stop to works of great value, and much more than enough to compensate him. This objection, however, is comparatively of small practical importance; it may be that the law ought to be amended, and some means be provided to legalize such cases, as I believe is the case in some foreign countries on giving compensation; but I am clearly of opinion that, though the present law may be defective, it would be much worse, and be unjust and inexpedient, if it permitted such power of inflicting loss and damage to individuals, without compensation, as is claimed by the argument for the defendant.

Since the decision of Hole v. Barlow, 4 C. B. N. S. 334, claims have been made to poison and foul rivers, and to burn up and devastate land, on the ground of public benefit. I am aware that case did not decide so much, but I have a difficulty, for the reasons I have mentioned, in saying that what has been so contended for does not follow from the principles enunciated in that case.

If we look to analogous cases I find nothing to countenance the defendant's contention. A riparian owner cannot take water for the public benefit; he cannot foul it for the public benefit, if to the prejudice of another owner. A common cannot be enclosed on such principle. A window, the fee-simple of which is 5s., cannot be stopped up by a building worth £1,000,000, of the greatest public benefit, nor a way. The windows of such a house might be blocked from light and air, however contrary that might be to the public benefit.

It is true that a man's character may be unjustly attacked in some cases without remedy. But we ought to follow the rule, not the exception; and that that is an exception and anomalous cannot be doubted. It is shown by such instances as I have put, and by this: if a man sees another apparently committing a felony, he is bound by law to prevent it if the man is really committing it; but if it turns out that no felony is being committed, the arrest of such a man would be an assault and false imprisonment.

As to the somewhat remote illustration of taking a man's land in case of foreign invasion, it is said that is a case of "necessity;" but it can hardly be a "necessity" to burn bricks on the defendant's land, to the nuisance of the plaintiff, without compensation.

I confess then I can see no reason or principle in the defendant's contention.

With the greatest respect for those who decided Hole v. Barlow, I cannot, for the reasons I have given, agree with it. That case reminds me strongly of what the late Lord Denman said, that he suspected a case very much when he found it continually quoted immediately after its decision; and certainly Hole v. Barlow has been so quoted, and defences made on its authority which never would have been thought of before it appeared. It stands alone. It is practically opposed to cases of daily occurrence, where such a point might have been made and was not. I have a difficulty in putting a meaning on the words "convenient, reasonable, and proper," as there used. "Convenient, reasonable, and proper," as regards the sufferer? No. "Convenient, reasonable, and proper," as regards the defendant? That cannot be, as that might place the nuisance close to the plaintiff, to the entire loss of the power of dwelling in his house. "Convenient, reasonable, and proper" as between the two? Then the nuisance may lawfully be greater, as the defendant's premises are smaller, and so his kiln must be nearer. "Convenient, reasonable, and proper" as regards the public good? That I have already dealt with. These words are perfectly intelligible when applied to such nuisances as would form the common and ordinary use of land, &c. See the comments on the case by Mr. W. H. Willes, in his edition of Gale on Easements, p. 409, note. It is countenanced by the passage from Comyns' Digest, tit. Action upon the Case for a Nuisance (C) alone, which is contradicted in the same book, and is sufficiently dealt with by the judgment of my Brother Williams.

In the result, then, I think it should be overruled,—which practically is the question here,—and that our judgment should be for the plaintiff.

Judgment reversed, and entered for the plaintiff for 40s.¹

ST. HELEN'S SMELTING COMPANY v. TIPPING.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1865.

[Reported 11 H. L. C. 642.]

THIS was an action brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defendants damages for injuries done to his trees and crops, by their works. The defendants are the directors and shareholders of the St. Helen's Copper Smelting Company (Limited). The plaintiff, in 1860, purchased a large portion of the Bold Hall estate, consisting of the manor house and about 1300 acres of land, within a short distance of which stood the works of the defendants. The declaration alleged that, "the defendants erected, used, and continued to use, certain smelting works upon land near to the said dwelling-house and lands of the plaintiff, and caused large quantities of noxious gases, vapors, and other noxious matter, to issue from the said works, and diffuse themselves over the land and premises of the plaintiff, whereby the hedges, trees, shrubs, fruit, and herbage, were greatly injured; the cattle were rendered unhealthy, and the plaintiff was prevented from having so beneficial a use of the said land and premises as he would otherwise have enjoyed, and also the reversionary lands and premises were depreciated in value." The defendants pleaded, not guilty.

The cause was tried before Mr. Justice Mellor at Liverpool in August, 1863, when the plaintiff was examined and spoke distinctly to the damage done to his plantations, and to the very unpleasant nature of the vapor, which, when the wind was in a particular direction, affected persons as well as plants in his grounds. On cross-examination, he said he had seen the defendants' chimney before he purchased the estate, but he was not aware whether the works were then in operation. On the part of the defendants, evidence was called to show that the whole neighborhood was studded with manufactories and tall chimneys, that there were some alkali works close by the defendants' works, that the smoke from one was quite as injurious as the smoke from the other, that the smoke of both sometimes united, and that it was impossible to say to which of the two any particular injury was attributable. The fact that the defendants' works existed before the plaintiff bought the property was also relied on.

The learned judge told the jury that an actionable injury was one producing sensible discomfort; that every man, unless enjoying rights obtained by prescription or agreement, was bound to use his own property in such a manner as not to injure the property of his neighbors; that there was no prescriptive right in this case; that the law did not regard trifling inconveniences; that everything must be looked at from a reasonable point of view; and therefore, in an action for nuisance to property, arising from noxious vapors, the injury to be actionable must be such as visibly to diminish the value of the property and the comfort and enjoyment of it. That when the jurors came to consider the facts, all the circumstances, including those of time and locality, ought to be taken into consideration; and that with respect to the latter it was clear that in counties where great works had been erected and carried on, persons must not stand on their extreme rights and bring actions in respect of every matter of annoyance, for if so, the business of the whole country would be seriously interfered with.

The defendants' counsel submitted that the three questions which ought to be left to the jury were, "whether it was a necessary trade, whether the place was a suitable place for such a trade, and whether it was carried on in a reasonable manner." The learned judge did not put the questions in this form, but did ask the jury whether the enjoyment of the plaintiff's property was sensibly diminished, and the answer was in the affirmative. Whether the business there carried on was an ordinary business for smelting copper, and the answer was, "We consider it an ordinary business, and conducted in a proper manner, in as good a manner as possible." But to the question whether the jurors thought that it was carried on in a proper place, the answer was, "We do not." The verdict was therefore entered for the plaintiff, and the damages were assessed at £361 18s. 4½d. A motion was made for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, but the rule was refused, 4 Best & S. 608. Leave was however given to appeal, and the case was carried to the Exchequer Chamber, where the judgment was affirmed; Lord Chief Baron Pollock there observing, "My opinion has not always been that which it is now. Acting upon what has been decided in this court, my Brother Mellor's direction is not open to a bill of exception." 4 Best & S. 616. This appeal was then brought.

The judges were summoned, and Mr. Baron Martin, Mr. Justice Willes, Mr. Justice Blackburn, Mr. Justice Keating, Mr. Baron Pigott, and Mr. Justice Shee, attended.

The Attorney-General (Sir R. Palmer) and Mr. Webster, for the appellants (defendants in the court below).

Mr. Brett, Mr. Mellish, and Mr. Milward were for the respondent, but were not called upon to address the House.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR (LORD WESTBURY).—My Lords, as your Lordships, as well as myself, have listened carefully to the able argument on the part of the appellants, and are perfectly satisfied with the decision of the court below, and are of opinion that, subject to what we may hear from the learned judges, the direction to the jury was right, I would submit that two questions should be put to the learned judges; but at the same time the learned judges will be good enough to understand that if they desire further argument of the case the respondent's counsel must be heard. Otherwise the following are the questions which I propose to be put to them: Whether directions given by the learned judge at Nisi Prius to the jury were correct? or, Whether a new trial ought to be granted in this case? The learned judges will intimate to your Lordships whether they desire to hear further argument on the part of the respondent's counsel, or whether they are prepared to answer the questions put to them by your Lordships.

MR. BARON MARTIN said that the judges did not require the case to be further argued, but they requested to have a few moments' consideration to give their answer to the questions put to them.

Adjourned for a short time, and resumed.

MR. BARON MARTIN. My Lords, in answer to the questions proposed by your Lordships to the judges, I have to state their unanimous opinion that the directions given by the learned judge to the jury were correct, and that a new trial ought not to be granted. As far as the experience of all of us goes, the directions are such as we have given in these cases for the last twenty years.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR. My Lords, I think your Lordships will be satisfied with the answer we have received from the learned judges to the questions put by this House.

My Lords, in matters of this description it appears to me that it is a very desirable thing to mark the difference between an action brought for a nuisance upon the ground that the alleged nuisance produces material injury to the property, and an action brought for a nuisance on the ground that the thing alleged to be a nuisance is productive of sensible personal discomfort. With regard to the latter, namely, the personal inconvenience and interference with one's enjoyment, one's quiet, one's personal freedom, anything that discomposes or injuriously affects the senses or the nerves, whether that may or may not be denominated a nuisance, must undoubtedly depend greatly on the circumstances of the place where the thing complained of actually occurs. If a man lives in a town, it is necessary that he should subject himself to the consequences of those operations of trade which may be carried on in his immediate locality, which are actually necessary for trade and commerce, and also for the enjoyment of property, and for the benefit of the inhabitants of the town and of the public at large. If a man lives in a street where there are numerous shops, and a shop is opened next door to him, which is carried on in a fair and reasonable way, he has no ground for complaint, because to himself individually there may arise much discomfort from the trade carried on in that shop. But when an occupation is carried on by one person in the neighborhood of another, and the result of that trade, or occupation, or business, is a material injury to property, then there unquestionably arises a very different consideration. I think, my Lords, that in a case of that description, the submission which is required from persons living in society to that amount of discomfort which may be necessary for the legitimate and free exercise of the trade of their neighbors, would not apply to circumstances the immediate result of which is sensible injury to the value of the property.

Now, in the present case, it appears that the plaintiff purchased a very valuable estate, which lies within a mile and a half from certain large smelting works. What the occupation of these copper-smelting premises was anterior to the year 1860 does not clearly appear. The plaintiff became the proprietor of an estate of great value in the month of June, 1860. In the month of September, 1860, very extensive smelting operations began on the property of the present appellants, in their works at St. Helen's. Of the effect of the vapors exhaling from those works upon the plaintiff's property, and the injury done to his trees and shrubs, there is abundance of evidence in the case.

My Lords, the action has been brought upon that, and the jurors have found the existence of the injury; and the only ground upon which your Lordships are asked to set aside that verdict, and to direct a new trial, is this, that the whole neighborhood where these copper-smelting works were carried on, is a neighborhood more or less devoted to manufacturing purposes of a similar kind, and therefore it is said, that inasmuch as this copper smelting is carried on in what the appellant contends is a fit place, it may be carried on with impunity, although the result may be the utter destruction, or the very considerable diminution, of the value of the plaintiff's property. My Lords, I apprehend that that is not the meaning of the word "suitable," or the meaning of the word "convenient," which has been used as applicable to the subject. The word "suitable" unquestionably cannot carry with it this consequence, that a trade may be carried on in a particular locality, the consequence of which trade may be injury and destruction to the neighboring property. Of course, my Lords, I except cases where any prescriptive right has been acquired by a lengthened user of the place.

On these grounds, therefore, shortly, without dilating further upon them (and they are sufficiently unfolded by the judgment of the learned judges in the court below), I advise your Lordships to affirm the decision of the court below, and to refuse the new trial, and to dismiss the appeal with costs.

LORD CRANWORTH. My Lords, I entirely concur in opinion with my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack, and also in the opinion expressed by the learned judges, that this has been considered to be the proper mode of directing a jury, as Mr. Baron Martin said, for at least twenty years; I believe I should have carried it back rather further. In stating what I always understood the proper question to be, I cannot do better than adopt the language of Mr. Justice Mellor. He says, "It must be plain, that persons using a lime-kiln, or other works which emit noxious vapors, may not do an actionable injury to another, and that any place where such an operation is carried on so that it does occasion an actionable injury to another, is not, in the meaning of the law, a convenient place." I always understood that to be so; but in truth, as was observed in one of the cases by the learned judges, it is extremely difficult to lay down any actual definition of what constitutes an injury, because it is always a question of compound facts, which must be looked to to see whether or not the mode of carrying on a business did or did not occasion so serious an injury as to interfere with the comfort of life and enjoyment of property.

I perfectly well remember, when I had the honor of being one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer, trying a case in the county of Durham, where there was an action for injury arising from smoke, in the town of Shields. It was proved uncontestedly that smoke did come and in some degree interfere with a certain person; but I said, "You must look at it not with a view to the question whether, abstractedly, that quantity of smoke was a nuisance, but whether it was a nuisance to a person living in the town of Shields;" because, if it only added in an infinitesimal degree to the quantity of smoke, I held that the state of the town rendered it altogether impossible to call that an actionable nuisance.

There is nothing of that sort, however, in the present case. It seems to me that the distinction, in matters of fact, was most correctly pointed out by Mr. Justice Mellor, and I do not think he could possibly have stated the law, either abstractedly or with reference to the facts, better than he has done in this case.

LORD WENSLEYDALE. My Lords, I entirely agree in opinion with both my noble and learned friends in this case. In these few sentences I think everything is included: The defendants say, "If you do not mind you will stop the progress of works of this description." I agree that it is so, because, no doubt, in the county of Lancaster above all other counties, where great works have been created and carried on, and are the means of developing the national wealth, you must not stand on extreme rights and allow a person to say, "I will bring an action against you for this and that, and so on." Business could not go on if that were so. Everything must be looked at from a reasonable point of view; therefore the law does not regard trifling and small inconveniences, but only regards sensible inconveniences, injuries which sensibly diminish the comfort, enjoyment or value of the property which is affected.

My Lords, I do not think the question could have been more correctly laid down by any one to the jury, and I entirely concur in the propriety of dismissing this appeal.

Judgment of the Exchequer Chamber affirming the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench affirmed; and appeal dismissed, with costs.¹

STURGES v. BRIDGMAN.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY. 1879.

[Reported 11 Ch. Div. 852.]

THE plaintiff in this case was a physician. In the year 1865 he purchased the lease of a house in Wimpole Street, London, which he occupied as his professional residence.

Wimpole Street runs north and south, and is crossed at right angles by Wigmore Street. The plaintiff's house was on the west side of Wimpole Street, and was the second house from the north side of Wigmore Street. Behind the house was a garden, and in 1873 the plaintiff erected a consulting-room at the end of his garden.

The defendant was a confectioner in large business in Wigmore Street. His house was on the north side of Wigmore Street and his kitchen was at the back of his house, and stood on ground which was formerly a garden and abutted on the portion of the plaintiff's garden on which he built the consulting-room. So that there was nothing between the plaintiff's consulting-room and the defendant's kitchen but the party-wall. The defendant had in his kitchen two large marble mortars set in brickwork built up to and against the party-wall which separated his kitchen from the plaintiff's consulting-room, and worked by two large wooden pestles held in an upright position by horizontal bearers fixed into the party-wall. These mortars were used for breaking up and pounding loaf-sugar and other hard substances, and for pounding meat.

The plaintiff alleged that when the defendant's pestles and mortars were being used, the noise and vibration thereby caused were very great, and were heard and felt in the plaintiff's consulting-room, and such noise and vibration seriously annoyed and disturbed the plaintiff, and materially interfered with him in the practice of his profession. In particular the plaintiff stated that the noise prevented him from examining his patients by auscultation for diseases of the chest. He also found it impossible to engage with effect in any occupation which required thought and attention.

The use of the pestles and mortars varied with the pressure of the defendant's business, but they were generally used between the hours 10 A. M. and 1 P. M.

The plaintiff made several complaints of the annoyance, and ultimately brought this action, in which he claimed an injunction to restrain the defendant from using the pestles and mortars in such manner as to cause him annoyance.

The defendant stated in his defence that he and his father had used one of the pestles and mortars in the same place and to the same extent as now for more than sixty years, and that he had used the second pestle and mortar in the same place and to the same extent as now for more than twenty-six years. He alleged that if the plaintiff had built his consulting-room with a separate wall, and not against the wall of the defendant's kitchen, he would not have experienced any noise or vibration; and he denied that the plaintiff suffered any serious annoyance, and pleaded a prescriptive right to use the pestles and mortars under the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71.

Issue was joined, and both parties went into evidence. The result of the evidence was that the existence of the nuisance was, in the opinion of the court, sufficiently proved; and it also appeared that no material inconvenience had been felt by the plaintiff until he built his consulting-room.

The action came on for trial May 31, 1878, before Jessel, M. R., who held that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction.¹

From this decision the defendant appealed. The appeal came on to be heard on the 13th of June, 1879.

Chitty, Q. C., and Method, for the appellant.

Waller, Q. C., and S. Dickenson, for the plaintiff.

1879, July 1. THESIGER, L. J., delivered the judgment of the court (JAMES, BAGGALLAY, and THESIGER, L. JJ.) as follows:—

The defendant in this case is the occupier, for the purpose of his business as a confectioner, of a house in Wigmore Street. In the rear of the house is a kitchen, and in that kitchen there are now, and have been for over twenty years, two large mortars in which the meat and other materials of the confectionery are pounded. The plaintiff, who is a physician, is the occupier of a house in Wimpole Street, which until recently had a garden at the rear, the wall of which garden was a party-wall between the plaintiff's and the defendant's premises, and formed the back wall of the defendant's kitchen. The plaintiff has, however, recently built upon the site of the garden a consulting-room, one of the side walls of which is the wall just described. It has been proved that in the case of the mortars, before and at the time of action brought, a noise was caused which seriously inconvenienced the plaintiff in the use of his consulting-room, and which, unless the defendant had acquired a right to impose the inconvenience, would constitute an actionable nuisance. The defendant contends that he had acquired the right, either at common law or under the Prescription Act, by uninterrupted user for more than twenty years.

In deciding this question one more fact is necessary to be stated. Prior to the erection of the consulting-room no material annoyance or inconvenience was caused to the plaintiff or to any previous occupier of the plaintiff's house by what the defendant did. It is true that the defendant in the 7th paragraph of his affidavit speaks of an invalid lady who occupied the house upon one occasion, about thirty years before, requesting him if possible to discontinue the use of the mortars before eight o'clock in the morning; and it is true also that there is some evidence of the garden wall having been subjected to vibration, but this vibration, even if it existed at all, was so slight, and the complaint, if it could be called a complaint, of the invalid lady, and can be looked upon as evidence, was of so trifling a character that, upon the maxim de minimis non curat lex, we arrive at the conclusion that the defendant's acts would not have given rise to any proceedings either at law or in equity. Here then arises the objection to the acquisition by the defendant of any easement. That which was done by him was in its nature such that it could not be physically interrupted; it could not at the same time be put a stop to by action. Can user which is neither preventable nor actionable found an easement? We think not. The question, so far as regards this particular easement claimed, is the same question whether the defendant endeavors to assert his right by common law or under the Prescription Act. That Act fixes periods for the acquisition of easements, but, except in regard to the particular easement of light, or in regard to certain matters which are immaterial to the present inquiry, it does not alter the character of easements, or of the user or enjoyment by which they are acquired. This being so, the law governing the acquisition of easements by user stands thus: Consent or acquiescence of the owner of the servient tenement lies at the root of prescription, and of the fiction of a lost grant, and hence the acts or user, which go to the proof of either the one or the other, must be, in the language of the civil law, nec vi nec clam nec precario; for a man cannot, as a general rule, be said to consent to or acquiesce in the acquisition by his neighbor of an easement through an enjoyment of which he has no knowledge, actual or constructive, or which he contests and endeavors to interrupt, or which he temporarily licenses. It is a mere extension of the same notion, or rather it is a principle into which by strict analysis it may be resolved, to hold, that an enjoyment which a man cannot prevent raises no presumption of consent or acquiescence. Upon this principle it was decided in Webb v. Bird, 13 C. B. N. S. 841, that currents of air blowing from a particular quarter of the compass, and in Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. C. 349, that subterranean water percolating through the strata in no known channels, could not be acquired as an easement by user; and in Angus v. Dalton, 4 Q. B. D. 162, a case of lateral support of buildings by adjacent soil, which came on appeal to this court, the principle was in no way impugned, although it was held by the majority of the court not to be applicable so as to prevent the acquisition of that particular easement. It is a principle which must be equally appropriate to the case of affirmative as of negative easements; in other words, it is equally unreasonable to imply your consent to your neighbor enjoying something which passes from your tenement to his, as to his subjecting your tenement to something which comes from his, when in both cases you have no power of prevention. But the affirmative easement differs from the negative easement in this, that the latter can under no circumstances be interrupted except by acts done upon the servient tenement; but the former, constituting, as it does, a direct interference with the enjoyment by the servient owner of his tenement, may be the subject of legal proceedings as well as of physical interruption. To put concrete cases,—the passage of light and air to your neighbor's windows may be physically interrupted by you, but gives you no legal grounds of complaint against him. The passage of water from his land on to yours may be physically interrupted, or may be treated as a trespass and made the ground of action for damages, or for an injunction, or both. Noise is similar to currents of air and the flow of subterranean and uncertain streams in its practical incapability of physical interruption, but it differs from them in its capability of grounding an action. Webb v. Bird and Chase-more v. Richards are not, therefore, direct authorities governing the present case. They are, however, illustrations of the principle which ought to govern it; for until the noise, to take this case, became an actionable nuisance, which it did not at any time before the consulting-room was built, the basis of the presumption of the consent, viz., the power of prevention physically or by action, was never present.

It is said that if this principle is applied in cases like the present, and were carried out to its logical consequences, it would result in the most serious practical inconveniences; for a man might go, say into the midst of the tanneries of Bermondsey, or into any other locality devoted to a particular trade or manufacture of a noisy or unsavory character, and, by building a private residence upon a vacant piece of land, put a stop to such trade or manufacture altogether. The case also is put of a blacksmith's forge built away from all habitations, but to which, in course of time, habitations approach. We do not think that either of these hypothetical cases presents any real difficulty. As regards the first, it may be answered that whether anything is a nuisance or not, is a question to be determined, not merely by an abstract consideration of the thing itself, but in reference to its circumstances; what would be a nuisance in Belgrave Square would not necessarily be so in Bermondsey; and where a locality is devoted to a particular trade or manufacture carried on by the traders or manufacturers in a particular and established manner not constituting a public nuisance, judges and juries would be justified in finding, and may be trusted to find, that the trade or manufacture so carried on in that locality is not a private or actionable wrong. As regards the blacksmith's forge, that is really an idem per idem case with the present. It would be on the one hand in a very high degree unreasonable and undesirable that there should be a right of action for acts which are not in the present condition of the adjoining land, and possibly never will be any annoyance or inconvenience to either its owner or occupier; and it would be on the other hand in an equally degree unjust, and, from a public point of view, inexpedient that the use and value of the adjoining land should, for all time and under all circumstances, be restricted and diminished by reason of the continuance of acts incapable of physical interruption, and which the law gives no power to prevent. The smith in the case supposed might protect himself by taking a sufficient curtilage to insure what he does from being at any time an annoyance to his neighbor; but the neighbor himself would be powerless in the matter. Individual cases of hardship may occur in the strict carrying out of the principle upon which we found our judgment, but the negation of the principle would lead even more to individual hardship, and would at the same time produce a prejudicial effect upon the development of land for residential purposes. The Master of the Rolls in the court below took substantially the same view of the matter as ourselves, and granted the relief which the plaintiff prayed for; and we are of opinion that his order is right and should be affirmed, and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.¹

DANA v. VALENTINE.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1842.

[Reported 5 Met. 8.]

THIS was a bill in equity, brought by ten plaintiffs, praying for an injunction to restrain the defendant from carrying on the business of manufacturing soap and candles, and of slaughtering cattle, &c., in the town of Cambridge.

The bill alleged that six of the plaintiffs were, and long had been, severally seised and in the actual possession of freehold estates in several parcels of land in said Cambridge, fronting on Pearl Street, in the immediate vicinity of a dense and rapidly increasing population; which lands would be of great value and in great demand for dwelling-houses, but for the existence of the nuisances hereinafter complained of, and were of comparatively small value for any other purpose than for building lots: That the other four plaintiffs were, and long had been, severally seised and possessed of dwelling-houses in said Cambridge, near to said street, which were severally occupied and inhabited by them, with their several families: That the defendant, for five years next before the filing of the bill, had been, and still was, possessed of a lot of land and buildings, fronting on said street, contiguous and near to the aforesaid lands and dwelling-houses of the plaintiffs; and that he, about five years since, commenced and has ever since wrongfully exercised and carried on, in and upon his said lot of land and buildings, the trade and business of manufacturing soap and candles, and of slaughtering cattle, and of melting and trying out grease and manufacturing tallow, from the bones and offal of cattle, whereby the air, within and about the before-mentioned dwellings and lands of the plaintiffs, had constantly been, and still was, impregnated with noisome, noxious, and offensive vapors, fumes, and stenches, and had been, during all the time aforesaid, and still was, by means thereof, rendered corrupt, offensive, and unwholesome : That the aforesaid lands of two of the six plaintiffs first above mentioned had been, during the time aforesaid, and still were, flowed and injured by the feculent matter proceeding from the defendant's slaughter-house on his said lot of land : That the said lands of all the plaintiffs had been, and still were, by reason of the said trades so injuriously exercised by the defendant, rendered unsalable and of no value ; and that the plaintiffs, who own the dwelling-houses above-mentioned, and their families, had been and still were greatly harassed and annoyed, their health endangered, and their dwellings rendered uncomfortable and unfit for habitation. The bill further alleged, that the defendant, in the exercise of his business of slaughtering cattle, and as incident thereto, greatly annoyed and injured the plaintiffs, who are last above mentioned, and their families, by filling said street with herds of cattle, and thereby often rendering it impassable with safety or comfort ; and also by spreading upon the fences, on both sides of said street, the hides taken from slaughtered cattle, and thereby filling the air with noxious stenches, &c.

It was further alleged in the bill, that within two months next before the filing thereof, the defendant's buildings, in which he exercised said trades, were consumed by fire, and that the plaintiffs had requested him to refrain from rebuilding and from carrying on said trades any longer in that place ; but that the defendant had refused so to refrain, and had avowed his determination to rebuild, and to carry on said trades as before, and had begun and was proceeding in the erection of buildings, &c., for that purpose.

The bill concluded with an averment that the plaintiffs had no plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law, and a prayer that a writ of injunction might be ordered and issued against the defendant, to desist from recommencing either of said trades in the place or vicinity aforesaid, and that he might be decreed to pay to the plaintiffs, respectively, the damages sustained by them, by reason of his former wrongful exercise of said trades.

The defendant's answer admitted that in the year 1825 he became the occupant of the lot of land and buildings mentioned in the plaintiffs' bill, and that in 1828 he became the owner thereof in fee, and had, from his first occupation thereof, there carried on the business of slaughtering cattle, and boiling and trying out tallow, and for the last five years had been there engaged in manufacturing soap and candles ; but he denied that the air within and about the premises of the plaintiffs had been thereby constantly, or during any part of said five years, impregnated with noisome or unwholesome vapors, so as to render the same offensive or injurious to the plaintiffs or their families, or that the lands of either of the plaintiffs had ever been flowed or injured by the feculent matter proceeding from the defendant's slaughter-house. The defendant also denied that either of the plaintiffs, or their families, had suffered any great annoyance or injury, or been rendered greatly uncomfortable by any of the causes set forth in their bill: He admitted, however, that during part of the hot season of some years, prior to 1836, disgusting and offensive vapors, fumes, &c., did proceed from the matter which accumulated about his slaughter-house, whereby the air on the plaintiffs' premises might have been and probably was a little corrupted, and rendered a little offensive and uncomfortable; but denied that such was the fact since the year 1835.

The defendant also averred in his answer, that Wheeler and Gay, from whom, through mesne conveyances, he derived title to his said lot of land, &c., purchased said lot in the year 1816, and in that year erected thereon buildings, &c., suitable for the purpose of slaughtering cattle, and ever thereafter, for seven years next ensuing, there carried on the business of slaughtering cattle and boiling and trying out tallow; and that the same business was afterwards there carried on by others, excepting two years, until the year 1825, when the defendant became the occupant of said lot and buildings, as above by him stated.

The plaintiffs filed a general replication, and evidence was taken by both parties.

The argument was had at the last October term.

Greenleaf and R. H. Dana, Jr., for the plaintiffs.

Buttrick, for the defendant.

WILDE, J. [After stating the substance of the bill and answer.] The material facts alleged in the bill are satisfactorily proved. Indeed most of them are admitted in the answer. The charge, however, as to the unwholesomeness of the air is neither admitted by the defendant, nor satisfactorily proved by the plaintiffs. But according to the view we have taken of the question, whether, upon the whole matter, the plaintiffs are entitled to the relief prayed for, we do not consider it necessary to discuss the conflicting evidence on this point, nor that in respect to the extent of the plaintiffs' damages, about which the numerous witnesses do not entirely coincide.

The facts admitted by the answer are abundantly sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to relief, either jointly or severally, unless the defendant can show a sufficient defence. Two grounds of defence are relied on. The first is, that the plaintiffs, if they have been injured, have a complete and adequate remedy at law. And in the second place, that the defendant has made out a good prescriptive right and justification.

As to the first ground of defence, we are of opinion, that the several plaintiffs, who own vacant lots, on which there are no dwelling-houses, have a complete and adequate remedy at law; and that an action at law for the recovery of damages for the diminution of the value of their lands, by the nuisance alleged, is the only suitable and appropriate remedy. Upon no principle of equity can the court interpose in their favor, by injunction on the defendant to desist from carrying on his trade; there being no certainty that dwelling-houses will ever be erected on these premises : Or if there should be, it is uncertain when such erections may be made. To require this extraordinary relief, the injury complained of must actually exist, or the danger must appear to be certain and immediate, and not depending on any contingency. We think it therefore very manifest, that these owners of vacant lots have made out no title to the interposition of a court of equity. Attorney General v. Nichol, 16 Ves. 342 ; Fishmongers' Co. v. East India Co., 1 Dick. 164 ; Wynstanley v. Lee, 2 Swanst. 336 ; Bonaparte v. Camden & Amboy Rail Road Co., 1 Bald. 231 ; 2 Story on Eq. § 925.

On this ground the defendant's counsel contends that the bill must be dismissed, and that by the rules of pleading and practice in courts of equity, it cannot, at this stage of the proceedings, be amended. And several cases have been cited, in which it was decided that if a party having an interest, joins with him, as a co-plaintiff, a party having no interest, the bill is demurrable, if the facts appear on the bill, and if not, that they may be well pleaded in defence. And as to the rule of amendments, it is well settled in the courts of equity in England, that no amendment generally is allowable, after the parties are at issue and witnesses have been examined. But there are some exceptions, when it is necessary to make new parties ; which may be done by special leave of court. Story, Eq. Pl. § 332 ; Mitf. Pl. (3d ed.) 262. Goodwin v. Goodwin, 3 Atk. 370. But on the question of amendments we are not bound by the English rules of practice. By our Rev. Sts. c. 100, § 22, "the court, in which any civil action is pending, may, at any time before judgment rendered therein, allow amendments, either in form or substance, of any process, pleading, or proceeding in such action, on such terms as shall be just and reasonable." Under this provision, we should not hesitate to allow an amendment of the bill on reasonable terms, if by any amendment it could be maintained.

We are therefore to consider the second ground of defence, and to determine whether either of the plaintiffs, according to the rules and principles of equity, is entitled to the relief prayed for.

The defence is, that the defendant, and those from whom he derives his title, have been in the possession of the buildings in which he carries on his trade, for more than twenty years ; during which time, he and they have carried on said trade without molestation or interruption, excepting for about two years, when the said buildings were not so used by them. This, prima facie, is a good foundation for the presumption of a grant, unless the said non user is to be considered as breaking the continuity of the possession. The facts and circumstances in evidence are not sufficient to enable the court to give any decisive opinion on this point ; but such as the evidence is, it is not sufficient to show any relinquishment or abandonment, by the persons under whom the defendant claims, of any of their privileges ; and no interruption of their enjoyment of them by the plaintiffs is either proved or alleged. The mere ceasing to enjoy an easement does not destroy a party's right, unless it appears from the facts and circumstances that he intended to abandon and not to resume it. So it was decided in Moore v. Rawson, 3 Barn. & Cres. 332; s. c. 5 Dowl. & Ryl. 234. In that case, the party's right to the easement had become perfect before he ceased to enjoy it, and in that respect it differs from the present case; but the principle, we think, applies here. The material inquiry in all such cases is, whether there was an intention to abandon the easement or privilege before enjoyed, or whether the non user is imputable to some other cause. See Gale & Whatley on Easements (Amer. ed.), 262.

Another objection to the defendant's title by prescription is, that until lately the plaintiffs suffered no damage from the alleged nuisance, and therefore could not interpose to prevent its continuance. But it is very clear that where a party's right of property is invaded, he may maintain an action for the invasion of his right, without proof of actual damage. So it was decided in Bolivar Manuf. Co. v. Neponset Manuf. Co., 16 Pick. 247, and the principle is unquestionable. 2 East, 161; 2 Met. 469; 4 Met. 477.

Some other objections were made to the defendant's prescriptive right, which however it is not important to remark upon, for the most that can be urged is, that the defendant's right is doubtful; and that is sufficient for him to show, as a defence, in the present suit. It has been frequently decided that when works have been suffered to remain three years or upwards, that is considered such laches as to preclude the party from having relief in a court of equity, without going first to law. It was so decided in Weller v. Smeaton, 1 Cox, 102, and in Reid v. Gifford, 6 Johns. Ch. 19.

In the present case, the defendant has been in the uninterrupted possession of his buildings and works ever since the year 1825, carrying on his trade and business during the whole time, without any objection made by the plaintiffs until recently. And in addition he has proved a good prima facie title by prescription. Whether the plaintiffs may be able to impeach this title effectually, we do not know; but that question is to be tried in an action at law. And before its determination, this court, as a court of equity will not interpose.

Nor is this a case in which the proceedings ought to be suspended until the trial and decision of the title at law. That would be a proper course to pursue, where a temporary injunction becomes necessary to prevent irreparable damage; but to justify such an interposition, the injury ought to be of such a nature as not to admit of delay. This is not such a case. And there seems to be no good reason to doubt, that if the plaintiffs can maintain an action at law, they may obtain an adequate remedy without any interposition of a court of equity. So if the nuisance complained of has become, or shall become, a public nuisance, the law has provided an effectual remedy.

SECTION II.

EARTH.

HUMPHRIES v. BROGDEN.

[Reported 12 Q. B. 739.]

THIS was an action against the Durham County Coal Company, sued in the name of their secretary. On the trial, before Coleridge, J., at the Durham Spring Assizes, 1850, the jury, in answer to questions put by the learned judge, found the facts specially. His Lordship then directed a verdict for the plaintiff, giving the defendants leave to move to enter a verdict for them upon the findings of the jury. Knowles, in Easter Term, 1850, obtained a rule nisi accordingly. In Trinity Term, 1850, Watson and Joseph Addison showed cause, and Knowles and Hugh Hill supported the rule. The judgment of the court states so fully the nature of the case, the pleadings, and the arguments and authorities adduced on both sides, as to render any further statement unnecessary.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court.

This is an action on the case. The declaration alleges that the plaintiff was possessed of divers closes of pasture and arable land, situate, &c., yet that the company, so wrongfully, carelessly, negligently, and improperly, and without leaving any proper and sufficient pillars or supports in that behalf, and contrary to the custom and course of practice of mining used and approved of in the country where the mines thereafter mentioned are situate, worked certain coal mines under and contiguous to the said closes, and dug for and got and moved the coals, minerals, earth and soil of and in the said mines, that by reason thereof the soil and surface of the said closes sank in, cracked, swagged and gave way; and thereby, &c. The only material plea was Not guilty.

The cause coming on to be tried before my Brother Coleridge at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Durham, it appeared that the plaintiff was possessed of the closes described in the declaration, and that the Durham County Coal Company (who may sue and be sued by their secretary) were lessees, under the Bishop of Durham, of the coal mines under them; but there was no other evidence whatever as to the tenure or the title either of the surface or of the minerals. It appeared that the company had taken the coals under the plaintiff's closes, without leaving any sufficient pillars to support the surface, whereby the closes had swagged and sunk, and had been considerably injured; but that, supposing the surface and the minerals to have belonged to the same person, these operations had not been conducted carelessly or negligently or contrary to the custom of the country. The jury found that the company had worked carefully and according to the custom of the country, but without leaving sufficient pillars or supports: and a verdict was entered for the plaintiff for £110 damages, with leave to move to enter a verdict for the defendant, if the court should be of opinion that under these circumstances the action was not maintainable.

The case was very learnedly and ably argued before us in Easter and Trinity terms last. On account of the great importance of the question, we have taken time to consider of our judgment.

For the defendant it was contended that, after the special finding of the jury, the declaration is defective in not alleging that the plaintiff was entitled to have his closes supported by the subjacent strata. But we are of opinion that such an allegation is unnecessary to raise the question in this action, Whether the company, although they did not work the mines negligently or contrary to the custom of the country, were bound to leave props to support the surface? If the easement which the plaintiff claims exists, it does not arise from any special grant or reservation, but is of common right, created by the law, so that we are bound to take notice of its existence. In pleading, it is enough to state the facts from which a right or a duty arises. The carefully prepared declaration in Littledale v. Lord Lonsdale, 2 H. Bl. 267 (Earl of Lonsdale v. Littledale), for disturbing the right of the owner of the surface of lands to the support of the mineral strata belonging to another, contains no express allegation of the right; and, if the omission had been considered important, it probably would have been relied upon, rather than the objection that a peer of Parliament was not liable to be sued in the Court of King's Bench by bill.

We have therefore to consider, whether, when the surface of land (by which is here meant the soil lying over the minerals) belongs to one man, and the minerals belong to another, no evidence of title appearing to regulate or qualify their rights of enjoyment, the owner of the minerals may remove them without leaving support sufficient to maintain the surface in its natural state? This case is entirely relieved from the consideration how far the rights and liabilities of the owners of adjoining tenements are affected by the erection of buildings; for the plaintiff claims no greater degree of support for his lands than they must have required and enjoyed since the globe subsisted in its present form.

Where portions of the freehold, lying one over another perpendicularly, belong to different individuals, and constitute (as it were) separate closes, the degree of support to which the upper is entitled from the lower has as yet by no means been distinctly defined. But, in the case of adjoining closes which belong respectively to different persons from the surface to the centre of the earth, the law of England has long settled the degree of lateral support which each may claim from the other; and the principle upon which this rests may guide us to a safe solution of the question now before us.

In 2 Rolle's Abridgment, 564, tit. Trespass (1), pl. 1, it is said: "If A., seised in fee of copyhold land next adjoining land of B., erect a new house on his copyhold land" (I may remark that the circumstance of A.'s land being copyhold is wholly immaterial), "and part of the house is erected on the confines of his land next adjoining the land of B., if B. afterwards digs his land near to the foundation of the house of A., but not touching the land of A., whereby the foundation of the house and the house itself fall into the pit, still no action lies at the suit of A. against B., because this was the fault of A. himself that he built his house so near to the land of B., for he could not by his act hinder B. from making the most profitable use of B.'s own land; Easter Term, 15 Car. B. R. Wilde v. Minsterley. But, semble that a man who has land next adjoining to my land cannot dig his land so near to my land that thereby my land shall fall into his pit; and for this, if an action were brought, it would lie." This doctrine is recognized by Lord C. B. Comyns, Com. Dig. Action upon the Case for a Nuisance (A); by Lord Tenterden, in Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 871, 876; and by other eminent judges. It stands on natural justice, and is essential to the protection and enjoyment of property in the soil. Although it places a restraint on what a man may do with his own property, it is in accordance with the precept, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. As is well observed by a modern writer: "If the neighboring owners might excavate their soil on every side up to the boundary line to an indefinite depth, land thus deprived of support on all sides could not stand by its own coherence alone;" Gale on Easements, p. 216.

This right to lateral support from adjoining soil is not, like the support of one building upon another, supposed to be gained by grant, but is a right of property passing with the soil. If the owner of two adjoining closes conveys away one of them, the alienee, without any grant for that purpose, is entitled to the lateral support of the other close the very instant when the conveyance is executed, as much as after the expiration of twenty years, or any longer period. Pari ratione, where there are separate freeholds from the surface of the land and the minerals belonging to different owners, we are of opinion that the owner of the surface, while unincumbered by buildings and in its natural state, is entitled to have it supported by the subjacent mineral strata. Those strata may of course be removed by the owner of them, so that a sufficient support for the surface is left: but, if the surface subsides and is injured by the removal of these strata, although, on the supposition that the surface and the minerals belong to the same owner, the operation may not have been conducted negligently nor contrary to the custom of the country, the owner of the surface may maintain an action against the owner of the minerals for the damage sustained by the subsidence. Unless the surface close be entitled to this support from the close underneath, corresponding to the lateral support to which it is entitled from the adjoining surface close, it cannot be securely enjoyed as property; and under certain circumstances, as where the mineral strata approach the surface and are of great thickness, it might be entirely destroyed. We likewise think that the rule giving the right of support to the surface upon the minerals, in the absence of any express grant, reservation or covenant, must be laid down generally without reference to the nature of the strata, or the difficulty of propping up the surface, or the comparative value of the surface and the minerals. We are not aware of any principle upon which qualifications could be added to the rule; and the attempt to introduce them would lead to uncertainty and litigation: greater inconvenience cannot arise from this rule, in any case, than that which may be experienced where the surface belongs to one owner, and the minerals to another, who cannot take any portion of them without the consent of the owner of the surface. In such cases a hope of reciprocal advantage will bring about a compromise advantageous to the parties and to the public.

Something has been said of a right to a reasonable support for the surface: but we cannot measure out degrees to which the right may extend; and the only reasonable support is that which will protect the surface from subsidence, and keep it securely at its ancient and natural level.

The defendant's counsel have argued that the analogy as to the support to which one superficial close is entitled from the adjoining superficial close cannot apply where the surface and the minerals are separate tenements belonging to different owners, because there must have been unity of title of the surface and the minerals, and the rights of the parties must depend upon the contents of the deeds by which they were severed. But, in contemplation of law, all property in land having been in the Crown, it is easy to conceive that, at the same time, the original grant of the surface was made to one, and the minerals under it to another, without any express grant or reservation of any easement. Suppose (what has generally been the fact) that there has been in a subject unity of title from the surface to the centre: if the surface and the minerals are vested in different owners without any deeds appearing to regulate their respective rights, we see no difficulty in presuming that the severance took place in a manner which would confer upon the owner of the surface a right to the support of the minerals. If the owner of the entirety is supposed to have alienated the surface, reserving the minerals, he cannot be presumed to have reserved to himself, in derogation of his grant, the power of removing all the minerals without leaving a support for the surface; and, if he is supposed to have alienated the minerals, reserving the surface, he cannot be presumed to have parted with the right to that support for the surface by the minerals which it had ever before enjoyed. Perhaps it may be said that, if the grantor of the minerals, reserving the surface, seeks to limit the right of the grantee to remove them, he is acting in derogation of his grant, and is seeking to hinder the grantee from doing what he likes with his own: but, generally speaking, mines may be profitably worked, leaving a support to the surface by pillars or ribs of the minerals, although not so profitably as if the whole of the minerals be removed; and a man must so use his own as not to injure his neighbor:

The books of reports abound with decisions restraining a man's acts upon and with his own property, where the necessary or probable consequence of such acts is to do damage to others. The case of common occurrence nearest to the present is, where the upper story of a house belongs to one man and the lower to another. The owner of the upper story, without any express grant, or enjoyment for any given time, has a right to the support of the lower story. If this arises (as has been said) from an implied grant or covenant, why is not a similar grant or covenant to be implied in favor of the owner of the surface of land against the owner of the minerals? If the owner of an entire house, conveying away the lower story only, is, without any express reservation, entitled to the support of the lower story for the benefit of the upper story, why should not an owner of land, who conveys away the minerals only, be entitled to the support of the minerals for the benefit of the surface?

I will now refer, in chronological order, to the cases which were cited in the argument; and I think that none of them will be found in any degree to impugn the doctrine on which our decision rests.

In Bateson v. Green, 5 T. R. 411, Buller, J., says: "Where there are two distinct rights, claimed by different parties, which encroach on each other in the enjoyment of them, the question is, Which of the two rights is subservient to the other?" And it was held that the lord may dig clay pits on a common, or empower others to do so, without leaving sufficient herbage for the commoners, if such right can be proved to have been always exercised by the lord. So, here, the right of the owner of the minerals to remove them may be subservient to the right of the owner of the surface to have it supported by them.

Peyton v. The Mayor, &c. of London, 9 B. & C. 725, was cited to show the necessity for introducing into the declaration an averment that the plaintiff was entitled to the easement or right which is the foundation of the action: but the easement there claimed was a right of support of one building upon another, which could arise only from a grant actual or implied; and there Lord Tenterden says: "The declaration in this case does not allege, as a fact, that the plaintiffs were entitled to have their house supported by the defendants' house, nor does it in our opinion contain any allegation from which a title to such support can be inferred as a matter of law." In the case at bar, we are of opinion that the declaration alleges facts from which the law infers the right of support which the plaintiff claims.

Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 871, decided that the owner of a house, recently erected on the extremity of his land, could not maintain an action against the owner of the adjoining land for digging in his own land so near to the plaintiff's house that the house fell down: but the reason given is, that the plaintiff could not, by putting an additional weight upon his land, and so increasing the lateral pressure upon the defendant's land, render unlawful any operation in the defendant's land which before would have caused no damage; and the court intimated an opinion that the action would have been maintainable, not only if the defendant's digging would have made the plaintiff's land crumble down unloaded by any building, but even if the house had stood twenty years. Where a house has been supported more than twenty years by land belonging to another proprietor, with his knowledge, and he digs near the foundation of the house, whereby it falls, he is liable to an action at the suit of the owner of the house; Stansell v. Jollard, 1 Selw. Ni. Pri. 457 (11th ed.), and Hide v. Thornborough, 2 Carr. & Kir. 250. Although there may be some difficulty in discovering whence the grant of the easement in respect of the house is to be presumed, as the owner of the adjoining land cannot prevent its being built, and may not be able to disturb the enjoyment of it without the most serious loss or inconvenience to himself, the law favors the preservation of enjoyments acquired by the labor of one man and acquiesced in by another who has the power to interrupt them; and, as, on the supposition of a grant, the right to light may be gained from not erecting a wall to obstruct it, the right to support for a new building erected near the extremity of the owner's land may be explained on the same principle.

In Dodd v. Holme, 1 A. & E. 493, where there is a good deal of discussion respecting the rights of owners of adjoining lands or houses, no point of law was determined, as the case turned upon the allegation in the declaration that the defendants dug "carelessly, negligently, unskillfully, and improperly," whereby "the foundations and walls" of the plaintiff's house "gave way." The plaintiff's house was proved to have been in a very bad condition; but Lord Denman said that the defendants had no right to accelerate its fall.

The Court of Exchequer, in Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 220, concurred in the law before laid down in this court, that a right to the support of the foundation of a house from adjoining land belonging to another proprietor can only be acquired by grant, and that, where the house was built on excavated land, a grant is not to be presumed till the house has stood twenty years after notice of the excavation to the person supposed to have made the grant; but nothing fell from any of the judges questioning the right to support which land, while it remains in its natural state, has been said to be entitled to from the adjoining land of another proprietor. Some land of the plaintiff's not covered with buildings had likewise sunk, in consequence of the defendant's operations in his own land; but the court, in directing a verdict to be entered for the defendants on the whole declaration, seems to have thought that the sinking of the plaintiff's land was consequential upon the fall of the houses, or would not have taken place if his own land had not been excavated.

The judges in the Exchequer Chamber held, upon a writ of error from the Court of Common Pleas in Chadwick v. Trower, 6 New Ca. 1; see Trower v. Chadwick, 3 New Ca. 334, that the mere circumstance of juxtaposition does not render it necessary for a person who pulls down his wall to give notice of his intention to the owner of an adjoining wall which rests upon it, and that he is not even liable for carelessly pulling down his wall if he had not notice of the existence of the adjoining wall; but this decision proceeds upon the want of any allegation or proof of a right of the plaintiff to have his wall supported by the defendant's, and does not touch the rights or obligations of conterminous proprietors, where the tenement to be supported remains in its natural condition.

Next comes the valuable case of Harris v. Ryding, 5 M. & W. 60, which would be a direct authority in favor of the present plaintiff, if it did not leave some uncertainty as to the effect of the averment, in the declaration, of working "carelessly, negligently, and improperly," and as to whether the plaintiff was considered absolutely entitled to have his land supported by the subjacent strata, to whatever degree the affording of this support might interfere with the defendant's right to work the minerals. There one seised in fee of land conveyed away the surface, reserving to himself the minerals with power to enter upon the surface to work them; and it is said to have been held that, under this reservation, he was not entitled to take all the minerals, but only so much as "could be got, leaving a reasonable support to the surface" (p. 70). The case was decided upon a demurrer to certain pleas justifying under the reservation, and the declaration alleged careless, negligent, and improper working, which there must be considered as admitted, whereas here it is negatived by the verdict; but the barons, in the very comprehensive and masterly judgment which they delivered seriatim, seem all to have thought that the reservation of the minerals would not have justified the defendant in depriving the surface of a complete support, however carefully he might have proceeded in removing them. Lord Abinger says: "The plea is no answer, because it does not set forth any sufficient ground to justify the defendants in working the mines in such a manner as not to leave sufficient support for the land above, which is alleged by the declaration to be a careless, negligent, and improper mode of working them." Parke, B., observes: it never could have been in the contemplation of the parties "that, by virtue of this reservation of the mines, the grantor should be entitled to take the whole of the coal and let down the surface, or injure the enjoyment of it;" and, again: "This plea is clearly bad, because the defendants do not assign that in taking away the coal they did leave a sufficient support for the surface in its then state." "The question is," says Alderson, B., "whether the grantor is not to get the minerals which belong to him, and which he has reserved to himself the right of getting, in that reasonable and ordinary mode in which he would be authorized to get them, provided he leaves a proper support for the land which the other party is to enjoy." My Brother Maule, then a judge of the Court of Exchequer, says, in the course of his luminous judgment: The right of the defendants "to get the mines is the right of the mine-owners, as against the owner of the land which is above it. That right appears to me to be very analogous to that of a person having a room in a house over another man's room, or an acre of land adjoining another man's acre of land." Parke, B., that he might not be misunderstood as to the right of the owner of the surface, afterwards adds: "I do not mean to say that all the coal does not belong to the defendants, but that they cannot get it without leaving sufficient support." It seems to have been the unanimous opinion of the court that there existed the natural easement of support for the upper soil from the soil beneath, and that the entire removal of the inferior strata, however skilfully done, would be actionable, if productive of damage by withdrawing that degree of support to which the owner of the surface was entitled, the duty of the owner of the servient tenement forbidding him to do any act whereby the enjoyment of the easement could be disturbed.

The counsel for the defendant cited and relied much upon the case of Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324, in which it was held that a land owner, who, by mining operations in his own lands, directs a subterraneous current of water, is not liable to an action at the suit of the owner of the adjoining land, whose well is thereby laid dry. But the right to running water and the right to have land supported are so totally distinct, and depend upon such different principles, that there can be no occasion to show at greater length how the decision is inapplicable.

We have now to mention the case of Hilton v. Lord Granville, 5 Q. B. 701. A writ of error may probably be brought in this case [see 12 A. & E. 737, note c], when all the issues at fact have been disposed of; and nothing which I now say is to preclude me from forming any opinion upon it, should I ever hear it argued. If well decided, the plaintiff is justified in relying upon it; for it is strongly in point. This court there held that a prescription or a custom within a manor for the lord, who is seised in fee of the mines and collieries therein, to work them under any dwelling houses, buildings, and lands, parcel of the manor, doing no unnecessary damage, and paying to the tenants and occupiers of the surface of lands damaged thereby a reasonable compensation for the use of the surface of the lands, but without making compensation for any damage occasioned to any dwelling houses or other buildings within or parcel of the manor by or for the purpose of working the said mines and collieries, is void as being unreasonable. Lord Denman, C. J., said: "A claim destructive of the subject-matter of the grant cannot be set up by any usage. Even if the grant could be produced in specie, reserving a right in the lord to deprive his grantee of the enjoyment of the thing granted, such a clause must be rejected as repugnant and absurd. That the prescription or custom here pleaded has this destructive effect, and is so repugnant and void, appears to us too clear from the simple statement to admit of illustration by argument."

The most recent case referred to was Smith v. Kenrick, 7 Com. B. 515, 564, in which the Court of Common Pleas, after great deliberation, held that it is the right of each of the owners of adjoining mines, where neither mine is subject to any servitude to the other, to work his own mine, as far as the flow of water is concerned, in the manner which he deems most convenient and beneficial to himself, although the natural consequence may be that some prejudice will accrue to the owner of the adjoining mine; so that such prejudice does not arise from the negligent or malicious conduct of his neighbor. But no question arose there respecting any right to support; the controversy being only respecting the obligation to protect an adjoining mine from water which may flow into it by the force of gravitation. And in the very learned judgment of the court, delivered by my Brother Cresswell, there is nothing laid down to countenance the doctrine that, in a case circumstanced like this which we have to determine, the owner of the minerals may, if not chargeable with malice or negligence, remove them so as to destroy or damage the surface over them which belongs to another.

We have attempted without success to obtain from the Codes and Jurists of other nations information and assistance respecting the rights and obligations of persons to whom sections of the soil, divided horizontally, belong as separate properties. This penury, where the subject of Servitudes is so copiously and discriminately treated, probably proceeds from the subdivision of the surface of the land and the minerals under it into separate holdings being peculiar to England. Had such subdivision been known in countries under the jurisdiction of the Roman civil law, its incidental rights and duties must have been exactly defined, when we discover the right of adjoining proprietors of lands to support from lateral pressure leading to such minute regulations as the following: "Si quis sepem ad alienum prædium fixerit, infoderitque, terminum ne excedito: si maceriam, pedem relinquito: si verò domum, pedes duos: si sepulchrum aut scrobem foderit, quantum profunditatis habuerint, tantum spatii relinquito: si puteum, passûs latitudinem." Dig. Lib. X. Tit. I. (Finium regundorum) s. 13.

The Code Napoléon likewise recognizes the support to which the owners of adjoining lands are reciprocally entitled, but contains nothing which touches the question for our decision more closely than the following article on "Natural Servitudes."¹ "Les fonds inférieurs sont assujettis, envers ceux qui sont plus élevés, à recevoir les eaux qui en découlent naturellement sans que la main de l'homme y ait contribué." "Le propriétaire supérieur ne peut rien faire qui agrave la servitude du fonds inférieur." Code Civil, liv. ii. tit. iv. ch. i. art. 640. But reference is here made to adjoining fields on a declivity, not to the surface of land, and the minerals, being held by different proprietors.

The American lawyers write learnedly on the support which may be claimed for land from lateral pressure, and for buildings which have long rested against each other, but are silent as to the support which the owner of the surface of lands may claim from the subjacent strata when possessed by another. See Kent's Commentaries, Part vi. Lecture iii. vol. iii. p. 434, ed. 1840.

However, in Erskine's Institute of the Law of Scotland, treating of the servitude, Oneris ferendi, the very learned author has the following passage, which well illustrates the principle on which our decision is founded: "Where a house is divided into different floors or stories, each floor belonging to a different owner, which frequently happens in the city of Edinburgh," "the proprietor of the ground floor is bound merely by the nature and condition of his property, without any servitude, not only to bear the weight of the upper story, but to repair his own property, that it may be capable of bearing that weight." "The proprietor of the ground story is obliged to uphold it for the support of the upper, and the owner of the upper must uphold that as a roof or cover to the lower." Book ii. tit. 9, s. 11.

For these reasons, we are all of opinion that the present action is maintainable, notwithstanding the negation of negligence in the working of the mines; and that the rule to enter a verdict for the defendant must be discharged. We need hardly say that we do not mean to lay down any rule applicable to a case where the prima facie rights and liabilities of the owner of the surface of the land and of the subjacent strata are varied by the production of title deeds or by other evidence.

Rule discharged.

BROWN v. ROBINS.

[Reported 4 H. & N. 186.]

DECLARATION.—That whereas, before and at the time of the committing of the grievances, &c., the plaintiff was possessed of certain land with a certain house and outbuildings standing and being thereon; and whereas there were certain foundations of and supporting the said house and outbuildings, which the plaintiff had of right enjoyed and ought to enjoy, yet the defendant wrongfully, negligently, carelessly and improperly, without leaving sufficient support in that behalf, worked certain mines near to and adjoining the said land, whereby the said land and the said foundations of the said house and outbuildings sank, swagged and gave way, &c.

Pleas.—First: Not guilty. Second: That at the time of the supposed grievance the plaintiff did not of right enjoy, nor ought of right to enjoy, the said foundations of and supporting the said house and outbuildings.

At the trial, before Byles, J., at the last Stafford Assizes, it appeared that the plaintiff was the owner of a house and outbuildings, situate to the east of a lane called Bill Hay Lane, but not adjoining to it, inasmuch as a garden and lawn, belonging to another owner, lay between the plaintiff's premises and Bill Hay Lane, and adjoined them on the opposite sides. The plaintiff's house had been built in 1834 on solid ground. Between 1828 and 1831 coal had been gotten by one Jesson from under that part of the garden and lawn which adjoined the lane, but not up to the plaintiff's premises. Ribs and pillars of coal were at that time left to support the surface. In 1838 Jesson began to work the coal on the west side of Bill Hay Lane, leaving a rib of coal against the lane. In 1846 "crownings in" took place in the lawn and garden. In working the thick coal in Staffordshire, it is the practice to get out a certain quantity of coal in the first instance, leaving what are called ribs, to prevent water and air from coming in from adjoining mines, and pillars to support the surface. The pillars are eight yards square, the intervals between them eight yards in width. When the coal is worked out between the pillars, the mines are left for some years that the earth may settle. During this time it sometimes happens that in some places droppings of earth continually take place from the roof between the pillars, and by degrees the surface falls in, causing a basin-shaped hollow on the surface; this is called "a crowning in." After the soil has become consolidated the mine is again worked, and the ribs got out as far as possible. In 1854 the defendant, who was then the owner of the mines on the west side of Bill Hay Lane, began to work out the ribs and pillars left by Jesson in 1838. The nearest of the defendant's workings were at a distance of thirty-five yards from the plaintiff's house. In 1857 the plaintiff's house began to crack. The plaintiff's witnesses alleged that the damage was caused by the getting of the ribs and pillars by the defendant on the west side of Bill Hay Lane. There was evidence that the defendant knew of the excavations on the east side of the lane.

The learned judge asked the jury, — First, was the sinking of the plaintiff's premises caused by the defendant's workings, either alone or in conjunction with anything else? The jury answered this question in the affirmative.

Secondly. — Would the same damage have arisen from the defendant's workings if the ground had been left solid on the east side of Bill Hay Lane? The jury found that it would not; but that some of the damage would have happened.

Thirdly. — Did the plaintiff enjoy, as of right, support from the defendant's ribs and pillars? His Lordship said that the plaintiff's house was built in 1834. The excavations on the east side of Bill Hay Lane were finished in 1831, and therefore existed for twenty years when the defendant's workings began in 1854. If the defendant knew of the excavations on the east of Bill Hay Lane, the plaintiff had enjoyed as of right for twenty years the support of the defendant's soil. The jury found that the defendant did know of the excavations.

Fifthly.—Did the land fall from the superincumbent weight of the house, or would it have fallen if no house had been erected upon it? The jury found that the land would have fallen in the same manner whether there had been a house upon it or not.

Sixthly.—If the damages arose partly from the defendant's workings, and partly from the old workings to the east of Bill Hay Lane, how much was occasioned by the defendant's workings, and how much by the old workings? The jury found £300 damages, £250 occasioned by the defendant's workings, and £50 partly by the defendant's workings and partly by the old workings to the east of the lane. Upon these findings the learned judge directed a verdict to be entered for the plaintiff for £300, reserving leave for the defendant to move to enter a verdict or to reduce the damages to £250; neither party to be at liberty to bring error.

Huddleston, in Michaelmas Term, obtained a rule to show cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant upon the plea of not guilty, so far as relates to the allegations that the defendant worked carelessly and negligently, on the ground that those allegations were not supported by the evidence; and on the second issue, on the ground that the plaintiff had not enjoyed, as of right, for twenty years, the right of support for his buildings from the ribs and pillars of coal worked by the defendant; that there was no evidence nor was it found by the jury that the defendant, or those under whom he claimed, knew for twenty years that the plaintiff's premises were in fact supported by the mines worked by the defendant; or why the damages should not be reduced to £250, on the ground that as to £50, the damage was not occasioned by the defendant's working, but by the "crownings in" on land adjoining the plaintiff's premises; or why a new trial should not be had on the ground of misdirection, namely, that the learned judge should have directed the jury that no right of support from the ribs and pillars of coal west of Bill Hay Lane worked by the defendant was gained for the plaintiff's buildings, unless the defendant, or those under whom he claimed, knew for twenty years that, in consequence of the excavated state of the mines east of Bill Hay Lane, the plaintiff's buildings were in fact being supported by the said ribs and pillars, and that there was no evidence of such knowledge, and that, as the plaintiff did not establish a right of support for his buildings from defendant's ribs and pillars, the damages were excessive in respect of any supposed injury to the plaintiff's land.

Gray and Scotland now showed cause.

Phipson and Dowdeswell (with whom was Huddleston), in support of the rule.

POLLOCK, C. B. This rule must be discharged. As to the right of support for the house quâd house, if necessary to decide it, which it is not, I should be disposed to hold that the plaintiff was entitled to the support of the surrounding ground. But the moment the jury found that the subsidence of the land was not caused by the weight of the superincumbent buildings, the existence of the house became unimportant in considering the question of the defendant's liability. It is as if a mere model stood there, the weight of which bore so small a proportion to that of the soil as practically to add nothing to it. The plaintiff's complaint resolves itself into this, that the land was injured; and the house was considered by the learned judge solely with reference to the amount of the damages. Then it is said that the same amount of damage would not have happened if the land to the east of Bill Hay Lane had been left solid. If the excavation to the east of Bill Hay Lane contributed to the damage, did the defendant know that this ground was riddled by mines? The jury found that he knew it. He knew there was greater danger of injuring the plaintiff by sinking on the west side of the lane than there would have been if the ground on the east side had been left solid, and he ought to have known that the excavated ground was less powerful and gave less support on that side. He is therefore responsible for the whole of the damage. The objections upon which the rule was founded are answered in every part, and the rule must therefore be discharged.

MARTIN, B. I am of the same opinion. The rule was obtained on several grounds. First, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. It was admitted that this fails because, if the plaintiff was entitled to the support of the defendant's land and was deprived of it, the absence of negligence is immaterial. Secondly, that the support was not enjoyed as of right. The mode in which the question was dealt with shows that this issue was properly decided in favor of the plaintiff. There was ample evidence that the defendant knew the state of the plaintiff's land. There is no ground for reducing the damages. The house was lawfully on the plaintiff's land, and was damaged by the unlawful act of the defendant. As to the point that no right of support by the defendant's ribs and pillars had been acquired, unless the defendant knew that in consequence of the excavated state of the plaintiff's ground his buildings were in part supported by these ribs and pillars, and there was no evidence of such knowledge, I think there was ample evidence. I do not wish to consider that as a criterion of the defendant's liability; but it was so treated.

WATSON, B. When the report of the learned judge was read, it became clear that there was no ground for this rule. It was alleged that there was no evidence that the defendant had worked carelessly; but the meaning is that he worked carelessly with reference to the rights of the plaintiff. The defendant desired to raise a question as to the right of support by adjacent land. When a great weight is put on land which immediately causes a pressure upon the adjoining land, a nice question sometimes arises ; but here everything was determined, by the finding of the jury, that the accident was not caused by the weight of the building, and that this weight had no effect in causing the subsidence of the soil. As to the damages, the jury found that the defendant, knowing the state of the plaintiff's land, worked his own mines, and so caused the injury. There is, therefore, no ground for reducing the damages.

CHANNELL, B. The learned judge left certain questions to the jury. The findings, which are not impeached, taken in connection with the questions, appear to me to leave no room for the argument attempted to be raised on the part of the defendant.

Rule discharged.

SMITH v. THACKERAH.

[Reported L. R. 1 C. P. 564.]

DECLARATION that the plaintiff was possessed of certain land, and the land received lateral support from certain land adjoining thereto ; and the defendants dug and made on this adjoining land an excavation or well near to the land of the plaintiff, and the defendants thereby, and for want of keeping and continuing the sides of the well shored up, or otherwise preventing the consequences hereinafter mentioned, wrongfully deprived the land of the plaintiff of its support, whereby the land of the plaintiff sank and gave way, and divers walls, buildings, and premises of the plaintiff on the land sank and were damaged, whereby the plaintiff was put to great expense, &c.

Pleas, Not guilty, and Not possessed.

At the trial before Erle, C. J., at the last Surrey Spring Assizes, it was proved that the plaintiff was possessed of a piece of land on which a building had been recently erected, and that the defendants, who were neighboring landowners, dug a well on their own land near to that of the plaintiff, and afterwards filled up the well with such loose earth that the ground round it sank, and the plaintiff's building was injured, causing damage to the amount of £15.

The jury found, in answer to questions by the Chief Justice, that the land of the plaintiff would have sunk if there had been no building on it, and that some particles of sand from it would have fallen on to the defendants' property, but that the plaintiff would have suffered no appreciable damage.

A verdict was entered for the defendants, with leave to the plaintiff to move to enter the verdict for such sum under £15 as the court should direct, on the ground that the facts proved at the trial entitled the plaintiff to a verdict without proof of any pecuniary damage.

Robinson, Serjt., having obtained a rule nisi, pursuant to the leave reserved, Joyce showed cause.

Robinson, Serjt., and Joseph Sharpe, in support of the rule.

ERLE, C. J. I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged. There is no doubt that a right of action accrues whenever a person interferes with his neighbor's rights, as, for example, by stepping on his land, or, as in the case of Ashby v. White, 1 Sm. L. C. 5th ed. 216, interfering with his right to vote, and this though no actual damage may result. But for a man to dig a hole in his own land is in itself a perfectly lawful act of ownership, and it only becomes a wrong if it injures his neighbor; and since it is the injury itself which gives rise to the right of action, there can be no right of action unless the damage is of an appreciable amount. A person may build a chimney in front of your drawing-room, and the smoke from it may annoy you, or he may carry on a trade next door to your house the noise of which may be inconvenient; but unless the smoke or noise be such as to do you appreciable damage, you have no right of action against him for what is in itself a lawful act. In the case of St. Helen's Smelting Company v. Tipping, 11 H. L. C. 642; 35 L. J. (Q. B.) 66, in which the defendant had set up some chemical works, the House of Lords held that, if the noxious vapors did not cause material damage to the plaintiff, he had no cause of action. In the present case the digging the well and filling it up again were in themselves perfectly lawful acts, and the jury have found that they did no sensible damage to the plaintiff, and he has therefore no right of action.

BYLES, J. I am of the same opinion. In actions for a trespass the trespass itself is a sufficient cause of action. But in actions for indirect injuries like the present, the judgment of the House of Lords in Bonomi v. Backhouse, 9 H. L. C. 503; 34 L. J. (Q. B.) 181, shows that there is no cause of action if there be no damage, and I cannot distinguish between no appreciable damage to the land in its natural state and no damage at all.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J. I am of the same opinion. The mere subsidence of the surface of the soil is not necessarily an injury, and we are bound by the verdict of the jury, who found that in fact no appreciable damage would have occurred if these new buildings had not been on the land.

Rule discharged.

BIRMINGHAM v. ALLEN.

CHANCERY DIVISION AND COURT OF APPEAL. 1877.

[Reported L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 284.]

THIS was an action by the Corporation of Birmingham, who were the owners of gasworks called the Swan Village Gasworks, to restrain the defendants, T. H. Allen and T. E. Holden, who were proprietors of Swan Farm Colliery, in the neighborhood of the gasworks, from working their coal in such a manner as to cause subsidence of the surface of the plaintiffs' land.

The plaintiffs purchased the gasworks from the Birmingham and Staffordshire Gaslight Company in the year 1875.

The gas company purchased the land on which the works were erected, together with the minerals under the same, in the year 1824. They afterwards purchased the minerals under various pieces of land adjoining their property, for the purpose of preventing the surface of their own land from being shaken or disturbed. Among others they purchased, in 1872, the minerals under a piece of land belonging to Messrs. Pershore & Gregory which adjoined the western boundary of the gasworks. The defendants' colliery lay to the west of this piece of land, to which it adjoined, so that the piece of land lay between the properties of the plaintiffs and the defendants.

The seams of coal under the district were as follows: The Brooch Coal, 3 ft. 9 in. thick, about 90 yards from the surface.

The Thick Coal, 28 ft. 9 in. thick, about 156 yards from the surface.

The Heathen Coal, 3 ft. 6 in. thick, about 156 yards from the surface.

The New Mine Coal, 5 ft. 6 in. thick, about 185 yards from the surface.

The Thick Coal under the piece of land purchased by the gas company in 1872 had been worked out more than thirty years before they purchased it, and the superincumbent earth was propped by pillars in the usual way.

The Thick Coal under the gasworks had not been worked out when the company purchased the site in 1824; but in the year 1834 they granted the Thick Coal under a small portion of the surface to Messrs. Bagnall & Haynes, who worked it out. Some of the area thus granted was exactly under the retorts of the gas company.

The defendants were now engaged in working the lowest vein, or New Mine Coal, under their land. They worked from west to east, and in doing so approached within a few yards of the western boundary of land purchased by the gas company in 1872.

The plaintiffs claimed that the working of the New Mine Coal by the defendants had already caused a subsidence of the surface of their land and the buildings thereon erected, and would, if persisted in, cause them great injury, and they brought this action for an injunction accordingly.

The defendants pleaded that if any subsidence of the plaintiffs' land had taken place, it had been caused partly by the excavations of Thick Coal under the plaintiffs' own land by the lessees of the gas company, and partly by the erection of buildings within the last twenty years over such excavated portions; and they denied that they were under any liability to the plaintiffs in respect of any injury they had sustained.

Both sides went into evidence at great length. The trial came on before the Master of the Rolls on the 15th of March, 1877, and witnesses were examined on both sides.

The result of the evidence is stated in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls.

Chitty, Q. C., and Beale, for the plaintiffs.

Southgate, Q. C., Ince, Q. C., and Speed, for the defendants.

JESSEL, M. R. I am of opinion that the plaintiffs' case entirely fails. We have had a most careful and, I think, a most exhaustive investigation into the facts, and, as far as I am concerned, I have no doubt upon any of the facts necessary to be decided.

I think it is plain that if the land adjoining the plaintiffs' land had not been undermined, the defendants might work the New Mine seam as well as the Thick Coal seam up to their boundary. [His Lordship then referred to the evidence on this point.]

Now, looking to this evidence, and considering that it is for the plaintiffs to prove their case, I am of opinion that it is proved satisfactorily that, supposing the land between the plaintiffs' and the defendants' land had remained in its natural state, if the defendants' workings should be prosecuted up to the boundary of their property, they would not, as far as the New Mine is concerned, cause any injury whatever to the plaintiffs' works.

Then there is a second question, which is a question of fact I think I ought to give my opinion upon. Has the working of the defendants' New Mine at all actually injured the plaintiffs' buildings? I am clear it has not. [His Lordship then considered the evidence on this part of the case, and considered that there was no evidence of injury already received.]

Then comes the question, Will it occasion injury? As to that, the evidence is very conflicting. Mr. Cooksey puts the safe distance as 100 yards, and although there is a little variation, the plaintiffs' experts substantially agree in putting the safe distance at 100 yards, or fifty-five yards from the defendants' boundary. The defendants' four experts also substantially agree, and they put it at sixty yards, or fifteen yards from the defendants' boundary.

Here, again, it is for the plaintiffs to make out their case; and it seems to me to be mere surmise on both sides. However, I must say, if it were necessary to decide the case on that ground, that it is not proved to my satisfaction that more than sixty yards is required, that is, more than fifteen yards from the boundary.

I now come to a point of very great difficulty indeed, on which the evidence is in a very singular condition. The plaintiffs themselves, or their predecessors in title, had allowed a portion of their land to be undermined, that is, had allowed coal to be extracted from under that land, and the question was, whether the extraction of that coal in any way interfered with the support of the retort houses. Now the odd part of the matter is, that the experts for the plaintiffs said that it would interfere with the support, and increase subsidence; and the experts of the defendants said it would not. Under these circumstances, I think it is only fair to say that, as against the plaintiffs, they cannot reject the evidence of their own experts, and therefore I must consider that it does affect it to some extent, but, considering the evidence of the defendants' experts, not to a material extent. That is the way that matter appears to me.

Now, having so far dealt with the facts, let me consider the law. As I understand, the law was settled by the House of Lords, confirming the decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in the case of Backhouse v. Bonomi, 9 H. L. C. 503, that every landowner in the kingdom has a right to the support of his land in its natural state. It is not an easement: it is a right of property. That being so, if the plaintiffs' land had been in its natural state, no doubt the defendants must not do anything to let that land slip, or go down, or subside. If they were doing an act which it could be proved to me by satisfactory expert evidence would necessarily have that effect, I have no doubt this court would interfere by injunction on the ground upon which it always interferes, namely, to prevent irreparable damage when the damage is only threatened. Of course they must have a much clearer and much stronger case to call for the interference of this court by injunction where the damage is merely threatened and no damage has actually occurred, than when some damage has actually occurred, because in the one case you have no facts to go by, but only opinion, and in the other case you have actual facts to go by. If some damage has occurred, it makes it manifest and certain that further damage will occur by reason of the prosecution of the works.

Now in this case, if it stands at all, it may well stand merely on opinion evidence, which would be sufficient ground for interference if all the experts agreed and the court were satisfied that damage had occurred; and I think when I compare the evidence of these various experts, I must take it for this purpose as proved that if the defendants work within fifteen yards of their boundary, and in their New Mine Coal, damage, and serious damage, will accrue to the plaintiffs' buildings. But the question I have to decide is whether in law that entitles them to an injunction. I think it does not. In this case it is true the plaintiffs or their predecessors acquired the mineral area, and acquired some of the land after the Thick Coal had been worked out and not before ; but for the present purpose I lay out of consideration the fact of their ownership of anything, and I will treat the case as if the portions under which they possess the minerals, and the land so subsequently acquired, did not belong to them, and it appears as the result of the evidence that if that Thick Coal had not been extracted from under these portions of land, the intended operations of the defendants would certainly not cause any substantial injury.

But it is said that, inasmuch as these operations have occurred in what I will call the intervening land, and have thereby weakened the support, it will entitle the plaintiffs to prevent the owners of the land on the other side of this intervening land from working their mines in the way they could otherwise have worked them. But the first question one asks is, Why? Why should the act of the intervening owner, that is, the owner of the intermediate land, deprive men of their rights to their mines? It strikes one at once as a most extraordinary proposition. The act of the intervening owner for this purpose is rightful as regards the mine-owners whose mines are asked to be confiscated, for that is what it comes to. If they cannot work them they are confiscated. The plaintiffs ask for the confiscation of their property, not because they have done any wrong, for they have done no wrong — not because the intervening owner has done any wrong, for he only worked his mines, and when he worked them he occasioned no injury to the person who owned the property on the other side; but it is said that inasmuch as he has taken out his coal first, the defendants are deprived of the right of getting their mines. I say it is a startling proposition, and one which appears to me so unfounded in reason that I should be very loth indeed to believe it was founded in law.

Now, what is the right of the adjoining owner? As I said before, it is to the support of his land in its natural state — support by whom? The judges have said, "Support by his neighbor." What does that mean? Who is his neighbor? It was contended that all the land-owners in England, however distant, were neighbors for this purpose if their operations in any remote degree injured the land. But surely that cannot be the meaning of it. The neighboring landowner to me for this purpose must be the owner of that portion of land, whether a wider or narrower strip of land, the existence of which in its natural state is necessary for the support of my land. As long as that land remains in its natural state, and it supports my land, I have no rights beyond it, and therefore it seems to me that he is my neighbor for this purpose. There might be land of so solid a character, consisting of solid stone, that a foot of it would be enough to support the land. There might be other land so friable and of such an unsolid character that you would want a quarter of a mile of it. But whatever it is, as long as you have got enough land on your boundary, which left untouched will support your land, you have got your neighbor's land whose support you are entitled to. Beyond that it would appear to me you have no rights.

Well, that being so, it is clear upon the evidence that the intervening portions of land between the boundary of the plaintiffs' and the boundary of the defendants' land was sufficient in its natural state for the support of the plaintiffs' building. Therefore it appears to me that the plaintiffs have no rights as against the landowners on the other side of that intervening space, and that they acquire no rights whatever the owner of the intervening land may have done; and, if the act of the intervening owner has been such as to take away the support to which the first landowner who complains is entitled, then, for whatever damage occurs from the act which he has done, the first owner may have an action, but an action against the intervening owner, not an action against the owner on the other side; and it appears to me that it would be really a most extraordinary result that the man upon whom no responsibility whatever originally rested, who was under no liability whatever to support the plaintiffs' land, should have that liability thrown upon him without any default of his own, without any misconduct or any misfeasance on his part. I cannot believe that any such law exists or ever will exist. It appears to me, therefore, that the plaintiffs are not entitled to damages for the acts of the defendants, and that the only order I ought to make is to dismiss the action with costs.

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed. It was admitted on the appeal that if the land lying between the plaintiffs' and defendants' land had remained in its natural condition, the present works of the defendants would not cause any injury to the surface of the plaintiffs' land; but that in its present condition the defendants could not work nearer than fifteen yards to their boundary without endangering the surface of the plaintiffs' land. It was also admitted that the support of the surface on which the retort houses were built was not appreciably diminished by the works of the plaintiffs' predecessors in title. The case came before the Court of Appeal on the 26th of June, 1877.

JAMES, L. J. I am of opinion that the judgment of the Master of the Rolls ought to be affirmed. It has been conceded in the course of the argument that this is, at all events, in fact, whatever it is in principle, an extension of the liability of mine-owners beyond anything for which there is an express authority in any decided case, that is to say, to a case in which the owner of the mines is not the adjoining owner de facto to the person whose property is alleged to have been injured; and it is also conceded for the purposes of the argument, and upon the facts of the case, that if the whole of the intervening land, to whomsoever it had belonged or may belong now, had been left in a state of nature, there would have been in that state of nature a sufficient support for the land of the plaintiffs so as not to have imposed any burden upon the defendants, or to have caused what the Master of the Rolls has called a confiscation of the defendants' mineral property.

I agree with the Master of the Rolls that it seems a very startling thing to say that a man who has got a property in valuable mines can be deprived of those valuable mines because some one else between him and somebody else, a third person, has been doing something with his property. Whether you call it an easement or a natural right incident to property, or a right of property, it seems to me that those are only different modes of expressing the origin of the right, and do not express any difference in the right itself. Whatever it be, there must be, whether you use those terms or not, the idea and the substance of a dominant and servient tenement; and it does seem to me rather startling to find that the servient tenement can have its servitude or obligation increased by the act of the owner of the dominant tenement, or by the act of a third person intervening between the owners of the dominant and servient tenements. In all the cases the terms "adjacent," "neighboring," and "neighbor" have been used, and I think that not immaterial. It has always been considered as the right of the adjacent owner, or the right of a subjacent owner; it has always been considered as the right of a man against his neighbor. These are the terms which are always expressed in all the cases. As the Master of the Rolls in this case has pointed out, it does not necessarily apply to a case where the adjacent owner is the owner of a mere strip of land not affording support; and he has, therefore, endeavored to define, and I think he has succeeded in defining, what adjacency and neighborhood mean in these cases. He has said, using a very felicitous expression, that that is the adjacent land, that is the neighboring property, which in extent would in the natural state of things have afforded the requisite support to the dominant tenement. I see no reason to dissent from that; there certainly is no authority which would entitle me to dissent from that proposition, and I cannot, upon principle, find any reason for extending the liability to an owner of some land beyond the zone which is so described. It appears to me really that if that were not so, and if the thing were to be determined exactly as the thing stands, that the moment the alleged damage is done, or the alleged damage is apprehended, there is no distinction in principle whether the intermediate acts which have changed the natural position of the properties are due to the plaintiff himself or to somebody else, because if he has lawfully worked his mines, he would say, "I have done no wrong; I have done nothing that I was not lawfully entitled to do. I have worked out my mines under my own land as far as I might lawfully do so, and having done that I have now a cavity under my land, and I now warn you, my neighbor, that you must not follow my example and work your mines, because if you work your mines in addition to my working my mines you will let down my house or the surface from which I have removed my support,"—thus throwing it entirely upon him. It seems to me that would be included in the result if it were to be tried at the time the thing was done; and that is exactly what we have authority against. Because in the case in the Court of Exchequer, Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 220, as it appears to me, we have a direct authority for saying that where a man has himself diminished the subjacent support of his own land, he has no right of action or complaint against his neighbor whose acts by reason of that previous weakening have caused subsidence of the plaintiffs' soil. That we have authority for. Upon the same principle, it appears to me to follow, as I have pointed out, that if somebody, not the plaintiff or the defendant, has intervened and destroyed that which was the natural and legitimate support of the plaintiffs' property, that is to say, that portion of the neighboring land which in a state of nature did exist for the purposes of support, no further consequence would arise to the prejudice of the owner of the further piece of land than would have arisen in the case of the plaintiff doing it himself.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the Master of the Rolls' judgment is right, and must be sustained, and that the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

BAGGALLAY, L. J. This appeal has been argued, and I think it has been conveniently argued, upon certain admissions or assumptions which limit the scope of the pleadings. According to the pleadings, the plaintiffs' land consists of five several properties adjacent to each other, colored with five different colors, which need not be particularly specified, and an injunction is asked to restrain working by the defendants in such a way as to injure, by subsidence or otherwise, any portion of those five several lands, but the question has now been limited to the consideration of the land on which the retort houses are erected. It has been agreed also that certain conclusions which the Master of the Rolls arrived at upon the facts of the case shall, for the purpose of the argument, be treated as established. One of those conclusions of fact was that if the land intervening between the plaintiffs' land in question and the land of the defendants had remained in its natural state, the defendants might have worked up to their boundary without doing any injury at all to the land. Another of the conclusions of fact was, that assuming the lands to be as they are at present, then the defendants cannot work nearer than within fifteen yards of the mineral boundary between the two properties without causing serious damage to the plaintiffs' buildings ; and a third admission is this — and I think it is an important one — that the support of the retort houses has not been in any way appreciably diminished by the working of the plaintiffs themselves under the land on which they are erected.

In this view of the case the suggested injury is, that by the working of the coal measures of the defendants, and by means of the primary subsidence or falling in of the lands between the defendants' land and the plaintiffs' land, which lands are also, for the purpose of argument, assumed to have belonged to third parties, injury will be occasioned also to the plaintiffs' land. Now it appears to me that when once you have arrived at the conclusions and admissions of fact to which I have just alluded, you have a case on which there can be no possible question. It seems to me to be quite contrary to all principle and authority to say that, by reason of the working by the defendants upon lands which are not adjoining lands to the land of the plaintiffs, and which, if the intermediate lands had remained in their natural state, would not have afforded support to the plaintiffs' land, there can be a right of action against the defendants. It appears to me that in the various cases, and they were all cited, I think, and discussed in the case of Bower v. Peate, 1 Q. B. D. 321, the very essence of the thing is that the land should be adjacent; that is, adjacent in the sense defined by the Master of the Rolls.

BRETT, L. J. It appears to me strange, but I believe it to be the truth, that there is no authority on the particular point that we have to determine, and that it has therefore to be determined for the first time in this case. I assume for the purpose of this case that the land lying intermediate between the defendants' land and that which the plaintiffs desire to protect is in the hands of other persons than the plaintiffs or the defendants, and I assume that if the defendants work under their own lands they will cause damage to the plaintiffs' lands, and I further assume that if the defendants should not work under their land that no damage will occur to the plaintiffs' land, so that in one sense it will be the act of the defendants which will cause the damage to the plaintiffs' land. But then, as against that, I take the finding to be that if there had been no working under the intermediate land, working under the defendants' land would not damage the plaintiffs' land, and it is upon that last finding that I think this case must be determined, because upon that last finding the defendants' land is brought within this proposition, that it is land which in its natural state, and in the natural state of the plaintiffs' land and of the intermediate land, would not be necessary as a support to the plaintiffs' land at all. It seems to me to follow from that that if the defendants worked in their own land up to the boundary when there were no workings in either the plaintiffs' land or the intermediate land, their workings would have no effect whatever upon the plaintiffs' land. They would have a perfect right, therefore, under these circumstances, to work up to the limit of their own land. Then can that right of theirs which they have under those circumstances be diminished by any act done either by the plaintiffs or by any one for whose acts the defendants are not otherwise responsible? It seems to me that their right cannot be so diminished. As for their right being diminished by any act of the plaintiffs themselves, I think the reasoning of Baron Alderson in Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 220, is conclusive to show that the defendants' right could not be diminished under such circumstances by reason of anything done by the plaintiffs themselves on their own land. Well, if that be the case with regard to the plaintiffs, and we have authority so far, we have only to go the additional step of saying that the defendants' right shall not be diminished by the act of the intermediate owner—that is, the act of a person for whose action they are otherwise not at all responsible.

They could not prevent that owner working in any way he pleased ; they had no remedy against him for working in any way he pleased, and therefore, according to the ordinary principles of law, it seems to me their right ought not to be diminished by the acts of that person.

These are the reasons why I think the Master of the Rolls' proposition is a correct one, namely, that the only acts of the defendants in mining for which they can be responsible with regard to adjacent and neighboring owners are works under land which, if it remained in its natural state and the other lands remained in their natural state, would be a support to the land of the person complaining.

I can hardly think that this is a relation of dominant and servient tenements, and would rather, for myself, put it that this is a relation between adjacent owners, which has an attribute which is the same as that which exists in the case of the relation between dominant and servient tenements, and that relation with regard to the reciprocal acts of the parties leads one to the same conclusion as that which we have already arrived at ; although, therefore, this is a case of first impression, that is to say, a case in which we have, after the Master of the Rolls, for the first time, to decide what is the proper definition of "adjacent lands," I think the Master of the Rolls has given a very happy definition of it, and one which we ought to accept.

GILMORE v. DRISCOLL.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1877.

[Reported 122 Mass. 199.]

TORT for injuries to the plaintiff's land by the excavation of adjoining land by the defendant.

The case was submitted to the Superior Court, and, after judgment for the plaintiff, to this court on appeal, on an agreed statement of facts as follows :

"The plaintiff was owner of a parcel of land in a populous portion of that part of Boston, lately Roxbury, as described in her writ, bounded on the southwesterly side by the land of one Webb. On this land of the plaintiff, but immediately adjoining the division line, was a fence, and near to it a few currant bushes and certain modern structures. The two parcels in their natural condition made a knoll, the highest part of which was at or near the division line.

"Webb, the owner of the adjoining lot, under an agreement with one Gilligan, gave him permission to remove the soil of his land down to a grade of the street on its northwesterly side, on which both lots were located. Webb gave Gilligan the right to go up to, but not within two feet of, the plaintiff's fence. Webb had no other connection with the acts complained of.

"Gilligan for a consideration gave permission to the defendant to remove a portion of this said soil, and under that license the defendant removed all the soil that was removed nearest to and along the line of the plaintiff's land, and the removal of which, it was alleged, caused the damage complained of. Gilligan gave the license to the defendant under the same restrictions as to 'not within two feet of the plaintiff's fence,' as Webb had imposed upon him.

"The depth to which the grade of this adjoining land was lowered by the defendant against the plaintiff's lot was at its greatest measure some ten feet, and at its lowest, some five feet. The soil of the plaintiff's lot fell along the whole length of her line to the width of some two or three feet at the top, taking with it the fence and shrubbery upon it. The weight of the plaintiff's structures near the line did not contribute to the falling away of the soil. The defendant left a bank of earth on the Webb lot against the plaintiff's land along the whole line, but it was not in all parts two feet wide at the top. There was no falling away of the soil at the time the defendant ceased his work, which was in the fall of the year, about the 28d of October. The bank left by the defendant was rendered insufficient to hold the soil of the plaintiff in its natural condition by the effect of rains and frost. The bank began to give way under the effect of rains and frost at once, but the soil of the plaintiff was not actually disturbed till the month of March in the spring following the fall when the work of the defendant was ended.

"The damages occasioned to the plaintiff by loss of and injury to her soil alone, caused by the acts of the defendant, amount to ninety-five dollars. To put the plaintiff's land into its former condition, and so maintain it by means of a retaining wall (which I find to be the best method of accomplishing that result), would cost the sum of five hundred and seventy-five dollars; and to replace the fence and shrubs would cost the further sum of forty-five dollars. The difference between the market value of the plaintiff's lot of land as affected by the act of the defendant, and what its market value would be had it not been deprived of its natural supports (without taking into account the unavoidable disadvantage to the plaintiff, which must have followed from the lawful cutting down of the adjoining lot, though her soil had not been disturbed thereby), would be the equivalent of and fully compensated by the cost of putting her land back into the same condition it was before, or the sum of the two amounts last named, namely, six hundred and twenty dollars."

Upon the foregoing facts, the court was to enter such judgment as it should deem proper.

P. E. Tucker, for the plaintiff.

C. H. Drew, for the defendant.

GRAY, C. J. The right of an owner of land to the support of the land adjoining is jure naturæ, like the right in a flowing stream. Every owner of land is entitled, as against his neighbor, to have the earth stand and the water flow in its natural condition. In the case of running water, the owner of each estate by which it flows has only the right to the use of the water for reasonable purposes, qualified by a like right in every other owner of land above or below him on the same stream. But in the case of land, which is fixed in its place, each owner has the absolute right to have his land remain in its natural condition, unaffected by any act of his neighbor; and, if the neighbor digs upon or improves his own land so as to injure this right, may maintain an action against him, without proof of negligence.

But this right of property is only in the land in its natural condition, and the damages in such an action are limited to the injury to the land itself, and do not include any injury to buildings or improvements thereon. While each owner may build upon and improve his own estate at his pleasure, provided he does not infringe upon the natural right of his neighbor, no one can by his own act enlarge the liability of his neighbor for an interference with this natural right. If a man is not content to enjoy his land in its natural condition, but wishes to build upon or improve it, he must either make an agreement with his neighbor, or dig his foundations so deep, or take such other precautions, as to insure the stability of his buildings or improvements, whatever excavations the neighbor may afterwards make upon his own land in the exercise of his right.

In 2 Rol. Ab. 564, it is stated that in Wilde v. Minsterley, in 15 Car. I., it was decided in the King's Bench, after a verdict for the plaintiff, that "if A. be seised in fee of copyhold land next adjoining to the land of B., and A. erects a new house upon his copyhold land, and some part of the house is erected upon the confines of his land next adjoining to the land of B., and B. afterwards digs his land so near to the foundation of A.'s house, but no part of A.'s land, that thereby the foundation of the house and the house itself fall into the pit, yet no action lies by A. against B., because it was A.'s own fault that he built his house so near the land of B., for he by his act cannot hinder B. from making the best use of his own land that he can. But it seems that a man who has land next adjoining to my land cannot dig his land so near my land that thereby my land shall go into his pit; and therefore, if the action had been brought for this, it would lie."

In the same court, in 15 Car. II., Justices Twisden and Windham said that it had been adjudged that, "if I, being seised of land, lease forty foot thereof to A. to build a house thereon, and other forty foot to B. to build a house, and one of them builds a house, and then the other digs a cellar in his land, whereby the wall of the first house adjoining falls, no action lies for that, because each one may make the best advantage of his digging;" "but it seemed to them that the law is otherwise, if it was an ancient wall or house that falls by such digging." Palmer v. Fleshees, 1 Sid. 167. In another report, the corresponding statement is, that "it was adjudged that two having ground adjoining, the one built de novo, and the other in his ground digged so near, that the other fell, and no remedy, the house being new." Palmer v. Flessier, 1 Keb. 625. That adjudication is referred to in Siderfin as "7 Jac. in Pigott and Surie's Case," and in Keble as "7 Car." But Sury v. Pigot, decided in 1 Car. I., and fully reported in Popham, 166, was upon another point, and is so stated in Keble, ubi supra; and it would seem that the reference intended may have been to the case of Wilde v. Minsterley, above cited.

There are indeed two or three early cases, in which actions appear to have been sustained for undermining houses by digging on adjoining land. Slingsby v. Barnard, 14 Jac. I., 1 Rol. R. 430; Smith v. Martin, 23 Car. II., 2 Saund. 400; Barwell v. Kensey, 35 Car. II., 3 Lev. 171; s. c. 1 Mod. Entr. 195. But in Slingsby v. Barnard, and in Smith v. Martin, the objections made were not to the right to maintain the action, but only to particulars in the form of the declaration; and in Barwell v. Kensey, the declaration, as construed by the majority of the court, alleged not merely digging near the plaintiff's foundation, but digging that foundation itself.

In Tenant v. Goldwin, 2 Ld. Raym. 1089, 1094, Lord Holt and Justice Powell are reported to have "held that a man cannot build so near another man's house as to throw it down." But the only point adjudged was the same as in Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, that a man is bound, of common right, to keep a vault upon his own land in repair, so that the filth shall not flow upon his neighbor's land, "for he whose dirt it is must keep it that it may not trespass." s. c. 1 Salk. 360, 361; 6 Mod. 311; 1 Salk. 21; Holt, 500. And upon a comparison of the various reports it is evident that the digging so near another's wall as to weaken it was not spoken of as giving a right of action to the owner of the wall, but as limiting his liability for the escape of filth caused by the new digging.

The latest and the most authoritative statement of the law of England upon this point before the American Revolution is that of Chief Baron Comyns, who, citing Rolle's Abridgment and Siderfin's Reports, ubi supra, says that an action upon the case lies for a nuisance, "if a man dig a pit in his land, so near that my land falls into the pit;" but does not lie, "if a man build an house, and make cellars upon his soil, whereby an house newly built in an adjoining soil falls down." Com. Dig. Action upon the Case for a Nuisance, A., C.

In Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 220, which was decided in 1815, and is the leading American case on this subject, the plaintiff in 1802 bought a parcel of land upon Beacon Hill in Boston, bounded on the west by land of the town of Boston; and in 1804 built a brick dwelling-house thereon, with its rear two feet from this boundary, and its foundation fifteen feet below the ancient surface of the land. The defendants in 1811 took a deed of the adjoining land from the town, and began to dig and remove the earth therefrom, and, though notified by the plaintiff that his house was endangered, continued to do so to the depth of forty-five feet, and within six feet of the rear of the plaintiff's house, and thereby caused part of the earth on the surface of the plaintiff's land to fall away and slide upon the defendant's land, and rendered the foundations of the plaintiff's house insecure, and the occupation thereof dangerous, so that he was obliged to abandon it.

The court, after advisement, and upon a review of the earlier English authorities, held that the plaintiff could recover for the loss of or injury to the soil merely, and not for the damage to the house; and Chief Justice Parker, in delivering judgment, said: "It is a common principle of the civil and of the common law, that the proprietor of land, unless restrained by covenant or custom, has the entire dominion, not only of the soil, but of the space above and below the surface, to any extent he may choose to occupy it. The law, founded upon principles of reason and common utility, has admitted a qualification to this dominion, restricting the proprietor so to use his own, as not to injure the property or impair any actual existing rights of another. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas." "But this subjection of the use of a man's own property to the convenience of his neighbor is founded upon a supposed pre-existing right in his neighbor to have and enjoy the privilege which by such act is impaired." 12 Mass. 224. "A man, in digging upon his own land, is to have regard to the position of his neighbor's land, and the probable consequences to his neighbor, if he digs too near his line; and if he disturbs the natural state of the soil, he shall answer in damages; but he is answerable only for the natural and necessary consequences of his act, and not for the value of a house put upon or near the line by his neighbor." "The plaintiff built his house within two feet of the western line of the lot, knowing that the town, or those who should hold under it, had a right to build equally near to the line, or to dig down into the soil for any other lawful purpose. He knew also the shape and nature of the ground, and that it was impossible to dig there without causing excavations. He built at his peril; for it was not possible for him, merely by building upon his own ground, to deprive the other party of such use of his as he should deem most advantageous. There was no right acquired by his ten years' occupation, to keep his neighbor at a convenient distance from him." "It is, in fact, damnum absque injuria." 12 Mass. 229.

Upon the facts of that case, it was questionable whether the acts of the defendant would not have caused the falling away of the plaintiff's land if no house had been built thereon; and yet the court held the plaintiff not to be entitled to recover any damages for the fall of his house, without regard to the question whether the weight of the house did or did not contribute to the fall of his soil into the pit digged by the defendant. No claim for like damages was made in this Commonwealth until more than forty years afterwards, when the decision in Thurston v. Hancock was followed and confirmed. Foley v. Wyeth, 2 Allen, 131.

In Foley v. Wyeth, the court, after stating that the right of support from adjoining soil for land in its natural state stands on natural justice, and is essential to the protection and enjoyment of property in the soil, and is a right of property which passes with the soil without any grant for the purpose, said: "It is a necessary consequence from this principle, that for any injury to his soil, resulting from the removal of the natural support to which it is entitled, by means of excavation of an adjoining tract, the owner has a legal remedy in an action at law against the party by whom the work has been done and the mischief thereby occasioned. This does not depend upon negligence or unskilfulness, but upon the violation of a right of property which has been invaded and disturbed. This unqualified rule is limited to injuries caused to the land itself, and does not afford relief for damages by the same means to artificial structures. For an injury to buildings, which is unavoidably incident to the depression or slide of the soil on which they stand, caused by the excavation of a pit on adjoining land, an action can only be maintained when a want of due care or skill, or positive negligence, has contributed to produce it." 2 Allen, 133. And it was accordingly adjudged that, if the defendant in that case, by excavating and carrying away earth on her own land, caused the plaintiff's land to fall and sink into the pit which she had dug, she was liable for the injury to the soil of the plaintiff; but that, in the absence of any proof of negligence in the execution of the work, the jury could not take into consideration, as an element of damage for which compensation could be recovered, the fact that the foundation of the plaintiff's house had been made to crack and settle, although the weight of his house did not contribute to the sliding or crumbling away of the soil.

The decisions in Thurston v. Hancock and Foley v. Wyeth are not affected by those in Hartshorn v. Worcester, 113 Mass. 111, and Marsden v. Cambridge, 114 Mass. 490, which related to claims for injuries done in the making of a highway, and were based upon the terms of the Statutes upon that subject, and not upon the rule of the common law governing proprietors of adjoining lands.

By the modern authorities in Great Britain, it is clear that a right to the support of a building by adjacent land can arise only by grant or prescription. Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ad. 871; Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 220; Caledonian Railway v. Sprot, 2 Macq. 449; Bonomi v. Backhouse, E., B. & E. 622, and 9 H. L. Cas. 503.

In Bonomi v. Backhouse, in which an action was maintained by an owner of land and of an ancient house, for damage occurring within six years, from the working of coal mines, two hundred and eighty yards from the house, more than six years before the commencement of the action, Mr. Justice Willes, delivering the judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, which was affirmed by the House of Lords, said: "The right to support of land and the right to support of buildings stand upon different footings as to the mode of acquiring them; the former being prima facie a right of property analogous to the flow of a natural river, or of air, though there may be cases in which it would be sustained as matter of grant; whilst the latter must be founded upon prescription or grant, express or implied; but the character of the rights, when acquired, is in each case the same." E., B. & E. 654, 655. And Lord Wensleydale said: "I think it perfectly clear that the right in this case was not in the nature of an easement, but that the right was to the enjoyment of his own property, and that the obligation was cast upon the owner of the neighboring property not to interrupt that enjoyment." 9 H. L. Cas. 513.

The cases of Brown v. Robins, 4 H. & N. 186; Hunt v. Peake, H. R. V. Johns. 705, and Stroyan v. Knowles, 6 H. & N. 454, in which it was held that, in an action for causing soil to sink, which would have sunk if there had been no building upon it, the damages recovered might include the injury to the buildings also, are directly opposed to our own cases of Thurston v. Hancock and Foley v. Wyeth, in the latter of which Brown v. Robins was before the court.

Upon a question of this kind, affecting all the lands in the Commonwealth, it would be unjustifiable and mischievous for the court to change a rule of law which has been established and acted upon here for sixty years. Even in England, it is held that for digging upon neighboring land, and thereby causing the plaintiff's land to sink and his building to fall, although the jury find that the land would have sunk if there had been no building upon it, yet no action will lie, if no appreciable damage is proved to the land without the building. Smith v. Thackerah, L. R. 1 C. P. 564.

The weight of American authority is in accordance with the decisions of this court. It has generally been considered that for an excavation causing an injury to the soil in its natural state an action would lie; but that, without proof of a right by grant or prescription in the plaintiff, or of actual negligence on the part of the defendant, no action would lie for an injury to buildings by excavating adjoining land not previously built upon. Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 92; Lasala v. Holbrook, 4 Paige, 169; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 Comst. 159, 162; McGuire v. Grant, 1 Dutcher, 356; Richart v. Scott, 7 Watts, 460; Richardson v. Vermont Central Railroad, 25 Vt. 465; Beard v. Murphy, 37 Vt. 99, 102; Shrieve v. Stokes, 8 B. Mon. 453; Charless v. Rankin, 22 Mo. 566.

It is difficult to see how the owner of a house can acquire by prescription a right to have it supported by the adjoining land, inasmuch as he does nothing upon, and has no use of, that land, which can be seen or known or interrupted or sued for by the owner thereof, and therefore no assent of the latter can be presumed to the acquirement of any right in his land by the former. The English cases are founded on an analogy to the doctrine of ancient lights, which is not in force in this country. Hide v. Thornborough, 2 Car. & K. 250, 255, and Stansell v. Jollard, there cited; Solomon v. Vintners' Co., 4 H. & N. 585, 599, 602; Chasemore v. Richards, 7 H. L. Cas. 349, 385, 386; Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117, 122; Keats v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 215; Richart v. Scott, 7 Watts, 460, 462; Napier v. Bulwinkle, 5 Rich. 311, 324. But this case does not require us to determine that question, because there is no evidence that the structures and improvements upon the plaintiff's land have been there for twenty years.

Nor is it necessary to consider whether negligence on the part of the defendant could enlarge the measure of his liability; because the case stated does not find that he was negligent, nor set out any facts from which actual negligence can be inferred. The cause of action is that the plaintiff has an absolute right to have her soil stand in its natural condition, and that any one who injures that right is a wrongdoer, independently of any question of negligence. Foley v. Wyeth, 2 Allen, 131, 133; Hay v. Cohoes Co., 2 Comst. 159, 162; Richardson v. Vermont Central Railroad, 25 Vt. 465, 471; Humphries v. Brogden, 12 Q. B. 739.

The fact that the defendant was not the owner of the adjoining land affords him no exemption. It was never considered necessary, in an action of this kind, to allege that the defendant owned or occupied the land on which the digging was done that injured the plaintiff's soil. Smith v. Martin, 2 Saund. 400 and note; Nicklin v. Williams, 10 Exch. 259. Even an agent of the owner of the adjoining land would be liable for his own negligence and positive wrongs; for his principal could not confer upon him any authority to commit a tort upon the property or the rights of another: Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray, 309; Story on Agency, § 311. And, upon the case stated, the defendant appears not to have been an agent of the owner of the land, but to have removed the soil therefrom for his own benefit, by permission of Gilligan, who had a like agreement with and license from the owner; and it is at least doubtful whether the owner of the land could be held responsible for the defendant's acts. Gayford v. Nicholls, 9 Exch. 702; Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray, 349.

The case finds that the defendant ceased his work towards the end of October, and left the bank in such a shape that by the effect of rains and frost it was rendered insufficient to hold the soil of the plaintiff in its natural condition, and began to give way at once, although the plaintiff's soil was not actually disturbed till the month of March following. The necessary inference is that by the operation of natural and ordinary causes upon the land as it was left by the excavations of the defendant, and which he took no precaution to guard against, part of the soil of the plaintiff's land slid and fell off; and for the injury so caused to her soil this action may be maintained. But she cannot maintain an action for the injury to her fences and shrubbery, because her natural right and her corresponding remedy are confined to the land itself, and do not include buildings or other improvements thereon.

The remaining question is of the measure of damages. The peculiar form of the case stated, in this respect, as might be inferred from its terms, and as was admitted at the argument, has been occasioned by incorporating into it the substance of the award of an arbitrator. It is agreed that the "damages occasioned to the plaintiff, by loss of and injury to her soil alone, caused by the acts of the defendant, amount to ninety-five dollars." We are of opinion that she is entitled to recover that sum, and no more. She is clearly not entitled to recover the cost of putting her land into and maintaining it in its former condition, because that is no test of the amount of the injury. McGuire v. Grant, 1 Dutcher, 356. She cannot recover the difference in market value, because it does not appear that that difference is wholly due to the injury to her natural right in the land; it may depend upon the present shape of the lot, upon the improvements thereon, or upon other artificial circumstances which have nothing to do with the natural condition of the soil.

SHURY v. PIGOT. ✓

[Reported 3 Bulst. 339.]

In an action upon the case, for stopping of a watercourse, which had used to have its current from such a place, through such a place, and so to come into the plaintiff's yard, and there to fill and supply a pond with water, for the necessary watering of his cattle, the defendant hath erected a stone wall, and so hath stopped this, that the plaintiff wanted his water, and was by this damnified.

The defendant pleaded in bar, a unity of possession in the land of the house, and place to which, and of the land through which, and of other land, of which, &c.

The only question moved, and insisted upon was, whether this unity of possession will extinguish this watercourse, or not.

This case was argued at the bar, and much debated, and for further argument, the same was adjourned to another time.

Afterwards (S.) Termin. Mich. 2 Car. R. B. R. this case was moved again, and urged, that by this unity of possession, the watercourse is not extinguished; and for this purpose, Coke, 4 pars., Terringham's

The reason of the case of enclosure urged is, because the prescription there was interrupted, and therefore all gone, and extinct; and so it was adjudged, 3 Jac.

The whole court at this time seemed to be clear of opinion, that the watercourse here, was not extinct, by the unity of possession, there being a great difference between this case and the case of the way.

WHITLOCK, J. The course of a spring, is a natural course and current, and to stop this, may be a nuisance to the Commonwealth, and a private wrong.

Afterwards, this case was argued at large by all the four judges (Termin. Mich. 2 Car. R. B. R.), who all agreed in opinion, that judgment ought to be given for the plaintiff, and that the watercourse in this case is not extinct, by the unity of possession.

1. WHITLOCK, J. There is a difference between a way, a common, and a watercourse. Bracton, lib. 4, f. 221, 222, calls them servitutes prædiales, these which begin by private right, by prescription, by assent, as a way common, being a particular benefit, to take part of the profits of the land; this extinct by unity, because the greater benefit shall drown the less; a watercourse doth not begin by prescription, nor yet by assent, but the same doth begin ex jure naturæ, having taken this course naturally, and cannot be averted.

2. JONES, J. This watercourse is not extinct by the unity of possession, the same being a thing which ariseth out of the land, and no interest at all, by this claimed in the land, but quod currere solebat, this way, and so to have continuance of this.

3. DODDERIDGE, J. Agreed herein, that this watercourse is not extinct by the unity of possession.

1. Because the nature of this is to be current.

2. Because it is also a thing of necessity, for the watering of cattle, and a thing which of necessity is to have continuance, the same not to be extinct by a unity of possession, as common appendant, to arable land, for cattle of the plough, and because appendant unto ancient arable land, (S) Hyde and Gaigne, to be only for cattle, (S) chivalls et boofes, for to plough the land, and for kine, and sheep, for to compester the land.

As to the case of ways, if they are private ways, they are extinct by a unity of possession, but not so, if they be ways of necessity; as to the church or to the market; and so was Popham's opinion in his time, upon this difference, where a way shall be extinct, and where not, by a unity of possession.

The case of the watercourse is upon the like reason.

11 H. 7, fol. 25. A notable case there of the gutter, the reason there given, because matter of necessity, where one had a gutter running within the tenement of another; both purchase the tenement, the gutter remains, not extinct, this being as necessary as it was before.

2. Another reason may be drawn from the nature of water, the which will naturally descend, and will make a way for its passage, if stopped; it is not possible to have such to be extinct by a unity of possession.

Coke, 4 pars. Luttrell's Case, of the Mill, and the Case of the Dye-house, no mill nor dye-house can subsist without water.

CREW, C. J., agreed herein, that this watercourse is not extinct by the unity of possession; this case differs from the case of the way, and common appendant.

Coke, 4, pars. fol. 38, in Tirringham's Case. 3. Resolved, that a common appendant is extinct by a unity of possession; and so it is, of every profit which one hath out of land, and so is 24 E. 3, fol. 25.

The whole court agreed in the principal case, that the watercourse was not extinct by the unity of possession; and accordingly by the rule of the court (the defendant's plea in bar being not good),

Judgment was given for the plaintiff.¹

TENANT v. GOLDWIN.

KING'S BENCH. 1704.

[Reported 1 Salk. 360.]

IN an action on the case the plaintiff declared, that he was possessed of a messuage, and in a cellar, part thereof, was wont to lay coals, beer, &c.: That the cellar joined to the defendant's messuage; and by a wall which the defendant dubuit reparare was separated and defended from the defendant's privy, and that for want of repairing this wall, faecidates & sordida suricæ prædict. in cellarium ipsius que. fluebant, &c. There was judgment by default, and damages upon the writ of inquiry: And, upon a motion in arrest of judgment, HOLT, C. J., was at first of opinion, that, the defendant being a tertenant, the plaintiff could not put a charge upon him without showing a special title. Upon this it was afterwards argued, that there have been cases where the plaintiff has, by a de jure debuit & consuevit, charged the defendant even where a tertenant. Sands and Trefuses, 1 Cro. 575. In the case of a watercourse, 3 Lev. 266. In the case of a way, 1 Lut. 119. And that it is not necessary in any case for the plaintiff to show a title where the defendant is liable of common right. Thus it is not requisite in an assize for a rent-service, or for common appurtenant to make title even against the tertenant; aliter of an assize, for a rent-charge or common in gross, unless the assize be against the pernor of the profits. 32 H. 6, 15 a, 35 H. 6, 7 b. So of all charges by act in law, as against a parish for not repairing a highway; otherwise if against a private person: That the flowing of this filth was an actual trespass, like the case of 6 E. 4, 7.; Fitz. Tres. 110: And that every man ought to use and keep his own, so as not to damnify his neighbor. That one man might compel another to repair his house, in several cases. Two joint-tenants of a house, one may have a writ de reparacione facienda against the other; and the writ supposes quod ad reparationem & sustentationem domus tenetur: Aliter of a wood and fence; Mo. 374; 11 Co. 82 b; 2 Inst. 403; Reg. 153 b; F. N. B. 127. So if H. has a house near another's, which he will not repair, a writ de domo reparanda lies, and supposes quod reparare debet. Note: The writ is good without solet; Reg. 153 b, F. N. B. 127 c, d; Reg. 153 b; 1 Inst. 56 b. One man has the upper part of a house, another the lower; Kelw. 98 b. Towards the end of the term, the Chief Justice called for the postea, and gave judgment for the plaintiff. He did not approve of the case in Kelw. 98 b, and thought the writ in F. N. B. 127 b, must be founded upon the particular custom of places. The reason he gave for his judgment in the principal case was, because it was the defendant's wall and the defendant's filth, and he was bound of common right to keep his wall so as his filth might not damnify his neighbor; and that it was a trespass on his neighbor, as if his beasts should escape, or one should make a great heap on the border of his ground, and it should tumble and roll down upon his neighbor's. That the case might indeed possibly be such, that the defendant might not be bound to repair; as if the plaintiff made a new cellar under the defendant's old privy, or in a vacant piece of ground which lay next the old privy before, in such case the plaintiff must defend himself: But that cannot be the case here, for then he could not be bound to repair; and upon the words debet reparare, he must be acquitted upon the trial. But, on the other side, if A. has two houses, and the house of office on the one is contiguous to the cellar of the other, but defended by a wall, and he sells this house with the house of office, the vendee must repair the wall; so if he keeps this and sells the other, he himself must repair the wall of the house of office; for he whose dirt it is must keep it that it may not trespass. Salkeld pro quer. *Southouse pro def.*¹

WILLIAMS v. MORLAND.

[Reported 2 B. & C. 910.]

DECLARATION stated, that the plaintiff, before the committing of the grievances thereafter mentioned, was lawfully possessed of a mes-susage or dwelling-house, lands, and premises, with the appurtenances, and by reason thereof of right ought to have had and enjoyed, and still of right ought to have and enjoy, the benefit and advantage of the water of a stream, called the Lee river, and which during all that time of right ought to have run and flowed, and until the committing of the grievances thereafter mentioned, of right had run and flowed, and still of right ought to run and flow, unto and past the lands and premises of the plaintiff, for supplying the same with water; yet the defendant, well knowing the premises, but contriving, &c., heretofore, and whilst the plaintiff was possessed of the tenements, with the appurtenances, to wit, on, &c., at, &c., wrongfully and injuriously erected and made a certain pent-stock, dam, or floodgate, in and across the said stream, higher in the said stream than the tenements of the plaintiff, and wrongfully and injuriously widened and enlarged a certain other pent-stock, dam, or floodgate, then being in and across the said stream, higher in the said stream than the lands and premises of the plaintiff, and kept and continued the said first-mentioned pent-stock, dam, or floodgate so erected and made, and the said other pent-stock, dam, or floodgate so widened, enlarged and altered respectively, in and across the said stream, for a long space of time, to wit, from thence hitherto, and thereby unlawfully and wrongfully prevented the water of the stream from running and flowing along its usual and regular course, and in its usual calm, moderate, and smooth manner, unto and past the lands and premises of the plaintiff, as the same otherwise would have done, and thereby the water of the stream ran and flowed in a different direction or channel, and with much greater force and increased violence and impetuosity, unto and against the banks and premises of the plaintiff, and undermined, washed away, damaged, and destroyed the banks of the lands of the plaintiff, &c. The second count stated, that the defendant wrongfully and injuriously stopped, hindered, and prevented the water of the stream from running or flowing unto and past the tenements of the plaintiff, along its usual or regular course, and in its usual calm and smooth manner, as the same otherwise would have done, and also wrongfully and injuriously caused the water of the stream to run and flow in another direction with much greater force, violence, and impetuosity, than it of right ought to have and would have done, in and against the lands and premises of the plaintiff, and thereby the banks and other parts of the lands and premises, &c. were damaged (as in the last count). Plea, not guilty. At the trial before Graham, B., at the last Summer Assizes for the county of Kent, the jury found that no damage had been done to the plaintiff's banks or lands either by the pent-stock set up, or that which was enlarged, but that their bad condition was owing to the plaintiff's neglect to repair them; and they added, that they thought the defendant should not stop the water in the summer-time. It was then insisted, that the plaintiff was entitled, upon this finding, to a verdict, because the defendant had stopped the water from coming to the plaintiff's premises in the summer-time. But the learned judge was of opinion, that inasmuch as the plaintiff, in his declaration, did not complain that he was deprived of a supply of water, but that the natural course of the stream was altered, and that the water was caused to flow with greater impetuosity against his lands, whereby his banks were injured; and as the jury had found that the banks were not injured from such flowing of the water, the defendant was entitled to a verdict. Liberty, however, was reserved to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict, with nominal damages. A rule nisi having been obtained for that purpose in last Michaelmas Term, Marryat and Bolland were to have shown cause, but the court called upon Chitty, in support of the rule.

BAYLEY, J. I think that this rule ought to be discharged. My judgment in this case is founded on the nature of flowing water, and the manner in which an exclusive right to it is obtained. Flowing water is originally publici juris. So soon as it is appropriated by an individual, his right is co-extensive with the beneficial use to which he appropriates it. Subject to that right all the rest of the water remains publici juris. The party who obtains a right to the exclusive enjoyment of the water does so in derogation of the primitive right of the public. Now if this be the true character of the right to water, a party complaining of the breach of such a right ought to show that he is prevented from having water which he has acquired a right to use for some beneficial purpose. Here the declaration states a right to the use of this water at all times; but still, if the plaintiff had as much water as could be necessary for his purposes, the defendant would have been guilty of no wrong, by preventin gadditional water from coming to the plaintiff's premises. The gravamen of the plaintiff's complaint in his declaration is, not that the defendant prevented him from having the quantity which had formerly flowed to his premises, but that the defendant prevented the water of the stream from flowing along its usual course, in its usual, calm, moderate, and smooth manner unto the plaintiff's lands, and that his banks were injured by the impetuous manner in which it was caused to flow, by the act of the defendant. Now the jury have found, that the banks, &c., were not injured by the manner in which the water flowed ; and that being so, it appears that the plaintiff has not sustained the injury complained of in the declaration, and therefore the verdict is properly entered for the defendant.

HOLROYD, J. I think the verdict was properly entered for the defendant in this case. Running water is not in its nature private property. At least it is private property no longer than it remains on the soil of the person claiming it. Before it came there, it clearly was not his property. It may, perhaps, become, quasi, the property of another before it comes upon his premises, by reason of his having appropriated to himself the use of the water accustomed to flow through his lands before any other person had acquired a prior right to it. Thus in Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208, the defendants or those under whom they claimed had appropriated to themselves a quantity of the flowing water of the River Irwell, sufficient for the purposes of working their mill. The plaintiff afterwards erected premises lower down the stream, and appropriated to himself the surplus water for the use of his works. Four years after the plaintiff had erected his works, the defendants widened their sluice, so that nearly double the quantity of water was drawn from the stream, and the plaintiff's works were thereby materially impeded. It was held in that case, that although the defendants might originally have appropriated the whole water to themselves, yet they could not do so after the plaintiff had appropriated the residue of the unappropriated water to himself. If the plaintiff, therefore, in this case, had shown in his declaration a right to the unappropriated water of the stream, and had alleged as the ground of his complaint that he had been deprived of the use of that surplus water, he might then have been entitled to a verdict. But the present declaration is framed to meet a different case from that now relied upon. The gravamen of the complaint is not that the water was prevented by the act of the defendant from coming down to the plaintiff's premises, and that he was injured by the want of water, but that it, in fact, flowed in a more impetuous manner, and thereby damaged the plaintiff's banks ; but the jury have found that no damage has been done to the plaintiff's bank, by the manner in which the water was caused to flow by the act of the defendant. The jury have, therefore, found against the plaintiff in respect of the right of action which he claims. The mere obstruction of the water which had been used to flow through his lands does not of itself give any right of action. In order to entitle himself to recover, he should show the loss of some benefit, or the deterioration of the value of the premises.

LITTLEDALE, J. I think that the plaintiff is not entitled to have the verdict entered for him in this case. The first count does not allege that the plaintiff was deprived of any benefit to which he was entitled, but that his banks were injured by reason of the water having been caused to flow in an impetuous manner. The jury have found that his banks were not thereby injured, and therefore the proof has not supported that count. The second count does not allege that the plaintiff was deprived of the use of the water, but that the defendant wrongfully prevented the water from flowing past the lands of the plaintiff along its usual course, in its usual calm and smooth manner, as the same ought to have done, and that his lands were thereby injured. It is true, that in trespass for a wrongful entry into the land of another, a damage is presumed to have been sustained, though no pecuniary damage be actually proved. So in the case of an action for the obstruction of a right of common, or a right of way, any obstruction of that right, is a sufficient cause of action. The doing of any act calculated to injure that right is a sufficient ground of action, but, generally speaking, there must be a temporal loss or damage accruing from the wrongful act of another, in order to entitle a party to maintain an action on the case. Now, assuming that the stopping of the water was a wrongful act of the defendant, has the plaintiff thereby sustained any temporal loss or damage? He alleges that he has sustained a damage, by his banks having been injured in consequence of the water flowing in a more impetuous manner. He does not allege that he has sustained any damage by the actual loss of the water. The jury have found that he has not sustained the damage alleged; and, therefore, they have negatived the ground of action stated in his declaration. Water is of that peculiar nature, that it is not sufficient to allege in a declaration, that the defendant prevented the water from flowing to the plaintiff's premises. The plaintiff must state an actual damage accruing from the want of the water. The mere right to use the water does not give a party such a property in the new water constantly coming, as to make the diversion or obstruction of the water, per se, give him any right of action. All the king's subjects have a right to the use of flowing water, provided that, in using it, they do no injury to the rights already vested in another by the appropriation of the water.

ACTON v. BLUNDELL.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1843.

[Reported 12 M. & W. 324.]

TINDAL, C. J.² The question raised before us on this bill of exceptions is one of equal novelty and importance. The plaintiff below, who is also the plaintiff in error, in his action on the case, declared in the first count for the disturbance of his right to the water of certain under-ground springs, streams, and watercourses, which, as he alleged, ought of right to run, flow, and percolate into the closes of the plaintiff, for supplying certain mills with water; and in the second count for the draining off the water of a certain spring or well of water in a certain close of the plaintiff, by reason of the possession of which close, as he alleged, he ought of right to have the use, benefit, and enjoyment of the water of the said spring or well for the convenient use of his close. The defendants by their pleas traversed the rights in the manner alleged in those counts respectively. At the trial the plaintiff proved, that, within twenty years before the commencement of the suit, viz. in the latter end of 1821, a former owner and occupier of certain land and a cotton-mill, now belonging to the plaintiff, had sunk and made in such land a well for raising water for the working of the mill; and that the defendants, in the year 1837, had sunk a coal-pit in the land of one of the defendants at about three-quarters of a mile from the plaintiff's well, and about three years after sunk a second at a somewhat less distance; the consequence of which sinkings was, that, by the first, the supply of water was considerably diminished, and by the second was rendered altogether insufficient for the purposes of the mill. The learned judge before whom the cause was tried directed the jury, that, if the defendants had proceeded and acted in the usual and proper manner on the land, for the purpose of working and winning a coal-mine therein, they might lawfully do so, and that the plaintiff's evidence was not sufficient to support the allegations in his declaration as traversed by the second and third pleas. Against this direction of the judge the counsel for the plaintiff tendered the bill of exceptions which has been argued before us. And after hearing such argument, and consideration of the case, we are of opinion that the direction of the learned judge was correct in point of law.

The question argued before us has been in substance this: whether the right to the enjoyment of an underground spring, or of a well supplied by such underground spring, is governed by the same rule of law as that which applies to, and regulates, a watercourse flowing on the surface.

The rule of law which governs the enjoyment of a stream flowing in its natural course over the surface of land belonging to different proprietors is well established; each proprietor of the land has a right to the advantage of the stream flowing in its natural course over his land, to use the same as he pleases, for any purposes of his own, not inconsistent with a similar right in the proprietors of the land above or below; so that, neither can any proprietor above diminish the quantity or injure the quality of the water which would otherwise naturally descend, nor can any proprietor below throw back the water without the license or the grant of the proprietor above. The law is laid down in those precise terms by the Court of King's Bench in the case of Mason v. Hill, 5 B. & Ad. 1; 2 Nev. & M. 747, and substantially is declared by the Vice-Chancellor in the case of Wright v. Howard, 1 S. & S. 190, and such we consider a correct exposition of the law. And if the right to the enjoyment of underground springs, or to a well supplied thereby, is to be governed by the same law, then undoubtedly the defendants could not justify the sinking of the coal-pits, and the direction given by the learned judge would be wrong.

But we think, on considering the grounds and origin of the law which is held to govern running streams, the consequences which would result if the same law is made applicable to springs beneath the surface, and, lastly, the authorities to be found in the books, so far as any inference can be drawn from them bearing on the point now under discussion, that there is a marked and substantial difference between the two cases, and that they are not to be governed by the same rule of law.

The ground and origin of the law which governs streams running in their natural course would seem to be this, that the right enjoyed by the several proprietors of the lands over which they flow is, and always has been, public and notorious: that the enjoyment has been long continued—in ordinary cases, indeed, time out of mind—and uninterrupted; each man knowing what he receives and what has always been received from the higher lands, and what he transmits and what has always been transmitted to the lower. The rule, therefore, either assumes for its foundation the implied assent and agreement of the proprietors of the different lands from all ages, or perhaps it may be considered as a rule of positive law (which would seem to be the opinion of Fleta and of Blackstone), the origin of which is lost by the progress of time; or it may not be unfitly treated, as laid down by Mr. Justice Story, in his judgment in the case of Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason's (American) Reports, 401, in the courts of the United States, as "an incident to the land; and that whoever seeks to found an exclusive use must establish a rightful appropriation in some manner known and admitted by the law." But in the case of a well sunk by a proprietor in his own land, the water which feeds it from a neighboring soil does not flow openly in the sight of the neighboring proprietor, but through the hidden veins of the earth beneath its surface: no man can tell what changes these underground sources have undergone in the progress of time: it may well be, that it is only yesterday's date, that they first took the course and direction which enabled them to supply the well: again, no proprietor knows what portion of water is taken from beneath his own soil: how much he gives originally, or how much he transmits only, or how much he receives: on the contrary, until the well is sunk, and the water collected by draining into it, there cannot properly be said, with reference to the well, to be any flow of water at all. In the case, therefore, of the well, there can be no ground for implying any mutual consent or agreement, for ages past, between the owners of the several lands beneath which the underground springs may exist, which is one of the foundations on which the law as to running streams is supposed to be built; nor, for the same reason, can any trace of a positive law be inferred from long-continued acquiescence and submission, whilst the very existence of the underground springs or of the well may be unknown to the proprietors of the soil.

But the difference between the two cases with respect to the consequences, if the same law is to be applied to both, is still more apparent. In the case of the running stream, the owner of the soil merely transmits the water over its surface: he receives as much from his higher neighbor as he sends down to his neighbor below: he is neither better nor worse: the level of the water remains the same. But if the man who sinks the well in his own land can acquire by that act an absolute and indefeasible right to the water that collects in it, he has the power of preventing his neighbor from making any use of the spring in his own soil which shall interfere with the enjoyment of the well. He has the power, still further, of debarring the owner of the land in which the spring is first found, or through which it is transmitted, from draining his land for the proper cultivation of the soil: and thus, by an act which is voluntary on his part, and which may be entirely unsuspected by his neighbor, he may impose on such neighbor the necessity of bearing a heavy expense, if the latter has erected machinery for the purposes of mining, and discovers, when too late, that the appropriation of the water has already been made. Further, the advantage on one side, and the detriment to the other, may bear no proportion. The well may be sunk to supply a cottage, or a drinking-place for cattle; whilst the owner of the adjoining land may be prevented from winning metals and minerals of inestimable value. And, lastly, there is no limit of space within which the claim of right to an underground spring can be confined: in the present case, the nearest coal-pit is at the distance of half a mile from the well: it is obvious the law must equally apply if there is an interval of many miles.

Considering, therefore, the state of circumstances upon which the law is grounded in the one case to be entirely dissimilar from those which exist in the other; and that the application of the same rule to both would lead, in many cases, to consequences at once unreasonable and unjust; we feel ourselves warranted in holding, upon principle, that the case now under discussion does not fall within the rule which obtains as to surface streams, nor is it to be governed by analogy therewith.

No case has been cited on either side bearing directly on the subject in dispute. The case of Cooper v. Barber, 3 Taunt. 99, which approaches the nearest to it, seems to make against the proposition contended for by the plaintiff. In that case the defendant had for many years penned back a stream for the purpose of irrigation, in consequence of which the water had percolated through a porous and gravelly soil into the plaintiff's land: but as this percolation had been insensible, and unknown by the plaintiff until the land was applied for building purposes, the court held, that the defendant had gained no right thereby, so as to justify its continuance. The case of Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 230, is an authority to show, that a man, by building a house on the extremity of his own land, does not thereby acquire any right of easement, for support or otherwise, over the adjoining land of his neighbor. It is said in that case, "he has no right to load his own soil, so as to make it require the support of that of his neighbor, unless he has some grant to that effect." It must follow, by parity of reason, that, if he digs a well in his own land so close to the soil of his neighbor, as to require the support of a rib of clay or of stone in his neighbor's land to retain the water in the well, no action would lie against the owner of the adjacent land for digging away such clay or stone, which is his own property, and thereby letting out the water; and it would seem to make no difference as to the legal rights of the parties, if the well stands some distance within the plaintiff's boundary, and the digging by the defendant, which occasions the water to flow from the well, is some distance within the defendant's boundary; which is, in substance, the very case before us.

The Roman law forms no rule, binding in itself, upon the subjects of these realms; but, in deciding a case upon principle, where no direct authority can be cited from our books, it affords no small evidence of the soundness of the conclusion at which we have arrived, if it proves to be supported by that law, the fruit of the researches of the most learned men, the collective wisdom of ages, and the groundwork of the municipal law of most of the countries in Europe.

The authority of one at least of the learned Roman lawyers appears decisive upon the point in favor of the defendants; of some others the opinion is expressed with more obscurity. In the Digest, lib. 39, tit. 3, De aqua et aquæ pluviae arcendæ, s. 12, "Denique Marcellus scribit, Cum eo, qui in suo fodiens vicini fontem avertit, nihil posse agi, nec de dolo actionem; et sane non debet habere, si non animo vicini nocendi, sed suum agrum meliorem faciendi, id fecit."

It is scarcely necessary to say, that we intimate no opinion whatever as to what might be the rule of law, if there had been an uninterrupted user of the right for more than the last twenty years; but, confining ourselves strictly to the facts stated in the bill of exceptions, we think the present case, for the reasons above given, is not to be governed by the law which applies to rivers and flowing streams, but that it rather falls within that principle, which gives to the owner of the soil all that lies beneath his surface; that the land immediately below is his property, whether it is solid rock, or porous ground, or venous earth, or part soil, part water; that the person who owns the surface may dig therein, and apply all that is there found to his own purposes at his free will and pleasure; and that if, in the exercise of such right, he intercepts or drains off the water collected from underground springs in his neighbor's well, this inconvenience to his neighbor falls within the description of damnum absque injuria, which cannot become the ground of an action.

We think, therefore, the direction given by the learned judge at the trial was correct, and that the judgment already given for the defendants in the court below must be affirmed. Judgment affirmed.

EMBREY v. OWEN. ✓

[Reported 6 Ex. 353.]

CASE.—The first count of the declaration stated, that the plaintiffs, before and at the time of the committing of the grievances, were lawfully possessed of certain water grist mills, and of right ought to have had and enjoyed, and still of right ought to have and enjoy, the benefit and advantage of the water of a certain stream or watercourse, which had been used to run and flow, and during all that time of right ought to have run and flowed, and still of right ought to run and flow unto the said mills, for the supplying the same with water for the working thereof, save and except at such times and on such occasions when it might be reasonable and necessary to irrigate or water certain closes of the defendant, situate and being on the southern side of the said stream or watercourse, and near to the same, with reasonable quantities of the water thereof. Yet the defendant, intending to injure the plaintiffs, at times when it was not reasonable or necessary to irrigate or water the said closes of the defendant, to wit, on &c., and for divers, different, and other purposes than the irrigating or watering the same, wrongfully and injuriously cut, dug, made, and erected, in, upon, and near to the sides and banks of the said stream or watercourse, and at a part thereof above the said mills, divers sluices, trenches, channels, aqueducts, and cuts, and kept and continued the same for a long time, &c., and thereby unlawfully and wrongfully diverted and turned divers large quantities of the water of the said stream, &c., out of and away from the said mills, and stopped, prevented, and hindered the water of the said stream or watercourse from running or flowing along its usual course to the said mills, and from supplying the same with the necessary water for the working thereof, as the same of right ought to have done and otherwise would have done ; and by reason thereof, the water of the said stream or watercourse, sufficient for the supplying of the said mills, could not run or flow to the same ; and the plaintiffs thereby, for want of such sufficient water, could not during that time use the said mills, or follow, use, or exercise their trade or business therein, in so large, extensive, and beneficial a manner as they might and otherwise would have done, &c.

The declaration contained two other counts, which it is not necessary to state.

The defendant pleaded (inter alia) first, not guilty ; fourthly, to the first count, that one John Jones, before and at the several times when &c., was lawfully possessed of divers, to wit, four closes, situate and being on the bank of, and next adjoining to, and extending to the middle of the said stream or watercourse, to wit, on the north side thereof, and at a part of the said stream or watercourse above the said mills and premises, and which said closes were and are other than the closes on the southern side of the said stream or watercourse in the first count mentioned, and part of which said several closes, whereof the said J. Jones was so possessed as aforesaid, to wit, up to the middle of the said stream or watercourse, hath, from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, been, and at the several times when, &c., was and still is covered with the water of the said stream or watercourse; which said stream or watercourse, from the time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, hath been used and accustomed to run and flow in its usual flow, stream, and current, over part of and unto and by the said last-mentioned closes, for the watering, fertilization, and general benefit and advantage thereof; that it is at certain intermittent periods and times during certain months of the year, to wit, January, February, and March, the said periods and times being periods and times when the waters of the said stream or watercourse are most abundant, and flow in great quantities and abundance, and are more than sufficient or necessary, and flow in greater quantity than can be used, for the due and proper working of the said mills and premises, right and proper, and fit and necessary and requisite to water and irrigate the first-mentioned closes with the water of the said stream or watercourse, for the more convenient enjoyment and occupation and substantial improvement and cultivation of the said closes, and for rendering the same fertile and productive and conducive to the public and general weal and advantage. Wherefore the defendant, at the said several times when, &c., the same being reasonable and proper times in that behalf respectively, and during the said months of January, February, and March, and the waters of the said stream or watercourse then being most abundant and then flowing in great quantity and abundance, and being more than sufficient or necessary, and flowing in a greater quantity than could be used for the due and proper working of the said mills and premises, as the servant of the said J. Jones, and by his command, diverted and turned divers small quantities of the water of the said stream or watercourse, the same being reasonable and fit and proper quantities in that behalf, and not more than was necessary and convenient for the purpose of irrigating and watering the first-mentioned closes from and out of the said stream or watercourse, and then caused the same to flow in, over, and upon the first-mentioned closes, and which quantities of water, save and except such small portions and quantities thereof as were necessarily absorbed and used by and in the passing over the said closes, in and by course of the irrigating and watering thereof, as aforesaid, then fell, passed, flowed, and returned into and unto the said stream or watercourse, at divers parts and places above the mills and premises, and before the said stream or watercourse reached and arrived at the same mills and premises, and for the purposes aforesaid, the defendant, at the said several times when, &c., as the servant of the said J. Jones, and by his command, cut, dug, made, and erected in, upon, and near to the sides and banks of the said stream or watercourse, at a part of the said stream or watercourse above the said mills and premises of the plaintiffs, a certain sluice, trench, channel, or aqueduct, and kept and continued the same, and caused the same to be kept and continued, in, upon, and near to the said sides and banks of the said stream or watercourse, and thereby diverted and turned the said small quantities of the water off the said stream or watercourse in manner as in this plea aforesaid, as she lawfully might for the cause aforesaid, quae sunt eadem, &c. — Averment, that the diversion and abstraction aforesaid was not nor is a continuous diversion, but only takes place at intermittent periods, and in manner in this plea aforesaid; and that the quantities of water so absorbed and used as aforesaid, and stopped, prevented, and hindered from running and flowing to the said mills and premises, were and are very small and inappreciable quantities, and not more or greater than were and are necessary for the purposes in this plea aforesaid, and that the same were and are not required, and had at no time theretofore been appropriated by the plaintiffs for the purpose of working the said mills and premises, or any other purposes; and that the diverting, turning away, and abstracting, and stopping, hindering, and preventing the same from flowing to the said mills and premises did not at any time cause any damage, hindrance, or impediment to the due, proper, and necessary working and using of the said mills and premises. — Verification.

The seventh and tenth pleas were similar to the fourth, being respectively pleaded to the second and third counts of the declaration.

The plaintiffs joined issue on the first plea, and to the fourth, seventh, and tenth replied de injuria. Issue thereon.

At the trial, before Talfourd, J., at the last Summer Assizes for Montgomeryshire, it appeared that the plaintiffs were occupiers of a water grist mill situate on the banks of the River Rhiew, a mountain stream, in the parish of Berriew, in that county. The defendant Mrs. Owen was the owner of land on both sides of that river above the mill; and this action was brought against her for diverting part of the water of the river, for the purpose of irrigating certain meadows on the northern bank, which were in the occupation of her tenant John Jones. The water was diverted by means of an iron trough or aqueduct placed near a waste weir, from whence the surplus or waste water was carried into the trough or aqueduct, and by it over the river into the main and floating gutters of the meadows, when required for irrigation; at other times such surplus water was discharged from the trough or aqueduct direct into the bed of the river by means of an iron flap or sluice in the middle side of the trough, so constructed as to be opened for the latter purpose at pleasure. A portion of the water was lost by absorption and evaporation in the process of irrigation; the working of the plaintiffs' mill, however, was not in the least impeded; and the quantity thus lost was differently calculated by scientific witnesses on both sides, a witness for the plaintiffs estimating it at four or five per cent, and a witness for the defendant at only one seventh per cent, even in summer. All the witnesses concurred, that there was no sensible diminution of the stream by reason of the diversion, that is to say, none cognizable by the senses, and that the amount of loss was ascertainable only by inference from scientific experiments on the absorption and evaporation of water poured out on the soil.

The learned judge, with reference to the first issue, left to the jury the question, whether there was any sensible diminution of the natural flow of the water by means of the diversion ; and with reference to the other issues above mentioned, he left it to them to say, in the terms of the pleas, whether the quantities of water absorbed and evaporated in the process of the defendant's irrigation were small and inappreciable quantities ; intimating, however, that he felt great difficulty in fixing a legal meaning on this latter term, but suggesting that it might mean "so inconsiderable as to be incapable of price or value." Both the questions left to the jury having been answered by them in favor of the defendant, the former in the negative and the latter in the affirmative, the learned judge directed that the verdict should be entered on the above issues for the defendant, reserving leave to the plaintiffs to move to enter it for them, with nominal damages.

Welsby, in last Michaelmas Term, obtained a rule nisi accordingly, and also to enter judgment for the plaintiffs, non obstante veredicto, on the fourth, seventh, and tenth issues.

Bramwell and E. Beavan showed cause at the sittings after Hilary Term. Welsby, Foulkes, and Wynn, in support of the rule.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

PARKE, B. (after stating the pleadings and facts). We are not prepared to say that the learned judge at Nisi Prius was correct in his interpretation of the word "inappreciable" when connected with the word "quantity," nor sure that he was not; for the word "inappreciable" or "unappreciable" is one of a new coinage, not to be found in Johnson's Dictionary or Richardson's. The word "appreciate" first appears in our dictionaries in the last edition of Johnson, by Todd, 1827, with the explanation "to estimate," "to value;" and assuming that to be the true meaning, which we suppose it is, the compound adjective signifies that the quantities were not capable of being estimated or valued, and in that sense the fourth plea was not proved. It is, however, a matter of little importance; for assuming that the word was wrongly explained, the only consequence would be, that a question would arise, whether the fourth issue and the others involving the same terms ought not to have been found for the plaintiffs, a question we need not decide; for if the issue on not guilty remains as it now is found for the defendant, as we think it ought to be, there should be no new trial, if the defendant consents, as she probably will, that the fourth and other corresponding issues should be found for the plaintiffs. This course was adopted in Stead v. Anderson, 4 C. B. 836.

The important question is that which arises on the plea of Not guilty, the jury having found that no sensible diminution of the natural flow of the stream to the plaintiff's mill was caused by the abstraction of the water. That the working of the mill was not in the least impeded was clear on the evidence. On that finding we think the verdict was properly ordered to be entered for the defendant.

It was very ably argued before us by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs had a right to the full flow of the water in its natural course and abundance, as an incident to their property in the land through which it flowed; and that any abstraction of the water, however inconsiderable, by another riparian proprietor, and though productive of no actual damage, would be actionable, because it was an injury to a right, and, if continued, would be the foundation of a claim of adverse right in that proprietor.

We by no means dispute the truth of this proposition, with respect to every description of right. Actual perceptible damage is not indispensable as the foundation of an action; it is sufficient to show the violation of a right, in which case the law will presume damage; injuria sine damno is actionable, as was laid down in the case of Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, by Lord Holt, and in many subsequent cases, which are all referred to, and the truth of the proposition powerfully enforced, in a very able judgment of the late Mr. Justice Story in Webb v. The Portland Manufacturing Company, 3 Sumn. Rep. 189. But in applying this admitted rule to the case of rights to running water, and the analogous cases of rights to air and light, it must be considered what the nature of those rights is, and what is a violation of them.

The law as to flowing water is now put on its right footing by a series of cases, beginning with that of Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & S. 190, followed by Mason v. Hill, 3 B. & Ad. 304; 5 Id. 1, and ending with that of Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748, and is fully settled in the American courts. See 3 Kent's Comm., Lect. 52, pp. 439-445.

The right to have the stream to flow in its natural state without diminution or alteration is an incident to the property in the land through which it passes; but flowing water is publici juris, not in the sense that it is a bonum vacans, to which the first occupant may acquire an exclusive right, but that it is public and common in this sense only, that all may reasonably use it who have a right of access to it, that none can have any property in the water itself, except in the particular portion which he may choose to abstract from the stream and take into his possession, and that during the time of his possession only; see 5 B. & Ad. 24. But each proprietor of the adjacent land has the right to the usufruct of the stream which flows through it.

This right to the benefit and advantage of the water flowing past his land, is not an absolute and exclusive right to the flow of all the water in its natural state; if it were, the argument of the learned counsel, that every abstraction of it would give a cause of action, would be irrefragable; but it is a right only to the flow of the water, and the enjoyment of it, subject to the similar rights of all the proprietors of the banks on each side to the reasonable enjoyment of the same gift of Providence.

It is only therefore for an unreasonable and unauthorized use of this common benefit that an action will lie; for such an use it will; even, as the case above cited from the American reports shows, though there may be no actual damage to the plaintiff. In the part of Kent's Commentaries to which we have referred, the law on this subject is most perspicuously stated, and it will be of advantage to cite it at length: "Every proprietor of lands on the banks of a river has naturally an equal right to the use of the water which flows in the stream adjacent to his lands, as it was wont to run (currere solebat), without diminution or alteration. No proprietor has a right to use the water to the prejudice of other proprietors, above or below him, unless he has a prior right to divert it, or a title to some exclusive enjoyment. He has no property in the water itself, but a simple usufruct while it passes along. Aqua currit et debet currere, is the language of the law. Though he may use the water while it runs over his land, he cannot unreasonably detain it, or give it another direction, and he must return it to its ordinary channel when it leaves his estate. Without the consent of the adjoining proprietors, he cannot divert or diminish the quantity of water which would otherwise descend to the proprietors below, nor throw the water back upon the proprietors above, without a grant, or an uninterrupted enjoyment of twenty years, which is evidence of it. This is the clear and settled general doctrine on the subject, and all the difficulty that arises consists in the application. The owner must so use and apply the water as to work no material injury or annoyance to his neighbor below him, who has an equal right to the subsequent use of the same water; nor can he, by dams or any obstruction, cause the water injuriously to overflow the grounds and springs of his neighbor above him. Streams of water are intended for the use and comfort of man; and it would be unreasonable, and contrary to the universal sense of mankind, to debar every riparian proprietor from the application of the water to domestic, agricultural, and manufacturing purposes, provided the use of it be made under the limitations which have been mentioned; and there will, no doubt, inevitably be, in the exercise of a perfect right to the use of the water, some evaporation and decrease of it, and some variations in the weight and velocity of the current. But de minimis non curat lex, and a right of action by the proprietor below would not necessarily flow from such consequences, but would depend upon the nature and extent of the complaint or injury, and the manner of using the water. All that the law requires of the party by or over whose land a stream passes, is, that he should use the water in a reasonable manner, and so as not to destroy, or render useless, or materially diminish or affect the application of the water by the proprietors above or below on the stream. He must not shut the gates of his dams and detain the water unreasonably, or let it off in unusual quantities, to the annoyance of his neighbor. Pothier lays down the rule very strictly, that the owner of the upper stream must not raise the water by dams, so as to make it fall with more abundance and rapidity than it would naturally do, and injure the proprietor below. But this rule must not be construed literally, for that would be to deny all valuable use of the water to the riparian proprietors. It must be subjected to the qualifications which have been mentioned, otherwise rivers and streams of water would become utterly useless, either for manufacturing or agricultural purposes. The just and equitable principle is given in the Roman law: Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat.

In America, as may be inferred from this extract, and as is stated in the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in Wood v. Waud, a very liberal use of the stream for the purposes of irrigation and for carrying on manufactures is permitted. So in France, where every one may use it "en bon père de famille, et pour son plus grand avantage :" Code Civil, art. 640, note a, by Pailliet.¹ He may make trenches to conduct the water to irrigate his land, if he returns it with no other loss than that which irrigation caused. In the above-cited case of Wood v. Waud, it was observed, that in England it is not clear that an user to that extent would be permitted; nor do we mean to lay down that it would in every case be deemed a lawful enjoyment of the water, if it was again returned into the river with no other diminution than that which was caused by the absorption and evaporation attendant on the irrigation of the lands of the adjoining proprietor. This must depend upon the circumstances of each case. On the one hand, it could not be permitted that the owner of a tract of many thousand acres of porous soil, abutting on one part of the stream, could be permitted to irrigate them continually by canals and drains, and so cause a serious diminution of the quantity of water, though there was no other loss to the natural stream than that arising from the necessary absorption and evaporation of the water employed for that purpose; on the other hand, one's common sense would be shocked by supposing that a riparian owner could not dip a watering-pot into the stream, in order to water his garden, or allow his family or his cattle to drink it. It is entirely a question of degree, and it is very difficult, indeed impossible, to define precisely the limits which separate the reasonable and permitted use of the stream from its wrongful application; but there is often no difficulty in deciding whether a particular case falls within the permitted limits or not; and in this we think, that as the irrigation took place, not continuously, but only at intermittent periods, when the river was full, and no damage was done thereby to the working of the mill, and the diminution of the water was not perceptible to the eye, it was such a reasonable use of the water as not to be prohibited by law. If so, it was no infringement of the plaintiffs' right at all; it was only the exercise of an equal right which the defendant had to the usufruct of the stream.

We are therefore of opinion that there has been no injury in fact or law in this case, and consequently that the verdict for the defendant ought not to be disturbed.

The same law will be found to be applicable to the corresponding rights to air and light. These also are bestowed by Providence for the common benefit of man; and so long as the reasonable use by one man of this common property does not do actual and perceptible damage to the right of another to the similar use of it, no action will lie. A man cannot occupy a dwelling and consume fuel in it for domestic purposes, without its in some degree impairing the natural purity of the air; he cannot erect a building, or plant a tree, near the house of another, without in some degree diminishing the quantity of light he enjoys; but such small interruptions give no right of action; for they are necessary incidents to the common enjoyment by all.

Rule discharged, the defendant consenting that the verdict on the fourth, seventh, and tenth issues be entered for the plaintiffs.¹

[Reported 11 Ex. 602.]

ACTION for diverting water from a mill stream belonging to the plaintiff. A verdict was entered for the plaintiff by consent, subject to a special case to be settled by an arbitrator. The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.²

"By the general law applicable to running streams, every riparian proprietor has a right to what may be called the ordinary use of the water flowing past his land; for instance, to the reasonable use of the water for his domestic purposes and for his cattle, and this without regard to the effect which such use may have, in case of a deficiency, upon proprietors lower down the stream. But, further, he has a right to the use of it for any purpose, or what may be deemed the extraordinary use of it, provided that he does not thereby interfere with the rights of other proprietors, either above or below him. Subject to this condition, he may dam up the stream for the purpose of a mill, or divert the water for the purpose of irrigation. But he has no right to interrupt the regular flow of the stream, if he thereby interferes with the lawful use of the water by other proprietors, and inflicts upon them a sensible injury." Per LORD KINGSDOWN, in Miner v. Gilmour, Moore, P. C. 131, 156.

In Sandwich v. Gt. N. R. Co., 10 Ch. D. 707, BACON, V. C., held that a railroad company whose track crossed a stream, and which was a riparian proprietor, could take water from the stream for its locomotive engines.

Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

ALDERSON, B. In this case we have been relieved from the consideration of the several pleas justifying the abstraction of the water under the provisions of the Huddersfield Waterworks Acts, by the admission very properly made by Mr. Cowling on this argument, that he could not support them; and the questions are now reduced to this one alone, whether the defendant Atkinson has improperly diverted, by the acts which he has undoubtedly done, four sources of water which have, as the plaintiff contends, supplied the Longwood Brook on which his mill is situated. There are three of these included in the first count of the declaration, namely, a pond of six and a half acres, a swamp of about sixteen perches, and a well. The fourth is a well, included in the second count. There is no doubt that in the course of the drainage these sources of water have been diverted, and now fall into the drain made by the defendant. The arbitrator describes them thus: "And, first, as to the six and a half acre pond," he says, "from the sides of the hill called Pighill Wood and Pendle Hill the natural flow of water is northward till it reaches Longwood Brook, and all water passing over the lands there naturally runs down towards and into Longwood Brook. Above Pighill Wood a shallow basin is formed by the land slips which have from time to time occurred, and the water collected in it, if it exceeds the depth of about three feet above the lowest point of the basin, escapes northward and runs down over the surface of the hill towards Longwood Brook. The rest sinks into the ground or remains as a pond in the hollow thus naturally created by the form of the land." Now, we think that this water, both that which overflows and that which sinks in, belongs absolutely to the defendant, on whose land it arises, and is not affected by any right of the plaintiff. The right to the natural flow of the water in Longwood Brook undoubtedly belongs to the plaintiff; but we think that this right cannot extend further than a right to the flow in the brook itself, and to the water flowing in some defined natural channel, either subterranean or on the surface, communicating directly with the brook itself. No doubt, all the water falling from heaven and shed upon the surface of a hill, at the foot of which a brook runs, must, by the natural force of gravity, find its way to the bottom, and so into the brook; but this does not prevent the owner of the land on which this water falls from dealing with it as he may please and appropriating it. He cannot, it is true, do so if the water has arrived at and is flowing in some natural channel already formed. But he has a perfect right to appropriate it before it arrives at such a channel. In this case a basin is formed in his land, which belongs to him, and the water from the heavens lodges there. There is here no watercourse at all. If this water exceeds a certain depth it escapes at the lowest point, and squanders itself (so to speak) over the adjoining surface.

The owner of the soil has clearly a right to drain this shallow pond and to get rid of the inconvenience at his own pleasure. We have no doubt, therefore, that, as to this source of feeding the Longwood Brook, the plaintiff has no title. The same may be said of the swamp of sixteen perches, which is merely like a sponge fixed (so to speak) on the side of a hill, and full of water. If this overflows it creates a sort of marshy margin adjoining; and there is apparently no course of water, either into or out of it, on the surface of the land. As to the subterranean courses communicating with this swamp, which must no doubt exist, it is sufficient to say, that they are not traceable, so as to show that the water passing along them ever reaches Longwood Brook. This falls, therefore, into the same category, or rather is a stronger instance of the rule before mentioned. The well at this point is also in simili casu. It is not found in the case that it has any subterraneous communication with Longwood Brook. Indeed, if it had any such communication (inasmuch as the brook seems far below the bottom of this shallow well), the communication would probably draw off all the water in it. It is sufficient, however, to say, that it is not found so to communicate. But no doubt, when this well overflows, the overflow pours itself over and down the declivity towards the brook. But this gives no right to the water, as we have already shown in the case of the six and a half acre pond. These are the three grounds of the plaintiff's complaint in the first count of his declaration. They all seem to us to fail.

We come now to the second count. The stream here said to be diverted is one in which, on the side of a hill, a stream wells out from the ground at a depth of about two feet, and is received into a basin of about three feet square, and used as a watering place for cattle. This stream in dry seasons was somewhat scanty, so as to compel the cattle at those periods to go down on their knees to reach it. At other times it overflowed its basin, and then it ran down part of the way in an open and, as we presume, artificial ditch, for it is described as a ditch beside a hedge. The water lower in its course flows on in a small channel worked by the water and over swampy places where the cattle had trodden in the soil. Still lower down, after passing through one or two fields, it arrives in what is described as a natural valley, and after this it would have probably communicated with Longwood Brook, but for its diversion into the Mill Owners' Compensation Reservoir, which is in fact the same thing.

There is here also, we think, nothing found to take the water from this well out of the same class as the three former cases. We must consider the stream in its beginning, not after it has arrived in the natural valley communicating with the reservoir. If the water, after having arrived there, had been then diverted, the case would be different. The water falling from heaven on the side of a hill, we have before said, may be appropriated, though not after it has once arrived at a defined natural watercourse; and here the question is, whether this water in its first origin, and before it has arrived at any definite natural watercourse conveying it onwards towards Longwood Brook, has not been intercepted by the defendant's drain, and so appropriated by him; and we think it has. For what are the facts? The water in dispute is only the overflow of a well, and the well is now prevented from overflowing. But when before it did overflow it ran into a ditch (the lowest adjoining ground) made artificially, and for a different purpose, running beside a hedge. This was no natural defined watercourse. After this, it squandered itself over a swamp made by the feet of cattle treading about, and it is not till long after this, that what still remained of it found its way into what may there perhaps be correctly called a definite natural watercourse, receiving this and probably other water from other sources also. This part of the case, we think, is wholly undistinguishable from, and is governed by the decision of this court in, the late case of Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Ex. 369.

This complaint, therefore, fails also. The result is (without going into any question as to this being done by the defendant Atkinson in the rightful exercise of his power of draining his own lands, which probably the pleadings do not raise), that the plaintiff has failed to establish any right to the natural flow of these four streams of water, or any of them, and that on this part of the case our judgment must be for the defendants.

Judgment for the defendants.

SAMPSON v. HODDINOTT.

COMMON PLEAS. 1857.

[Reported 1 C. B. N. S. 590.]

CRESSWELL, J.,¹ delivered the judgment of the court.

In this case, several causes of complaint were brought forward on behalf of the plaintiff,— first, in respect of the diversion of the River Yeo; secondly, in respect of the diversion of a stream called the Back Water; thirdly, in respect of the obstruction and diversion of a stream called the Silver Lake Spring.

In the course of the argument, the court decided all the points that were raised in respect of the two latter causes of complaint, in favor of the defendant; but they took time to consider the question arising on the first.

The result of the facts as to this part of the case appears to us to be as follows, viz., that the plaintiff had immemorially enjoyed the benefit of irrigating certain of his meadows with the water of the River Yeo, subject, however, to the right of the miller at West Mill to detain the water for the use of his mill. Although the natural flow of the river was prevented by the exercise of this right, yet the water was allowed to come down at such times that the plaintiff was enabled to irrigate his meadows effectually. But, of late, the defendant, for the purpose of irrigating his own adjacent land, had from time to time diverted the water after it had passed the mill, and before it reached the plaintiff's meadows; and, although the facts stated in the special case do not, in our opinion, lead to any certain conclusion, that, by the mere irrigation on the part of the defendant, the quantity of water which ultimately reached the plaintiff's meadows was sensibly diminished, yet the effect was, that the water was detained, by the process of irrigation, and did not arrive till so late in the day that the plaintiff was deprived of the power to use it fully.

The question is, whether such a diversion and detaining of the water by the defendant is actionable.

It was contended, on his part, that it was not, because he had a right by law, as a riparian proprietor, to apply the water of the stream to irrigate his adjacent land, provided he did so (as it was admitted he did) in a careful and proper manner.

On the part of the plaintiff, it was denied, generally, that a riparian proprietor has any such right: and it was also contended, that, at all events, in this case the plaintiff had gained a title to the uninterrupted flow of the stream by immemorial enjoyment.

As to the latter proposition, it appears to us that all persons having lands on the margin of a flowing stream have, by nature, certain rights to use the water of that stream, whether they exercise those rights or not; and that they may begin to exercise them whenever they will. By usage, they may acquire a right to use the water in a manner not justified by their natural rights: but such acquired right has no operation against the natural rights of a landowner higher up the stream, unless the user by which it was acquired affects the use that he himself has made of the stream, or his power to use it, so as to raise the presumption of a grant, and so render the tenement above a servient tenement. If the user of the stream by the plaintiff for irrigation was merely an exercise of his natural right, such user, however long continued, would not render the defendant's tenement a servient tenement, or in any way affect the natural rights of the defendant to use the water. If the user by the plaintiff was larger than his natural rights would justify, still there is no evidence of its affecting the defendant's tenement, or the natural use of the water by the defendant, so as to render it a servient tenement.

But, if the user by the defendant has been beyond his natural right, it matters not how much the plaintiff has used the water, or whether he has used it at all. In either case, his right has been equally invaded, and the action is maintainable.¹

"The case of a stream affords a very clear illustration of the difference between injury and damage; for the pollution of a clear stream is to a riparian proprietor below

The question between the parties is thus reduced to this single point : Has the defendant used the water as any riparian proprietor may use it, or has he gone beyond that?

The general principle of law which, in our opinion, may be deduced from the decision of Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, and the authorities cited by Parke, B., in delivering judgment in that case, is, that every proprietor of lands on the banks of a natural stream has a right to use the water, provided he so uses it as not to work any material injury to the rights of other proprietors above or below on the stream.

In the present case, it appears to us, on the evidence, that the detention by the defendant, under the circumstances, of the water of the River Yeo for the purposes of irrigation, was a use of it which, in its character, was necessarily injurious to the natural rights of the plaintiff as the proprietor of land lower down the stream. The effect was obviously the same as if the defendant had placed a bar or weir across the river, and by that means had wholly prevented its natural course for a certain number of hours. And it appears to us that there is neither authority nor principle for contending that such an act can be justified on the ground that it was done for the purpose of improving the adjacent land of the defendant, whether by irrigation or otherwise.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that our judgment must be for the plaintiff as to such part of his complaint as relates to the River Yeo, and, as to the rest of the alleged causes of action, for the defendant.

Judgment accordingly.

M. Smith, Q. C. (with whom were Kinglake, Serjt., and Barstow), for the plaintiff.

CHASEMORE v. RICHARDS.

HOUSE OF LORDS. 1859.

[Reported 7 H. L. C. 349.]

THIS was a proceeding in error on a judgment in the Court of Exchequer Chamber. The plaintiff was a millowner near Croydon; the defendant, the clerk of the Local Board of Health of that town, in which character he was sued.

The declaration stated that the plaintiff was possessed of an ancient mill, with the appurtenances, and was entitled to the flow of a certain stream, called the Wandle, for the purpose of working, using, and both injury and damage, whilst the pollution of a stream already made foul and useless by other pollutions is an injury without damage, which would, however, at once become both injury and damage on the cessation of the other pollutions." Per FRY, J., in Pennington v. Brinsop Hall Coal Co., 5 Ch. D. 769, 772. See also Crossley v. Lightowler, L. R. 2 Ch. 478.

more conveniently enjoying the said mill, and that the said board wrongfully abstracted and prevented the flow of and diverted the water of the said stream away from the said mill, and wrongfully abstracted and prevented and intercepted the flow of and diverted water which ought to have flowed into the said stream and mill, and continued to abstract, prevent, divert, and intercept the same respectively, by digging and sinking a well near to the said stream, and taking the water of such well.

The defendant pleaded, Not guilty, by Statute. The Statute stated in the margin was 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, § 139, a public Act. Upon this plea issue was joined.

The cause came on for trial at the Kingston Assizes in March, 1854, before Mr. Baron Alderson, when a verdict was entered for the plaintiff, subject to the award of Mr. Creasy, with power to him to state a special case for the opinion of the court. A case was stated, and the following are the material facts set forth in it:—

“The plaintiff is, and at the time of the acts complained of was, possessed of and was the occupier of an ancient mill on the River Wandle, in the county of Surrey, called Waddon Mill, situate about one mile from the town of Croydon in the said county.

“The plaintiff, and the preceding possessors and occupiers of the said mill, had, for upwards of sixty years next before the acts of the local board hereinafter mentioned, and for upwards of sixty years next before the bringing of the action, used and enjoyed as of right, and been entitled to use and enjoy the flow of the said river for the purpose of working and using the said mill.

“The River Wandle commences, and always has commenced, its course near the part of the town of Croydon which is nearest to the said mill, and the said river flows and always has flowed thence to and by the plaintiff’s mill.

“The River Wandle is, and always has been, fed and supplied above the plaintiff’s mill by (among other sources of supply) the water produced by the rainfall on a district of many thousand acres in extent, comprising the town of Croydon and its vicinity.

“Large quantities of this water sink into the upper ground to various depths, and then flow and percolate through the strata towards and to the River Wandle (if not interfered with), in some instances rising to the surface as springs, and then flowing as little surface streams into the river; in other instances finding their whole way underground into the river. The precise lines and courses in which the underground runlets and particles of water so find their way underground towards and to the river vary continually and infinitely with the shiftings and variations in the soil which occur from natural causes, but the general flow of large quantities of water to the River Wandle is as above described; and if they are not interfered with or intercepted, they form considerable sources of supply to the river, as well above as below the plaintiff’s mill.

" It is impossible to know beforehand the precise or complete effect which the sinking a new well, and pumping from it in any part of the district above described, may have upon springs or streams in the vicinity ; the effect may be instantly sensible and considerable, or for a long time no sensible effect may appear ; but the natural effect of abstracting a large quantity of water at any spot of the district above described is to diminish the quantity at every other spot throughout the district, though the amount of diminution at particular spots may be infinitesimally small ; and the natural effect to be reasonably expected from sinking a new well in such a district, and from continually or almost continually pumping thence large quantities of water for a long time, must be the sensible diminution of the water supply of springs and streams in the vicinity.

" The above description is to be taken to apply to the district in question, not merely at the present time, but for sixty years and upwards next before the works and acts of the Local Board of Health hereinafter mentioned, and for sixty years and upwards before the bringing of the action.

" The Local Board of Health for the town of Croydon was duly constituted under the ' Public Health Act,' and under the ' Public Health Supplemental Act, 1849.'

" In the year of our Lord 1851, the said local board, for the purpose of supplying the town of Croydon with water, and for other sanitary purposes under the said Statutes, made and sank a large well to the depth of seventy-four feet in their own ground, in a piece of land of and belonging to them in the town of Croydon, and within the district which has been above described. The distance of the said well from the commencement of the River Wandle is about a quarter of a mile. They also erected pumps and steam-engines on their said ground, and began to pump water from the well into a reservoir and pipes, for the supply of the town at the end of the said year, and, with slight periods of intermission, have continued to do so to the present time.

" The amount of water so pumped and taken by them through and from the said well during the period of six calendar months from the 16th of August, in the year of our Lord 1853, to the 16th day of February in the year of our Lord 1854, was between 500,000 and 600,000 gallons daily. Part of the said quantity of water so then pumped and taken by them through and from the said well, was water then flowing and finding its way underground through the strata in the manner above described, towards the River Wandle, and which, if not intercepted by the operation of the said well and pumping, would have flowed and found its way into the River Wandle above the plaintiff's mill ; but which by the operation of the said well and pumping, was drawn away into the said well, and thence pumped up and taken by the said local board : and I find, as a fact, that the said local board did during the six months aforesaid, by means of the said well and pumping, abstract, divert, and intercept underground water, but underground water only, that otherwise would have flowed and found its way into the River Wandle, and would then and there, as part of the water and stream of the said river, have flowed and found its way to the said mill of the plaintiff, and have been applicable and serviceable to and for the working thereof, and that the same was sufficient in quantity to have been of sensible value in and towards the working of the said mill.

"And I find that the said local board did not, during any part of the time in question, intercept, divert, or abstract, or draw into their well, any water which had already joined the said River Wandle and become integral part of the same, or which had already joined and become integral part of any surface stream running into the said river.

"I further find that the said local board, throughout all their acts and works hereinbefore described, were actuated by no malice against the plaintiff or any one else, and that they did not intend in any way to diminish the quantity of water in the River Wandle, or to injure any person interested in the use of the said river; but the said board at the time of their said acts and works, and throughout the said period of six months particularly in question in this cause, had reasonable means of knowing the probable and natural effects of their said acts and works.

"In considering this case, the court is to have power to draw all inferences of fact which a jury might draw.

"The question for the opinion and judgment of the court is whether, under these circumstances, the said Local Board of Health is legally liable in this action to the plaintiff for the abstraction of water as above described."

On the 14th May, 1856, the Court of Exchequer, acting upon the authority of Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, 11 Exch. 602, and without hearing any argument, gave judgment for the defendant.

On the 12th May, 1857, the Court of Exchequer Chamber affirmed that judgment, Mr. Justice Coleridge differing from the other judges. 2 H. & N. 168. On this judgment error was suggested.

The judges were summoned, and Mr. Justice Wightman, Mr. Justice Williams, Mr. Baron Martin, Mr. Justice Crompton, Mr. Baron Bramwell, and Mr. Baron Watson, attended.

Mr. Bovill and Mr. Needham (Mr. Raymond was with them), for the plaintiff in error.

The Attorney-General (Sir F. Kelly) and Mr. G. Miller, for the defendant in error.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (Lord Chelmsford) proposed for the opinion of the judges the following question: "Whether under the circumstances stated in the printed case, the Croydon Local Board of Health is legally liable to the action of the appellant for the abstraction of the water in the manner described?"

Mr. Justice Wightman delivered the unanimous opinion of the judges who had been present at the argument. They answered the question in the negative.¹

LORD CHELMSFORD. My Lords, the question in this case is, whether the plaintiff in error is entitled to claim against the defendant the right to have the benefit of the rain water which falls upon a district of many thousand acres in extent, and percolates through the strata to the River Wandle, increasing the supply of water in the river, and being of sensible value in and towards the working of an ancient mill belonging to the plaintiff. The acts of the defendant by which this underground water was interrupted and prevented from finding its way into the river, were done upon his own land.

It was conceded by the plaintiff in argument, that a landowner had a limited and qualified right to appropriate water, the course of which is invisible and undefined, exactly to the same extent and for the same purposes as he would be entitled to use water flowing in a defined and visible channel. This, it was contended, must be confined to a reasonable use of the water for domestic and agricultural purposes, and perhaps (it was said) according to the opinion of Chancellor Kent, for the purposes of manufacture also. It must further be admitted (and appeared to be so in argument), that in addition to these direct uses to which the water may be diverted, if, in the regular course of mining operations the percolation of underground water is arrested in its progress, and prevented reaching a point where it would have increased a supply which had previously been usefully employed by an adjoining landowner, he can maintain no action for the loss of the water thus cut off from him. A distinction was suggested between such a use as the one last mentioned, where the interception of the water was merely the consequence of operations upon a party's own land, and the present, where the very end and object of the act done was to collect and appropriate the water. And upon the state of things existing in this case, a further distinction was insisted upon between a party sinking a well in his own land for domestic, or agricultural, or manufacturing purposes, and a public board or a water company doing the same thing for sanitary purposes, or for supplying the inhabitants of the neighborhood with water.

Before, however, the plaintiff can question the act of the defendant, or discuss with him the reasonableness of the claim to appropriate this underground water for these purposes (whatever they may be), he must first establish his own right to have it pass freely to his mill, subject only to the qualified and restricted use of it, to which each owner may be entitled through whose land it may make its way. It seems to me that both principle and authority are opposed to such a right.

The law as to water flowing in a certain and definite channel, has been conclusively settled by a series of decisions, in which the whole subject has been very fully and satisfactorily considered, and the relative rights and duties of riparian proprietors have been carefully adjusted and established. The principle of these decisions seems to me to be applicable to all water flowing in a certain and defined course, whether in an open visible stream or in a known subterranean channel; and I agree with the observation of Lord Chief Baron Pollock, in Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 7 Exch. 300, 301, "that if the course of a subterranean stream were well known, as is the case with many which sink underground, pursue for a short space a subterraneous course, and then emerge again, it never could be contended that the owner of the soil under which the stream flowed could not maintain an action for the diversion of it, if it took place under such circumstances as would have enabled him to recover had the stream been wholly above ground." But it appears to me that the principles which apply to flowing water in streams or rivers, the right to the flow of which in its natural state is incident to the property through which it passes, are wholly inapplicable to water percolating through underground strata which has no certain course, no defined limits, but which oozes through the soil in every direction in which the rain penetrates. There is no difficulty in determining the rights of the different proprietors to the usufruct of the water in a running stream. Whether it has been increased by floods or diminished by drought, it flows on in the same ascertained course, and the use which every owner may claim is only of the water which has entered into and become a part of the stream. But the right to percolating underground water is necessarily of a very uncertain description. When does this right commence? Before or after the rain has found its way to the ground? If the owner of land through which the water filters cannot intercept it in its progress, can he prevent its descending to the earth at all, by catching it in tanks or cisterns? And how far will the right to this water supply extend?

In this case, the water which ultimately finds its way to the River Wandle is strained through the soil of several thousand acres. Are the most distant landowners, as well as the adjacent ones, to be bound, at their peril, to take care to use their lands so as not to interrupt the oozing of the water through the soil to a greater extent than shall be necessary for their own actual wants? For, with Mr. Justice Coleridge, I do not see here "how the ignorance" which the landowner has of the course of the springs below the surface, of the changes they undergo, and of the date of their commencement, "is material in respect of a right which does not grow out of the assent or acquiescence of the landholder, as in the case of a servitude, but out of the nature of the thing itself." 2 H. & N. 191.

This distinction between water flowing in a definite channel, and water whether above or under ground not flowing in a stream at all, but either draining off the surface of the land, or oozing through the underground soil in varying quantities and in uncertain directions, depending upon the variations of the atmosphere, appears to be well settled by the cases cited in argument. In Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Exch. 369, 382, it was held that, in the case of common surface water, rising out of springy or boggy ground, and flowing in no definite channel, the landowner was entitled to get rid of it in any way he pleased, although it contributed to the supply of the plaintiff's mill. And in Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, 11 Exch. 602, it was decided that a land-owner has a right to appropriate surface water which flows over his land in no definite channel, although the water is thereby prevented from reaching a brook, the stream of which had for more than fifty years worked the plaintiff's mill. Baron Alderson, in delivering the judgment of the court in that case says (11 Exch. 615) : "No doubt all the water falling from heaven and shed upon the surface of a hill, at the foot of which a brook runs, must, by the natural force of gravity, find its way to the bottom, and so into the brook ; but this does not prevent the owner of the land on which this water falls from dealing with it as he may please, and appropriating it. He cannot, it is true, do so if the water has arrived at and is flowing in some natural channel already formed. But he has a perfect right to appropriate it before it arrives at such channel."

These cases apply to the right to surface water not flowing in any defined natural watercourse. But, of course, the principles they establish are equally, if not more strongly, applicable to subterranean water of the same casual, undefined, and varying description. This appears clearly to have been the opinion of Lord Chief Justice Tindal and the Court of Exchequer Chamber, in the case of Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324, 348 ; for, although the court abstained from intimating any opinion as to what might have been the rule of law if there had been an uninterrupted user for twenty years of the well of the plaintiff, which had been laid dry by the mining operations of the defendant, yet the Chief Justice having prefaced his judgment by stating, that "the question argued had been in substance this : whether the right to the enjoyment of an underground spring, or of a well supplied by such underground spring, is governed by the same rule of law as that which applies to and regulates a watercourse flowing on the surface," he concludes with these words (12 M. & W. 353) : "We think that the present case is not to be governed by the law which applies to rivers and flowing streams, but that it rather falls within that principle which gives to the owner of the soil all that lies beneath his surface ; that the land immediately below is his property, whether it is solid rock, or porous ground, or venous earth, or part soil, part water ; that the person who owns the surface may dig therein, and apply all that is there found to his own purposes at his free will and pleasure ; and that if, in the exercise of such right, he intercepts or drains off the water collected from underground springs in his neighbor's well, this inconvenience to his neighbor falls within the description of dumnum absque injuria, which cannot become the ground of an action."

The Court of Exchequer, in the present case, gave judgment for the defendants without argument, on the authority of the decision in Broadbent v. Ramsbotham. The Court of Exchequer Chamber affirmed that judgment, there having been only one dissentient opinion, which, however, pronounced as it was by a most learned and able judge (Mr.

Justice Coleridge), is certainly entitled to the highest respect. The judges, of whose assistance your Lordships have had the advantage, have been unanimous in their agreement with the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber.

Against this concurrence of authority, what is there to be opposed in favor of the plaintiff, but the Nisi Prius case of Balston v. Bensted, 1 Camp. 463, and the case of Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 7 Exch. 282? With respect to Balston v. Bensted, it does not appear that the question of the right to water percolating through the strata, as contradistinguished from water flowing in a visible stream, was ever presented to Lord Ellenborough's mind, as it is stated, that the defence was intended to be set up, but that he observed, early in the trial, that there could be no doubt but that twenty years' exclusive enjoyment of water in any particular manner affords a conclusive presumption of right in the party so enjoying it. Whether, by the words, "in any particular manner," his Lordship meant to point to the right claimed in that case, or intended to state a proposition applicable to all water of which there had been a twenty years' enjoyment, from whatever source it might be derived, it is impossible to gather from the report; but the question was never argued; and as, upon proof that the decrease of the water in the plaintiff's bath had been occasioned by the operations in the defendant's quarry, the case was at once referred, it can hardly be urged as any authority at all upon a point of such importance, and which requires so much consideration as that which it is supposed to have decided.

With respect to the case of Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, upon which the plaintiff also relied, after the observations made upon it by Mr. Justice Cresswell in the Exchequer Chamber, and by Mr. Justice Wightman in delivering the opinion of the judges to this House, it is unnecessary for me to say more than that I entirely agree with them, and think that it can hardly be regarded as a satisfactory decision upon the point now under consideration. It appears to me, that reason and principle, as well as authority, are opposed to the claim of the plaintiff to maintain an action for the interception of the underground water which would otherwise have ultimately found its way to the River Wandle, and that, therefore, the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber ought to be affirmed.

LORD WENSLEYDALE. My Lords, this case is of the greatest importance, and requires the most full and attentive consideration. No question that has occurred in my time has been so worthy of the most careful examination; and though we have had a very able argument at the bar from the learned counsel, and we also have been favored with the able and unanimous opinion of six of the judges, pronounced by Mr. Justice Wightman, I must own, speaking for myself, I should still desire further discussion, as I have felt very great difficulty in coming to a conclusion satisfactory to my mind; so many difficulties present themselves on both sides.

As, however, my noble and learned friends who heard the case argued at the bar have not had the same difficulty in deciding that I have, and acquiesce in the propriety of the case being now disposed of, I concur, though not without very serious doubts as to the propriety of the conclusion at which they have arrived.

Besides the opinion of the learned judges, delivered by Mr. Justice Wightman, Baron Bramwell has had the goodness to communicate to me one which he wrote, at the time when I suppose a difference of opinion was expected, and I am much indebted to him, as the subject is discussed by him with much ability.

Your Lordships have, for the first time, to decide the question as to the rights to underground water. There are two conflicting authorities: the case under appeal, and that of Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 7 Exch. 282, and your Lordships have to decide between them. It is supposed in the judgment in this case, delivered in the Exchequer Chamber by Mr. Justice Cresswell, that the Court of Exchequer had, in two subsequent cases, Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Exch. 369, and Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, 11 Exch. 602, 25 Law J., N. S., Ex. 115, decided differently. Those cases are said to be inconsistent with the decision in Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, and virtually to overrule it. This is certainly a mistake, for having been a party to the judgments in each of those cases, I am sure I at least had no notion of impugning the doctrine which I had joined in laying down before, in the case of Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, which was not decided without great consideration. In Broadbent v. Ramsbotham, it did not appear that any water which percolated the strata would have reached the brook; and I well recollect that, on the argument, I so considered, and therefore that the plaintiff could not recover on the ground on which the case of Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company was decided. The argument of Mr. Cowling, as reported in the 25 Law Journal, 122, Exchequer, which is fuller than that in the 11 Exchequer, was directed to this point. I may add, that the report is more correct than that in the 11 Exchequer, which attributes to me too limited a view of the decision in Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company.

The subject of right to streams of water flowing on the surface has been of late years fully discussed, and by a series of carefully considered judgments placed upon a clear and satisfactory footing. It has been now settled that the right to the enjoyment of a natural stream of water on the surface, ex jure nature, belongs to the proprietor of the adjoining lands, as a natural incident to the right to the soil itself, and that he is entitled to the benefit of it, as he is to all the other natural advantages belonging to the land of which he is the owner. He has the right to have it come to him in its natural state, in flow, quantity, and quality, and to go from him without obstruction; upon the same principle that he is entitled to the support of his neighbor's soil for his own in its natural state. His right in no way depends upon prescription, or the presumed grant of his neighbor.

The elaborate judgment of Lord Denman in the case of Mason v. Hill, 5 B. & Ad. 1, in 1833, reviewed most prior judgments and authorities of importance up to that date, and fully established that proposition. But former authorities, and of a very early date, when carefully considered, really left no room for doubt on this subject.

In the case of Shury v. Pigott, decided in 1625, 3 Bulstr. 339, Poph. 166, Palm. 444, Whitlock, Justice, laid it down that "a water-course differs from a way or common; that it doth not begin by prescription nor yet by assent, but the same doth begin ex jure naturæ, having taken this course naturally, and cannot be averted," and he observed that the course of a spring is a natural course and current, and to stop this may be a nuisance to the commonwealth, and a private wrong. And in Brown v. Best, 1 Wils. 174, Lord Chief Justice Lee is reported to have said that a watercourse is jure naturæ, and therefore a declaration stating merely the possession of the place through which the water used to run is good. And Denison, Justice, said that in natural watercourses that was the most proper mode of declaring.

This decision in the case of Mason v. Hill has been followed by many others laying down the same proposition, of which Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748, was one. Mason v. Hill had been preceded by the case of Wright v. Howard, before Vice-Chancellor Sir John Leach, 1 Sim. & S. 190. And it was followed by Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, and by Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 7 Exch. 282.

This position is also established in the American courts, Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 400, and sanctioned by the best writers of the highest authority, Kent's Commentaries (3 Kent, Com. 439-455). And it is laid down as the first proposition in the very able treatise on Watercourses by Mr. Angell, an American authority, pages 1, 21, 22. And it has been held in America that the law implied damage from the violation of the right: vide Angell on Watercourses, p. 98; Pastorius v. Fisher, 1 Rawle, 27, — a matter which has been sometimes doubted, though probably without sufficient reason.

We may consider, therefore, that this proposition is indisputable, that the right of the proprietor to the enjoyment of a watercourse on the surface is a natural right, and not acquired by occupation of the stream itself, or presumed grant. And the expressions used by Mr. Justice Bayley in Williams v. Morland, 2 B. & C. 910, and by Lord Chief Justice Tindal in Liggins v. Inge, 7 Bing. 682, that water flowing in a stream is publici juris, and the property of the first occupier, are founded on a mistake between the property in the water itself and the right to have its continual flow.

The observations, also, of Lord Chief Justice Tindal in the case of Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324, and of Mr. Justice Maule in Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 515, as to the origin of the right to the continual flow of a superficial stream, being the presumed acquiescence of the proprietors above and below, and which is the foundation of the distinction made by the Lord Chief Justice between those streams and subterranean watercourses, cannot be supported.

Now the right to a natural stream flowing in a definite channel is not confined to streams on the surface, but the right to an underground stream flowing in a known and definite channel is equally a right ex natura, and an incident to the land itself, as a beneficial adjunct to it, as was determined in the case of Wood v. Waud, 3 Exch. 748.

If the River Wandle in this case had been supplied by natural streams flowing into the river above ground, or in known definite channels below ground, the cutting off those streams to which the person entitled to the use of the river was entitled ex natura as feeders of the river, would be an injury to him, and give a right of action. And if this be true with regard to underground streams finding their way into the river, then comes the difficulty how to distinguish the smaller rivulets, and the drops of water which flow and percolate into and supply the river. They are all equally the gifts of nature for the benefit of the proprietors of the soil through and into which they flow. They are all flowing water, the property in which is not vested in the owner of the soil, any more than the property in the water of a river which flows through it on the surface.

In Acton v. Blundell it is said by Lord Chief Justice Tindal, that the case "rather falls within that principle which gives to the owner of the soil all that lies beneath his surface; that the land immediately below is his property, whether it be solid rock, or porous ground, or venous earth, or part soil, part water; that the person who owns the surface may dig therein, and apply all that he finds to his own purposes, at his free will and pleasure." If this applies to water underground in a natural course of transit (and it must do so to be applicable at all), and not to mere stagnant water, I agree with Mr. Justice Coleridge in his remark, that the reason why it is, as such, more the subject of property than the water flowing above ground, is not explained, 2 H. & N. 192. Surely the use of the flowing water in each case, and not the property in it, belongs to the proprietor of the surface.

As to that part of Mr. Justice Coleridge's opinion in which he relies on the possession of the mill for thirty or sixty years, 2 H. & N. 191, 193, I think he is wrong. I do not think that the principle on which prescription rests can be applied; it has not been with the permission of the proprietor of the land that the streams have flowed into the river for twenty years or upwards: "qui non prohibit quod prohibere potest, assentire videtur." But how here could he prevent it? He could not bring an action against the adjoining proprietor; he could not be bound to dig a deep trench in his own land to cut off the supplies of water, in order to indicate his dissent. It is going very far to say that a man must be at the expense of putting up a screen to window lights to prevent a title being gained by twenty years' enjoyment of light passing through a window. But this case would go very far beyond that. I think that the enjoyment of the right to these natural streams cannot be supported by any length of user if it does not belong of natural right to the plaintiff. For the same reason I dispute the correctness of Lord Ellenborough's opinion in the case of the spring in Balston v. Bensted, 1 Camp. 463, where there had been twenty years' enjoyment of it in a particular mode. The true foundation of the right is, that it is incident to the land ex jure naturæ.

What, then, is the distinction between superficial streams and subterranean water? With respect to underground waters percolating the strata, two considerations arise which make a material difference between them and the right to superficial streams. In the first place, these subterraneous waters cannot be actually enjoyed (and all things are given to be enjoyed) without artificial means. The water must be reduced into possession before it can be used, and some mode of reducing into possession must be permitted by law. If there be no such right, underground water is comparatively useless. A man may therefore dig for his own supply, or make a well for his own use and that of his family, and, in so doing, he may deprive his neighbor's land of moisture, and even tap a copious spring, and prevent it from flowing to his neighbor's close. It can rarely happen that in excavating, in order to obtain the use of the water, some injury will not be caused to the subterraneous supplies of a neighbor, especially as the precise course and direction of such water can seldom be known accurately beforehand.

In the second place, as the great interests of society require that the cultivation of every man's land should be encouraged, and its natural advantages made fully available, the owner must be permitted to dig in his own soil, and, in so doing, he can very rarely avoid interfering with the subterraneous waters flowing or percolating in his neighbor's land.

In the civil law are to be found many instances in which it is allowed to cut off subterraneous supplies, if it is done in the cultivation of the soil. In the Digest, Dig. 39, 3, 1, § 12, Pothier's ed. 1782, vol. 3, p. 20, it is said: "Denique Marcellus scribit, Cum eo, qui in suo fodiens vicini fontem avertit, nihil posse agi, nec de dolo. Et sane actionem non debet habere; si non animo vicino nocendi, sed suum agrum meliorem faciendi id fecit." And a very extensive sense is given to these words, authorizing the improvement of the proprietor's own land, in the civil law. In the same book of the Digest, "De aqua et aquæ pluviaæ arcendæ," Dig. 39, 3, 1, § 9, Pothier's ed. 1782, vol. 3, p. 21, it is said that the making a work "agri colendi carusa et frugum querendarum causa," and thereby altering the course of the aquaæ pluviaæ, is not actionable. The term "fruges" is said to be the same as rent: "Frugem pro reditu appellari, non solum quod frumentis aut leguminibus; verum et quod ex vino, sylvis cæduis, cretifodinis, lapidicinis, capitur." It would seem, therefore, that if the sources of a fountain or spring in an adjoining piece of land were cut off by excavating, in order to get the minerals in any place, it would be deemed by the Roman law to fall within the principle of the improvement of the land, and not be actionable.

The case of Acton v. Blundell would be rightly decided upon this ground, because the injury to the plaintiff's well was caused by the lawful exercise of the defendant's right to get the minerals in his land; and unless he had that right, the public would have lost the benefit of a valuable gift of Providence.

We come then to the conclusion, that every man has a right to the natural advantages of his soil — the plaintiff to the benefit of the flow of water in the river and its natural supplies, the defendant to the enjoyment of his land, and to the underground waters on it, and he may, in order to obtain that water, sink a well. But according to the rule of reason and law, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, it seems right to hold, that he ought to exercise his right in a reasonable manner, with as little injury to his neighbor's rights as may be. The civil law deems an act, otherwise lawful in itself, illegal if done with a malicious intent of injuring a neighbor, animo vicino nocendi. The same principle is adopted in the laws of Scotland, where an otherwise lawful act is forbidden "if done in emulationem vicini" (Bell's Principles, § 966); but this principle has not found a place in our law.

The question in this case, therefore, as it seems to me, resolves itself into an inquiry, whether the defendant exercised his right of enjoying the subterraneous waters in a reasonable manner. Had he made the well and used the steam-engines for the supply of water for the use of his own property, and those living on it, there could have been no question. If the number of houses upon it had increased to any extent, and the quantity of water for the families dwelling on the property had been proportionately augmented, there could have been no just grounds of complaint. But I doubt very greatly the legality of the defendant's acts in abstracting water for the use of a large district in the neighborhood, unconnected with his own estate, for the use of those who would have no right to take it directly themselves, and to the injury of those neighboring proprietors who have an equal right with themselves. It does not follow that each person who was supplied with water by the defendant could have dug a well himself on his own land, and taken the like quantity of water, so that the defendant may have taken much more than would have been abstracted if each had exercised his own right.

The same objection would not apply to the abstraction of water for the use of the dwellers on the defendant's land, even though they carried on trades requiring more water (breweries, for example) than would be used for mere domestic purposes; it would still be for their purposes only. But in this case there has been an abstraction of water for purposes wholly unconnected with the enjoyment of the defendant's land.

On the whole, I should certainly have wished to give this important case further consideration; but, as my noble and learned friends have formed their opinions upon it, I acquiesce, and do not give my advice to your Lordships to reverse the judgment.

LORD KINGSDOWN. My Lords, I confess that I am unable to share in the doubts that have been expressed by my noble and learned friend opposite in the able and elaborate judgment which he has just delivered. I entirely concur in the opinion which has been given by the judges unanimously in this case, and for the reasons by which that opinion has been supported; and I think the House is greatly indebted to those learned persons for the admirable reasoning by which they appear to have removed all doubt upon one of the most important questions that ever came under the consideration of a court of justice.

LORD CHELMSFORD. My Lords, I ought to have mentioned, that my noble and learned friend, Lord Brougham, who is compelled to leave the House to-day, but who was present during the whole of the argument, entirely concurs in the opinion which I have expressed.¹

STOCKPORT WATERWORKS COMPANY v. POTTER. ✓

EXCHEQUER. 1864.

POLLOCK, C. B.³ I am about to deliver the judgment of my Brother Channell and myself. My Brother Wilde, being no longer a member of the court, takes no part in the judgment; but it may be satisfactory to the profession to know that he had prepared a judgment founded on the principles which I am about to state.

The plaintiffs bring this action against the defendants for fouling the waters of the River Mersey.

The case is very voluminous, but a recapitulation of all the facts is by no means necessary for the purpose of giving judgment. It is enough to say that the plaintiffs have been in the habit of taking water by means of conduits, &c., from the River Mersey, at a point called the Nab Pool Weir, ever since the year 1853. That the owners of the Woodbank Estate (which estate bounds the river for some distance, including the spot where the Nab Pool Weir is erected, and through which estate the conduits, tunnels, &c., by which the plaintiffs draw the water, pass), have also been used to draw the water at the same place for some years, perhaps it may be conceded for fourteen years, before the year 1853.

So that water has in fact been drawn at that point (it may be taken for the purpose of the argument) for more than twenty years before this suit. That the water so drawn has been used to supply the town of Stockport with water fit for household purposes and has not been returned to the river again.

It further appears that, in 1853, the owners of the Woodbank Estate executed a deed under which the Stockport Waterworks and the use of the several conduits and tunnels, &c., by means of which the water has, during the period aforesaid, been drawn from the river at Nab Pool Weir, were ceded to the plaintiffs.

Whether what has been called in argument "the right to take the water" at that spot from the river and carry it to Stockport to be there used by the inhabitants and never returned, was also granted to them, is a disputed question under the deed. The plaintiffs affirm that it was so granted, and the defendants deny it.

. It is to be taken as a fact that the defendants have polluted the stream, and although the stream had, as early as 1853, "become more foul than formerly" from causes which have nothing to do with the defendants, yet, "the foulness of the stream was sensibly increased by the refuse discharged into it from the defendants' works."

There is, therefore, no doubt that if the plaintiffs have such rights in reference to the stream as to be entitled to insist upon its purity for practical purposes, the acts of the defendants constitute a cause of action.

But the defendants contend that, whatever others may have, the plaintiffs have no such rights. And they raise a variety of very formidable objections.

In the first place, the defendants argue that, although the right to pure water is the right of a riparian proprietor, the plaintiffs are not riparian proprietors at all. Nor are the plaintiffs the assignees of a riparian proprietor.

For, first, the law knows of no such right as the subject of assignment separate from the land in respect of which it arises, and, secondly, no such assignment has in fact been made.

And the defendants say there is no authority for the proposition that these rights in respect of water, which, in Embrey v. Owen, 6 Exch. 353, and other modern cases have been for the first time defined and attributed to the ownership of land by the side of a river, can be dealt with in gross and assigned in any way except in conjunction with such land.

And further, that if such rights could be the subject of transfer they have not been in fact transferred. For the deed of May, 1853, never in terms affected to pass any such right, but only the waterworks, with the use of the conduits, tunnels, &c., and a right to water power to be used for turning one or more water wheels ; the water when used being returned to the river again. This turns on the construction of the deed and some general words contained in it.

The defendants also say that the rights even of a riparian proprietor himself would not extend to the abstraction from the stream of water for the use of a populous town situated on land in no way connected with such stream, and the conveyance of it away from the river-side to a considerable distance for that purpose without returning it into the stream.

But then the plaintiffs' case, thus driven from a more exact basis, is placed upon the fact that he and those under whom he claims have done the same thing for twenty years.

To this the defendants answer that the mere doing of a particular thing for twenty years will not necessarily give a right of action against anybody who interferes with its being done as beneficially as it hitherto has been.

The plaintiffs, thus pressed, contended before us that the right they claimed of having pure water come down the stream for them to abstract and use was an "easement" acquired by more than twenty years' user, in which the Stockport Waterworks were the dominant tenement and the defendants' land the servient tenement.

Several answers were made to this. First, there was no continuing user for twenty years of a character to create an easement; for, before 1853, the user was by those who owned the land at Nab Pool Weir, and was in exercise of their ordinary riparian rights.

Secondly, the case showed that this user had within the twenty years been objected to by another riparian proprietor, and litigation had ensued which terminated in an award, so that it was not adverse and as of right against all the other riparian proprietors.

But a third and conclusive answer, as it seems to us, was given to such an easement.

The defendants' land is far higher up on the stream than the conduit or tunnel at Nab Pool Weir by which the plaintiffs abstract the water.

No amount of water abstracted by the plaintiffs or those under whom they claim could possibly be felt by the defendants. If the water was abstracted unlawfully or in excessive quantities, or not returned into the river, the proprietors below might have cause to complain, but the defendants could not, because they could not be affected by it. They had neither the will nor the power to interfere with the plaintiffs' use nor to take legal proceedings against them.

No grant could therefore be presumed by the defendants, because no user ever existed adverse to their full enjoyment of the water. And Sampson v. Hoddinott, 1 C. B. N. S. 590, 611, was cited as an express authority for this proposition.

We have thus recapitulated these arguments of the defendants because they appear to us to contain a perfect answer to the plaintiffs' claim in whatever light it can be put.

It is difficult to perceive any possible legal foundation for a right to have the river kept pure, in a person situated as this company is.

There seems to be no authority for contending that a riparian proprietor can keep the land abutting on the river the possession of which gives him his water rights, and at the same time transfer those rights or any of them, and thus create a right in gross by assigning a portion of his rights appurtenant.

It seems to us clear that the rights which a riparian proprietor has with respect to the water are entirely derived from his possession of land abutting on the river. If he grants away any portion of his land so abutting, then the grantee becomes a riparian proprietor and has similar rights. But if he grants away a portion of his estate not abutting on the river, then clearly the grantee of the land would have no water rights by virtue merely of his occupation. Can he have them by express grant? It seems to us that the true answer to this is that he can have them against the grantor, but not so as to sue other persons in his own name for an infringement of them. The case of Hill v. Tupper, 2 H. & C. 121, recently decided in this court, is an authority for the proposition that a person cannot create by grant new rights of property so as to give the grantee a right of suing in his own name for an interruption of the right by a third party.

The case where a riparian proprietor makes two streams instead of one and grants land on the new stream, seems to us analogous to a grant of a portion of the river bank, but not analogous to a grant of a portion of the riparian estate not abutting on the river. In the case of a grant of land on a new stream, the grantee obtains a right of access to the river, and it is by virtue of that right of access that he obtains his water rights.

We think then that in this case the right claimed cannot be the subject of a grant so as to enable the plaintiffs to sue in their own name for an infringement.

Nor is the supposed easement founded on user much more defensible.

The dominant and servient tenements have no apparent connection with one another.

The abstraction of the water from the stream took place at a spot situated on other land than that now called the dominant tenement, and in no sort of way affected the enjoyment of the water at what is now called the servient tenement.

If the waterworks could be considered a dominant tenement, every house in Stockport to which the water flowed through pipes might equally be so.

And as in modern times water is often conveyed many miles underground in pipes for the supply of large towns, the dominant and servient tenements might not only be many miles apart, but have no other connection with each other than the artificial one created by miles of pipes.

For these reasons we think that it is unnecessary more closely to investigate the effect of the deed of 1853 or to give any other reasons than those already stated, as upon the broad points of the case, the defendants are in our opinion clearly entitled to judgment.

BRAMWELL, B. In this case the plaintiffs cannot rely on their mere possession of the water they take, or perhaps I ought to say on their mere taking of it. For whatever Whaley v. Laing, 3 H. & N. 675, 901, may have decided, it certainly decided this, that such possession was not enough to enable the possessor to maintain an action. For that case decides that the plaintiff had not alleged, or having alleged, had not proved, a right to the water, and so could not recover. Nor can the plaintiffs rely on the more than twenty years' user as giving them any right. They themselves have not enjoyed the water twenty years, and their enjoyment cannot be connected with the antecedent enjoyment of Messrs. Marslands. For that enjoyment was an enjoyment as riparian proprietors, which might give a right beyond the natural right against owners below whom it affected, but could not give any right against the riparian proprietors or others who were not affected by it, and could not have resisted it.

The plaintiffs, therefore, must rely on the grant from Messrs. Marsden; and upon that two questions arise. First, is a right conferred on the plaintiffs? Secondly, can they maintain an action in respect of an injury to the enjoyment under such right? On the first of these two questions there seems to me no difficulty. It is not necessary to examine the deed minutely. It is enough to say that the reservoir is granted and conveyed, and a right to have water from the river to it. If any right can be granted which will enable the grantee to maintain an action like the present, this is a sufficient grant. It is true that this is not the claim in the declaration, but that may be amended by agreement of the parties to raise the real question, and should be, if necessary. The case then is reduced to this. Can a grantee from a riparian proprietor of land, part of the former riparian estate, but separated from the stream by land of the grantor not included in the grant, with a grant from the grantor of a right to lay pipes from the stream to the granted land and take water by means of them from the stream to such granted land, maintain an action against a person who fouls the stream? It is strange that this question should arise for the first time. There can be no doubt that the grant as between the riparian grantor and the grantee is good. And there is this to be said in favor of supporting the present claim, that we must suppose that the grantor and grantee have found the arrangement to be to their mutual advantage, that the stream can be more beneficially used this way than otherwise. Consequently that such an arrangement is for the public good. Why, then, should it not be effectual against a person, who as against the riparian proprietor is a wrongdoer? It imposes no additional burden on the riparians or others above. If they are wrongdoers by fouling now, so were they before. They could be restrained by injunction before if they can now. No doubt they might be made liable to larger damages than they would have been before, but their rights are not altered. It was said that innumerable actions might be brought if the law were as the plaintiffs contend. But there are two answers to this, one practical, viz., that they would not be brought, the other that the same might happen now if the smallest portion of the bank was granted with the right. A similar answer may be given to the supposed difficulty of the riparian proprietors above desiring to buy up rights below. The power to make such a grant then is for the benefit of the grantor, and grantee, and the public; and the only prejudice by it to the riparian or wrongdoer above is the liability to greater damages and to an action and injunction at the suit of persons additional to the riparians below. But this consideration could not preclude a covenant by the grantor that the grantee might apply in his name for an injunction or sue in his name, nor would it preclude a grant of the part of the bank where the water was taken, in which case it is clear the grantee might maintain an action or obtain an injunction. And this suggests to me the remark that what may be done indirectly may be directly. Further, it does seem strange that if a man has an estate on the bank of a stream extending a mile from it, he may build houses on the land, conduct water from the stream to them, and maintain an action and recover substantial damages for the injury to each house: that his tenants of each, if he let them, might do the same even though he demised them for 1000 years at a peppercorn rent, but that if he grants away the house in fee with the right of water, such grantee can maintain no action. What is to happen if he does so and repurchases? What would be the case if a riparian proprietor added to his estate another, to which water had been so conducted? Suppose a riparian proprietor on both sides for a great length wholly alters the course of the stream, could he not effectually complain of a fouling of the water in the new course? Suppose besides the new course he allowed the old one to continue, the stream running in both, could he not then maintain actions for the damage done to either? If he could, could not his grantee of lands on the new stream, and if such grantee could, why cannot the plaintiffs?

If the defendants' argument is well founded, it will follow that where the owner of land on a stream has built a mill alongside the stream with a cut or lead to it, and sells the mill, but not the natural watercourse, the owner of the mill can maintain no action against a riparian owner above who abstracts the water. I cannot think this is so. Further, suppose the person fouling the water was not a riparian proprietor but a mere wrongdoer, why should not an action lie against him? I can see no reason, nor can I see that his being such proprietor makes any difference. Upon these various considerations it seems to me this action is maintainable. I think it may fairly be asked to what extent I would carry the principle upon which I decide this? My answer is, to the extent to which the analogous case extends of a grantee of a right of way. Where a grantee of a right of way could maintain an action for disturbance of his way, so do I think the grantee of a right of water might. This case of the right of way, and cases of right of common, seem to me analogous to this case and authorities for my opinion. I am of course aware of the case of Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 516, and agree that new rights of property cannot be created, but I think that rule does not interfere with the present case. There, an owner of land was resisting a burden put on it by a former owner, and it was held that burden could not be attached to the land in the hands of the assignee. Here, no doubt, it can be, that is to say, on the lands of the riparian proprietors, the Marsdens. The question is not with them, but with one who would be a wrongdoer if he had no riparian estate or occupation, and is not the less so because he has. Nor is Hill v. Tupper, 2 H. & C. 121, any authority against the maintenance of this action. That case decided that in respect of what was no estate, and which gave no possession, but merely a right of action, against a covenantor, that right could not be enforced against a third party. On the other hand, Whaley v. Laing, 3 H. & N. 675, 901, seems a strong authority in favor of the plaintiff; for all the judges seem to have considered that had the water been taken as of right, the action would have been maintainable. I have only to add that, to my mind, this is not a question of easement or of dominant and servient tenement. The plaintiffs rely on the possession and enjoyment as of right, and charge the defendant as a wrongdoer, not the less because he is a riparian owner. I think the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment.

HURDMAN v. NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1878.

[Reported 3 C. P. Div. 168.]

APPEAL from the judgment of Manisty, J., in favor of the plaintiff on demurrer to a statement of claim.

Claim: — At the time of the damage hereafter mentioned the plaintiff was, and is still, possessed of a house, No. 16, Lodge Terrace, Sunderland.

2. The defendants then were, and still are, possessed of a certain close of land adjoining the house of the plaintiff.

3. The defendants placed and deposited in and upon the close of the defendants, and upon and against a wall of the defendants which adjoins and abuts against the house of the plaintiff, large quantities of soil, clay, limestone, and other refuse, close to and adjoining the house of the plaintiff, and thereby raised the surface of the defendants' land above the level of the land upon which the plaintiff's house was built.

4. The rain which fell upon the soil, clay, limestone, and other refuse so placed as aforesaid oozed and percolated through the wall of the defendants into the house of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's house thereby became wet, damp, unwholesome, and unhealthy, and less commodious for habitation.

5. By reason of the acts of the defendants the walls of the house of the plaintiff became and were very much injured, and the paper upon the walls has been destroyed.

6. In the alternative the plaintiff alleges that the defendants negligently and improperly placed and deposited the soil, clay, limestone, and refuse upon the defendants' land, and that the rain water falling thereon oozed and percolated through and into the plaintiff's house, whereby the plaintiff's house was damaged as before mentioned.

7. In the alternative the plaintiff alleges that the defendants were guilty of negligence in this, that the wall of the defendants against which the defendants so placed the soil, clay, limestone, and refuse was not sufficiently and properly constructed and built so as to prevent the water falling upon the soil, clay, limestone, and refuse from oozing and percolating through the wall and into the plaintiff's house, and that the defendants were guilty of negligence in placing the soil, clay, limestone, and refuse against the wall being so insufficient to prevent the water falling upon the soil, clay, limestone, and refuse from oozing and percolating through and into the plaintiff's house, whereby the plaintiff's house was damaged.

Demurrer to the claim, on the ground that the acts, matters, and things alleged to have been done by the defendants do not give rise to any right of action on the part of the plaintiff.

Herschell, Q. C., and G. Bruce, for the defendants in support of the demurser.

Waddy, Q. C., and John Edge, for the plaintiff, contra.

The judgment of the court (BRAMWELL, BRETT, and COTTON, L. J.J.) was delivered by COTTON, L. J. In this case the plaintiff has brought an action for injury alleged to have been caused to his house, which abuts on a wall of the defendants, by certain acts done by the defendants on their own land. The question is raised on demurrer to the statement of claim, and the question therefore is whether that alleges a good cause of action. [The Lord Justice read the statement of claim, except paragraph 7.] It is unnecessary to read the seventh paragraph, because it is based on a supposed obligation of the railway company to make their wall water-tight, but in our opinion there is no such obligation, and if the statements contained in the preceding paragraphs do not show a cause of action, the statements of the seventh paragraph do not enable the plaintiff to sustain this action.

For the purposes of our decision, we must assume that the plaintiff has sustained substantial damage, and we must construe the statement as alleging that the surface of the defendants' land has been raised by earth and rubbish placed thereon, and that the consequence of this is that rain-water falling on the defendants' land has made its way through the defendants' wall into the house of the plaintiff, and has caused the injury complained of. The question is, Are the defendants, admitting this statement to be true, liable to the plaintiff? and we are of opinion that they are. The heap or mound on the defendants' land must, in our opinion, be considered as an artificial work. Every occupier of land is entitled to the reasonable enjoyment thereof. This is a natural right of property, and it is well established that an occupier of land may protect himself by action against any one who allows any filth or any other noxious thing produced by him on his own land to interfere with this enjoyment. We are further of opinion that, subject to a qualification to be hereafter mentioned, if any one by artificial erection on his own land causes water, even though arising from natural rain-fall only, to pass into his neighbor's land, and thus substantially to interfere with his enjoyment, he will be liable to an action at the suit of him who is so injured, and this view agrees with the opinion expressed by the Master of the Rolls in the case of Broder v. Saillard, 2 Ch. D. at p. 700. I have limited this statement of liability to liability for allowing things in themselves offensive to pass into a neighbor's property, and for causing by artificial means things in themselves inoffensive to pass into a neighbor's property to the prejudice of his enjoyment thereof, because there are many things which when done on a man's own land (as building so as to interfere with the prospect, or so as to obstruct lights not ancient) are not actionable, even though they interfere with a neighbor's enjoyment of his property. But it is urged that this is at variance with the decision that if, in consequence of a mine-owner on the rise working out his minerals, water comes by natural gravitation into the mines of the owner on the deep, the latter mine-owner cannot maintain any action for the loss which he thereby sustained. But excavating and raising the minerals is considered the natural use of mineral land, and these decisions are referable to this principle, that the owner of land holds his right to the enjoyment thereof, subject to such annoyance as is the consequence of what is called the natural user by his neighbor of his land, and that when an interference with this enjoyment by something in the nature of nuisance (as distinguished from an interruption or disturbance of an easement or right of property in ancient lights, or the support for the surface to which every owner of property is entitled), is the cause of complaint, no action can be maintained if this is the result of the natural user by a neighbor of his land. That this is the principle of these cases appears from the case of Wilson v. Waddell, 2 Ap. Cas. 95, and from what is said by the Lord Chancellor in Fletcher v. Rylands, Law Rep. 3 H. L. C. 330. Moreover, the cases referred to have laid down that a mine-owner is exempt from liability, for water which in consequence of his works flows by gravitation into an adjoining mine, only if his works are carried on with skill and in the usual manner; and in the present case it is stated that the defendants have conducted this operation negligently and improperly. The decisions, therefore, as regards the rights of adjoining mine-owners, do not enable the defendants to discharge themselves from liability.

It was also argued that a landowner, who by operations on his own land drains the water percolating underground in the property of his neighbor, is not liable to an action by the man whose land is thus deprived of its natural moisture, and this it was argued was inconsistent with a judgment for the plaintiff on a statement alleging as a cause of action an alteration in the percolation of water. It is sufficient to say that no one can maintain an action unless there is some injury to something to which the law recognizes his title, and the law does not recognize any title in a landowner to water percolating through his property underground and in no definite channel.

We are of opinion that the maxim Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas applies to and governs the present case, and that as the plaintiff by his statement of claim alleges that the defendants have by artificial erections on their land caused water to flow into the plaintiff's land, in a manner in which it would not but for such erection have done, the defendants are answerable for the injury caused thereby to the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

PITTS v. LANCASTER MILLS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1847.

[Reported 13 Met. 156.]

THIS was an action of trespass upon the case; and the declaration alleged that Samuel Carter was seised and possessed of a close, water mill, ancient dam, and the water privileges thereto appertaining, situate on the north branch of Nashua River, in Lancaster, and the right of having the whole water of said stream flow, without obstruction, for the benefit of said mill, and of having the uninterrupted use and occupation of said mill and privileges; and that said Carter, being so seised and possessed, leased the said premises, for a term of years, to Hiram Pitts, who underlet the same to the plaintiffs; that the defendants, a corporation established by St. 1844, c. 20, in the months of June and July, 1845, wrongfully built and raised, above its usual height, their dam, situate across said stream, above the mill, dam and privilege occupied by the plaintiffs, and thereby hindered the water from flowing in its usual course, and thereby, for the space of two days during the said month of June, and four days during said month of July, wholly cut off the water from the plaintiffs' mill, &c.

The case was submitted to the court upon the following agreed statement of facts: "The plaintiffs are the lessees of said mill, dam and privileges, as alleged in their declaration. The defendants were the owners of a privilege on said stream, above the mill of the plaintiffs, whereon a mill had stood for some years; they erected a new mill thereon, and, for the purpose of using the whole power, raised the dam higher than it had formerly been, and kept the water back, so long as was necessary to fill their pond, and no longer. To have delayed filling said pond, until a freshet or flow of water should have raised the same, would have endangered said dam; and by keeping the water back, as aforesaid, the operations of the plaintiffs' mill were retarded or wholly suspended."

The parties agreed that if, upon the facts above stated, the action could be maintained, damages should be assessed by an auditor; otherwise, that a nonsuit should be entered.

F. H. Dewey, for the plaintiffs.

C. Allen, for the defendants.

SHAW, C. J. Every proprietor of land, through which a current of water flows, has a right to the use of it on his own land, amongst other things for mill purposes, making such reasonable use of it, and of the mill power furnished by it, as he can make consistently with a like reasonable use by other proprietors, above and below, through whose land it passes. What is a reasonable use must depend on circumstances; such as the width and depth of the bed, the volume of water, the fall, previous usage, and the state of improvement in manufactories and the useful arts. 8 Met. 476.

It appears by the facts stated in this case, that the defendants were proprietors of land and mills above those of the plaintiffs on the same stream; that having erected a new dam, which they had a right to do, they detained the water no longer than was necessary to raise their own head of water and fill their own pond. The court are of opinion that this was not an unreasonable use of the watercourse by the defendants, and that any loss, which the plaintiffs temporarily sustained by it, was damnum absque injuria. *Plaintiff's nonsuit.*¹

¹ "The proposition of the defendant was, that he had a legal right to use a reasonable quantity of the water for the purposes of his business. The court replied that his business might reasonably require more than he could take consistently with the rights of the plaintiff. We cannot see how or on what principle the correctness of this can be impugned. The necessities of one man's business cannot be the standard of another's rights in a thing which belongs to both. The true rule was given to the jury. The defendant had a right to such use as he could make of the water without materially diminishing it in quantity or corrupting it in quality. If he needed more, he was bound to buy it. However laudable his enterprise may be, he cannot carry it on at the expense of his neighbor. One who desires to work a lead-mine may require land and money as well as water; but he cannot have either unless he first makes it his own." Wheatley v. Chrisman, 24 Pa. 298, 302 (1855).

"Such damages as are incident to, and necessarily result from, a proper use of the water must be borne; but the manufacturer has no right to do any act that in its consequences is injurious to others because it is a matter of convenience or economy for him to do it." Canfield v. Andrew, 54 Vt. 1, 16 (1882).

ELLIOT v. FITCHBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1852.

[Reported 10 Cush. 191.]

THIS action was tried in this court, at the October Term, 1849, before Metcalf, J., under whose rulings a verdict was found for the defendants. The plaintiff excepted to the rulings and instructions, which, with the facts of the case, sufficiently appear in the opinion.

D. S. and W. A. Richardson, for the plaintiff.

G. F. Farley, for the defendants.

SHAW, C. J. This is an action of the case against the defendants, for diverting the water of a small brook, passing through land of the plaintiff in Shirley. The facts are briefly these: The plaintiff is the owner of certain land, and for more than sixty years a small brook, having its sources in several ponds, has, in its natural course, flowed through lands of various persons, viz.: of one Clark, of one Furnin, and then through the plaintiff's land, which is about half a mile below said Clark's, and from the plaintiff's land, through various other lands to Nashua River. Said brook was in part supplied by a never-failing spring, on said Clark's land, near said brook, and having its outlet into it. The defendants, pursuant to a warranty deed from said Clark, of a perpetual right and privilege to make and maintain a dam and reservoir, and draw and use the water therefrom, erected such dam across said stream, below said spring, and made said reservoir upon and about the same, and inserted a lead pipe therein, by means of which they have used and constantly taken water, from said reservoir, to their depot in Shirley, and used the same for furnishing their locomotive steam-engines with water, and for other similar purposes. The defendants offered evidence tending to prove that said Clark, where said brook runs through his meadow, which is wet and springy, had cut ditches across the meadow to the brook, thereby increasing the flow of water to the brook; and it was further proved that there is no outlet for the water of said meadow, except into this brook. The meadow is situate below the dam.

The plaintiff contended that if the jury were satisfied of the existence of the brook, as alleged, and the diversion of the water therefrom by the defendants, he was entitled to a verdict for nominal damage, without proof of actual damage. But the presiding judge instructed the jury that unless the plaintiff suffered actual perceptible damage in consequence of the diversion, the defendants were not liable in this action. In connection with this instruction, the judge further instructed the jury that if they believed that the defendants, by excavating said reservoir and spring above the dam, or that said Clark, by digging said ditches, had increased the flow of water in said brook, equal to the quantity of water the defendants had diverted therefrom, then the defendants were not liable in this action.

The whole court are of opinion that this direction was right, in both particulars.

This appears to have been a small stream of water, but it must, we think, be considered that the same rules of law apply to it, and regulate the rights of riparian proprietors, through and along whose lands it passes, as are held to apply to other watercourses, subject to this consideration, that what would be a reasonable and proper use of a considerable stream, ordinarily carrying a large volume of water, for irrigation or other similar uses, would be an unreasonable and injurious use of a small stream, just sufficient to furnish water for domestic uses, for farm-yards, and watering-places for cattle.

The instruction requested by the plaintiff is, we think, founded on a misconception of the rights of riparian proprietors in watercourses passing through or by their lands. It presupposes that the diversion of any portion of the water of a running stream, without regard to the fitness of the purpose, is a violation of the right of every proprietor of land lying below, on the same stream, so that, without suffering any actual or perceptible damage, he may have an action for the sole purpose of vindicating his legal right.

The right to flowing water is now well settled to be a right incident to property in the land; it is a right publici juris, of such character, that whilst it is common and equal to all, through whose land it runs, and no one can obstruct or divert it, yet, as one of the beneficial gifts of Providence, each proprietor has a right to a just and reasonable use of it, as it passes through his land; and so long as it is not wholly obstructed or diverted, or no larger appropriation of the water running through it is made than a just and reasonable use, it cannot be said to be wrongful or injurious to a proprietor lower down. What is such a just and reasonable use, may often be a difficult question, depending on various circumstances. To take a quantity of water from a large running stream for agricultural or manufacturing purposes, would cause no sensible or practicable diminution of the benefit, to the prejudice of a lower proprietor; whereas, taking the same quantity from a small running brook passing through many farms, would be of great and manifest injury to those below, who need it for domestic supply, or watering cattle; and therefore it would be an unreasonable use of the water, and an action would lie in the latter case, and not in the former. It is therefore, to a considerable extent, a question of degree; still, the rule is the same, that each proprietor has a right to a reasonable use of it, for his own benefit, for domestic use, and for manufacturing and agricultural purposes.

It has sometimes been made a question whether a riparian proprietor can divert water from a running stream, for purposes of irrigation. But this, we think, is an abstract question which cannot be answered either in the affirmative or negative, as a rule applicable to all cases. That a portion of the water of a stream may be used for the purpose of irrigating land, we think is well established as one of the rights of the proprietors of the soil along or through which it passes. Yet a proprietor cannot under color of that right, or for the actual purpose of irrigating his own land, wholly abstract or divert the watercourse, or take such an unreasonable quantity of water, or make such unreasonable use of it, as to deprive other proprietors of the substantial benefits which they might derive from it, if not diverted or used unreasonably. The point may, perhaps, be best illustrated by extreme cases. One man, for instance, may take water from a perennial stream of moderate size, by means of buckets or a pump, — for the mode is not material, — to water his garden. Another may turn a similar current over a level tract of sandy soil of great extent, which in its ordinary operation will nearly or quite absorb the whole volume of the stream, although the relative position of the land and stream are such that the surplus water, when there is any, is returned to the bed of the stream. The one might be regarded as a reasonable use, doing no perceptible damage to any lower proprietor, whilst the other would nearly deprive him of the whole beneficial use, and yet, in both, the water would be used for irrigation. We cite a few of the leading cases in Massachusetts on this subject. Weston v. Alden, 8 Mass. 136; Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420; Cook v. Hull, 3 Pick. 269; Anthony v. Lapham, 5 Pick. 175.

This rule, that no riparian proprietor can wholly abstract or divert a watercourse, by which it would cease to be a running stream, or use it unreasonably in its passage, and thereby deprive a lower proprietor of a quality of his property, deemed in law, incidental and beneficial, necessarily flows from the principle, that the right to the reasonable and beneficial use of a running stream, is common to all the riparian proprietors, and so, each is bound so to use his common right, as not essentially to prevent or interfere with an equally beneficial enjoyment of the common right, by all the proprietors. Were it otherwise, and were it an inflexible rule that each lower proprietor has a right to the full and entire flow of the natural stream, without diminution, acceleration or retardation of the natural current, it would follow, that each lower proprietor would have a right of action against any upper proprietor, for taking any portion of the water of the stream for any purpose; such a taking would be a disturbance of his right; and if taken by means of a pump, a pipe, a drain, or otherwise, though causing no substantial damage, it would be a nuisance, and warrant the lower proprietor, in entering the close of the upper, to abate it. Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420.

It would also follow, as the legal and practical result, that no proprietor could have any beneficial use of the stream, without an encroachment on another's right, subjecting him to actions torties quoties, as well as to a forcible abatement of the nuisance. If the plaintiff could, in a case like the present, have such an action, then every proprietor on the brook, to its outlet in Nashua River, would have the same; and because the quantity of diminution is not material, every riparian proprietor on the Nashua would have the same right, and so every proprietor on the Merrimack River to the ocean. This is a sort of reductio ad absurdum, which shows that such cannot be the rule, as was claimed by the plaintiff.

Without intending at present to state the authorities fully, we refer to the following English cases, as tending to illustrate and fix the rule as stated. Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208; Duncombe v. Randall, Hettley, 32; Williams v. Morland, 2 B. & C. 910; 4 Dow. & Ry. 583; Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 190.

If the use which one makes of his right in the stream is not a reasonable use, or if it causes a substantial and actual damage to the proprietor below, by diminishing the value of his land, though at the time he has no mill or other work to sustain present damage, still, if the party thus using it, has not acquired a right by grant, or by actual appropriation and enjoyment twenty years, it is an encroachment on the right of the lower proprietor, for which an action will lie. Mason v. Hill, 3 B. & Ad. 304; 5 B. & Ad. 1; Wood v. Waud, 3 Welsby, Hurlst. & Gord. 748. But the doctrine is much discussed and settled on deliberation, in a recent case decided in the Court of Exchequer. Embrey v. Owen, 6 Welsby, Hurlst. & Gord. 353.

The right to the use of flowing water is publici juris, and common to all the riparian proprietors; it is not an absolute and exclusive right to all the water flowing past their land, so that any obstruction would give a cause of action; but it is a right to the flow and enjoyment of the water, subject to a similar right in all the proprietors, to the reasonable enjoyment of the same gift of Providence. It is therefore only for an abstraction and deprivation of this common benefit, or for an unreasonable and unauthorized use of it, that an action will lie; but for such deprivation or unwarrantable use, an action will lie, though there be no actual present damage. So it is subsequently stated in the close of the case last cited: "So long as this reasonable use by one man of this common property does no actual and perceptible damage to the right of another to the similar use of it, no action will lie."

We think the most reliable American authorities are to the same effect. 3 Kent. Com. (6th ed.) 439; Angell on Watercourses, ch. iv.; Blanchard v. Baker, 8 Greenl. 253; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mason, 397; Webb v. Portland Manufacturing Co., 3 Sumner, 189; Anthony v. Lapham, 5 Pick. 175.

The same doctrine has been held in a recent case in New York. Van Hoesen v. Coventry, 10 Barb. 518.

In applying these rules to the present case, we are to consider that Clark, who owned the land on which the dam was built, and the defendants to whom he conveyed all his right to the use of the water, as holding together the whole right, and it is to be considered in the same manner as if the defendants owned the land. We think it was properly left to the jury to find, whether the defendants, claiming in the right of Clark, had by their diversion of the water for a valuable and highly beneficial use, caused any actual or perceptible damage, and if not, to find for the defendants. It is very clear, that here is no complaint of the total diversion of the stream from the plaintiff's land; no such ground of complaint is set forth, or relied on. The bed of the stream and the stream itself, remains and passes through the plaintiff's land as it did before. The gravamen of the complaint is, not for diverting the stream itself, but for abstracting a part of the water of the stream. This is a right which each proprietor has, if exercised within a reasonable limit. The proper question therefore was, whether in the mode of taking, in the quantity taken, and the purpose for which it was taken, there was a reasonable and justifiable use of the water by Clark. The use being lawful and beneficial, it must be deemed reasonable, and not an infringement of the right of the plaintiff, if it did no actual and perceptible damage to the plaintiff; and therefore we think that question of fact was rightly left to the jury, who must have found that it did him no such damage.

We consider the other direction correct also, as we understand it. The question was not, if the defendants had caused a damage to the plaintiff, amounting in law to a disturbance of his right, for which an action would lie, whether it would be barred by an advantage of equal value, conferred in nature of a set-off; but whether the improvements of Clark upon his meadow, taken together as a whole, including the dam and ditches as parts of one and the same improvement, any damage was done to the plaintiff; and this we think was correctly so left.

It may perhaps be proper to guard against misconstruction, in considering what are the general rights and duties of persons owning lands, bounding on running streams, by the general rules of law and for general purposes, that some alterations of these rules, may be effected in Massachusetts, by the Acts of legislation on that subject, in respect to mills, and the construction which has been judicially put upon such legislative Acts. This system originated with the Provincial Act, 13 Anne, passed in 1714, Ancient Laws and Charters, 404. This Act by its operation necessarily secures, to some extent, advantages to the prior occupant of a stream, by a dam erected to work a mill. Bigelow v. Newell, 10 Pick. 348; Bemis v. Upham, 13 Pick. 167; Baird v. Wells, 22 Pick. 312.

It is not necessary, however, now to go into this subject, but merely to say that the rights to streams of running water, upon which the present question turns, are not dependent upon, or affected by, the Mill Acts.

McCoy v. DANLEY.

SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA. 1852.

[Reported 20 Pa. 85.]

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Washington county.

This was an action brought to August Term, 1847, by Daniel McCoy v. William Danley. It was an action on the case for the continuance of a nuisance. After the suit was brought, William Danley died, and his administrators were substituted.

To August Term, 1844, Daniel McCoy brought his action against the defendant, William Danley, to recover damages for an injury done to the plaintiff's land by back water from a mill-dam erected on defendant's premises. In that suit the plaintiff recovered a verdict and judgment.

The defendant having neglected and refused to abate the nuisance, the plaintiff brought the present suit, in which he declared for the continuance of the nuisance, as suggested by Rogers, J., in the case of Smith v. Elliott, 9 Barr, 345; and gave in evidence the verdict and judgment in the former action.

On the part of the plaintiff it was proved that no change had been made in the dam since the former trial.

After various offers made on part of plaintiff to prove injury to the plaintiff's land in consequence of the erection of the dam, during the ordinary rises in the stream, which were overruled, the court deciding that the evidence should be limited to the injury sustained at the ordinary stage of the stream, evidence was given that if the dam was removed, the plaintiff's land would be dry and valuable; that the swelling in the stream was periodical; that in the spring of the year the plaintiff's land was covered with water for two weeks; and that most of the damage sustained arose from the common, ordinary, and expected floods.

On the part of the plaintiff the court was requested to charge the jury:

1. That the verdict and judgment in the former suit were conclusive of the plaintiff's right to recover, and all the plaintiff is required to do is, to give in evidence the record of the former recovery, and prove that the nuisance remains in the same, or in a worse situation than before.

The court charged in the affirmative; reference to 9 Barr, 346.

2. That all streams are subject to periodical and expected floods, which occur at fixed times and seasons, which may be calculated upon with reasonable certainty; and for all damage occasioned by ordinary, common, and expected floods, the defendant is liable. That if the jury are satisfied, from the evidence, that regular and periodical freshets or floods occur at fixed times and seasons, in the stream in which the defendants' dam is built, they are bound to allow the plaintiff for all damage occasioned by the dam during those ordinary, common, and expected floods.

Answer. It is within the observation of all, that streams in this country are subject to periodical and expected floods, which occur generally at particular seasons every year — the nature and extent of these floods are well understood. Again, there are what may be called extraordinary floods, not occurring at stated periods, but happening once, perhaps, in the course of several years. We are not asked then to charge you that the defendants are liable in damages for injuries sustained for extraordinary floods, but for the usual ordinary and expected floods which occur in the course of every year. This we cannot do. The expression of the Supreme Court in the Monongahela Navigation Co. v. Coon, 6 Barr, 383, is too plain and explicit for doubt. The rule there stated is, that a riparian owner is entitled "to swell water in the channel of the stream in its natural state up to his neighbor's line, and that he is not answerable for damage done by high water, however it may have been increased by the obstruction below." We say to you that the defendants are only liable for injury done by the swelling of the water at its ordinary stage, and we define an ordinary stage to be the situation of the stream for the longest period exclusive of what might be called the dry season. Then, whatever injury the plaintiff has sustained by the swelling of the water at its usual and ordinary state, he is entitled to recover.

3. That, after the former verdict and judgment, it was the defendant's duty to abate the nuisance, and that his continuance of it is to be regarded as an aggravation of the injury, and as enlarging the damages. That the plaintiff is entitled to recover exemplary damages in this suit. That the jury are bound to give such damages as will punish the defendant and compel him to abate the nuisance.

Answer. Damages are either nominal, compensatory, exemplary, or vindictive. We are asked to charge you that the plaintiff is entitled, in this case, to recover exemplary damages, which are such as will not only fully compensate the plaintiff, but punish the defendants, and thus compel them to abate the nuisance. The jury are at liberty, in a case of this nature (which is nothing more than an inquest to ascertain damages), to give such damages as would compel the defendants to abate the nuisance, but they are not bound to do so; cases might occur where it would be highly unjust to compel a party defendant to pull down the erection which had been declared a nuisance, as when the continued injury to the party complaining is but insignificant, and the erection of great value. There it would be wrong to give exemplary damages. Again, the erection might be of no value, and the injury occasioned and continued great. In a case like this the damages should be such as would compel the party to abate the nuisance.

Error was assigned, in the first four assignments, to the rejection of the evidence; and in the fifth, to the refusal to charge as requested in the second point. In the sixth, in refusing to charge as requested in the third point.

Acheson and Wilson, were for plaintiffs in error.

Montgomery, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BLACK, C. J. This was an action on the case for erecting a dam by which the water of the stream was penned back so as to overflow the plaintiff's land above. Evidence was offered to show the injury which had been caused by the structure at times of ordinary and natural rises in the stream; at regular and periodical rises; at times of high water occurring at the usual flood seasons; and at times of ordinary and common freshets. All this was rejected, and the court held in the charge that there could be no recovery except for damage done by swelling back the water at its ordinary stage, and this was defined to be that situation in which it remains longest, excluding the dry season.

We find no authority for this rule. One objection to it is the extreme difficulty of its application. In this country there is no dry season, properly so called. We have periods of drought which come irregularly and at all times of the year. The streams rise immediately after a rain or the melting of the snows, and the fall begins as soon as the rise ceases. That they ever remain in one situation for a perceptible length of time would be hard to prove. If they do, it would require an observation so close and so constant to know in what situation they remain longest, that no person of ordinary habits could be expected to tell it. No two witnesses would be likely to agree even upon their average height during a given time.

But suppose the ordinary situation of a stream according to this definition of it could be ascertained with tolerable accuracy, we think a dam which backs the water on the land of the proprietor above during every spell of wet weather, is something more than damnum absque injuria. If not, a man, whose farm consists of a low creek bottom, is at the mercy of his neighbor below. His trees may be killed, his crops destroyed, his springs drowned, his house rendered uninhabitable, and his land made worthless, not only while the overflow lasts, but by the pools of stagnant water left standing on it afterwards. And all this must be the necessary consequence, not of great floods, which, like other inevitable calamities, are to be borne without complaint, but of every ordinary freshet caused by the usual rains which are expected with as much confidence as we look for the return of summer and winter. The law would be very defective if it did not protect men from wrongs like these in rainy as well as in dry seasons; and since every year brings its alternations of high water and low, a person who erects a dam is bound to foresee the one as much as the other. It often happens that small mills for grinding, sawing, or other purposes, are erected on streams too weak to turn them except at high water. Suppose two such mills are on the same creek, the owner of the lower one, according to the defendant's doctrine, can say to the other, " You may use your machinery, if you can, when there is not water enough to drive it; but when the rise comes, I claim the right, and will exercise it, to pen the water back upon you and stop your wheel." If one party may do this with impunity, and the other must submit without a remedy, what becomes of the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas?

The opinion in the case of the Monongahela Navigation Company v. Coon, 6 Barr, 379, which seems to have misled the Court of Common Pleas, does not go the whole length they seem to have thought. The judge who delivered that opinion speaks throughout, not of the usual high water, but of floods which occur on extraordinary occasions. Besides, the point was not before him at all; and he was not required to speak with precision. The only point decided there which makes that case akin to this one, was, that under the Act of Assembly the defendants were responsible for all damage caused by their dam under all circumstances. The remarks about the rights and duties of riparian proprietors differently situated were but obiter dicta; and there is nothing in them from which we infer that the court then considered a common freshet, such as may probably happen any month in the year, to be an extraordinary occasion, of which one who built a dam was not required to calculate the effects.

But this question did arise in Bell v. McClintock, 9 Watts, 119, and it was decided, not under the Act making Oil Creek a public highway (for the Statute did not either create or change the rights of the parties), but, according to the principles of the common law, that one who erects a dam is responsible for all the injury caused by it in times of usual, ordinary, and expected freshets. A flood is another thing. It may not come for years together. When it does come, it is a visitation of Providence, and the destruction it brings with it must be borne by those on whom it happens to fall.

This was a second suit for the same injury. The first had resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff. The court properly held, that the record in the former case was decisive of the parties' rights. The plaintiff submitted, that the jury were bound to find such damages as would punish the defendant, and compel him to abate the nuisance. But this the court denied to be law in a case where the erection complained of was of great value to one party, and the injury to the other insignificant. In this we cannot concur. The usufruct of water belongs to the owners of the land through which it passes. It is property to all intents and purposes. If one uses it in such a way as to prevent another, whose right is as good as his, from using it for a similar purpose, or if he interferes in any injurious way with its natural flow through the land of his neighbor above or below him, he is taking another man's property for his own purposes, and this he can never do without a contract. He who desires to have a water-right which does not belong to him, must bargain for it, as he would do for anything else. The law will not allow the owner to be deprived of it because he does not use it profitably, nor compel him to part with it against his will, even for a full price. The plaintiff's right, therefore, to have the dam in question reduced, and to be restored again to the full enjoyment of his own property, was absolute, and in no manner or degree dependent on its value to his adversary, or the quantum of injury done to himself. The first action in such cases is generally brought to test the parties' rights. In the absence of malice or aggravating circumstances, compensatory damages are enough; for it cannot fairly be presumed that any one would maintain a nuisance in the face of a judicial decision conclusively fixing its character. But if he will not abate it, he may be compelled to do so in a second action. And how shall he be compelled to do it, except by a verdict which makes it his interest? The point on this subject should have been answered in the affirmative, and the jury instructed to see, not only that the plaintiff lost nothing, but that the defendant gained nothing by disobedience of the law.

LOWRIE, J. The prevailing and controlling error in the trial of this cause is, in holding that a man may erect a mill-dam on his own land so as to throw the water back to his neighbor's line, in the ordinary stage of the stream, even though the consequence be, that, in its natural and ordinary swellings in some seasons of the year, his neighbor's land is overflowed. The correction of this error will, of itself, modify some other points ruled by the court below.

No man has a right to appropriate any portion of his neighbor's property to his own use, even for a temporary purpose. If he may take his neighbor's land at frequent and uncertain periods in every year, he may as well take it altogether, for his neighbor cannot use it. If it is very important for him to have it, let him buy it. If he invades it improperly, let him suffer as a wrongdoer.

Ordinary: the error is in the use of that word. A distinction is taken between the ordinary stage of the water, and at its ordinary stage at particular periods. The former is without meaning unless it means the average stage; for there is no ordinary stage of any stream in this country for the year round. A man may make his dam according to the ordinary, but not according to the average, stage of the stream. But what is the ordinary stage? That depends upon seasons and weather. The ordinary stage, in ordinary rainy seasons, is one thing, and in ordinary dry seasons, is another. The ordinary stage, in March, is high, in August, low. The ordinary rises of streams are matters which every one is expected to provide against, because, with ordinary care, he can calculate upon them. The owner of a dam is not answerable for damages caused by his dam, combined with an act of Providence. But an act of Providence, in legal phraseology, means an accident against which ordinary skill and foresight is not expected to provide. It does not include those floods which happen so frequently that men of ordinary prudence are expected to calculate upon them; and, against such swellings, the defendant was bound to provide when he erected his dam ; and if he did not do so, he should be compelled to lower it, if the plaintiff insists.

Judgment reversed, and a new trial awarded.¹

THURBER v. MARTIN.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1854.

[Reported 2 Gray, 394.]

ACTION of tort by the owner and occupant of a mill situated on Rocky River in Rehoboth, against the owner and occupant of another mill half a mile higher up on the same stream, to recover damages occasioned by the use of the water of the stream by the defendant for his own mill, in such a manner as to interrupt and hinder the natural flow thereof, and divert it from the plaintiff's mill.

At the trial before Merrick, J., the plaintiff produced evidence tending to show that the mill owned and occupied by him was erected fifty or sixty years before any mill was built on the site owned by the defendant, and that it had ever since been in constant use, as far as the supply of water in the stream enabled the successive owners to use it. And he contended that by such use, for such length of time, he acquired an absolute right to have the waters of the stream come to his mill according to their natural flow, without any interruption or disturbance whatever by the defendant in the working and operation of his mill ; and requested the presiding judge so to instruct the jury.

But the judge declined to do so, and instead thereof instructed them "that every riparian proprietor had a right to use the waters of a river or running stream for the purpose of working, operating, and propelling artificial works erected upon its banks ; that priority of occupation secured to the first occupant the exclusive right to the use of the water to the extent of his occupation ; but that priority of use at any particular point upon a stream, however long continued, could never deprive the owner of lands bounded on the stream, at any point above the mill pond of the first occupant, of the right to have and enjoy a similar use of the water as it passed by his lands ; and that therefore the defendant, being a riparian proprietor, had a right, after the plaintiff and those under whom he claimed had maintained and used a mill upon said river for sixty years, or for any greater length of time, to construct a dam across the stream, at any point above the plaintiff's mill-pond, for the purpose of raising a head of water to propel, work, and operate his mill erected on land adjoining the stream; but that his right was limited to using the water in a reasonable and proper manner for the propelling, working, and operating of a mill of such magnitude only as was adapted and appropriate to the size and capacity of the stream, and the quantity of water flowing therein; that he could not lawfully detain the water in his pond an unreasonable length of time, nor discharge it therefrom in such excessive quantities that it would run to waste, and be lost by the riparian proprietors below; but that he was bound to use the water in such way and manner that every riparian proprietor, at points farther down the stream, would have the enjoyment and use of it substantially according to its natural flow, but still subject to such disturbance and interruption as was necessary and unavoidable in and by the reasonable and proper use of it for the propelling, working, and operating of a mill of suitable magnitude, adapted and appropriate to the size and capacity of the stream, and the quantity of water flowing therein; and that if it appeared from all the evidence in the case that the defendant's mill was not adapted and appropriate to the size and capacity of the stream, but was disproportionately large and extensive; or if the defendant used the water in an unreasonable manner; and the plaintiff was, in either of these ways, or by either of these means, interrupted or disturbed in the operation of his mill, he was entitled to a verdict commensurate to the injury sustained."

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the judge reported the case for the consideration of the full court; judgment to be entered on the verdict, if the foregoing instructions were correct; otherwise, a new trial to be granted.

N. Morton, for the plaintiff.

C. I. Reed, for the defendant.

SHAW, C. J. The court are of opinion that the law was rightly stated by the judge at the trial; that it was laid down with fulness and accuracy, and with proper qualifications. Every man has a right to the reasonable use and enjoyment of a current of running water, as it flows through or along his own land, for mill purposes, having a due regard to the like reasonable use of the stream by all other proprietors above and below him. In determining what is such reasonable use, a just regard must be had to the force and magnitude of the current, its height and velocity, the state of improvement in the country in regard to mills and machinery, and the use of water as a propelling power, the general usage of the country in similar cases, and all other circumstances bearing upon the question of fitness and propriety in the use of the water in the particular case. If any party claims a special right to the use of the water, more beneficial to himself, and more burdensome to the riparian proprietors above or below, than what may be called the natural or general right to the reasonable use of the stream, he must establish such right by grant or prescription.

In the present case, there seems to have been nothing to show any use of the stream by the defendant, beyond a reasonable use ; or if there was, the instructions were such as to leave the question of fact fully to the jury, whose province it was to pass upon it.

Judgment on the verdict.

CHATFIELD v. WILSON.

SUPREME COURT OF VERMONT. 1855.

[Reported 28 Vt. 49.]

ACTION on the case for the disturbance of a watercourse. The declaration contained three counts, the first and second charging the defendant with having lowered and changed the channel of a brook, which divided the farms of the plaintiff and defendant, and diverting the water therein ; and the third complained of an interference by the defendant, with the natural flow or passage, by percolation, of the water through the defendant's land, to the plaintiff's, by means of which a reservoir or tub on the plaintiff's land was supplied with water. Plea, the general issue ; trial by jury, March Term, 1855, — Poland, J., presiding.

The plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that the defendant's farm lay north and east of the plaintiff's ; and that the plaintiff's farm and the defendant's land lying north of it were divided by a small brook, which came from a spring farther east on the defendant's land, and ran westerly, and that sometimes, in the summer, the brook would become wholly dried up. At the northeast corner of the plaintiff's farm, and on the south side of the brook, there was a small piece of level ground, some ten or fifteen feet wide, and extending up and down the brook about two rods, which was partly on the plaintiff's land, and partly on the defendant's land lying east ; that this piece of flat ground was wet, porous and spongy, so that by digging into it the cavity would fill with water ; that, prior to the act of the plaintiff in laying his aqueduct as hereinafter stated, there was no water apparent on the surface of this piece of flat ground, and no appearance of a spring of water there, but that the water in the soil came from the brook above by percolation through the soft soil and upon the surface of the flat rock under the soil ; that some four or five years previous to the spring of 1852, the plaintiff, by leave of the defendant, dug a hole in this piece of flat ground, a few feet over the line on the defendant's land, and in this hole placed a tub which filled with water, and laid an aqueduct of lead pipe from the tub to his buildings, and from that time up to the spring of 1852, procured in this manner an ample supply of water for his buildings, for which he paid the defendant annually the sum of one dollar and fifty cents ; that in the spring of 1852, there was some difficulty between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the defendant notified the plaintiff to remove his tub and pipe from the defendant's land, and the plaintiff, accordingly, took up his tub, and placed it in a hole in the flat ground on his own side of the line, but within a short distance of it, and also very near the bank of the brook; that his lead pipe was placed in this tub, and that he continued to be well supplied with water until about the first of July, 1852; that the tub, when placed on the plaintiff's own land, was sunk to the depth of a foot or more below the channel of the brook, and that the tub and aqueduct were supplied with water by the filtration of the water from the brook directly, and also through the soil and under the soil, on the defendant's side of the line. The plaintiff's evidence also tended to prove that about the 1st of July, 1852, the defendant dug away and lowered the channel of said brook, beginning some two or three feet above, and east of the plaintiff's corner, and extending twelve or fifteen feet below, so that the water of the brook was thereby made to run in the new channel, two or three feet farther north, and about a foot lower than before; that the defendant also dug a channel from the hole where the plaintiff's tub had formerly stood in his land, out into the channel of the brook, so as to carry all the water which collected there into the new channel he had made for the brook, above the plaintiff's corner; and that the defendant filled up the side of this channel, from the hole or spring to the brook on the side next to the plaintiff's tub with dry hard earth, so as to prevent any filtration of water, through or under the soil on his land, to the plaintiff's tub, and that these acts of the defendant prevented the water from accumulating in the plaintiff's tub, either from the brook directly or through or under the soil of the defendant's land, and that the plaintiff thereby was wholly deprived of water by his said aqueduct; and that these acts of the defendant were not necessary, and were not done by the defendant with any purpose of supplying himself with water, for any purpose, but solely with the design of thereby depriving the plaintiff of water by his aqueduct. The defendant claimed, and his evidence tended to prove, that previous to the plaintiff's putting his tub and pipe into the defendant's land, as above stated, there was an open visible spring of water, where the tub was placed, the water from which flowed north into the brook on the defendant's land in a natural channel, and that there was never any such flow of the water of the brook through or under the soil on the defendant's land, as the plaintiff claimed. The defendant also claimed that the plaintiff's tub, after the same was placed on his own land, was not supplied with water by the natural percolation of the water through the soil, either from the brook, or from the water of this land or spring, but that it was supplied with water from the defendant's spring, through a blind or underground ditch, which the plaintiff had made without his license or permission, and that the only effect of his acts, of which the plaintiff complained, was to restore the flow of the water to its natural condition, as it was before anything had been done by the plaintiff. The defendant also claimed that what was done by him, was done for the purpose of providing water for his pasture, and not to injure the plaintiff; and he also denied making any change of the channel of the brook, as claimed by the plaintiff. The charge of the court relative to the turning of the channel of the brook was not excepted to. In relation to the other part of the case, the court charged (among other things not excepted to) that the defendant had a right to prevent the flow or escape of water from his own land to the plaintiff's tub by any artificial means that the plaintiff had used to obtain it, and that he might lawfully do all that was necessary to restore the water to its natural flow, and that it was not material what his purpose or motive was; and that the defendant would not be liable for any act of his, upon his own land, in preventing the natural flow or escape of water, in or under the soil from his land to the plaintiff's, provided such act was done for the purpose of reasonably providing himself, or his farm or cattle, with a supply of water; but if they found that the acts of the defendant did prevent the usual and natural flow of the water, in or under the ground from the defendant's soil to the plaintiff's, and that these acts were done by the defendant solely with the purpose of injuring the plaintiff, and depriving him of water, and not with any purpose of usefulness to himself, then he would be liable to the plaintiff for such damages as he thereby sustained. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff on all the counts, in his declaration. To so much of the charge as is above detailed, the defendant excepted.

O. H. Smith and F. V. Randall, for the plaintiff.

The opinion of the court was delivered, at the circuit session in September, 1856, by BENNETT, J. This is the first time, within my knowledge, that the question has ever come before our courts, in relation to the rights of adjoining proprietors of lands to water percolating under the surface, through wet and porous ground, and the case may be considered somewhat important in principle, as well as novel, in this State. The court below, on this point, told the jury, in substance, that the defendant had the right to prevent the escape of water from his own land to the plaintiff's tub, which he had sunk on his own land, and that he might lawfully do all that was necessary to restore the water to its original flow, and that it was not material what his motive was; and that he had the right, on his own land, to prevent the natural flow or escape of water, in or under ground, from his to the plaintiff's land, provided it was done to secure, in a reasonable manner, a supply of water for himself, his farm, and cattle; but if done solely to injure the plaintiff, and deprive him of water, and not to benefit himself, then he would be liable. This charge is evidently based upon the ground that there were certain correlative rights existing between these parties, in the use of the water percolating in and under the surface of the earth. The rules of law which govern the use of a stream of water, flowing in its natural course over the surface of lands belonging to different proprietors, are well settled, and the correlative rights of the adjoining proprietors are clearly defined. Each proprietor of the land has the right to have the stream flow in its natural course over his land, and to use the same as he pleases for his own purposes, not inconsistent with a similar right in the proprietors of the land above or below him; but no proprietor above can diminish the quantity or injure the quality of the water, which would otherwise naturally descend, nor can any proprietor below throw back the water upon the proprietor above, without some license or grant. But we think the law governing running streams is not applicable to underground water, and that no light can be obtained from the law of surface streams; and if it is to be established that there are correlative rights existing, between adjoining proprietors of land, to the use of water percolating the earth, an entire new chapter in the law will be necessary to define what these rights are, and to put them on some tangible and practical ground, that the rules concerning them may be applied to common use. But from the very nature of the case, this seems impracticable.

The laws of the existence of water under ground, and of its progress while there, are not uniform, and cannot be known with any degree of certainty, nor can its progress be regulated. It sometimes rises to a great height, and sometimes moves in collateral directions, by some secret influences, beyond our comprehension.

The secret, changeable, and uncontrollable character of underground water, in its operations, is so diverse and uncertain that we cannot well subject it to the regulations of law, nor build upon it a system of rules, as is done in the case of surface streams. Their nature is defined, and their progress over the surface may be seen and known, and is uniform. They are not in the earth and a part of it, and no secret influences move them, but they assume a distinct character from that of the earth, and become subject to a certain law, — the great law of gravitation.

There is, then, no difficulty in recognizing a right to the use of water flowing in a stream as private property, and regulating that use by settled principles of law. We think the practical uncertainties which must ever attend subterranean waters is reason enough why it should not be attempted to subject them to certain and fixed rules of law, and that it is better to leave them to be enjoyed absolutely by the owner of the land, as one of its natural advantages, and in the eye of the law a part of it, and we think we are warranted in this view by well-considered cases.

In the case of Acton v. Blundell et al., 12 M. & W. 324, it was held that the owner of land, who had made a well in it, and thereby enjoyed the benefit of underground water, had no right of action against an adjoining proprietor, who, in sinking for and getting coal from his own soil, in the usual and in a proper manner, caused the well to become dry. A query is added whether it would have made any difference if the well had been enjoyed by the plaintiff for more than twenty years. In the case of Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn., the doctrine is fully advanced that no right is gained by a mere continued preoccupancy of water under the surface by any artificial means for a period of fifteen years or more. The court say, "each owner has an equal and complete right to the use of his land and to the water which is in it;" and they say "the water combined with the earth, or passing through it by percolation, or by filtration, or chemical attraction, has no distinctive character of ownership from the earth itself, any more than the metallic oxyds, of which the earth is composed," and they further add, "water, whether moving or motionless, in the earth, is not, in the eye of the law, distinct from the earth." If it is true that subterranean water is to be treated as a part of the earth, it must follow that there are no correlative rights in the enjoyment of such water, between adjoining proprietors of land, and both the case in the 12th of M. & W. and 20 Conn. proceed upon that ground. The case of Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117, goes upon the same principle, and it was there held that no action would lie against a man who dug a well on his own land, although he thereby took the water from his neighbor's well, in the absence of all right acquired by grant, or an adverse user. The case is really put upon the ground that "every one has the liberty of doing, on his own ground, whatever he pleases, even though he occasion some damage to his neighbor;" and the court say, "there is nothing in the case, then at bar, which limited or restrained the owners of the estates severally, from having the absolute dominion of the soil extending upwards, and below the surface, as far as each pleased." This, in effect, negates the position that there can be, upon common principles, correlative rights in underground water.

The case of Dickinson v. The Grand Junction Canal Company, 9 Eng. Law and Eq. 520, is not opposed to the views taken in the foregoing cases. In that case the water was proved to have been taken from the river, after it formed a part of the stream, not by reasonable use by another riparian proprietor, but by digging a well; and this was treated as a diversion of surface water, and actionable at common law; and, in regard to the abstraction of the water which never did form part of the river, but had been prevented from doing so by the sinking of the wells, it was held, that the mill-owners, being entitled to the benefit of the stream in its natural course, were deprived of part of that benefit, if the natural supply of the stream was cut off, and might have their action, whether the water cut off was a part of an underground watercourse, or percolated through the strata of the earth. In this case the injury complained of was the diminution of water in a surface stream, and the law applicable to surface streams was applied. The cases, cited by the plaintiff's counsel, which relate to surface streams can give little or no aid in the question before us. The case of Smith v. Adams, 6 Paige, 435, is also a case where the underground water, which was cut off by an excavation on the defendant's land, supplied a spring, and this spring caused a flow of surface water, and the decision was, that the person who had the right to the use of the water in its natural course, or by a prescriptive right, out of its natural course, and was injured by the excavation, might have redress for the injury. Here, too, the person complaining was injured in his rights to the use of flowing water. Such is also the case in Bulston v. Benstead, 1 Campbell, 463, and no doubt other cases of a like character may be found in the books.

There is no ground to claim that the plaintiff has been injured in his right to the use of water in a surface stream flowing in its natural channel, so far as the case is now before this court, and he can claim no prescriptive right to the water.

The tub was sunk by the plaintiff on his own land, in 1852, and as his evidence tended to prove, a foot or more below the channel of the brook, and that, from this tub, the water was taken by artificial means for the use of the plaintiff; and the case shows that the plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that this tub was supplied with water, which filtrated under ground from the brook, and also from the adjoining land of the defendant; and the case, so far as it is sent up to us, only concerns the right of the defendant to cut off the filtration of the water from his own land to the plaintiff's tub by artificial means, and the consequences, if wantonly done.

This, then, is fairly a question as to the rights of the plaintiff in underground water. Putting this case, then, upon the ground that the water in question, while in the earth of the defendant, though percolating through it, is not distinct from it, in the eye of the law it becomes an important inquiry whether the act of the defendant, in the obstruction of the underground water upon his own premises, can be made actionable, simply upon the ground that the motive was bad which induced it. The act of the defendant in the obstruction of the water, being in itself lawful, could not subject the defendant to damages unless, by reason thereof, some right of the plaintiff has been violated. The maxim, Sic utere tuo, ut alienum non laedas, applies only to cases where the act complained of violates some legal right of the party: and it has been attempted to be shown that this underground water cannot be made the subject of correlative rights. It is said in Comyns's Digest, under the head of Nuisance, that an action on the case does not lie for the reasonable use of any right, though it be to the annoyance of another. This, it may be said, implies that an action would lie if the use of one's right was unreasonable.

This, no doubt, is true, under proper limitations, as in cases where there is a right common to both parties, as in the use of a public highway, or of the air; or where there is a duty to perform, and a correlative right growing out of it, as the repair of a ruinous house standing so near to the house of another, as to endanger it from its fall. In such a case, no doubt, a repair could be compelled; and in case of the fall, an action would lie for the special damage. There are also many cases in the books, relating to the relative use of surface streams, where the case has turned upon the question, whether the use was reasonable, and for the party's own convenience or benefit, or wanton and malicious, and done to prejudice the rights of another. In such cases there are correlative rights to the use of the water, and the boundary of the right is a reasonable use of it. But such cases have no analogy to the case at bar, and it may be laid down as a position not to be controverted, that an act legal in itself, violating no right, cannot be made actionable on the ground of the motive which induced it. Such was the case of South Royalton Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 27 Vt. 505. If the act is lawful, although it may be prejudicial, it is damnum absque injuria. On this point the case of Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. 261, is a direct authority. There the defendant had built a high fence for the sole purpose of obstructing the lights of his neighbor's house; and it was held, that no action would lie, where the lights were not ancient, and no right had been acquired by grant or user; and that the motive with which the act was done was immaterial. This case goes upon the ground, that the plaintiff was not injured in a legal right.

This is not like the case where the air is contaminated so as to become noxious. There a correlative right is invaded. In the case of Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117, it is true, the court charged the jury that if the defendant dug the well where he did, upon his own land for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff, and not for the purpose of obtaining the water for his own use, the defendant was liable in that action. In that case, the verdict was for the defendant, and the plaintiff was the excepting party. The plaintiff could not complain of that part of the charge; and, in banc, there was no occasion to review that part of it; and it is no point in the decision, though Judge Putnam does remark, in the course of his opinion, that "the rights of the defendant should not be exercised from mere malice, as the judge ruled below," but no such point was in judgment. The exceptions came from the plaintiff, and it can only be regarded as an obiter dictum of the judge; the case found, that the defendant had dug his well in that place on his land, where it was most convenient for him; and we think, as applied to a case like the one then at bar, and the one now before us, the position was unsound, and against principle and authority.

Judgment of the county court reversed, and the cause remanded.¹

SNOW v. PARSONS.

SUPREME COURT OF VERMONT. 1856.

[Reported 28 Vt. 459.]

ACTION on the case for the obstruction of the plaintiff's water-wheel by the tan-bark discharged at the defendants' tannery on the stream above, and suffered to float down to the plaintiff's mill. The action was referred, and the referee reported the following facts.

The plaintiff was the owner of a saw-mill in West Dover, upon a branch of Deerfield River, together with a privilege of water to operate the same from 1842 to 1845, when he sold them, and from 1849, when he re-purchased, until the commencement of this suit.

In 1844 a tannery was erected upon the same stream, about a mile and three fourths above the plaintiff's saw-mill, and was so situated that the tan vats were directly over the stream, and the spent tan was discharged into the stream, and carried by the water down to and by the plaintiff's saw-mill. On the 4th of October, 1849, the defendants purchased the said tannery, and have ever since continued to own and occupy it, using yearly a large amount of tan-bark, which, after being used, was discharged into the stream and suffered to float down the same. A portion of this tan-bark floated down and lodged in the plaintiff's pond, where it accumulated to considerable extent, and some floated into the flume to the plaintiff's mill, which somewhat incommoded him. Sometimes the tan-bark would accumulate so as to somewhat impede the flow of the water into the flume, but it did not appear that the plaintiff had sustained much inconvenience from that cause, as it was easily removed, and the obstruction did not often occur. The tan-bark accumulated in the plaintiff's pond much more rapidly after the defendants commenced operating the tan-works in 1849, and was doubtless owing to the increased quantity of bark used at the tannery; and after October, 1849, portions of it lodged in and upon the plaintiff's saw-mill wheel, whereby the same was impeded and repeatedly stopped, and the plaintiff was thereby subjected to some little delay in operating the mill, and labor in removing the obstruction and getting the wheel in motion. The wheel was of cast iron, and known as the Fergerson reaction-wheel, and was so constructed that when tan-bark lodged in it, it was somewhat difficult to remove it, but it might have been altered without impairing its usefulness, and at a small expense, so that the tan-bark would not impede or affect its operations; and prior to 1846 the wheel used was of a different construction, and was not, and would not be obstructed or injuriously affected in any way, by the floating down of the tan-bark.

Upon the hearing before the referee the defendants offered to prove that it had been the universal and uniform custom and practice in all the counties of this State to discharge the spent bark of tanneries into the streams on which they were situated, ever since the country was first settled, and that dam-owners situated below on the streams had never, so far as the witnesses knew, disputed the right to do so until now; and that tanneries could not be conducted at any profit without that means of disposing of their spent tan-bark, and that the withholding such use of the streams from tanners, would, in the belief of the witnesses, have excluded that branch of industry from this State; and that the same custom and the same practice had uniformly prevailed in all the States and counties of New England, so far as the witnesses had had opportunity of knowing.

To this testimony the plaintiff objected. The defendants admitted that prior to 1844, there was no tannery on this stream. The referee, intending to decide according to law, excluded the testimony offered; and the right of the plaintiff to recover upon the foregoing facts was submitted by the referee to the court; the damages being assessed at forty dollars, if the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

The County Court, September Term, 1854, — Underwood, J., presiding, — rendered judgment, upon the report, for the plaintiff. Exceptions by the defendants.

J. D. Bradley and Butler & Knowlton for the defendants.

Shafter & Davenport for the plaintiff.

The opinion of the court was delivered, at the circuit session in October, by REDFIELD, CH. J. The important and, as I think, the only question in this case, is whether it is proper for extensive tanneries, upon moderate sized streams, to expend their refuse, or spent bark, into the stream. In regard to many uses of the water in streams, it has been so long settled by common consent, or is so obvious in itself, that it is determinable, as matter of law. Such are the uses for irrigation, for propelling machinery, and for watering cattle, and some others. And in regard to some debris or waste deposits in such streams, there would seem to be no question. The uniform practice, the convenience, and in some instances the indispensable necessity, would seem sufficiently to decide such cases. Among these may be named the infusion of soap dyes, and other materials used in manufacturing, into the streams by which the machinery is propelled. The deposit of saw-dust, to some extent, is nearly indispensable in the running of saw-mills, and most other machinery used in the manufacture of wood, and propelled by water power.

The reasonableness of such use must determine the right, and this must depend upon the extent of detriment to the riparian proprietors below. If it essentially impairs the use below, then it is unreasonable and unlawful, unless it is a thing altogether indispensable to any beneficial use at every point of the stream. An extent of deposit, which might be of no account in some streams, might seriously affect the usefulness of others. So, too, a kind of deposit, which would affect one stream seriously, would be of little importance in another. There is no doubt one must be allowed to use a stream in such a manner as to make it useful to himself, even if it do produce slight inconvenience to those below. This is true of everything which we use in common with others. The air is somewhat corrupted by the most ordinary use; large manufacturing establishments affect it still more seriously; and some, by reason of their vicinity to a numerous population, become so offensive and destructive of comfort, and health even, as to be regarded as common nuisances. Within reasonable limits, those who have a common interest in the use of air and running water, must submit to small inconveniences to afford a disproportionate advantage to others.

It seems to us that this question of the reasonableness of the use of a stream, when it is not settled by custom, and is in its nature doubtful, should always be regarded as one of fact, to be determined by the tribunal trying the facts. In the present case it does not seem to have been treated in that light, unless we regard the judgment of the county court in favor of the plaintiff, as determining it. And, as much of the testimony rejected might have had an important bearing upon this question, and no notice is taken of this point either in the report or the judgment, we must suppose it was not the purpose of the County Court to decide the case upon that ground. Indeed, the report furnished no adequate materials for such a determination. That portion of the defendants' offer which tended to show that tanneries could not be operated to any useful purpose, without thus disposing of their waste bark, was almost a cardinal point, in determining the main question, and, if shown to the extent offered, might justify the court in finally requiring the proprietors below to submit to some inconvenience that those above might not be deprived of all benefit of the stream for this kind of manufacture. And the reasonableness of plaintiff's submitting to this inconvenience must depend upon its extent, and the comparative benefit to the defendants, to be judged of by the triers of the facts.

This must be determined upon general principles applicable to the entire business of tanning, and the importance of discharging its waste materials in this mode, and the probable inconvenience of those below. And if, in this view, they regard the use as an unlawful one, then surely the defendants are liable to all damage sustained by the plaintiff, whether he might have used a wheel less liable to such injury, or not.

But if the use is fairly to be regarded as a lawful one, then, probably, the plaintiff should have conformed his machinery to the altered circumstances of the stream. And if the defendants' use of the stream is a lawful and allowable one, it will make no difference that the plaintiff's mill was first erected, if it had not been in operation a sufficient length of time to acquire any prescriptive right to use the water in an extraordinary manner. And as the plaintiff's present wheel was put into his mill after the defendants' tannery was in operation, and his other wheel would not have been unfavorably affected by bark, nothing, by way of prescription, or license, or prior occupancy, can probably be claimed.

And upon the question of the reasonableness of the defendants' use of the stream, it seems to me the uniform custom of the country for generations, would be of some significance in determining its reasonableness. A uniform general custom upon this subject, ought, upon general principles, to have a controlling force. We think, therefore, the case should go back to be determined, upon the question of fact, of the reasonableness of the use by the defendants: 1st, upon general grounds; 2d, the peculiar facts, if any, affecting the reasonableness of the use in this particular case.

In regard to the usage in the country as to tanneries, for generations, without controversy, if shown as offered to be, and if it is all one way, it would have almost the force of law. For all the cases which we have, where reasonable care and diligence can be determined as questions of law, without going to the jury, have grown up out of the practice of particular classes of persons, which, becoming settled and uniform, and known to all, is declared by the court as a rule of law; which, while it was uncertain, was matter of fact to be determined by the jury. A familiar instance of this is the demanding payment, and giving notice of dishonor of bills and notes, which is now fixed to the day the note or bill becomes due, and giving notice by the mail of the next day. Formerly this was submitted to a jury of merchants, who determined the reasonableness of demand and notice upon the particular facts in the case, with reference to the more common usage of merchants.

So, too, in this particular business, if the court were tanners, we might be able to say that bark must, of necessity, be spent in the stream in order to carry on the work at all, or that, in fact, the bark did not essentially injure the proprietors below, or we might know the contrary of both propositions. But not being such, it seems to us as much matter of fact as any other question of reasonable care and diligence.

It is settled law, that every riparian proprietor may use the water for purposes of manufacture, but so use it as not unnecessarily to abridge the use to others; i. e., every such proprietor may use it with care and prudence. What care and prudence is, in such case, must depend upon the facts of each case, the conclusion to be drawn by the triers of the fact. And to assist them in making this conclusion, if they are not themselves experts in the business, they are entitled to have the experience and wisdom of such as are experts, to enable them to judge of the reasonableness of the particular use.

The measure of reasonable care and prudence in such cases, is that which prudent and careful men exercise in the management of their own business. And how are we to know this without proof, in those departments of business with which we are not familiar? Proof that all prudent and careful men, in the management of this business, pursued a given course, and that others acquiesced in that course, without objection, would seem to be of the very essence of the inquiry before the jury, in such cases.

Judgment reversed, and case remanded.¹

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1865.

[Reported 10 All. 106.]

TORT to recover damages for turning a stream of water so that it flowed upon the plaintiff's close in West Newton.

At the trial in the superior court, before Brigham, J., the evidence tended to show that the defendant owned a lot of land lying to the west of the plaintiff's; that along the easterly line of the defendant's lot there was a way, which extended further to the north; that on the west side of the way, and north of the defendant's lot, a ditch was dug in 1863 which extended down to within a few feet of the defendant's lot; that a few feet below the northerly line of the defendant's lot there was a low place in the way, below which deep ruts had been made; that in March 1863 the melting of the snow and the spring rains caused a considerable flow of surface water from the land to the north of the defendant's lot, through the ditch, and over the way and through the ruts upon the defendant's lot; and that the defendant thereupon placed turfs in the ruts just below the low place in the way, and upon his own land, for the purpose of protecting the way from injury, and thereby caused the water to flow off upon the plaintiff's land.

The defendant asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "If the defendant placed sods in the cart ruts upon the way over his own land from time to time as the ruts were made by the passing of the cart, and he did this merely to prevent the water from making channels of such ruts, and gullying, washing away and injuring said way and the land of the defendant, and such water was not that of a watercourse, but merely surface water caused by the melting of snows and the fall of rains in the spring, and flowed on to the defendant's land from land above his own, and if in consequence of the placing of said sods the said water which would otherwise have run down said ruts was diverted upon the plaintiff's land, the defendant is not liable therefor. The plaintiff had no right that the ruts made on the defendant's land should be kept open."

The judge declined so to rule, and instructed the jury as follows : "The plaintiff and defendant, being conterminous proprietors, had each the right to develop, improve and enjoy his own estate ; and if, as an incident to the exercise of this right, the estate of the other was injured, he would have no legal remedy for such injury. Each, on his own estate, might do acts to prevent the other's exercise of this right from being injurious to him ; and if in so doing the other's development, improvement and enjoyment of his estate was restricted, for such restrictions, if injurious, he would have no legal remedy. But neither would have the right to transfer or divert a cause of injury to him, arising from the exercise of the right stated, by the other, to another conterminous proprietor.

"To apply these principles to the present case. The defendant, for the purpose of repairing and enjoying the way over his estate, had a right to exclude surface water from his estate and from his way, which flowed from conterminous estates ; and if as an incident to the exercise of this right such surface water flowed upon the plaintiff's land, the plaintiff has no remedy against the defendant ; if the defendant failed to exercise this right, and the consequence of this failure was that water flowed from estates conterminous to that of the defendant upon the defendant's land, and thence upon the plaintiff's land, to his injury, he would have no remedy against the defendant ; but if surface water flowing from land conterminous with the land of the defendant upon the defendant's land, which water in its natural course would not have flowed upon the plaintiff's land, was by the act of the defendant diverted thence upon the plaintiff's land to his injury, the plaintiff would have a remedy against the defendant for such injury, notwithstanding the act of diverting such surface water by the defendant was an act of repair of his way, and was for the purpose of preventing said way from being injured by such surface water."

The judge further instructed the jury that "the defendant could have prevented the water from coming upon his own land, and if in doing so he had diverted the water upon the land of the plaintiff, he would not be liable for so doing ; but if the defendant suffered the water to flow in upon his land, then the case was different, and having once suffered the water to come upon his land, if he diverted it upon the land of the plaintiff, to his injury, where it would not have gone in its natural course, he was liable ; and if the turfs placed in the ruts by the defendant caused water thus to flow upon the plaintiff's land which but for said turfs would not have gone there, then the defendant is liable."

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant alleged exceptions.

BIGELOW, C. J. It seems to us that the instructions for which the defendant asked should have been given, and that those under which the case was submitted to the jury were not in accordance with the principles recognized and adopted in cases recently adjudicated by this court. The right of an owner of land to occupy and improve it in such manner and for such purposes as he may see fit, either by changing the surface or the erection of buildings or other structures thereon, is not restricted or modified by the fact that his own land is so situated with reference to that of adjoining owners that an alteration in the mode of its improvement or occupation in any portion of it will cause water, which may accumulate thereon by rains and snows falling on its surface or flowing on to it over the surface of adjacent lots, either to stand in unusual quantities on other adjacent lands, or pass into and over the same in greater quantities or in other directions than they were accustomed to flow. Luther v. Winnisimmet Co., 9 Cush. 171; Flagg v. Worcester, 13 Gray, 601; Dickinson v. Worcester, 7 Allen, 19. The point of these decisions is, that where there is no watercourse by grant or prescription, and no stipulation exists between conterminous proprietors of land concerning the mode in which their respective parcels shall be occupied and improved, no right to regulate or control the surface drainage of water can be asserted by the owner of one lot over that of his neighbor. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cœlum, is a general rule, applicable to the use and enjoyment of real property, and the right of a party to the free and unfettered control of his own land above, upon and beneath the surface cannot be interfered with or restrained by any considerations of injury to others which may be occasioned by the flow of mere surface water in consequence of the lawful appropriation of land by its owner to a particular use or mode of enjoyment. Nor is it at all material, in the application of this principle of law, whether a party obstructs or changes the direction and flow of surface water by preventing it from coming within the limits of his land, or by erecting barriers or changing the level of the soil, so as to turn it off in a new course after it has come within his boundaries. The obstruction of surface water or an alteration in the flow of it affords no cause of action in behalf of a person who may suffer loss or detriment therefrom against one who does no act inconsistent with the due exercise of dominion over his own soil. This principle seems to have been lost sight of in the instructions given to the jury. While the right of the owner of land to improve it and to change its surface so as to exclude surface water from it is fully recognized, even although such exclusion may cause the water to flow on to a neighbor's land, it seems to be assumed that he would be liable in damages, if, after suffering the water to come on his land, he obstructed it and caused it to flow in a new direction on land of a conterminous proprietor where it had not previously been accustomed to flow. But we know of no such distinction. A party may improve any portion of his land, although he may thereby cause the surface water flowing thereon, whencesoever it may come, to pass off in a different direction and in larger quantities than previously. If such an act causes damages to adjacent land, it is damnum absque injuria. On this point the instructions were clearly erroneous.

McCORMICK v. HORAN.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1880.

[Reported 81 N. Y. 86.]

APPEAL from judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, in the Fourth Judicial Department, affirming a judgment in favor of plaintiffs entered upon a decision of the court on trial at Special Term.

This action was brought to restrain defendant from obstructing the flow of water in a watercourse running from the lands of plaintiffs on to and across the lands of defendant below, and to compel him to remove obstructions placed by him in the stream.

The facts found were substantially these: Plaintiffs operated a quarry upon their lands near said watercourse, which started from a spring upon plaintiffs' lands. After the lands were cleared up over which the stream passed, and many years prior to the acts complained of, the owners, in order to direct and control the flow of the water in the stream, dug ditches and confined the flow therein; plaintiffs dug such a ditch on their lands following the general course of the natural stream to the boundary line of their lands and those of defendant adjoining. This ditch was continued by the then owner of defendant's premises across the same. This ditch was from time to time changed and improved, and when defendant went into possession, the ditch across his lands was walled up and covered over. The ditch was capable of holding all the water that ran in the stream except in cases of high water. Plaintiffs worked their quarry during the summer season, and had at the time of the occurrence in question excavated above three fourths of an acre to a depth of from five to twelve feet. Small watercourses were cut in the progress of the excavation, the water therefrom ran into the bed of the quarry; in the winter the snows drifted into the quarry and melted; in the spring the surface waters from the surrounding lands also flowed into it. The waters so accumulating in said quarry, if it had not been excavated, would naturally descend and flow into said watercourse. In the spring of each year plaintiffs pumped the water from the quarry into said watercourse. The court found that the flow of water while the pumps are at work is increased in amount, but that the flow is no greater than in the earlier spring months, and that the capacity of the watercourse as it runs in said ditch is ample to carry off all the water pumped therein at any time, together with the other water running therein. In May, 1876, and before plaintiffs had begun to pump the water from their quarry, defendant took up the stone covering of the ditch upon his land, filled it with earth and stone so as to prevent the flow of water therein, and built a dam across said watercourse near the line between his and plaintiffs' land, which prevented the flow of any water therein until the water had risen to the top of said dam, thereby causing the water to set back into and to fill up plaintiffs' quarry and to overflow their adjoining lands.

W. F. Cogswell, for appellant.

S. E. Filkins, for respondents.

ANDREWS, J. Watercourses are the means which nature has provided for the drainage of the country through which they pass, and from the natural servitude of lands upon a watercourse to receive the waters flowing therein from the lands above, springs the right of the owner of the superior heritage to have the water from his lands, of which the watercourse is the natural outlet, drained into and carried off thereby, and the duty of the owner of the inferior and servient tenement not to interfere with or obstruct its passage. But the right to the use of a watercourse for the discharge of surface or other waters exists only in respect of waters of which the watercourse is the natural outlet, and it does not justify the diversion and turning of the water of one stream into another, not its natural channel, thereby subjecting lands on the stream into which the diversion is made to the servitude or easement of a water-way for the water thus discharged into it. This is the principle upon which several of the cases to which the appellant refers were decided, and they have no application to the case before us. Merritt v. Parker, 1 N. J. 460; Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90; Mayor, &c. of Baltimore v. Appold, 42 Md. 442.

The right of an owner of lands, through which a watercourse runs, to have the same kept open, and to discharge therein the surface water, which naturally flows thereto, is not however limited to the drainage and discharge of surface water into the stream in the same precise manner as when the land was in a state of nature, and unchanged by cultivation or improvements. The owner of lands drained by a watercourse may change and control the natural flow of the surface water therein, and by ditches or otherwise accelerate the flow, or increase the volume of water which reaches the stream; and if he does this in the reasonable use of his own premises, he exercises only a legal right, and incurs no liability to a lower proprietor. Waffle v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 11; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Pa. St. 154. This right is subject to the qualification that one owner cannot, by artificial arrangements on his land, concentrate and discharge into the stream surface water, in quantities beyond the natural capacity of the stream, to the damage of other owners. Noonan v. City of Albany, 79 N. Y. 470. The interests of society are promoted by the cultivation and improvement of the soil, the working of mines, and by other industries connected with the use of land; and the rule of law does not prevent the use of watercourses for artificial drainage, although the volume of the stream is thereby somewhat enlarged, and the water is discharged at a different time or manner from what it would be if the land was kept in a state of nature, provided no material injury is occasioned to other riparian owners. These views are decisive of this case. The plaintiffs in opening the quarry on their premises, were exercising a lawful right. The excavation made formed a reservoir into which the surface water from the contiguous lands collected, and in the spring, when the plaintiffs commenced their operations, they pumped this water, together with that arising from the melting snows, and what came from the small watercourses cut off by the excavation, into the watercourse which lower down crossed the defendant's farm.

The court found that this water, if the excavation had not been made, would have naturally descended and flowed into the stream, and that although the flow of water when the pumping was going on was greater than it otherwise would have been, the natural capacity of the watercourse was sufficient to carry off the water pumped into it, together with the other water running in the stream, and there was no finding that the defendant sustained any damage from the acts of the plaintiffs.

Under these circumstances, the act of the defendant, in filling up the channel and obstructing the flow of the water, was unlawful, and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

SUPREME COURT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE. 1880.

CASE, for diverting the water of a natural stream from the plaintiff's aqueduct. The defendant offered a brief statement alleging that the plaintiff had previously filed a bill in equity for an injunction against the defendant, based substantially on the facts now stated in his declaration, upon which an application for a temporary injunction had been denied after a full hearing of the facts before one of the justices of the court, and the equity suit had been entered "neither party," after the defendant had filed an answer denying the equity of the bill. No replication was filed, and no decree was ever entered up. The brief statement was rejected, and the defendant excepted. The defendant requested the following instructions to the jury, which the court declined to give, and the defendant excepted: "If the jury find that what Stone did was done from malice, still he is not liable unless his act caused actual damage to the plaintiff, and then only for the actual damages caused to the plaintiff; and the verdict in that case would settle nothing as to the legal rights of the parties." Verdict for the plaintiff.

Ladd and Fletcher, for the defendant.

Ray, Drew, and Heywood, for the plaintiff.

CLARK, J. The facts stated in the brief statement constituted no defence, and it was properly rejected. The proceedings in the bill in equity were immaterial. No decree was entered up. If the judge who heard the application for a temporary injunction denied it on the merits, it would not be a bar to a subsequent hearing on the bill, and it is no bar to this suit. The request for instructions, that the defendant was not liable unless his act caused actual damage to the plaintiff, was rightly refused. The plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for nominal damages upon proof of the infringement of his right, although no actual injury was shown. Tillotson v. Smith, 32 N. H. 90; *Bassett v. COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1881. ✓

[Reported 86 N. Y. 140.]

APPEAL from judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, in the second judicial department, entered upon an order made December 8, 1879, which affirmed a judgment in favor of plaintiff entered upon the report of a referee. (Reported, 19 Hun, 320.)

This action was brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the obstruction of the natural flow of surface water from plaintiff's lot over and across that of defendant.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

C. E. Cuddeback, for appellant.

J. M. Allerton, for respondent.

ANDREWS, J. This is not the case of a natural watercourse. A natural watercourse is a natural stream, flowing in a defined bed or channel, with banks and sides, having permanent sources of supply. It is not essential to constitute a watercourse that the flow should be uniform or uninterrupted. The other elements existing, a stream does not lose the character of a natural watercourse, because in times of drought, the flow may be diminished, or temporarily suspended. It is sufficient if it is usually a stream of running water. (Angell on Water-courses, § 4; Luther v. The Winnisimmet Co., 9 Cush. 171.)

The parties in this case own adjacent lots on a street near a village, but not within the corporate limits. The findings are, that the natural formation of the land was such, that surface water from rains and melting snows would descend from different directions, and accumulate in the street in front of the plaintiff's lot, in varying quantities according to the nature of the seasons, sometimes extending quite back upon the plaintiff's lot; that in times of unusual amount of rain, or thawing snow, such accumulations, before the grading of the defendant's lot, were accustomed to run off over a natural depression in the surface of the land across the defendant's lot, and thence over the lands of others, to the Neversink River; that when the amount of water was small, it would soak away in the ground; that in 1871, the defendant built a house on his lot, and used the earth excavated in digging the cellar to improve and better the condition of his lot, by grading and filling up the lot and sidewalk in front of it, about twelve inches, and on a subsequent occasion he filled in several inches more; that in the spring of 1875 there was an unusually large accumulation of water from melting snow and rains in front of, and about the plaintiff's premises, so that the water ran into the cellar of his house, and occasioned serious damage; that the filling in of the defendant's lot had the effect to increase the accumulation of water on the plaintiff's lot, and contributed to the injury to his property.

There was no natural watercourse over the defendant's lot. The surface water, by reason of the natural features of the ground, and the force of gravity, when it accumulated beyond a certain amount in front of the plaintiff's lot, passed upon, and over the lot of the defendant. The discharge was not constant, or usual, but occasional only. There was no channel or stream, in the usual sense of those terms. In an undulating country, there must always be valleys and depressions, to which water, from rains or snow, will find its way from the hill-sides, and be finally discharged into some natural outlet. But this does not constitute such valleys or depressions, watercourses. Whether, when the premises of adjoining owners are so situated, that surface water falling upon one tenement, naturally descends to and passes over the other, the incidents of a watercourse apply to, and govern the rights of the respective parties, so that the owner of the lower tenement may not, even in good faith and for the purpose of improving or building upon his own land, obstruct the flow of such water to the injury of the owner above, is the question to be determined in this case. This question does not seem to have been authoritatively decided in this State. It was referred to by Denio, Ch. J., in Goodale v. Tuttle, 29 N. Y. 467, where he said: "And in respect to the running off of surface-water caused by rain or snow, I know of no principle which will prevent the owner of land from filling up the wet and marshy places on his own soil, for its amelioration and his own advantage, because his neighbor's land is so situated as to be incommoded by it. Such a doctrine would militate against the well-settled rule, that the owner of land has full dominion over the whole space above and below the surface." The case in which these observations were made did not call for the decision of the question, but they show the opinion of a great judge upon the point now in judgment. Similar views have been expressed in subsequent cases in this court, although in none of them, it seems, was the question before the court for decision. (Vanderwiele v. Taylor, 65 N. Y. 341; Lynch v. The Mayor, 76 Id. 60.) The question has been considered by courts in other States, and has been decided in different ways. In some, the doctrine of the civil law has been adopted as the rule of decision. By that law, the right of drainage of surface waters, as between owners of adjacent lands, of different elevations, is governed by the law of nature. The lower proprietor is bound to receive the waters which naturally flow from the estate above, provided the industry of man has not created or increased the servitude. (Corp. Jur. Civ. 39, tit. 3, §§ 2, 3, 4, 5; Domat [Cush. ed.], 616; Code Napoléon, art. 640; Code Louisiana, art. 656.) The courts of Pennsylvania, Illinois, California, and Louisiana, have adopted this rule, and it has been referred to with approval by the courts of Ohio and Missouri. (Martin v. Riddle, 26 Penn. St. 415; Kauffman v. Griesemer, Id. 407; Gillham v. Madison Co. R. R. Co., 49 Ill. 484; Gormley v. Sanford, 52 Id. 158; Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 346; Delahoussaye v. Judice, 13 La. Ann. 587; Hays v. Hays, 19 La. 351; Butler v. Peck, 16 Ohio St. 334; Laumier v. Francis, 23 Mo. 181.) On the other hand, the courts of Massachusetts, New Jersey, New Hampshire, and Wisconsin, have rejected the doctrine of the civil law, and hold that the relation of dominant and servient tenements does not by the common law apply between adjoining lands of different owners, so as to give the upper proprietor the legal right, as an incident of his estate, to have the surface water falling on his land discharged over the land of the lower proprietor, although it naturally finds its way there; and that the lower proprietor may lawfully, for the improvement of his estate and in the course of good husbandry, or to make erections thereon, fill up the low places on his land, although by so doing he obstructs, or prevents, the surface water from passing thereon from the premises above, to the injury of the upper proprietor. (Luther v. The Winnisimmet Co., 9 Cush. 171; Parks v. Newburyport, 10 Gray, 28; Dickinson v. Worcester, 7 Allen, 19; Gannon v. Hargadon, 10 Id. 106; Bowlsby v. Speer, 2 Vroom, 351; Pettigrew v. Evansville, 25 Wis. 223; Hoyt v. Hudson, 27 Id. 656; Sweet v. Cutts, 50 N. H. 439.) It may be observed that in Pennsylvania, house lots in towns, and cities, seem to be regarded as not subject to the rule declared in the other cases in that State, in respect to surface drainage. (Bentz v.

Armstrong, 8 Watts & S. 40.) And in Livingston v. McDonald, 21 Iowa, 160, the court, in an opinion by Dillon, J., after stating the civil law doctrine, say, that it may be doubted whether it will be adopted by the common law courts of this country, so far as to preclude the lower owner from making in good faith improvements which would have the effect to prevent the water of the upper estate from flowing or passing away. Professor Washburn states, that the prevailing doctrine seems to be that if for the purposes of improving and cultivating his land, a landowner raises or fills it, so that the water which falls in rain or snow upon an adjacent owner's land, and which formerly flowed on to the first mentioned parcel, is prevented from so doing, to the injury of the adjacent parcel, the owner of the latter is without remedy, since the other party has done no more than he had a legal right to do. (Wash. on Easements [2d ed.], 431.)

Upon this state of the authorities, we are at liberty to adopt such rule on the subject as we may deem most consonant with the demands of justice, having in view on the one hand individual rights, and on the other the interests of society at large. Upon consideration of the question, we are of opinion that the rule stated by Denio, Ch. J., in Goodale v. Tuttle, is the one best adapted to our condition, and accords with public policy, while at the same time it does not deprive the owner of the upper tenement of any legal right of property. The maxim, Aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat, expresses the general law which governs the rights of owners of property on watercourses. The owners of land on a watercourse are not owners of the water which flows in it. But each owner is entitled by virtue of his ownership of the soil to the reasonable use of the water as it passes his premises, for domestic and other uses, not inconsistent with a like reasonable use of the stream by owners above and below him. Such use is incident to his right of property in the soil. But he cannot divert, or unreasonably obstruct, the passage of the water to the injury of other proprietors. These familiar principles are founded upon the most obvious dictates of natural justice and public policy. The existence of streams is a permanent provision of nature, open to observation by every purchaser of land through which they pass. The multiplied uses to which in civilized society the water of rivers and streams is applied, and the wide injury which may result from an unreasonable interference with the order of nature, forbid an exclusive appropriation by any individual of the water in a natural watercourse, or any unreasonable interruption in the flow. It is said, that the same principle of following the order of nature should be applied between coterminous proprietors, in determining the right of mere surface drainage. But it is to be observed, that the law has always recognized a wide distinction between the right of an owner to deal with surface water falling or collecting on his land, and his right in the water of a natural watercourse. In such water, before it leaves his land and becomes part of a definite watercourse, the owner of the land is deemed to have an absolute property, and he may appropriate it to his exclusive use, or get rid of it in any way he can, provided only that he does not cast it by drains, or ditches, upon the land of his neighbor; and he may do this, although by so doing he prevents the water reaching a natural watercourse, as it formerly did, thereby occasioning injury to mill-owners, or other proprietors on the stream. So also he may by digging on his own land intercept the percolating waters which supply his neighbor's spring. Such consequential injury gives no right of action. (Acton v. Blundell, 12 M. & W. 324; Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Exch. 369; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39.) Now, in these cases there is an interference with natural laws. But those laws are to be construed in connection with social laws and the laws of property. The interference in these cases with natural laws is justified, because the general law of society is, that the owner of land has full dominion over what is above, upon, or below the surface, and the owner in doing the acts supposed, is exercising merely a legal right. The owner of wet and spongy land cannot, it is true, by drains or other artificial means, collect the surface water into channels and discharge it upon the land of his neighbor to his injury. This is alike the rule of the civil and common law. (Corp. Jur. Civ. 39, tit. 3, §§ 2, 3, 4, 5; Noonan v. City of Albany, 79 N. Y. 475; Miller v. Laubach, 47 Penn. St. 154.) But it does not follow, we think, that the owner of land, which is so situated that the surface-waters from the lands above naturally descend upon and pass over it, may not in good faith, and for the purpose of building upon or improving his land, fill or grade it, although thereby the water is prevented from reaching it, and is retained upon the lands above. There is a manifest distinction between casting water upon another's land, and preventing the flow of surface water upon your own. Society has an interest in the cultivation and improvement of lands, and in the reclamation of waste lands. It is also for the public interest that improvements shall be made, and that towns and cities shall be built. To adopt the principle that the law of nature must be observed in respect to surface drainage, would, we think, place undue restriction upon industry, and enterprise, and the control by an owner of his property. Of course in some cases the opposite principle may cause injury to the upper proprietor. But the question should, we think, be determined largely upon considerations of public policy and general utility. Which rule will on the whole best subserve the public interests and is most reasonable in practice? For the reasons stated, we think the rule of the civil law should not be adopted in this State. The case before us is an illustration of the impolicy of following it. Several house lots (substantially village lots) are crossed by the depression. They must remain unimproved if the right claimed by the plaintiff exists. It is better, we think, to establish a rule which will permit the reclamation and improvement of low and waste lands, to one which will impose upon them a perpetual servitude, for the purpose of drainage, for the benefit of upper proprietors. We do not intend to say that there may not be cases which, owing to special conditions and circumstances, should be exceptions to the general rule declared. But this case is within it, and we think the judgment below should be affirmed.

[Reported 1 Lev. 176.]

TRESPASS for breaking his close ; the defendant prescribes, That all the inhabitants of the vill, time out of memory, &c., had used to dance there at all times of the year at their free will, for their recreation, and so justifies to dance there : issue was on the prescription, and a verdict for the defendant, and to save his costs the plaintiff moved in arrest of judgment, that this prescription to dance in the freehold of another, and spoil his grass, was void, especially as it is laid, viz. at all times of the year, and not at seasonable times ; and that 't was also ill laid in the inhabitants, who although they may prescribe in easements, as 6 Co. Gateward's Case, and some other books are, yet they ought to be easements of necessity, as ways to a church, &c., and not for pleasure only, as this case is. Secondly, If it be good, it ought to have been laid by way of custom in the town, and not by prescription in the persons ; and a case was cited, where 't was so adjudged on a demurrer ; but by the court this is a good custom, and it is necessary for inhabitants to have their recreation. And as to the second, that though perhaps it had been ill on a demurrer, yet issue being taken thereon, and found for the defendant, 't is good ; and judgment was given for the defendant.¹

TYSON v. SMITH.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1838.

[Reported 9 A. & E. 406.]

ERROR to the Court of Queen's Bench in an action of trespass quare clausum, in which judgment had been entered for the defendant. The case was argued before TINDAL, C. J., BOSANQUET, COLTMAN, and VAUGHAN, JJ., PARKE, ALDERSON, and GURNEY, BB.¹

W. H. Watson, for the plaintiff.

Cresswell, for the defendant.

TINDAL, C. J., delivered the judgment of the court.

In this case, the issues raised on the third and fifth pleas, which go to the whole action, have been found for the defendant below, and judgment has been given thereon accordingly in his favor; and this writ of error is brought to reverse such judgment, on the ground that the custom set forth in those pleas, and upon which the whole of the defendant's justification rests, is unreasonable, and therefore bad in law.

The third plea (and it will be unnecessary to give a separate consideration to the fifth, as the same objections apply equally to both) begins by stating the existence of a fair by prescription to be held on some part of the commons and waste grounds of the manor of Westward, in the county of Cumberland, to be appointed for that purpose by the lord of the manor, on Monday after the feast of Pentecost in every year, and afterwards on each alternate Monday until the feast of All Souls; and then alleges a custom within the said manor, that every liege subject of the realm exercising the trade or calling of a victualler, at a reasonable time before the first day of the fair, has been used and accustomed, and of right ought, to enter upon that part of the commons or waste ground which had been set out for holding of the fair, and, for the more conveniently carrying on his trade, to erect a booth and stall, and to put and place posts and tables there, and to continue the same so erected, put, and placed until a reasonable time after the last of the said fairs so holden, yielding and paying therefor to the lord of the manor for the time being the sum of 2d. when lawfully demanded. The plea then proceeds to justify the trespasses alleged to have been committed, under this custom. The existence of the prescriptive right to the fair is admitted upon the pleadings; and nothing is traversed but the existence of the custom, which custom is found by the jury. And the question before us is, whether the custom is a good custom, or unreasonable, and therefore void in law.

It is an acknowledged principle that, to give validity to a custom, — which has been well described to be an usage, which obtains the force of law, and is, in truth, the binding law, within a particular district or at a particular place, of the persons and things which it concerns (see Davies's Reports, 31, 32), — it must be certain, reasonable in itself, commencing from time immemorial, and continued without interruption. Now, of these several requisites to the validity of a custom, the only one which is brought in question on the present occasion is, whether the custom is reasonable or not; and this is a question which it belongs to the judges of the land to determine.

The question, what customs are reasonable and what are not, is one upon which the books are not altogether silent. A custom is not unreasonable merely because it is contrary to a particular maxim or rule of the common law, for Consuetudo ex certa causa rationabili usitata privat communem legem (Co. Litt. 113 a), as the custom of gavel-kind and borough English, which are directly contrary to the law of descent, or, again, the custom of Kent, which is contrary to the law of escheats. Nor is a custom unreasonable because it is prejudicial to the interests of a private man, if it be for the benefit of the Commonwealth, as the custom to turn the plough upon the headland of another, in favor of husbandry, or to dry nets on the land of another, in favor of fishing and for the benefit of navigation.

But, on the other hand, a custom that is contrary to the public good, or injurious or prejudicial to the many, and beneficial only to some particular person, is repugnant to the law of reason; for it could not have had a reasonable commencement: as a custom set up in a manor, on the part of the lord, that the commoner cannot turn in his cattle until the lord has put in his own, is clearly bad; for it is injurious to the multitude, and beneficial only to the lord. (Yearb. Trin. 2 H. 4, fol. 24 B. pl. 20.) So a custom that the lord of the manor shall have £3 for every pound breach of any stranger (21 H. 4);¹ or that the lord of the manor may detain a distress taken upon his demesnes, until fine be made for the damage, at the lord's will (Litt. § 212). In all these, and many other instances of similar customs which are to be found in the books, the customs themselves are held to be void, on the ground of their having had no reasonable commencement, but as being founded in wrong and usurpation, and not on the voluntary consent of the people to whom they relate.

But the reasonableness of the custom in the present case is not impeached on any ground of this nature. The present custom is, in fact, in favor of the many; and the only party against whom it is set up, and by whom it is now opposed, is the lord of the manor. The grounds upon which this custom is contended to be void on the present occasion appear to be reducible to three.

First, that it is so general that it ceases to be a custom, or pleadable as such, but is part of the common law; secondly, that, by reason of its generality and extent, it cannot be carried into execution, and cannot therefore be considered as a reasonable custom; and, lastly, that the right claimed amounts to a profit à prendre out of land, and cannot therefore be claimed as a customary right.

As to the first objection, admitting, for the purpose of argument, that a custom which would comprehend within it all the liege subjects of the Crown would be bad, on the ground of its amounting to the common law, we think the custom before us is not of that description. For in the present custom there are three restrictions which necessarily limit its generality. The parties who claim the benefit of it must be victuallers; they must be victuallers coming to keep the fair; and they must come at the precise period of the year at which the fair is fixed.

Now, under the description of victuallers mentioned in the custom, we cannot consider that very large body of persons to be comprehended who, in ancient times, appear to have been classed under that designation by the Statutes referred to in the argument. But we think the plea must be taken to speak in the language of the time at which it is pleaded; and, as the only term used is that of a victualler, it must be understood those only are comprehended who are now so termed, that is, persons authorized by law to keep houses of entertainment for the public. This removes the case at once from the application of the case of Fitch v. Rawling, 2 H. Bl. 393, where the custom comprehended all the liege subjects of the Crown being in the parish at any time.

But it is said the number of these victuallers may be so large, and the space occupied by each so great, as that the whole portion of the common set out for the fair may be taken by them in exclusion of the rest. If this argument were to prevail, it is manifest that it would be equally applicable with respect to every particular branch of traders who frequent the fair. The sellers of corn, or of cattle, the persons who deposit their cloth, the dealers in earthen ware, and the like, might with equal show of reason be stated by possibility to become occupiers of the whole ground to the exclusion of the rest. But it is obvious that this is not an argument against the custom being reasonable in its original commencement, or against the prescription for the fair being a reasonable prescription; it is an objection only as to the mode of exercising the rights so claimed, whether under the custom or the prescription. An inconvenience of this description will provide its own remedy: if it occurs once, it will not be likely to occur again. It is in the highest degree improbable that it should ever occur at all. A little previous inquiry will at all times prevent its recurrence. And in Bennington v. Taylor, 2 Lutw. 1517, where it was contended that a prescription was uncertain, and therefore void, which claimed toll for a stall, and the land prope et circa stallam, &c., the objection was not allowed; for this, it was said, “shall be ascertained by the common usage of the fair.” And these are precisely the points of consideration to which the judges must advert, when called upon to determine whether the custom is void or not. It is not void as being against law; and, if alleged to be void because inconvenient in a high degree in its enjoyment, and therefore unreasonable, they must look to the probabilities of the case, and be satisfied that the inconvenience is real, general, and extensive, before they hold a custom bad upon that ground, which a jury have found to exist, and to have been acted upon from beyond the time of legal memory.

As to the objection, that this is a bad custom as against the owner of the soil; that all the authorities confine a claim under a custom to matters of easement only, whereas this is a matter of profit in alieno solo, inasmuch as the soil must be disturbed by the erection of the stall: admitting this to be the case, which is left extremely doubtful on the pleadings in this case, yet the distinction between this custom and others to which reference was made is, that it gives a certain profit to the owner of the soil for the use of the same; and whether that is a full compensation or not, is not the question. At the early time at which this custom originated, it may have been a profit to the lord, and at all events it may have been an object to him with respect to the profits of his fair to give encouragement to those who would erect booths and stalls for the entertainment of strangers coming to the fair. It is clear that a prescription for a certain toll by way of stallage is good, notwithstanding toll and stallage are different things; as was held in the case of Bennington v. Taylor, 2 Lutw. 1517, above referred to; and, if the lord of the fair can justify distraining for such toll under a prescription, there seems no reason why the person who uses the stall on payment of the toll, and who cannot prescribe either in a que estate or in himself and his ancestors, being a stranger, should not justify under such a custom as the present.

The custom, in fact, comes at last to an agreement, which has been evidenced by such repeated acts of assent on both sides from the earliest times, beginning before time of memory and continuing down to our own times, that it has become the law of the particular place.

We therefore think the custom set out on the pleadings is a good custom, and affirm the judgment of Queen's Bench.

ACKERMAN v. SHELP. ✓

SUPREME COURT OF NEW JERSEY. 1825.

[Reported 3 Halst. 125.]

THIS was an action of trespass brought by Ackerman against Shelp for entering his close and pulling down and removing his fence.

The defendant pleaded the general issue, and gave notice with it of the special matter which he intended to offer in evidence. The notices were in substance as follows:¹

4. That there is, and from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary hath been, a laudable custom used and approved of by all the inhabitants of the town of Aquackanunck to pass and repass into and over the said close to the said Passaic River to water.

6. That there was, and from time immemorial had been, a custom for all persons taking lumber to Aquackanunck for market, to store it on the locus in quo until it should be carried aboard of vessels for transportation to market.

7. That John Van Wagoner is seised in his demesne as of fee of and in a certain messuage with the appurtenances adjoining the said close, and that the said John and all those whose estate he hath, from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, have been used and accustomed to have a right of way over and upon the said close, for himself and his tenants and cattle, &c., and that the defendant is tenant of the said messuage with the appurtenances, &c.

There was also another action between the same parties for a trespass upon the same premises to which the defendant had pleaded the general issue and given notices. The second and fifth notices in this second action were the same in substance as the sixth and seventh notices above stated.

Van Arsdale, for the plaintiff, now moved to strike out the notices.

Frelinghuysen and Hornblower, contra.

FORD, J.² The fourth notice alleges a custom in Aquackanunck for the inhabitants of the town to take their cattle over the locus in quo to water; the sixth alleges a custom for all persons taking lumber to Aquackanunck for market, to store it on the locus in quo till it shall be carried on board of vessels for transportation to market; and the seventh alleges a prescription in the que estate for a right of way to water over the locus in quo.

I will not consume much time in remarking that a right to store lumber, is a profit in another's soil that must be prescribed for in a que estate and cannot be claimed by custom (6 Co. 59 b; 4 T. Rep. 718); because I place my objection to these three notices on another ground, which is that "so much of the common law" as respects rights accruing by custom and prescription has not been "heretofore practised" in New Jersey (Cons. of N. J. § 22), and these doctrines could not now be introduced without doubtful if not dangerous consequences. The country could not have progressed till this time without a single instance of a right being established on either of these grounds in our courts of justice, if these doctrines had been received here with the common law. "'Time of memory' hath been long ago ascertained by law to commence from the beginning of the reign of Richard the First, and any custom may be destroyed by evidence of its non-existence in any part of the long period from that time to the present" (2 Bl. Com. 31). This is sufficient to destroy all common law customs in New Jersey, for the country was not discovered by civilized inhabitants, and civil rights could not consequently have been in use, till more than three hundred years after the beginning of the reign of Richard the First. In most towns standing on navigable water are many uninclosed water lots not applicable to agriculture nor wanted for commercial purposes as yet, over which the inhabitants have been never restrained from passing or driving their cattle to water; and if custom (which is a local law founded on universal usage, and can no more be released than any other law) is to prevail according to the common law notion of it, these lots must lie open forever to the surprise of unsuspecting owners, and to the curtailing commerce, in its more advanced state, of the accommodation of docks and wharves, when perhaps a tenth part of the lots now open would be all sufficient as watering places: a principle of such extensive operation ought not to be strained beyond the limits assigned to it in law. If public convenience requires highways to church, school, mill, market or water, they are obtainable in a much more direct and rational manner under the Statute than by way of immemorial usage and custom. I must not be understood to mean that the uninterrupted enjoyment of an easement in another person's soil for twenty or thirty years, or perhaps a less period of time, will not be evidence for a jury to presume a grant or dedication of such easement, after duly considering such explanations, reasons, and opposing circumstances as the case may afford. Usage beyond time of legal memory and usage within memory depend on principles and evidence totally distinct from each other. If the defendant relies on usage for a definite period of time, he ought to amend his notice so as to correspond with the evidence he means to offer; it can answer no purpose of justice or candor to give notice of one thing and prove another. I am of opinion, therefore as to these three notices, that the rights therein set up cannot be maintained in the form nor on the principle therein stated, and that they ought to be stricken out.

In a second action between the parties, wherein the defendant sets up in his second notice a custom by immemorial usage, and in the fifth a prescription in the que estate, I need only observe that they ought to be stricken out for the reasons before mentioned.¹

SECTION II.

EASEMENTS IN GROSS.

ACKROYD v. SMITH. ✓

COMMON PLEAS. 1850.

[Reported 10 C. B. 164.]

CRESSWELL, J.,¹ delivered the judgment of the court.²

This was an action of trespass, for breaking and entering a close of the plaintiff, in the parish of Bradford, in the county of York, describing it by abutments, and with feet in walking, and with horses, carts, and carriages, damaging and spoiling the grass, &c.

The defendant pleaded — amongst other pleas — that, long before and at the time of committing the alleged trespasses in the declaration mentioned, and at the time of making the release and grant thereafter mentioned, there was, and thenceforth continually had been, and still was, and at the several times, &c., was, in and upon the said close in which, &c., a certain road, running between a certain other road called "The Bradford and Thornton turnpike-road," and a certain lane called "Legram's Lane;" that, long before and at the time of making the indenture of release and grant thereafter mentioned, to wit, on, &c., one Ellis Cunliffe Lister was seised in his demesne as of fee, as well of the soil of the road in that plea first mentioned, as of and in the close in which, &c.; that, before the time of committing the trespasses, the said Ellis Cunliffe Lister was also seised in his demesne as of fee of and in the lands, tenements, hereditaments, and premises in the thereafter next mentioned indenture of release and grant mentioned, and therein and thereby released and conveyed to John Smith; that, afterwards, and before any of the several times of committing the several trespasses in the declaration mentioned, he, the said Ellis Cunliffe Lister, being so seised, on, &c., by lease and release conveyed to John Smith and his heirs, to the use of him, his heirs and assigns forever, a certain close and plots or parcels of land; that the said Ellis Cunliffe Lister did, in and by the said last-mentioned indenture, grant to the said John Smith and his heirs and assigns, that he and they respectively, being owners and occupiers for the time being of the said close, &c., so released as aforesaid, and all other persons having occasion to resort thereto, should have the right and privilege of passing and re-passing, with or without horses, cattle, carts, and carriages, for all purposes, in, over, along, and through a certain road running between the Bradford and Thornton turnpike-road and Legram's Lane, or in, over, and through some other road in the same direction, to be formed by, and at the expense of, the plaintiff, his heirs or assigns, such other road nevertheless passing the southeast corner of the warehouse of the plaintiff,—he the said John Smith, his heirs and assigns, paying to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, a proportionate part of the expense of repairing the said road, according to the use thereof by him or them, not exceeding the actual damage done to the road by the wear and tear thereof by the said John Smith, his heirs and assigns. The plea then deduced a title in Samuel Smith to a life-estate in one moiety of the said lands, tenements, hereditaments, and appurtenances, and in Thomas Smith to an estate in fee in the other moiety thereof, and alleged possession before and at the times when, &c., and proceeded,—“and the defendants, being so seised and owners as aforesaid, and being in and having such possession and occupation as aforesaid, and having occasion, for their own purposes, to use the right and privilege in that behalf granted and conveyed in and by the indenture of release and grant in this plea first mentioned did, on foot, and with their horses, &c., at the said several times, &c., pass and re-pass, for the purposes of them, the defendants, in, over, and along, and through the road in that plea first mentioned, so being as aforesaid in and upon the said close in which, &c., as they lawfully might.”

The plaintiff craved oyer of the deed,—which was between the plaintiff of the first part, Richard Tolson of the second part, Ellis Cunliffe Lister (to whom the plaintiff had mortgaged the premises) of the third part, Samuel Smith and Thomas Smith of the fourth part, and John Smith of the fifth part,—the plaintiff, as well as Lister, being made a conveying and granting party. [His Lordship read the material parts of the deed.^{1]}] The plaintiff then demurred, assigning for causes,

¹ The substance of this indenture, so far as material to the case, was as follows: It recited that the land conveyed had been settled on Robert Stables Ackroyd, the plaintiff, for life, remainder to Richard Tolson, during the life of the plaintiff, in trust for the plaintiff, remainder to the plaintiff in fee; that the land had been subsequently mortgaged to Ellis Cunliffe Lister; that the plaintiff and Lister had entered into a contract to convey the land to Samuel and Thomas Smith, and that these latter had assigned to John Smith their right to a conveyance. Then the indenture witnessed that the plaintiff, Tolson, and Lister, at the request of Samuel and Thomas Smith, conveyed to John Smith and his heirs certain described parcels of land. “Together with all ways, paths, passages, particularly the right and privilege to and for the owners and occupiers, for the time being, of the said close, pieces, or parcels of land, or any of them, and all persons having occasion to resort thereto, of passing and re-passing, with or without horses, cattle, carts, and carriages, for all purposes, in, over, along, and through a certain road running between the Bradford and Thornton turnpike-road and Legram's Lane, or in, over, and through some other road in the same direction, to be formed by and at the expense of the said Robert Stables Ackroyd, his heirs or assigns,—such other road, nevertheless, passing the southeast corner of the said warehouse of the said Robert amongst others, that the plea did not show that the trespasses justified were committed in going to or from the premises conveyed, or that they were in any way connected with the enjoyment of those premises.

In support of the demurrer, it was contended, — first, that the road granted was only for purposes connected with the occupation of the land conveyed, and therefore was not sufficient to support the justification pleaded; and, secondly, that, if the grant was more ample, and gave to the grantee a right of using the road for all purposes, although they might not be in any way connected with the enjoyment of the land, it would not pass to an assignee of the land, and therefore the defendants could not claim it under a conveyance of the land, with the appurtenances. On the other hand, it was contended that the right created by deed might be assigned by deed, together with the land, and was large enough to maintain the justification pleaded.

Upon consideration, we have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment on the demurrer.

If the right conferred by the deed set out, was only to use the road in question for purposes connected with the occupation and enjoyment of the land conveyed, it does not justify the acts confessed by the plea. But, if the grant was more ample, and extended to using the road for purposes unconnected with the enjoyment of the land, — and this, we think, is the true construction of it, — it becomes necessary to decide whether the assignee of the land and appurtenances would be entitled to it. In the case of Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Mylne & K. 517, the subject of covenants running with the land was fully considered by Lord Chancellor Brougham; and the leading cases on it are collected in his judgment. He there says (2 Mylne & K. 537): “The covenant (that is, such as will run with the land) must be of such a nature as ‘to inhere in the land,’ to use the language of some cases; or, ‘it must concern the demised premises, and the mode of occupying them,’ as it is laid down in others: ‘it must be quodammodo annexed and appurtenant to them,’ as one authority has it; or, as another says, ‘it must both concern the thing demised, and tend to support it, and support the reversioner’s estate.’” Now, the privilege or right in question does not inhere in the land, does not concern the premises conveyed, or the mode of occupying them; it is not appurtenant to them. A covenant, therefore, that such a right should be enjoyed, would not run with the land. Upon the same principle, it appears to us that such a right, unconnected with the enjoyment or occupation of the land, cannot be annexed as an incident to it, nor can a way appendant to a house or land be granted away, or made in gross; for no one can have such a way but he who has the land to which it is appendant. Bro. Abr., Grant, pl. 130.¹ If a way be granted in gross, it is personal only, and cannot be assigned. So, common in gross sans nombre may be granted, but cannot be granted over (per Treby, C. J., in Weekly v. Wildman, 1 Ld. Raym. 407). It is not in the power of a vendor to create any rights not connected with the use or enjoyment of the land, and annex them to it; nor can the owner of land render it subject to a new species of burden, so as to bind it in the hands of an assignee. "Incidents of a novel kind cannot be devised, and attached to property, at the fancy or caprice of any owner" (per Lord Brougham, C., in Keppell v. Bailey).

Stables Ackroyd; he the said John Smith, his heirs and assigns, paying to the said Robert Stables Ackroyd, his heirs and assigns, a proportionate part of the expense of repairing the said road, according to the use thereof by him or them, not exceeding the actual damage done to the road by the wear and tear thereof by the said John Smith, his heirs and assigns; and the said Robert Stables Ackroyd keeping the said road at all times in good and sufficient repair;” waters, mines, “rights, liberties, privileges, easements, profits, commodities, emoluments, hereditaments, and appurtenances” to the parcels, “or any part thereof respectively, belonging, or in any wise appertaining, or with the same, or any of them, or any part thereof respectively, now or at any time heretofore, held and occupied, or enjoyed, or accepted, reputed, deemed, taken, or known as part, parcel, or member thereof, or of any part thereof respectively, or appurtenant thereto.” — ED.

This principle is sufficient to dispose of the present case. It would be a novel incident annexed to land, that the owner and occupier should, for purposes wholly unconnected with that land, and merely because he is owner and occupier, have a right of road over other land. And it seems to us that a grant of such a privilege or easement can no more be annexed, so as to pass with the land, than a covenant for any collateral matter.

The defendants cannot, therefore, as assigns, avail themselves of the grant to John Smith; and our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

HILL v. TUPPER.

EXCHEQUER. 1863.

[Reported 2 H. & C. 121.]

DECLARATION. — For that, before and at the time of the committing by the defendant of the grievances hereinafter mentioned, the plaintiff was entitled to, and had and was possessed of, the sole and exclusive right or liberty to put or use boats on a certain canal, called the Basingstoke Canal, for the purposes of pleasure and to let the same boats

¹ Citing 5 H. 7, 7 (M. 5 H. 7, fo. 7, pl. 15): "Note, that it was said by Fairfax (Justice of C. P.) for law, that, if one has a way appendant to his manor, or to his house, by prescription, that way cannot be made in gross; because no man can take profit of that way, except he have the manor or the house to which the way is appendant." — REP.

for hire on the said canal for the purposes of pleasure. Yet the plaintiff says that, whilst he was so entitled and possessed as aforesaid, the defendant, well knowing the premises, wrongfully and unjustly disturbed the plaintiff in the possession, use, and enjoyment of his said right or liberty, by wrongfully and unjustly putting and using, and causing to be put and used, divers boats on the said canal for the purposes of pleasure, and by letting boats on the said canal for hire, and otherwise for the purposes of pleasure. By means of which said premises the plaintiff was not only greatly disturbed in the use, enjoyment, and possession of his said right and liberty, but has also lost great gains and profits which he ought and otherwise would have acquired from the sole and exclusive possession, use, and enjoyment of his said right or liberty, and was otherwise greatly aggrieved and prejudiced.

Pleas.—First: Not guilty; secondly: that the plaintiff was not entitled to, nor had he, nor was he possessed of, the sole and exclusive right or liberty to put or use boats on the said canal for the purposes of pleasure, nor to let the said boats for hire on the said canal for the purposes of pleasure as alleged.—Issues thereon.

At the trial, before Bramwell, B., at the London Sittings, after last Hilary Term, the following facts appeared: Under the 18 Geo. 3, c. 75, the Company of Proprietors of the Basingstoke Canal Navigation were incorporated with perpetual succession and a common seal, for the purpose of making and maintaining a navigable canal from the town of Basingstoke, in the county of Southampton, to communicate with the River Wey in the parish of Chertsey, in the county of Surrey. The lands purchased by the Company of Proprietors, under their parliamentary powers, were by the Act vested in the company.

By the 100th section of the Act it is enacted: “That it shall and may be lawful for the owners and occupiers of any lands or grounds adjoining to the said canal, to use upon the said canal any pleasure boat or boats, or any other boat or boats, for the purpose of husbandry only, or for conveying cattle from one farm, or part of a farm or lands to any other farm or lands of the same owner or occupier, without interruption from the said Company of Proprietors, their successors or assigns, agent or agents, and without paying any rate or duty for the same; and so as such boat or boats be not above seven feet in breadth, and do not pass through any lock to be made on the said navigation, without the consent of the said Company of Proprietors, their successors or assigns, or be employed for carrying any goods, wares, or merchandise to market or for sale, or any person or persons for hire; and so as the same shall not obstruct or prejudice the said navigation, or the towing-paths, or obstruct any boats passing upon the said navigation liable to pay the rates or duties aforesaid; and the owner of all such pleasure boats or other boats shall, in his own lands or grounds, make convenient places for such boats to lie in, and shall not suffer them to be moored or remain upon the said canal.”

The defendant was the landlord of an inn at Aldershot adjoining the canal, and his premises abutted on the canal bank. The plaintiff, who was a boat proprietor, also occupied premises at Aldershot on the bank of the canal, which he held under a demise from the Company of Proprietors, and by virtue of the demise claimed the exclusive right of letting out pleasure boats for hire upon the canal, which was the right the defendant was alleged to have disturbed.

The lease under which the plaintiff claimed this right was dated the 29th of December, 1860, and by it, in consideration of the rents, covenants, and agreements therein contained, the said Company of Proprietors demised to the plaintiff, under their common seal, for the term of seven years from the 24th of June, 1860, at the yearly rent of £25, "All that piece or parcel of land containing nineteen poles or thereabouts, adjoining Aldershot wharf, situate in the parish of Aldershot aforesaid, and the wooden cottage or tenement, boat-house, and all other erections now or hereafter being or standing thereon, &c." (describing the premises by boundaries, and by reference to a plan), "together with the appurtenances to the same premises belonging. And also the sole and exclusive right or liberty to put or use boats on the said canal, and let the same for hire for the purposes of pleasure only." The lease contained various covenants framed with the object of preventing any interference by the plaintiff's pleasure boats with the navigation of the canal, and a proviso for re-entry for any breach of the covenants.

The evidence of the defendant was at variance with that adduced on behalf of the plaintiff upon the question whether the defendant had ever let out boats upon the canal for hire, in the sense of a direct money payment. The defendant did not deny that he kept pleasure boats, and used them upon the canal, but stated that he kept them for the use of his family; he admitted, however, that gentlemen had come from time to time to his inn and used these boats for fishing and bathing.

The learned judge reserved leave to move to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, and left to the jury the question whether the defendant had obtained any pecuniary advantage from the boats. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff; damages, a farthing.

Hance, on a former day in this term, obtained a rule nisi to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant on the ground, first, that the Company of Proprietors of the Basingstoke Canal Navigation had no power to grant the exclusive right claimed; secondly, that, if the grant were good, the action would not lie by the plaintiff against the defendant for the alleged infringement of the right: or for a new trial on the ground of misdirection by the judge in directing the jury that the defendant was liable if he obtained any pecuniary advantage from the boats.

Garth and Holl, showed cause.

Bernard (with whom was Montagu Chambers and Hance), appeared in support of the rule, but was not called upon to argue.

POLLOCK, C. B. We are all of opinion that the rule must be absolute to enter the verdict for the defendant on the second plea. After the very full argument which has taken place, I do not think it necessary to assign any other reason for our decision, than that the case of Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164, expressly decided that it is not competent to create rights unconnected with the use and enjoyment of land, and annex them to it so as to constitute a property in the grantee. This grant merely operates as a license or covenant on the part of the grantors, and is binding on them as between themselves and the grantee, but gives him no right of action in his own name for any infringement of the supposed exclusive right. It is argued that, as the owner of an estate may grant a right to cut turves, or to fish or hunt, there is no reason why he may not grant such a right as that now claimed by the plaintiff. The answer is, that the law will not allow it. So the law will not permit the owner of an estate to grant it alternately to his heirs male and heirs female. A new species of incorporeal hereditament cannot be created at the will and pleasure of the owner of property; but he must be content to accept the estate and the right to dispose of it subject to the law as settled by decisions or controlled by Act of Parliament. A grantor may bind himself by covenant to allow any right he pleases over his property, but he cannot annex to it a new incident, so as to enable the grantee to sue in his own name for an infringement of such a limited right as that now claimed.

MARTIN, B. I am of the same opinion. This grant is perfectly valid as between the plaintiff and the Canal Company; but in order to support this action, the plaintiff must establish that such an estate or interest vested in him that the act of the defendant amounted to an eviction. None of the cases cited are at all analogous to this, and some authority must be produced before we can hold that such a right can be created. To admit the right would lead to the creation of an infinite variety of interests in land, and an indefinite increase of possible estates. The only consequence is that, as between the plaintiff and the Canal Company, he has a perfect right to enjoy the advantage of the covenant or contract; and, if he has been disturbed in the enjoyment of it, he must obtain the permission of the Canal Company to sue in their name. The judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164, and of Lord Brougham, C., in Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517, 535, are, in the absence of any case to the contrary, ample authority for our present decision.

BRAMWELL, B. I am of the same opinion. I will only add, that the defendant cannot have the verdict entered for him on the plea of not guilty, for no leave was reserved at the trial; and the defendant could only succeed on that issue by obtaining a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The rule must therefore be absolute to enter the verdict for the defendant on the second plea, unless the plaintiff elects to be nonsuited; but as he can never make a better case, the better course would be to enter the verdict for the defendant on the second plea.

Rule absolute accordingly.

GOODRICH v. BURBANK.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1866.

[Reported 12 Allen, 459.]

FOSTER, J. This action of tort is brought to recover damages for the acts of the defendant on his own land, who has cut off a pipe by which water was conducted from a spring thereon, and has contaminated the water which flowed through said pipe to the plaintiff's premises. The lot on which the spring is situated was part of a farm owned by Thomas F. Plunkett, and conveyed to the defendant by Plunkett by a deed dated March 27th, 1850, containing the following clause : " Also reserving to myself, my heirs and assigns, the right of taking so much water forever from the spring situate on the lot last above described, and from which water is now taken in a pipe to supply the grounds of W. H. Tyler, as now runs in said pipe, so long as said pipe lasts, together with the right to replace the same with a pipe of one and one quarter inch inside calibre, and also the right of taking so much water from said spring as will run in said pipe of one and one quarter inch calibre, when thus substituted for the present pipe, together with the right to enter and repair said aqueduct at all times, it being understood that I am to pay such damages as may be from time to time occasioned to the crops and land by said repairs, and said Burbank, his heirs and assigns, is not to molest said Plunkett, his heirs and assigns, in the use of the above reserved rights." At the date of this deed, the pipe was laid as it now is through the defendant's estate, and conducted water to the premises of W. H. Tyler. No part of Plunkett's remaining estate was then or ever had been supplied with water from this aqueduct. It is therefore improbable that the reservation was intended for the exclusive benefit thereof. Plunkett had given to Tyler no right, but the latter had only a revocable license from Plunkett's predecessor to the use of the aqueduct; and there is no reason to suppose that Plunkett intended to annex the reservation to the estate of a stranger, if that were possible. The language used is broad and unqualified. The right is reserved to Plunkett, his heirs and assigns, and not to the assigns of his remaining estate. There is no restriction as to the place where or the purpose for which the water might be used, but only as to the quantity reserved. We are therefore satisfied that Plunkett intended to retain for himself, his heirs and assigns, a right, the enjoyment of which was limited to no particular premises, capable of being used upon any land which he or they might at any time acquire, an assignable and inheritable interest, not annexed to any parcel of land. If the rules of law permit the acquisition of such a right by reservation or grant, we cannot doubt that it has been effectually created in the present instance. And if so, it must inure to the benefit of the present plaintiff, who has derived it by warranty deed from Plunkett through divers mesne conveyances.

But the defendant insists that such an interest is a predial servitude, in its nature inseparably annexed to some estate, apart from which it cannot be enjoyed; that if regarded as an easement in gross, it is necessarily of a purely personal character, incapable of assignment or inheritance, belonging to Plunkett alone for his personal benefit.

This proposition requires examination. There are dicta, perhaps authorities, to the effect that an easement proper, like a way in gross, cannot be created by grant, so as to be assignable or inheritable. Washburn on Easements, 80. Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 187. However the law may be elsewhere, it would be difficult to establish that doctrine in this Commonwealth, where it has been held that ways in gross "may be granted or may accrue in various forms to one, his heirs and assigns;" White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 188; and that "the law is settled in Massachusetts, by a series of decisions, that a right of way may be as well created by a reservation or exception in the deed of the grantor, reserving or retaining to himself and his heirs a right of way either in gross or as annexed to lands owned by him so as to charge the lands granted with such easement and servitude, as by a deed from the owner of the land to be charged, granting such way either in gross or as appurtenant to other estate of the grantee." Bowen v. Conner, 6 Cush. 137.

In the case of rights of profit à prendre, it seems to be held uniformly that, if enjoyed in connection with a certain estate, they are regarded as easements appurtenant thereto, but if granted to one in gross they are treated as an estate or interest in land, and may be assignable or inheritable. Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 425; Washburn on Easements, 7. The right to take water from a well or spring is held to be an interest in land, although not a profit à prendre, and may be claimed by custom. Race v. Ward, 4 El. & Bl. 702. And we are aware of no case which denies that the right to an aqueduct may be so created as to exist independently of any particular parcel of land owned by the grantee thereof, and be enjoyed by him and his heirs on any estate which he or they may own or acquire, and be capable of assignment or conveyance in gross. The water itself may not be the subject of property, but the right to take it and to have pipes laid in the soil of another for that purpose, and to enter upon the land of another to lay, repair and renew such pipes, is an interest in the realty, assignable, descendible and devisable. On this subject the language of Judge Curtis is as follows: "I know of no rule of the common law which prohibits grants of the incorporeal right to divert water from being made in gross. If I have a spring, I may sell the right to take water from it by pipes, to one who does not own the land across which the pipes are to be carried, and I may either restrict the use to a particular house, or not, as I please. It is true the grantee cannot make the grant useful without acquiring from the owner of the intermediate land the right to lay pipes therein, nor can he use the water in a house until he obtains the right to possess that house. But these may be acquired afterwards. Incorporeal rights may be inseparably annexed to a particular messuage or tract of land, by the grant which creates them, and makes them incapable of separate existence. But they may also be granted in gross, and afterwards, for purposes of enjoyment, be annexed to a messuage or land, and again severed therefrom by a conveyance of the messuage or land, without the right, or a conveyance of the right without the land." Lonsdale Co. v. Moies, 21 Law Rep. 664.

We have many cases in our own reports which recognize the right to take a certain quantity of water from a mill pond as a distinct and substantive subject of grant, without restriction as to its use at any designated place. Rights of water duly granted by deed, not appurtenant to any particular parcel of land, may be used by the owner at any place or in any manner, so long as he does not interfere with or impair the rights of others. De Witt v. Harvey, 4 Gray, 486. We are unable to distinguish between the right to take water by a canal from a pond for the purposes of power, and the right to take it from a spring in a pipe for domestic purposes, the watering of cattle, to supply an artificial jet or fountain, and to sell it to others for any uses they may desire to make of it.

In the present case it does not appear that the change in the direction or location of the pipe after it leaves the land of the defendant has increased the quantity of water taken from the spring. We are therefore of opinion that this action can be maintained; and, the judge who presided at the trial in the Superior Court having ruled otherwise, the exceptions are sustained.

AMIDON v. HARRIS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1873.

[Reported 113 Mass. 59.]

BILL in equity against Lucian Harris, Mary A. Harris his wife, and Harriet Bugbee.

The bill alleged that the plaintiff was seised in fee of a lot of land with a dwelling-house upon it lying between the mansion-house which once belonged to one Charles Negus, deceased, and a lot called the spring lot, which was also once his property; that Negus sunk a well upon the spring lot; that this well was supplied by a spring which furnished water abundantly sufficient to supply the wants of Negus's estate and of some six other estates in the vicinity; that Negus constructed an aqueduct and conveyed water from the well to his house, and that Negus and the plaintiff's husband, Rufus Amidon, who was then seised of a life estate as tenant by the courtesy in the plaintiff's land, and who had since died, executed the following indenture:

"This indenture made and executed this 1st day of January, A. D. 1849, by and between Charles Negus, of Webster, in the county of Worcester and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, physician, of the one part, and Rufus Amidon, of the same Webster, of the other part, Witnesseth:

"That whereas the said Negus, being the owner of a certain spring of water situated in said Webster, has brought and is still bringing water therefrom by means of an underground pipe running from said spring to the premises now occupied by him in said Webster, and whereas it is his intention to dispose of privileges to use said water so conveyed as aforesaid, to such individuals as may desire to purchase the same: And whereas the said Amidon is desirous of obtaining the right of using the said water upon the premises of him the said Amidon, situate in said Webster: Now, therefore, the parties hereto have mutually covenanted and agreed as follows, to wit:

"First. The said Negus, for himself, his heirs and assigns, doth covenant and agree to and with the said Amidon, that he, the said Amidon, his heirs and assigns, may at any and all times hereafter, so long as water shall run from said spring through said pipe as aforesaid, draw from the main pipe of said Negus, at a point agreed upon by the parties, so much water as shall be necessary for the supply of the family or families resident in the house now owned by said Amidon.

"Second. And the said Amidon doth hereby covenant and agree to and with the said Negus, that he will pay to the said Negus for the right of water so granted to him as aforesaid, the sum of fifty dollars, to be paid upon the execution of this instrument, and that he will, and his heirs and assigns shall, pay his or their proportion of any and all expenses which may hereafter accrue for the repair of the main pipe, the whole of said expenses to be proportionately borne by all those who shall use the said water; that is to say, that at each and every time that the main pipe shall become out of repair, the expense of repairing the same shall be divided into as many equal parts as there may be houses supplied with water from said main pipe, and the owner of each house shall pay one part.

"Third. And the said Amidon for himself, his heirs and assigns, doth further covenant and agree to and with the said Negus, his heirs and assigns, that he or they will lay down and keep in repair at his or their own proper cost and charge a branch pipe leading from said main pipe to the house of said Amidon; that he and they will use the said water so granted as aforesaid in an economical manner, and not suffer the same to be uselessly wasted or extravagantly expended.

"In witness whereof, the parties have hereunto set their hands and seals, the day and year first above written.

"Charles Negus. [L. S.]

"Rufus Amidon. [L. S.]".

The bill then alleged that the plaintiff was, by conveyance from the heirs of her husband, the owner of the right granted to him by this indenture; that her husband laid a branch pipe from the main pipe to her house; that she and her husband drew from the pipe all the water necessary for the house; that they had always paid their proper proportion of the expense of repairing the main pipe; that Negus afterwards granted similar rights to take water to six other persons; that there was always abundance of water for the plaintiff and the six other grantees; that Negus devised his mansion-house estate to the defendant Mary A. Harris; that the spring lot had by conveyances (which were set forth in the bill) become the property of the defendant Lucian Harris; that Lucian and Mary Harris had empowered the defendant Bugbee and others, who owned estates situated upon a lower level than the plaintiff's estate, to extend the main pipe to their estates, and had thus enabled them to draw water from the spring when the plaintiff and the other grantees of Negus were suffering from its want; that for four months before the filing of the bill the plaintiff had been almost wholly deprived of water, and had been obliged to obtain a supply elsewhere; that she had called upon the defendants to desist from the unlawful taking of the water, but that they had refused, and had threatened to continue the taking. The bill prayed for an injunction and for general relief.

The defendants demurred generally, for the want of equity.

H. B. Staples, for the defendants.

P. E. Aldrich, for the plaintiff.

ENDICOTT, J. This indenture conveyed to Rufus Amidon, his heirs and assigns, the right to draw and take so much water from the main pipe running from the spring to the mansion-house of Charles Negus, as was or should be necessary for the supply of the families resident in the house described as owned by Amidon. This right was to continue so long as the water should run from the spring through the main pipe. At the date of the indenture Amidon did not own the premises on which the house stood, but occupied them with his wife, the present plaintiff, who then as now held them in fee in her own right. The defendants, who own the estate of Negus, subject to all the rights conveyed to Amidon, contend that the indenture conveyed an easement appurtenant to the estate of Amidon in the premises; and that, as his estate expired with his life, so did the easement.

But we do not think this the true construction of the indenture, or that such was the character of the interest conveyed. The indenture conveys an easement in gross to take a certain amount of water from the pipe. It was assignable and inheritable, to him, his heirs and assigns, and the use was restricted to the particular house now occupied by the plaintiff. Such a right may be conveyed without being restricted to a particular locality; and its character is not changed by reason of a restriction in that respect. A man may purchase such right restricted in its use to a particular house, or to a particular purpose, as for running a mill, although he may not own the house or mill; he may do this in contemplation of owning or of building a house or mill, and when he does so, the easement to take the water becomes annexed to the house or mill, or in other words may be availed of to the extent granted. Amidon not owning the fee, and the grant being to him, his heirs and assigns, affords a presumption that it was not intended to terminate the easement with his estate in the premises, but that it was intended it should pass to his heirs and assigns, who could enjoy it only so far as they could properly and legally annex it to the premises. The conveyance of the easement by the heirs of Amidon to the plaintiff gives her the power of enjoyment, and she can enforce any rights to the water which Amidon could have enforced. Goodrich v. Burbank, 12 Allen, 459; Lonsdale Co. v. Moses, 21 Law Reporter, 658, 664; Hankey v. Clark, 110 Mass. 262.

The easement being created by indenture with mutual covenants binding upon the heirs and assigns of both parties, the party entitled to enjoy it at the place designated may maintain an action for its disturbance. For all purposes of enjoyment and of maintaining the right to enjoy, it is annexed to the plaintiff's estate, and is a charge upon the lands of the defendants. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183, 188; Bowen v. Conner, 6 Cush. 132, 137. It is too well established to require an extended consideration of the authorities, that a grantor has no right to derogate from his own grant, and that there is always an implied covenant that he will do no act to interfere with, prevent or diminish the full enjoyment of the right granted. Dexter v. Manley, 4 Cush. 14. It is misfeasance in a grantor to defeat the grant by a voluntary act on his part. The distinction was taken in an early case between the disturbance on the part of a grantor, by his own act, of an easement conveyed by him, and an alleged failure on his part to do some act, which not being done, the easement became worthless. As where the grantor of a way or a watercourse, or the right to draw water at a pump, cannot stop the way or the watercourse, or remove or destroy the pump, but is not bound to keep them in repair. Pomfret v. Ricroft, 1 Saund. 321. By such act the grantor attempts to exercise control over the thing granted, in derogation of his grant, in violation of the implied covenant that the grantee may enjoy it as against him. As when one covenants that another shall have a certain amount of wood annually, and the covenantor destroys all the wood, an action lies against him. And when a lessee covenanted that at the seasons for burning lime he would supply the lessor with lime at a certain price, it was held there was an implied covenant that he would burn lime at all such seasons, and that it was no defence that at one season no lime was burned, so that the lessor could not be supplied. Shrewsbury v. Gould, 2 B. & Ald. 487; Sampson v. Easterby, 9 B. & C. 505; Saltoun v. Houstoun, 1 Bing. 433.

Applying these principles to the present case, it is clear, in the absence of a distinct provision to the contrary, that there is an implied covenant in the first, second and third clauses of the indenture, that Amidon, his heirs and assigns, shall have the right, as long as the water runs in the main pipe, to draw a sufficient supply for the families occupying the house of the plaintiff, without any disturbance by Negus or those claiming under him. The words, "so much water as may be necessary for the supply," &c., &c., are not to be construed as merely a restriction on its use by the grantor, as contended by the defendants. They determine the extent of the use, apply to the grantor as well as the grantees, and indicate the measure of the rights of both parties. While the grantees may not use more than is required for the supply of the house, the grantor cannot limit or restrict the supply below that quantity. The words of a covenantor, or of a grantor, are to be construed more strictly as against himself. If by any act of Negus, or those claiming his estate, the supply is stopped or materially diminished, an action will lie. Nor is it necessary that the act should be done by the owner in person. It is no less the act of the owner, when done by another acting under his permission or authority; and the granting permission by an oral agreement to Bugbee to draw the water as alleged, and thereby to deprive the plaintiff of the enjoyment of the easement, is a breach of the covenants of the indenture by the defendants.

But the defendants contend that, even assuming this to be the law, there is a recital in the preamble which, properly construed, enables them to grant similar privileges without limit, whatever may be the consequences to the plaintiff. In the preamble Negus recites that "it is his intention to dispose of privileges to use said water so conveyed as aforesaid to such individuals as may desire to purchase the same." It is not necessary to consider how far these words of recital in the preamble can control the covenants, which are necessarily implied from the express covenants entered into by the grantor in the main body of the instrument, because we do not think they have the meaning contended for, or were intended as a reservation to the grantor to the extent of impairing the privilege of the grantees and derogating from and making worthless his grant, which is elsewhere given in clear and decisive words. The right of Negus to sell similar privileges to others is not derived from this recital in the preamble. He has that right independently of the indenture to sell all that he had not therein granted. He need not give notice of this to his grantees; he sells to him a limited quantity, and may sell and dispose of the surplus as he pleases. The statement was not made to reserve anything to himself, but evidently for another purpose. At the close of the second clause, Amidon agrees to pay his proportion of the cost of repairing the main pipe, with others who may have similar privileges to use the water with him. Amidon being the first grantee, it was proper, in order to make this provision intelligible, that the preamble should state the facts that other similar privileges were to be conveyed, and that when conveyed, each house should bear one part of such expense. This provision for keeping in repair has also a strong bearing upon, and indicates the understanding of the parties that the benefits derived from the conveyance by Amidon were not to be diminished by the later conveyances; for it cannot be presumed from doubtful words inserted in a preamble, that Amidon would covenant to keep the main pipe in repair, in connection with other grantees, if the grantor could by increasing the number indefinitely render his grant worthless. This seems to have been the practical construction put upon the agreement by the parties in the lifetime of Negus, as he made similar conveyances to seven persons only, the last of which was made in 1856, and there was sufficient water for all, until the permission was given to Bugbee to take the water.

We think, therefore, the bill can be maintained, if the plaintiff can establish the facts set forth.

Demurrer overruled.

BOATMAN v. LASLEY.

SUPREME COURT OF OHIO. 1873.

[Reported 23 Ohio St. 614.]

MOTION for leave to file a petition in error to the District Court of Gallia county.

The original action was brought in the Court of Common Pleas of Gallia county by Matthew Lasley against Isaac Boatman and wife, to foreclose a mortgage executed by the defendants to secure the payment of purchase-money of the lands mortgaged. The mortgaged premises had been conveyed by the plaintiff to defendant, Isaac Boatman, on the 15th of March, 1870, by a deed containing a covenant that the demised premises were free and clear of all incumbrances. The defendant answered, and by way of counter-claim, alleged damages resulting from a breach of this covenant against incumbrances. The alleged incumbrance consisted of a private right of way over the warranted premises, outstanding at the date of the conveyance in one Alexander Logue. This right of way had been granted by deed, on the 7th day of June, 1862, by the warrantor, to "Logue, his heirs and assigns, and the tenants or occupiers for the time being of the lands now (then) owned and occupied by the said Alexander Logue, in section 15, town 5, of range 14, in the Ohio Company's Purchase." It is also alleged in the answer, that, before the 15th of March, 1870 (the date of the covenant), said Logue had conveyed his lands in section 15, town 5, of range 14, in the Ohio Company's Purchase, to one George W. Roush. It is not alleged, however, that Logue, at the time the right of way over the warranted premises was granted to him by the plaintiff, was the owner or occupier of any land in said section 15, or elsewhere, nor is it alleged that the right of way complained of became appendant or appurtenant to any land whatever, or that said Roush had any interest in said right of way.

The plaintiff, in his reply, denied that Roush had an easement or right of way on the premises granted to the defendant, and also denied that the defendant had sustained any damage by reason of the right of way complained of.

The cause was submitted to a jury, who assessed the defendant's damages, by reason of the existence of the right of way, at $100, which sum was deducted from the mortgage debt, and decree entered in favor of the plaintiff for the balance.

During the trial the defendant took a bill of exceptions, from which it appears that the defendants offered in evidence the deed for the right of way from Lasley to Logue, a copy of which is attached, marked "A." They also gave evidence tending to prove that said right of way was still in the occupation of said Alexander Logue, and those claiming under him, who were then occupying the lands to which said right of way was intended to be made appendant. "And the plaintiff, to maintain the issue on his part, gave evidence tending to show that at the time said deed of right of way was executed by him to Alexander Logue, the said Logue did not own the land to which the right of way was intended to be appendant, and that said Logue had, prior to the execution of the deed of right of way, conveyed said lands to one George W. Roush."

The evidence being closed, the court charged the jury as follows: "If the jury shall find from the evidence that at the date of the deed made by Lasley to Logue, marked 'A,' the said Alexander Logue, grantee therein, was not the owner in fee or otherwise of some real estate adjoining the farm through which said right of way is granted, or situate in the neighborhood, so that said right of way may become appurtenant to the same, then the said deed conveys a right of way personal to himself alone,—one which cannot descend to his heirs, and one which he cannot assign or release to another person, except such other person be the owner of the farm through which said way was granted."

The judgment of the Common Pleas was afterward, on petition in error, affirmed by the District Court of Gallia county.

Leave is now asked to file a petition in error in this court to reverse the judgment below, for alleged error in the charge to the jury as above set forth.

Joseph Bradbury, for the motion.

W. H. Lasley, contra.

McILVAINE, J. Is a private right of way over the lands of another, in gross, such an interest or estate in land, as may be cast by descent, or may be assigned by the grantee to one who has no interest in the land? These are the only questions in this case. If such a right be inheritable or assignable, the Court of Common Pleas erred in its charge; otherwise there is no error in the record.

The terms of the deed from Lasley to Logue plainly import an intention to make the right of way therein granted appendant and appurtenant to other lands, but the record does not disclose either the facts or the law given to the jury, whereby it could determine whether or not that intention was accomplished. It simply shows that the jury was instructed that if the right of way granted did not and could not, under the circumstances, become appurtenant to lands other than those over which it was granted, then it was a mere personal right in the grantee, which could not be inherited from him, or transferred by him to a stranger.

The correctness of this instruction does not depend upon a construction of the deed by which it was granted, for the terms of the grant are "to Alexander Logue, his heirs and assigns." The real question is, whether or not a private right of way in gross is, in law, capable of being transferred or transmitted.

It is strongly insisted upon, in argument, that a right of way in gross may be conveyed to the grantee "and to his heirs and assigns forever," because an owner in fee may carve out of his estate any interest less than the whole and dispose of the less estate absolutely; and this because the power to dispose of the whole estate includes a power to dispose of any part of it.

This argument assumes the affirmative of the very question in controversy, to wit, that such a right of way is an interest or estate in the land.

A mere naked right to pass and repass over the land of another, a use which excludes all participation in the profits of the land, is not, in any proper sense, an interest or estate in the land itself. Such a right is in its nature personal; it attaches itself to the person of him to whom it is granted, and must die with the person.

If such right be an inheritable estate, how will the heirs take? In severalty, in joint tenancy, coparcenary, or as tenants in common? If not in severalty, how can their interests be severed?

If it be assignable, what limit can be placed on the power of alienation? To whom and to how many may it be transferred? Why not to the public at large, and thus convert into a public way that which was intended to be a private and exclusive way only?

Where the way is appendant or appurtenant to other lands, very different considerations arise. There the right attaches to the lands to which the way is appurtenant, because it is granted for the convenience of their occupation without respect to the ownership or number of occupants. In such case the right of way passes with the dominant estate as an incident thereto. A right of way appurtenant cannot be converted into a way in gross, nor can a way in gross be turned into a way appurtenant.

A very marked distinction also exists between a way in gross and an easement of profit à prendre; such as the right to enter upon the lands of another, and remove gravel or other materials therefrom. The latter so far partakes of the nature of an estate in the land itself, as to be treated as an inheritable and assignable interest. Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. 432.

Both upon principle and authority, we think there was no error in the charge of the court below. Mr. Washburn in his work on Easements, page 8, par. 11, states the law upon this subject as follows: "A man may have a way in gross over another's land, but it must, from its nature, be a personal right not assignable or inheritable; nor can it be made so by any terms in the grant, any more than a collateral and independent contract can be made to run with the land." SECTION III.

NATURE AND EXTENT OF EASEMENTS.

NOTE.—Speaking generally, one estate of fee simple in a corporeal hereditament is like any other estate of fee simple in a corporeal hereditament, but the number of different easements which may be appurtenant to land is indefinite; that is, the nature of an easement is dependent upon the circumstances attending its creation. It is not easy to determine what matters belong properly under this section as concerning the nature and extent of easements, and what in the following book as touching the creation of interests. The line of distinction which has been followed is this: Cases in which the existence of an easement was admitted, but in which its extent only was in question, have been placed here; while cases in which the existence of any easement at all was disputed have been postponed to the following book.

Easements are of two kinds: the first comprises those easements which limit natural rights; the second, other easements. The first includes the right to pollute the air with smoke, etc., or to fill it with noise; the right to withdraw support from land; the right to divert, dam back, or pollute water. See an instance of this last in Baxendale v. McMurray, L. R. 2 Ch. 790. Easements of this class seem to present few difficult questions of general importance. On the cognate subject of the Mill Acts, see Head v. Amoskeag Co., 113 U. S. 9.

A. Light.

NOTE.—There are many cases in the English books on the extent of easements of light acquired by prescription or by implication; but as, generally, in the United States, such easements can be acquired only by express grant, it does not seem desirable to give many of those cases here. See also E, under this section, infra.

BACK v. STACEY.

NISI PRIUS. 1826.

[Reported 2 C. & P. 465.]

THIS was an issue directed by the Lord Chancellor to try, first, whether the ancient lights of the plaintiff in his dwelling-house in the city of Norwich had been illegally obstructed by a certain building of the defendant; and, secondly, If the first issue should be found in the affirmative, what damage the plaintiff had sustained in respect of the injury.

A great many witnesses, including several surveyors of eminence, were examined on both sides; and it was evident that the quantity of light previously enjoyed by the plaintiff had been diminished by the building in question. Under these circumstances, it was contended for the plaintiff that he was, at all events, entitled to a verdict on the first issue, any obstruction of ancient lights being wrongful and illegal.

Storks, Robinson, and Rolfe, for the plaintiff.

Kelly and Gunning, for the defendant.

BEST, C. J., told the jury, who had viewed the premises, that they were to judge rather from their own ocular observation, than from the testimony of any witnesses, however respectable, of the degree of diminution which the plaintiff's ancient lights had undergone. It was not sufficient, to constitute an illegal obstruction, that the plaintiff had, in fact, less light than before; nor that his warehouse — the part of his house principally affected — could not be used for all the purposes to which it might otherwise have been applied. In order to give a right of action, and sustain the issue, there must be a substantial privation of light, sufficient to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable, and to prevent the plaintiff from carrying on his accustomed business (that of a grocer) on the premises, as beneficially as he had formerly done. His Lordship added, that it might be difficult to draw the line, but the jury must distinguish between a partial inconvenience and a real injury to the plaintiff in the enjoyment of the premises.

The jury found for the defendant on both issues.¹

Stacey*, 2 Car. & P. 466, with the slight alteration (as the Vice-Chancellor Wood points out, Law Rep. 2 Eq. 245) of the single word 'or' for 'and.' With that alteration the law stands thus: 'In order to give a right of action, and sustain the issue, there must be a substantial privation of light sufficient to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable or to prevent the plaintiff from carrying on his accustomed busi-

MATTS v. HAWKINS. ✓ ✓

COMMON PLEAS. 1813.

[Reported 5 Taunt. 20.]

THE plaintiff declared in trespass, for that the defendant broke and entered his close in St. Giles's in the Fields, and pulled down and destroyed a certain part of a certain wall of the plaintiff's which he was erecting on the said piece of ground, and prevented his building the ness (that of a grocer) on the premises as beneficially as he had formerly done.' That is necessary in order to get damages at law. Whether it was always so, I am by no means sure. If that is necessary to get damages at law, those are the very circumstances which entitle the plaintiff to an injunction in equity, subject to this, that the damages must be substantial, though one can hardly conceive a case in which, if the doctrine of Back v. Stacey is well founded (and I believe it is), the tenant in possession would not get substantial damages. The only case in which I conceive there would be damages not substantial, would be the case of a reversioner who would not sustain any immediate damage, and who might bring an action to try the right. Then Vice-Chancellor Wood says (Law Rep. 2 Eq. 246) : 'Having arrived at this conclusion with regard to the remedy which would exist at law, we are met with the further difficulty, that in equity we must not always give relief (it was so laid down by Lord Eldon and by Lord Westbury) where there would be relief given at law. Having considered it in every possible way, I cannot myself arrive at any other conclusion than this : that where substantial damages would be given at law, as distinguished from some small sum of £5, £10, or £20, this court will interpose ; and on this ground, that it cannot be contended that those who are minded to erect a building that will inflict an injury upon their neighbor have a right to purchase him out without any Act of Parliament for that purpose having been obtained.'

"It seems to me that that gives a reasonable rule, whatever the law may have been in former times. As I understand it, the rule now is—and I shall so decide in future, unless in the mean time the Appeal Court shall decide differently—that wherever an action can be maintained at law, and really substantial damages, or perhaps I should say considerable damages (for some people may say that £20 is substantial damages), can be recovered at law, there the injunction ought to follow in equity : generally, not universally, because I have something to add upon that subject. In this case I do not think that anybody would doubt the damages would be substantial. The obstruction would in fact destroy the use of the room altogether ; it would so darken it that perhaps it might be used for a cellar, or a similar purpose where no light was required ; but for ordinary purposes it would destroy the use of the room." — Per SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M. R., in Aynsley v. Glover, L. R. 18 Eq. 544, 552 (1874).

same, whereby he was prevented from enjoying the land so beneficially as he might have done, and was put to expense in endeavoring to rebuild it. There was another count for breaking a wall of the plaintiff's, and taking away the materials, and other counts for pulling it down a second time, when the plaintiff had rebuilt it. The defendant pleaded the general issue. Upon the trial of this cause, at the Westminster sittings after Michaelmas Term, 1812, before Mansfield, C. J., it appeared that the defendant was the owner of a piece of waste ground in Charles Street, Drury Lane, whereon formerly stood a public-house called the Bull's Head, which had been pulled down about ten years since, and the plaintiff was the owner of a workshop, which stood on ground on the west side of the defendant's ground, and next adjoining thereto, and abutting thereon. The eastern wall of the plaintiff's premises had therefore been the western boundary of the defendant's house, the Bull's Head, before it was pulled down, and the defendant had since built a shed against it on his side. The plaintiff had, without any communication with the defendant, begun to raise this wall higher than it had formerly been, for the purpose of adding to the buildings on his side, when the defendant thought proper to pull it down to its former height. The witnesses proved that the wall was a proper party fence-wall between the two buildings, and had been built about twenty-five years before at the joint expense of both proprietors, and that it stood on the boundary line, so that part of the wall was on the ground of each proprietor. The defendant contended, that as no notice had been given to him under the Building Act, 14 G. 3, c. 78, as required by § 38, of its being out of repair, and of the plaintiff's intention to repair or rebuild it, he had no right to add to it or meddle with it; and also that the defendant was tenant in common with the plaintiff of the wall, and therefore no action of trespass could be supported by the plaintiff against his companion for pulling down the common property. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with 40s. damages, Mansfield, C. J., reserving this point; upon which

Best, Serjt., in Hilary Term, 1813, obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit, when GIBBS, J., observed, that the title he contended for, would not avail the defendant; he must contend he was joint-tenant, if he hoped to succeed in the argument.

Shepherd, Serjt., showed cause.

Best, contra.

MANSFIELD, C. J. If these parties are tenants in common, no trespass lies; but I see not how they became tenants in common. Under the circumstances, each has a right to the use of this wall; but the wall stands, part on the ground of each, and therefore is not the property of them as tenants in common; and each party, for any injury done to the part which stands on his own land, must have the ordinary remedy.

HEATH, J. I am of the same opinion. It is truly said for the defendant, that the building ensues the nature of the tenure of the land; there must be a conveyance to pass the property of the soil; it will not pass by parol agreement. Here is no tenancy in common. Lord Mansfield said, if a man lets another build on his land, it shall be pronounced a gift; but he never went further than that. [GIBBS, J., seemed to doubt if that doctrine could be supported.]

CHAMBRE, J. At common law, no action of waste lay by one tenant against another; that action was given by the Statute of Westminster the second. The same reasons that prevented a tenant in common from maintaining waste at common law, equally hinder him from maintaining trespass; the question then is, whether these persons are tenants in common. Now the Statute which gives each party certain rights in a wall built in this way, does not make it a common property; it only confers on each a right to use it for certain purposes. There is no transfer of property here, and the parties are severally owners of their respective land as before.

GIBBS, J. I am of the same opinion. Trespass lies not by one tenant in common against another tenant in common. The only remaining question is, whether these parties are tenants in common. How are they such? One is owner of the land on which one half of the wall is erected, and the other is owner of the land on which the other half of the wall is erected at their joint expense; and under the Building Act, each is entitled to certain easements in the wall on the land of the other. If they are tenants in common, either may sue out a writ of partition against the other, and then, after partition made, they revert to their own rights again. For this reason, as well as for others, I am clearly of opinion that this rule cannot be maintained.

Rule discharged.

CUBITT v. PORTER. ✓

KING'S BENCH. 1828.

[Reported 8 B. & C. 257.]

DECLARATION stated that the defendant on, &c., at, &c., broke and entered a certain close of the plaintiff, to wit, in the city of Norwich, and county of the same city, and then and there pulled down and damaged a great part of a certain wall of the plaintiff, then standing and being in and upon the said close, and the materials thereof, of the plaintiff, of the value of £100, seised, and carried away, and converted, and disposed thereof to his, the defendant's, own use; and also erected and built a certain other wall, and a certain privy, and a certain other erection and building against and upon the wall of the plaintiff, and kept and continued the same other wall, &c., upon and against the wall of the plaintiff for a long space of time, and also cast divers quantities of bricks and rubbish upon the plaintiff's close, by means of which several premises the wall of the plaintiff had been and was greatly weakened and injured, &c. Plea, Not guilty. At the trial before Alexander, C. B., at the Summer Assizes for the county of Norfolk, 1826, it appeared that the plaintiff was the occupier of a cottage and garden, as tenant to one Mr. Doman. They had formerly been the property of the plaintiff's father. The defendant was the owner of premises adjoining those occupied by the plaintiff, and separated therefrom by a wall, part of which the defendant, in July, 1825, had pulled down, and erected on the site of it another wall (of a greater height than the old wall), with a cottage and other buildings against it, and the present action was brought, after the new wall had been rebuilt, to try the right of property in that wall. There was evidence on both sides of various acts of user of the wall by the respective owners of the plaintiff's and defendant's premises. The Lord Chief Baron, upon this evidence, told the jury to find for the defendant, if they thought the wall was his, or if, from the common user of the wall by the respective owners of the plaintiff's and defendant's premises, they believed the plaintiff and defendant had a common property in it. The verdict returned by the foreman of the jury was: "We find this to be a party wall." The Lord Chief Baron said, That is a verdict for the defendant. After the jury had separated, the plaintiff's counsel observed, that the wall might be a party wall, and yet the plaintiff and defendant might not be tenants in common of it, or of the land on which it was built; for if each of the proprietors of the two estates contributed the site of the land on which it was built in equal moieties, or had contributed in the same proportion to the expense of building it, each of them would remain the owner of a moiety of the wall, and might maintain an action against the other for any injury done to that moiety. Storks, Serjt., in Michaelmas Term, 1826, obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, upon the ground, first, that the attention of the jury had not been drawn to that distinction, and that it might, therefore, be true that the wall was a party wall, and yet this action would be maintainable. Secondly, assuming that the verdict established that they were tenants in common of the wall, and of the land on which it was built, still the action was maintainable, because there had been a destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common by one of the two co-tenants.

Robinson and Wallingher now showed cause.

Storks, Serjt., and F. Kelly, contra.

BAILEY, J. I am of opinion that the rule for a new trial ought to be discharged. This was an action for pulling down the plaintiff's wall. If the wall was the exclusive property of the plaintiff, then the act done by the defendant was a sufficient ground for the action. If it was entirely the property of the defendant, then he was justified in doing what he did. There was a third view of the case, and that was the view taken of it by the Lord Chief Baron at the trial, viz., that it might be the common property of the plaintiff and defendant. The question left to the jury was, Whether from the common use of the wall they would not infer that it was common property? Now there was certainly very strong evidence of common use, and the nature of the right may be collected from the manner in which a thing has been used. The jury found that it was a party wall; they did not in terms find that it was common property; but on having the question whether it was common property put to them, they found it was a party wall. The Lord Chief Baron observed, this was a verdict for the defendant. Until the jury had separated, no observation was made upon the subject of the direction of the judge, or upon the answer of the jury on that point. And I think it is too late, on a motion for a new trial, to suggest that the case might have been differently presented to the consideration of the jury; and that if that had been done, the verdict might have been different. The probability is against the existence of that state of things which would have justified a verdict for the plaintiff, even on that view of the case, which was not presented to the consideration of the jury. Where a wall is common property, it may happen either that a moiety of the land on which it is built may be one man's, and the other moiety another's, or the land may belong to the two persons in undivided moieties. It does not appear whether at the time when this wall was built the land belonged wholly to one individual. It might at that time have belonged entirely to one, and then he might have sold off a part; or he might have sold an undivided moiety of the wall with the land on one side, and an undivided moiety of the wall with the land on the other side. If the land on which the wall was built belonged on one side to one party, and on the other to the other party, and they between them agreed to build the wall, it would have been prudent at least to make this bargain, that so long as there was to be a wall continuing on this property, the land on which it was built, and the wall which stood upon that land, should be taken and considered to be the common property of the two, and that the owners of the estates on each side should be tenants in common of the undivided moiety of that land and of that wall; with the power of adopting such remedies for partition as tenants in common may adopt. On the other hand, if the wall stood partly on one man's land, and partly on another's, either party would have a right to pare away the wall on his side, so as to weaken the wall on the other, and to produce a destruction of that which ought to be the common property of the two. It seems to me, the probability of the case is, that this was not a party wall according to the principle which was acted upon in the case of Matts v. Hawkins, 5 Taunt. 20, but that it was a wall built on the common property of the two, and that the wall was the common property of both. Matts v. Hawkins naturally led to a different conclusion; for under the Party Wall Act, each is to contribute the land for that which is to be built on the common soil of the two. If the land is to be contributed by the parties in equal proportions, it may be a probable consequence (I do not say whether it is or not) that the wall belongs one half to the one, and the other half to the other; but that, as it seems to me, in the country where the Party Wall Act does not apply, is such an improbable state of things, that we ought not to send it down again to a new trial on the ground that that view of the case was not presented to the consideration of the jury, when at the trial it was not desired by the counsel that it should be so presented to them.

Then, the next point is, whether, assuming that the land on which this wall was built, and that the wall itself, was the common property of the two, the act done by the defendant entitled the plaintiff to maintain trespass. It has been contended that trespass is maintainable, on the ground that there was a destruction of the thing, and that if one tenant in common destroy that which is the subject of the tenancy in common, that is an actual ouster and expulsion by the one of the other, and that the party so expelled may maintain an action of trespass for what has been done in that respect. Perhaps if one had entirely destroyed the wall, that might have been a foundation for an action of trespass. But I take it, that in the case of a wall, a temporary removal, with a view to improve part of the property on one side at least, and, perhaps, on both, is not such a destruction as will justify an action of trespass. There is no authority to show that one tenant in common can maintain an action against the other for a temporary removal of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common, the party removing it having at the same time an intention of making a prompt restitution. It was not a destruction; the object of the party was not that there should be no wall there, but that there should be a wall there again as expeditiously as a wall could be made. But then it is said the wall here is much higher than the wall was before. What is the consequence of that? One tenant in common has, upon that which is the subject-matter of the tenancy in common, laid bricks and heightened the wall. If that be done further than it ought to have been done, what is the remedy of the other party? He may remove it. That is the only remedy he can have. If there be land belonging to two as tenants in common, and one builds a wall on that land, the other cannot bring trespass, because he is excluded from the surface of that ground for a certain period of time, viz., for so long a period as that wall stands. This case falls within the principle acted upon in Wiltshire v. Sidford, 8 B. & C. 259 n. The view in which it was presented to the jury by the Lord Chief Baron was the right view of it. There was evidence of a common user by both parties, which justified the presumption either that the wall was originally built, on land belonging in undivided moieties to the owners of the respective premises, and at their joint expense; or that it had been agreed between them that the wall and the land on which it stood should be considered the property of both as tenants in common, so as to insure to each a continuance of the use of the wall. For these reasons I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged.

HOLROYD, J. I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. It is incumbent on the plaintiff to establish his right of action. The declaration in this case was for pulling down the old wall and building the new one. The presumption arising from the acts of enjoyment is, that the wall was the property of the plaintiff and defendant as tenants in common; for the law will presume that what was done without opposition for a considerable time was done rightfully, and that these acts of enjoyment were lawful. That being the case, there was abundant evidence upon the trial to raise a question to go to the jury, whether the wall was or was not the common wall of both. There having been a joint use of the wall by both, each must have had the right originally, or have acquired the right in the course of time by legal means. The jury have found in effect that it was their common property. The question then arises, whether one tenant in common can maintain an action of trespass against another for such acts as were done in this case by pulling down the old wall and building the new one on its site. Taking it to be the law, that where there is a complete destruction by one tenant in common of that which he has in common with others, so that that other is wholly deprived of the use of it, an action of trespass will lie, I think the act done by the defendant in this case cannot be considered as a destruction of the wall; the removal of the old wall having been effected merely for the purpose of rebuilding another on its site as speedily as possible.

LITTLEDALE, J. I am entirely of the same opinion. The plaintiff seems to have claimed the wall as his own exclusive property, and so did the defendant. There was abundant evidence to raise the question for the consideration of the jury, Whether the plaintiff and defendant were tenants in common? It is suggested, that although the learned judge left it to the jury to find whether the wall was the property of the plaintiff or of the defendant, and also whether it was the common property of both as tenants in common, yet that the foreman of the jury when he returned the verdict did not in express terms answer the question put to them by the learned judge, but said that the jury found it to be a party wall; and that that finding is consistent with the fact of the wall, and the soil on which it was built, having originally belonged to the plaintiff and defendant, or those under whom they claimed, in equal moieties. It appears that when that verdict was returned, the Lord Chief Baron observed that it was a verdict for the defendant. The plaintiff's counsel did not then suggest to the Lord Chief Baron the propriety of leaving to the jury the question in any other form than that in which it was left to them, or intimate any doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant the jury in coming to the conclusion to which they did come. That being so, a new trial cannot now be granted on that ground. But even assuming the parties to have been tenants in common of this wall, then it is said that trespass will lie in this case by one tenant in common against the other, because there was in this case a destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common. In Com. Dig. Estates (K), 8, there are various cases as to the remedy which one tenant in common has against another. It appears that with regard to actions in respect to matters not chattels, in some cases an ejectment will lie, if one actually oust his companion of the possession, and trespass will lie where there has been a complete and total destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common; as if one tenant in common destroys the whole flight of a dovecote, or all the deer in their park. In other cases where there has not been a total destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common, but only a partial injury to it, waste or an action on the case will lie by one tenant in common against another; as if one tenant in common of a wood or piscary does waste against the will of the other, he shall have waste; or if one corrupts the water, the other shall have an action on the case. There are other cases where the only remedy is to retake the property. As if one take a chattel real or personal entire, the other may retake it when he has an opportunity; but he has no remedy by action. If, again, there be two tenants in common of a house or mill, and it fall into decay, the one is willing to repair, and the other will not, he that is willing shall have a writ de reparatione facienda. It has been said that trespass will lie in this case by one tenant in common against the other, because there has been an expulsion amounting to an actual ouster. Now, if there has been an actual ouster by one tenant in common, ejectment will lie at the suit of the other. But I am not aware that trespass will lie, for in trespass the breaking and entering is the gist of the action; expulsion or ouster is a mere aggravation of the trespass. If the original entry therefore be lawful, trespass will not lie. In Taylor v. Cole, 3 T. R. 292, the first count was for breaking and entering the plaintiff's house, and expelling him. As to the breaking and entering, the defendant justified as sheriff of Middlesex under a fieri facias. Upon general demurrer it was held that the plea, which only justified the breaking and entering by showing a good cause for it, was a full answer, because the breaking and entering were the gist of the action, and the expulsion was only matter of aggravation; and that if the plaintiff had wished to take advantage of the expulsion, which was merely matter of aggravation, he ought to have shown the special matter in a new assignment, in order to make the party a trespasser ab initio. Then, if the expulsion be mere aggravation, trespass will not lie for it, because the original entry is lawful. The original entry being the gist of the action in trespass, and the expulsion mere aggravation, I doubt much whether trespass can be maintained even for an expulsion. Here the defendant pulled down one wall, and built another on its site. If two persons be tenants in common of land on which there is a wall, and one refuses to repair, and the other pulls down the wall, and sells the materials, and builds a better wall, it may be said that there has been a total destruction of the original wall, more especially if he sold the materials. Still if he did that for the purpose of getting other materials to make the new wall better than the old one was, and he builds the new one, though there was a destruction of that which was originally the subject-matter of the tenancy in common, an action of trespass will not be maintainable. Such an act is more properly the subject-matter of an action upon the case, because it is in the nature of a partial injury, and not of a total destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common. If tenant for life or tenant for years pull down any wall or other building, it is the subject of an action of waste at the suit of the reversioner. It is expressly laid down in Com. Dig. Estates (K), 8, if one tenant in common of wood, turbary, &c., does waste against the will of another, he shall have waste concerning it. Here the pulling down of the old wall without the consent of the plaintiff might be waste. An action of waste is the proper remedy for a reversioner or landlord against a tenant who pulls down a building; and such an action may be maintained by one tenant in common against another, who has improperly pulled down a wall, the common property of the two. Upon the whole, I am of opinion that trespass is not maintainable. The rule for a new trial must therefore be discharged.

Rule discharged.

WATSON v. GRAY. ✓

CHANCERY DIVISION. 1880.

[Reported 14 Ch. D. 192.]

THIS action was brought to restrain the commission of certain alleged acts of trespass by the defendant, and for damages.

The plaintiff and the defendant were the owners in fee of adjoining houses, numbered respectively 9 and 7 in a row of houses called Queen's Terrace, in Middlesborough. Queen's Terrace faced to the east, and the defendant's house was situate to the north of the plaintiff's. At the rear of each of the houses was a yard, the yards being separated from each other by a wall four and a half inches thick.

The plaintiff's house and premises were by a deed dated the 15th of September, 1855, conveyed by Joseph Pease and others in fee to Jane Lyons, who was a predecessor in title of the plaintiff. The deed contained the following clause: "It is hereby agreed and declared by and between the said parties hereto that the north and south gables and walls of the said messuage or dwelling-house and hereditaments hereby conveyed shall be and remain party walls, and that the eastern and western walls and the pallisades in front of the said messuage or dwelling-house shall belong exclusively to the said Jane Lyons, her heirs and assigns."

The defendant's house and premises were conveyed to him in fee by the same persons by a deed dated the 27th of December, 1864, which contained a similar declaration as to the north and south walls thereof.

The principal act of trespass complained of by the plaintiff arose in this way. The plaintiff had recently commenced erecting in his back yard a shed. This shed immediately adjoined the wall separating his yard from the defendant's yard, and the plaintiff had, without the defendant's permission, built on the top of that wall a new piece of wall of a triangular shape about 4 ft. 6 in. in length at the bottom, and about 3 ft. 4 in. in height. In thickness it corresponded with the thickness of the old wall. The new piece of wall was intended to support the roof of the shed. The defendant had knocked down the new piece of the wall. The plaintiff claimed damages for the removal of the new piece of wall, and an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the rebuilding of it.

FRY, J., after stating the facts, and observing that the conveyance to the plaintiff would, no doubt, include the walls of the house, if it had not contained the proviso that the north and south walls should be party walls, stated that proviso, and continued: —

What is the meaning of the term "party wall," as there used? The words appear to me to express a meaning rather popular than legal, and they may, I think, be used in four different senses.

They may mean, first, a wall of which the two adjoining owners are tenants in common, as in Wiltshire v. Sidford, 1 Man. & Ry. 404, and Cubitt v. Porter, 8 B. & C. 257, 265. I think that the judgments in those cases show that that is the most common and the primary meaning of the term. In the next place, the term may be used to signify a wall divided longitudinally into two strips, one belonging to each of the neighboring owners, as in Matts v. Hawkins, 5 Taunt. 20. Then, thirdly, the term may mean a wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements. The term is so used in some of the Building Acts. Lastly, the term may designate a wall divided longitudinally into two moieties, each moiety being subject to a cross easement in favor of the owner of the other moiety.

In whichever of these senses the term is used, some difficulty arises. In the case of a longitudinal division between the two neighbors, each of them, as was said in Cubitt v. Porter, 8 B. & C. 257, 264, has a right to pare away one moiety of the wall; and if this was done, the moiety of the other owner might be of very little use to him. Again, if the wall belongs to the adjoining owners as tenants in common, it may become the subject of a partition, and then exactly the same difficulty would arise. To meet this difficulty the fourth meaning of the term "party wall" was suggested by the learned author of the note to Wiltshire v. Sidford, 1 Man. & Ry. 408.

In the present case I have come to the conclusion that the wall must be considered as belonging to the plaintiff and the defendant as tenants in common, first, because the cases show that this is the most ordinary meaning of the words, and, secondly, because in the conveyance of the 15th of September, 1855, a party wall is contrasted with a wall belonging exclusively to one owner.

Then the question arises whether what the plaintiff has done is a violation of the defendant's rights. This, it must be remembered, is not the same question as whether an action of trespass could be maintained by the defendant against the plaintiff. I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not justified in doing what he did. In Cubitt v. Porter, 8 B. & C. 265, Bailey, J., said: "One tenant in common has upon that which is the subject-matter of the tenancy in common laid bricks and heightened the wall. If that be done further than it ought to have been done, what is the remedy of the other party? He may remove it. That is the only remedy he can have." That is the precise remedy to which the defendant has had recourse in the present case. The case of Stedman v. Smith, 8 E. & B. 1, is also material on this part of the present case. There, as the head-note states, "the plaintiff and the defendant occupied adjacent plots of ground divided by a wall of which they were tenants in common. There was a shed on the defendant's ground contiguous to the wall, the roof of which rested on the top of the wall across its whole width. The defendant took the coping-stones off the top of the wall, heightened the wall, replaced the coping-stones on the top, and built a wash-house contiguous to the wall, where the shed had stood, the roof of the wash-house occupying the whole width of the top of the wall, and he set a stone into the wall, with an inscription on it stating that the wall and the land on which it stood belonged to him." On these facts it was held that a jury might find an actual ouster by the defendant of the plaintiff from the possession of the wall which would constitute an actionable trespass. In the course of the argument, Crompton, J., said: "You certainly had no longer the use of the same wall; you could not put flower-pots on it, for instance. Suppose he had covered it with broken glass, so as to prevent your passing along it, as you were entitled to do." And in his judgment he said: "The plaintiff is excluded from the top of the wall; he might have wished to train fruit-trees there, or to amuse himself by running along the top of the wall." Just so in the present case, the plaintiff has excluded the defendant from the use of the top of the wall. I hold, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to any damages in respect of the throwing down of the wall, and that the injunction asked for cannot be granted.

SHERRED v. CISCO. ✓

SUPERIOR COURT OF NEW YORK. 1851.

[Reported 4 Sandf. S. C. 480.]

THIS was a bill in equity, filed in the Supreme Court, from whence the cause was transferred to this court. An answer was put in, a replication filed, and evidence was introduced at the hearing of the cause. The facts disclosed by the pleadings and proofs were as follows.

For several years prior to 1845, the complainant, Sarah Sherred, was seised in fee of a lot known as number thirty-one, on the easterly side of Broad Street, in the city of New York; and Richard Duryee in his lifetime, and after his death his heirs, were seised in fee of the adjoining lot on the north side, known as number twenty-nine. Each lot was covered by a store or warehouse. The buildings were separated by a single brick wall, resting on a stone foundation, one half of which was upon the land of Sherred, and the other half on the land of Duryee. The beams of the two stores rested upon this common or party wall. Duryee had executed several mortgages on lot number twenty-nine, which were duly recorded. Prior to July 19th, 1845, Duryee died, and the mortgagees to whom three of the mortgages were executed, commenced proceedings for their foreclosure against Duryee's heirs and the subsequent mortgagees. While the foreclosure was pending, on the 19th of July, 1845, both of the stores, 29 and 31 Broad Street, were destroyed by fire, and nothing was left of the party wall except the stone foundation.

Immediately after the fire, Sherred proceeded to rebuild the store on lot No. 31, extending it a little further in depth than the former building. In rebuilding, her contractors commenced on the stone foundation of the former wall between the stores on 29 and 31, and after raising it with stone about a foot higher than the stone wall was before, built upon it with brick, the side wall of her store, four stories high. The new wall, built at the sole expense of Sherred, thus stood one half on her lot, and the other half on the Duryee lot. Her store was finished in the fall of 1845.

The bill charged that she built this wall after applying to Duryee's heirs to unite with her in so doing, with their assent and approval, and on their agreeing to pay half the expense, if they could obtain the money to rebuild their store. These statements were put in issue, and were not proved.

The foreclosure of Duryee's mortgages resulted in a decree for a sale, under which the defendant Cisco became the purchaser of lot 29, for $15,600, at a sale made by a master in chancery on the 27th of January, 1847. The master conveyed the lot to him on the 15th of February, 1847. The defendant, soon after his purchase, built a warehouse or store on lot 29, and used the wall so built by Sherred for one of the side walls of his store, inserting therein his timbers and beams. The first story of his store extended to the same depth as Sherred's new store, but the upper stories did not extend as far back from the street, by about fourteen feet, as Sherred's store extended. As to those stories, the portion of the party wall not used by the defendant was shown to be a detriment to him, rather than a benefit.

Sherred applied to the defendant to pay half the value of the wall as used by both parties, which he declined to do, on the ground that he purchased and paid for the half of it standing on his lot, at the master's sale. There was no proof that the defendant had any notice, till after he commenced building, that Sherred had built the party wall at her sole expense, or that she had not been paid for half of it, or that she claimed payment therefor. It was proved that the value of the half of that part of the party wall which the defendant made use of in constructing his store, was $459.14. The value of the entire wall built by Sherred between upon the two lots, was $1146.

J. T. Brady, for the complainant.

W. C. Wetmore and M. S. Bidwell, for the defendant.

BY THE COURT. SANDFORD, J. The plaintiff relies entirely on the case of Campbell v. Mesier, 4 John. Ch. R. 334, and 6 Ibid. 21, to sustain this suit. It was there decided, that where there was an old party wall standing between two houses, which had become ruinous, and the owner of one of the houses being desirous to rebuild his house, after notice to the owner of the other, and a request to him to unite in the work, took down the old wall and rebuilt it on the same site, with and for his new house, the owner of the adjoining house was bound to contribute ratably to the expense of the new wall; but not beyond the extent of the height and quality of the old wall. It was in effect held also, when the case was before the chancellor on the equity reserved in 6 J. C. R. 21, that a purchaser of the house from the owner thus liable, took it subject to the charge upon it for contribution. But we suppose this was on the ground that the purchaser was aware of the claim of his neighbor for contribution when he purchased, as was apparent from his taking a covenant of indemnity in respect of the use of the party wall, in his deed of the house.

We think this case differs from Campbell v. Mesier, so far that the decision of the latter is not controlling. In the first place, the defendant bought his lot with the new wall upon it, without notice of the plaintiff's claim. Next, when the wall in question was built by the plaintiff, there was no party wall in existence. There had been a wall, which served as a partition between the two stores (whether properly called a party wall or not, in the sense used by the chancellor in the case cited, we will not here inquire), but it was destroyed with those stores. The stone foundation that remained does not alter the matter. Either party could remove so much of it as rested on his ground, with the rubbish on his lot, on preparing to rebuild. Then the plaintiff on one side, and the mortgagees on the other, Duryee's heirs really having no interest in the subject, owned two adjoining vacant lots in severalty, where there had once been a partition wall forming the mutual support of two adjoining buildings. The plaintiff, without notice to the mortgagees, and without their assent or knowledge, rebuilt her store, and placed the partition wall on the site of the former one. There was no "equality of right and interest" in an existing wall, which it was necessary, for the two houses then supported by it, should be rebuilt, and in which wall the parties "had an equal interest," as was the chancellor's view of the facts in Campbell v. Mesier. These parties had no such interest, for they had no joint or common interest whatever. Each owned in severalty the half of the ground on which the former wall stood. Neither was under any obligation or duty to build upon his lot, or to suffer the other party to place part of a division wall upon it. The principle of contribution applicable to tenants in common of a mill, and to the discharge of a common burden or charge upon lands held in common, is therefore not applicable to this case; and we think it is not governed by the principle of the chancellor's decision in the authority relied upon by the plaintiff.

By the common law, every owner of land is his own judge of the propriety of building upon it or leaving it vacant; and when he does build, of the manner and extent of his buildings. In the absence of statutory provisions, he may build with what material he pleases, and he is under no obligation to give to his neighbor any use or advantage of his land, by way of support, drip, or easement of any description. If a stranger dispossess him, or enter upon his unoccupied property, erect buildings, and make valuable permanent improvements upon it, he is not under the slightest obligation to recompense such stranger for any portion of the expense, on recovering the possession of the land. So unyielding is this doctrine, that a mortgagee in possession will not be allowed, on redemption by the mortgagor, for the expense of clearing up unproductive wild lands mortgaged (Moore v. Cable, 1 J. C. R. 385); and where a vendor breaks off a contract of sale, the vendee cannot recover for his improvements made on the lands sold, while in possession under the contract. Gillet v. Maynard, 5 John. R. 85. Whether the entry were tortious, or in the most perfect good faith, the common law is uniform in refusing to permit the real owner of the land to be benefited without his own request or sanction. And if one, having made valuable erections on the land of another, while in possession under a claim of title, remove the buildings from the land before the owner recovers possession, he is liable in trespass for their value. Dewey v. Osborn, 4 Cowen, 329; and see Erwin v. Olmsted, 7 Ibid. 229. The rule allowing defendants in ejectment, in a suit against them for mesne profits, to retain, in diminution of the recovery, the value of permanent improvements made in good faith, does not trench at all upon this principle. Jackson v. Loomis, 4 Cowen, 168; Van Alen v. Rogers, 1 John. Cas. 281. That action is one for damages administered on equitable principles, and justly limited to the injury actually sustained.

We perceive no ground upon which the plaintiff can maintain her suit, that will not give a like remedy for all permanent valuable erections made in good faith, by all persons on lands which they do not own. It was argued that the fact of there having formerly been a partition wall (which we will call a party wall), gives the right to have it continued for all time to come. To test this argument fairly, we will assume, what is not proved, but may, perhaps, be fairly inferred, that the old wall was built by the mutual agreement, and at the joint expense, of the then proprietors of the two lots. It is not disputed that each proprietor remained the owner in severalty of the ground on which half of the wall rested, and of course each owned in severalty one half of the wall. Neither party had a right to pull down the wall without the other's consent; and to that extent, the agreement upon which it was erected controlled the exclusive dominion which each would otherwise have had over the half of the wall, as well as over the soil on which it stood. The case of Campbell v. Mesier, it may be said, is an authority that each was bound to keep the wall good on its falling into decay; but that case proceeded upon the footing that each had an equal interest in the party wall, of the same nature as that of tenants in common, and the fact here is clearly otherwise.

The parties being confessedly restrained from destroying the wall without mutual consent, how is it when the wall has been destroyed by the elements? The lands on each side are vacant. The agreement upon which the party wall was built related to that wall only. There was no agreement to build a second wall, or to build houses a second time, in the event that the original wall, and the houses which it supported, should be destroyed. Neither party, perhaps, thought of such an event. If they had, it by no means follows they would at that time have stipulated for a second joint wall. It might well have occurred to them, that if the buildings were destroyed, one or the other might not wish to rebuild; or that one might desire to erect a very strong warehouse for heavy goods, requiring thick walls, and the other a private dwelling, with a wall only half as thick. But without pursuing the views which parties may well be supposed to entertain, on their attention being called to the event of a total destruction of the building they are about to erect on a party wall, it suffices to say, that when two owners of adjoining city lots unite in building two stores with a party wall, we have no right to infer, from that act, an agreement binding upon them and their heirs and assigns to the end of time, to erect another like party wall at their mutual expense, when that one is casually destroyed, and so on, as often as the new one shares the same fate.

Suppose in this case that the foreclosure of Duryee's mortgages had terminated, and the defendant had purchased the Duryee lot, before the plaintiff commenced rebuilding her store. If the doctrine contended for in her behalf be correct, she could have compelled the defendant to join in building a new party wall, or on his refusal, built it herself, and recovered from him half the expense. Suppose the defendant had said, on being requested to join in the party wall, I bought this lot at a public sale, without notice of any such right as you claim, and my recorded title shows nothing of the kind. Would not this have been a conclusive answer to the request? Suppose further, that on the plaintiff's assuming to build the new party wall, the defendant had forbidden her placing any part of it on his land. Could he not have maintained trespass every day against her workmen while building it, and when finished, could he not by an ejectment have compelled her to take it down? It seems to us these questions must be answered in the affirmative, and that the result overthrows entirely the claim of right based upon the former party wall.

But it is said the defendant made use of the new wall when he built on his lot, and thus ratified it as a party wall; and it will be unjust to permit him to have the benefit of it without making compensation.

As to the injustice alleged, it is very well answered that the defendant bought this lot at a judicial sale; and, so far as we know, paid for it all that it was worth, including the half wall then standing upon it, and a judgment in this suit compelling him to pay the plaintiff for the same half, will make him pay for it twice. But whether that be the result of our decision, or it have the effect to give him the half of the wall for nothing, it cannot change the rule of law which governs the case.

Then what is the effect of his using the party wall? He found it on his land, on taking possession. He wanted to build. Was he to tear it down, or insist on the plaintiff's removing the half wall, so that he could occupy his whole land? This he might have done, Wigford v. Gill, Cro. Eliz. 269, to her great injury, and with probably no advantage to himself. Or was he not entirely at liberty to use as his own, an erection on the land he had bought, without subjecting himself to pay for work done without his request or knowledge? We think he was. We do not see how the defendant is liable to pay for half of this wall, because he used it, any more than he would have been liable, if the Duryees had rebuilt before he bought, and had put their beams into the wall, without paying the plaintiff for it. Yet the proposition would be at once scouted, that the purchaser of a house in this city, having paid to the owner the price, in good faith and without notice, would be liable to the owner of an adjoining house, for the unpaid half of the cost of the party wall which separated the two tenements.

We think we have shown that this case is not governed by Campbell v. Mesier, whether regarded as arising between the mortgagees of Duryee's lot and the plaintiff, or between her and the defendant. We will next consider the plaintiff's point, that successive owners of city lots, situated as these were, are bound to rebuild party walls when destroyed, because of an equitable liability founded on a duty arising from the fact that the parties are at least quasi tenants in common of such party walls. This idea of quasi tenancy in common comes from the civil law, and we think has no foothold in our law. It is true, we find two cases in England, in which it was held that common user of a wall separating adjoining houses belonging to different owners, is prima facie evidence that the wall and the land on which it stands belong to the owners of those houses in equal moieties, not as quasi, but as actual tenants in common. Wiltshire v. Sidford, 1 Man. & R. 404; Cubitt v. Porter, 8 Barn. & Cr. 257.

But it was decided in Matts v. Hawkins, 5 Taunt. 20, that although a party wall be erected at the joint expense of the two proprietors of the lots on either side, one half of the thickness of it standing on the land of each, they are not therefore tenants in common of the wall or of the land on which it stands. The property in the wall in such a case follows the property of the land which supports it. This, it should be observed, was in London, after the passage of the Building Act, 14 Geo. III., ch. 78, which regulates the subject of party walls; and its authority was fully recognized in both the cases in the King's Bench last cited. The principle of the decisions is, that while the common user is presumptive evidence of a tenancy in common in the land and wall, that presumption is rebutted by proof of the precise extent of the land originally belonging to each owner, and each is then deemed the exclusive owner of so much of the wall as stands on his own land (Gale & Whatley on Easements, 296). We also refer to Peyton v. Mayor, &c. of London, 9 B. & Cr. 725.

The Roman law contained numerous refined and minute regulations respecting prædial servitudes, both rural and urban, which are unknown to the common law; and among the number are most of those respecting party walls (Digest, lib. 8, tit. 2, l. 18, 19, 20, 25, 32, 33, 36, 40). These are also made the subject of many provisions in the French law (Code Civil Français, liv. 2, tit. 4). The second chapter of the Code Civil, which contains the sections cited by the learned chancellor in Campbell v. Mesier, is entitled "Of servitudes established by law," as distinguished from those derived from the situation of places. Among these positive enactments is one which gives to each joint proprietor the right to place beams in the whole thickness of the wall, within two inches (cinquante-quatre millimètres) of the opposite side (§657), which is very different from our notions of the use of a party wall. It may well be that sound policy dictates similar legislation in this State; but we do not feel at liberty to import doctrines from the civil law, however benign or equitable, which conflict with established common law principles.

In Pennsylvania, the subject of party walls in the city of Philadelphia was regulated by Statute one hundred and thirty years ago (1 Laws of Penn. ch. 242, p. 124, &c.; Act of 1721). By that Statute, the foundation, breadth, thickness, &c., were to be prescribed by the city surveyors, or regulators; and the same officers determined the compensation to be paid by the builder on the adjoining lot, on his inserting his beams. These matters were not left to the unregulated judgment of experts and witnesses called by the parties interested, as would be the case in our law, if the plaintiff's view of it be sustained. The Act provided expressly that the first builder should be reimbursed one moiety of the wall, or of so much of it as the next builder should use; but it was decided in Ingles v. Bringhurst, 1 Dall. 341, that the first builder had no lien for this reimbursement upon the adjoining land, and that it was only a personal charge against the next builder.

The provision in the Act of 1813, and the ordinances of the Common Council of the city of New York under the same, to which we were referred by the plaintiff's counsel, do not apply to party walls; they relate to walls and fences separating enclosures. The Statute itself speaks of fences only (2 R. L. 134, § 20; Corporation Ordinances, 1845, ch. 43).

Upon the whole, we are clear that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, and her bill must be dismissed with costs.¹

BROOKS v. CURTIS.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1872.

[Reported 50 N. Y. 639.]

APPEAL from judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court in the Fourth Judicial Department, modifying judgment in favor of defendants, entered upon the decision of the court at Special Term, and affirming judgment as modified.

This action was brought to compel defendants to remove certain encroachments alleged to have been placed by defendants upon the premises of plaintiff, and to restore the property to its former condition.

The parties are the owners of adjoining premises, situate in the city of Rochester. In 1846 one Everard Peck owned both premises. He deeded to plaintiff, in July of that year. At that time Peck had begun the construction of a three-story brick building upon the lot. The easterly line of the premises conveyed to plaintiff is thus given in the deed: "Beginning at a point on the north of Buffalo Street, . . . opposite the centre of the brick wall which said party of the first part is now erecting as the west wall of a block of stores; thence northwardly through the centre of said brick wall seventy-nine feet." In 1855, plaintiff erected a three-story building, using the wall as the east wall thereof. In 1856 the defendants acquired title from the executors of Peck to the balance of the lot. In 1866 they added two additional stories to their building.—building up the party wall for that purpose. They also lowered the ceiling of the upper story of the building, as it was, some six feet, letting the joists into the old wall, and, to secure them, passed iron anchors through the wall, fastened on the west face of the wall by nuts and plates. The anchors were inserted with the verbal consent of plaintiff. The latter gave no consent to raising the wall. After the addition was completed, ice and snow from the roof of defendants' building fell upon plaintiff's roof, doing some damage.

The court directed the dismissal of the complaint, and judgment was entered accordingly.

The judgment of the General Term was as follows: "Judgment modified so as to restrain the defendants from maintaining their roof in such manner and of such construction that the water and snow from it, and the ice formed from the waters falling from it, descend upon the roof of the plaintiff's adjoining building. As thus modified, judgment affirmed, without costs of this appeal to either party."

James C. Cochrane, for the appellant.

W. F. Cogswell, for the respondents.

RAPALLO, J. The deed from Everard Peck to the plaintiff states that the wall in controversy was, at the time of the conveyance, being erected by Peck as the west wall of a block of stores. The centre line of the wall is, by the deed, made the easterly boundary of the land conveyed, which includes the land on which the westerly half of the wall stands. It appears that Peck's stores were afterward completed, and the plaintiff erected a building upon his own lot, using the wall as a party wall, and inserting in it the joists of his building. Peck afterward conveyed to the defendant, who made the addition to the height of the wall.

We think that the language of the deed and the acts of the parties show that it was their intention that the wall should be a party wall for the common use of both lots. The deed states that Peck was at the time erecting the wall, half of which was conveyed, and that it was to be the west wall of his block. This implies that the wall was not then completed, and that Peck was to have the right to complete it and use it as the west wall of his block. If the deed is to be treated as an absolute conveyance, free from any reservation, easement, or privilege in the co-owner of the wall, Peck would have had no right to proceed to complete it, or, at least, that part which was beyond his line, after the conveyance. It cannot be supposed that such was the intention of the parties. Subsequently to this conveyance the wall has been used for more than twenty years as a party wall.

Although land covered by a party wall remains the several property of the owner of each half, yet the title of each owner is qualified by the easement to which the other is entitled; and an important question in this case is whether such easement includes the right to increase the height of the wall, provided such increase can be made without detriment to the strength of the wall or to the property of the adjacent owner.

This question, in the absence of statutory regulations upon the subject, does not seem to have been distinctly settled by authority; but the fact appears in several of the cases relating to party walls that the height had been increased, and there is no intimation that such increase was unlawful. Matts v. Hawkins, 5 Taunton, 20, was an action of trespass. The plaintiff had added to the height of a party wall, and the defendant tore down the addition, for which injury the plaintiff brought trespass. The only point decided was that the parties were not tenants in common of the land, and therefore the action of trespass could be maintained. In Campbell v. Mesier, 4 Johns. Ch. 334, a party wall, standing equally on two lots, having become ruinous, the owner on one side, against the will and in spite of the prohibition of the adjacent owner, pulled down the wall and rebuilt it higher than it was originally. It was held that the adjacent owner was bound to contribute to the expense of the new wall, but not to the extra expense of making it higher than the old. There is no intimation in the case that the increase of height was wrongful. In Partridge v. Gilbert, 15 N. Y. 601, the new wall built by the defendant was not only higher, but its foundations were deeper than the old wall which it replaced. The right to make these additions was not, however, discussed in the case, and perhaps there was no occasion to discuss it; the action being brought by the tenant of the adjacent lot, whose goods were injured in making the repair, and not by the owner.

In Eno v. Del Vecchio, 4 Duer, 53, it was held that the owner on one side of a party wall might, for the purpose of improving his own premises, underpin the foundation of the wall and sink it deeper if he could do so without injury to the building on the adjoining lot; also, that he might increase, within the limits of his own lot, the thickness, length, or height of the wall, if he could do so without injury to the building on the adjoining lot. Whether he could raise the whole party wall higher, or whether any additional elevation must be wholly within the limits of his own lot, the court expressly declined to decide.

We think that the right of either of the adjacent owners to increase the height of a party wall, when it can be done without injury to the adjoining building, and the wall is clearly of sufficient strength to safely bear the addition, is necessarily included in the easement. No adjudication adverse to that right has been referred to by counsel or found by us. The party making the addition does it at his peril; and if injury results, he is liable for all damages. He must insure the safety of the operation. But when safe, it should be allowed. The wall is devoted to the purpose of being used for the common benefit of both tenements. In Hendricks v. Stark, 37 N. Y. 106, it is held that a party wall is in no sense a legal encumbrance upon either property; that the mutual easements of adjoining proprietors in such walls are a mutual benefit to each, and not a burden, but a valuable appurtenant which passes with the title to the property. This is undoubtedly correct, provided each party is allowed to derive from the wall all the benefit which it is capable of affording without detriment to the other. But if, though of sufficient strength, it cannot be used by either party in increasing the height of his building, it may prove a serious injury to the property of one desiring to make that improvement,—an improvement which is very usual and often very necessary in crowded cities. The fairer view, and the one generally adopted in legislative provisions on the subject in this and other countries, is to treat a party wall as a structure for the common benefit and convenience of both of the tenements which it separates, and to permit either party to make any use of it which he may require, either by deepening the foundation or increasing the height, so far as it can be done without injury to the other. The party making the change, when not required for purposes of repair, is absolutely responsible for any damage which it occasions (Eno v. Del Vecchio, 6 Duer, 17) ; but in so far as he can use the wall in the improvement of his own property, without injury to the wall or the adjoining property, there is no good reason why he should not be permitted to do so.

The judge has found that the wall was sufficiently strong to be of the increased height without any injury thereto. He has further found that the carrying up of the wall, under claim of right, was with the knowledge of and without objection from the plaintiff; and that the anchors were inserted with his verbal assent. We think the judge was right in his conclusion of law, that the plaintiff was not entitled to relief, so far as the carrying up of the wall and insertion of the anchors were concerned.

The court at General Term, however, modified the judgment in respect to the roof, so as to restrain the defendants from maintaining it of such construction as to cause water, snow, and ice to fall upon the roof of plaintiff's building. This modification is not appealed from. In making it, the General Term necessarily held that the Special Term should not have dismissed the complaint, but should have granted that part of the relief prayed for which is embraced in the modification, and should have denied the residue; and it is claimed that the judgment of the General Term is erroneous in affirming the dismissal of the complaint with the modification referred to. The appellant is technically correct in this claim. The more proper form would have been simply to modify the judgment, and render such judgment as the Special Term should have rendered. But the objection is one of form merely, except so far as the question of the costs awarded at Special Term is concerned. This being an equitable action, costs were in the discretion of the court below; and it had power, either at Special or General Term, to decree costs in favor of the defendants, although some part of the relief prayed for was granted. We will not, therefore, disturb the judgment on that ground.

The judgment should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

Judgment affirmed.

C. Artificial Watercourses and Drains.

V

WOOD v. SAUNDERS.

[Reported L. R. 10 Ch. 582.]

By an indenture of lease dated the 9th of June, 1870, L. B. Knight Bruce and H. Saunders and his trustees demised to William Wood the mansion and grounds near Roehampton, called the Priory, with the out-offices, gardens, and pleasure-grounds thereto belonging, containing 9a. 2r. 8p. or thereabouts; together with the free passage and running of water and soil in and to the existing cesspool, and in and through all the drains, sewers, and watercourses then constructed or thereafter to be constructed through the adjoining property of the said L. B. Knight Bruce, for the term of two years; and by the same indenture the lessee had the option of purchasing the premises for £10,000. The lessee exercised that option, and by an indenture dated the 21st of May, 1872, L. B. Knight Bruce and the trustee of a term granted and released unto William Wood, his heirs and assigns, all that messuage or mansion-house situate near Roehampton, in the parish of Putney, in the county of Surrey, called the Priory, being the hereditaments comprised in the thereinbefore stated lease of the 9th of June, 1870, with the out-offices, stables, buildings, gardens, and pleasure-grounds thereto belonging, . . . together with the free running of water and soil in and to the existing cesspool, and in and through all the drains, sewers, and watercourses constructed or thereafter to be constructed through the adjoining property of the said L. B. Knight Bruce, his heirs or assigns; and together with all buildings, ditches, ways, sewers, drains, water-courses, liberties, privileges, easements, and appurtenances whatsoever to the said messuage and premises belonging, or in any wise appertaining, to have and to hold the hereditaments and premises thereby assured unto and to the use of W. Wood, his heirs and assigns forever.

The only cesspool then existing on the adjoining property of L. B. Knight Bruce was an open ditch or moat, at a distance of 150 yards from the Priory House; and the only drains, sewers, or watercourses then constructed were drains which conveyed the water or soil from the Priory House to the above-mentioned ditch or moat.

At the dates of the lease and of the conveyance the Priory House was adapted for about twenty-five inmates, and a part only of the drainage from the house ran into the ditch or moat. In 1873 W. Wood altered the drains and made them all discharge into the ditch or moat. He also enlarged the house and turned it into a lunatic asylum, in which nearly 150 persons were resident. The consequence was a large increase in the volume of night-soil and drainage, creating, as the defendant Saunders alleged, an intolerable nuisance.

The defendant Saunders appeared to be in possession of the cesspool in question and of the other lands of L. B. Knight Bruce under an agreement made with L. B. Knight Bruce for granting building leases, and had taken proceedings against the plaintiff Wood in respect of the drains as for nuisance, and had, as the plaintiff alleged, threatened to stop up the drains from the Priory.

The plaintiff thereupon filed the bill in this suit to restrain the stopping up of the drains.

An injunction was granted on motion on the usual undertaking for damages.

SIR CHARLES HALL, V. C., expressed his opinion that the plaintiff and the defendant were each partly right and partly wrong. The question was as to the right conferred by the grant, and His Honor agreed with the defendant that the right of the plaintiff was not enlarged by the grant, but stood as it was at the date of the lease.

The question, therefore, to be determined was, what was the construction of the lease as granting a right during the continuance of that tenancy. It was argued on behalf of the defendant that it was not to be construed, as an ordinary grant, most strongly as against the grantor, but that the onus lay upon the owner of the dominant tenement to show that he had the right irrespective of any such rule of construction. But there was no authority cited in favor of that proposition as applicable to an easement created by grant. The cases referred to were cases of easements originating by user. No doubt that was ordinarily supposed to be under a grant; but there were not in those cases the terms of the grant to be construed, which, according to the ordinary rule, as between grantor and grantees were to be construed most strongly against the grantor.

There were, however, authorities which were clearly the other way. In Williams v. James, Law Rep. 2 C. P. 577, 582, Mr. Justice Willes expressly laid down the law to be so in the case of an easement, and the Vice-Chancellor Malins, in United Land Company v. Great Eastern Railway Company, Law Rep. 17 Eq. 158, 162, referring to the case of South Metropolitan Cemetery Company v. Eden, 16 C. B. 42, laid down the same rule for construing grants of easements.

In this deed, however, there was quite enough to enable the court to put a construction upon it without resorting to any such rule. His Honor then stated and commented on the words of the deeds, observing that in the conveyance there were the usual general words, which were almost always unmeaning, and sometimes contained a reference to easements which had been extinguished.

The defendant had denied that this ditch was the cesspool in question, but in that on the evidence he had failed. He had also failed to prove the representations which he alleged had been made to him by the plaintiff as to the use to be made of the Priory. There had been a stipulation in the lease that the buildings were not to be altered without the lessor's consent, which was never asked for. The right to the passage of soil was not an unrestricted right, but was at that time to some extent limited, as the mansion-house could not be enlarged without the consent of the lessor; and it must be held that the grant was on the same terms as the lease. The words as to the passage of soil could not be held to apply to any additions to the buildings. The plaintiff, therefore, had not made out a right to the passage of soil and water from the building in its enlarged state. It had been said that the right must be construed with regard to the size of the pipe or ditch; but there was no authority for that proposition. In ascertaining the extent of the right of user of a road when the condition of the adjoining property has been altered, the fact that there was plenty of room in the road had never been taken into consideration. The right must be measured according to the principle laid down by Mr. Justice Willes in Williams v. James,

Law Rep. 2 C. P. 577, as a reasonable use for the purpose of the land in the condition in which it was when the user took place ; that is, in the case of this mansion, in the state in which it was when the grant was made. The matter must, however, be looked at reasonably, and no small addition to the house would be improper. Here there had been a very large increase.

It had also been argued that the easement must be measured by the quantity which the ditch would contain ; but there was no authority for such a doctrine, which would give rise to very difficult questions. Some similar questions might no doubt arise in this case, as the owner of the easement might send down so large a quantity as not to leave room for the quantity sent by the owner of the land ; but this would probably be of much less importance.

The defendant was wrong as regarded his contention as to the cesspool, and the plaintiff was right in his claim to use the moat or ditch as a cesspool, but not to the extent to which he had claimed. The plaintiff would therefore have no costs, and there would be no inquiry as to damages suffered by the defendant.¹

HUMPHRIES v. COUSINS.

COMMON PLEAS DIVISION. 1877.

[Reported 2 C. P. D. 239.]

CLAIM. That in June, 1875, the plaintiff was the occupier of a public-house, the Old Red Lion, No. 339, Strand, and the defendant was the occupier of No. 6, Helmet Court, Strand, which adjoins the public-house of the plaintiff. Through the negligence of the defendant in not keeping in a proper state of repair the drains, parcel of his said house, large quantities of the water, filth, and drainage of the defendant coming and brought by him in and upon his said house and in his drains, and which were entitled to flow through his drains, and ought to have flowed through the same into the common sewer without causing any inconvenience to the plaintiff, ran and flowed from the drains, &c., of the defendant into and upon the said public-house of the plaintiff and the cellars of the plaintiff therein, and flooded, damaged, and injured the stock-in-trade, &c. Claim, £300.

See Darlington v. Painter, 7 Pa. 473 ; Noyes v. Hemphill, 58 N. H. 536. Cf. Jennison v. Walker, 11 Gray, 423 ; Onthank v. Lake Shore R. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 194.

The defence denied that the defendant did not keep in a proper state of repair his house, No. 6, Helmet Court, Strand, or the water-pipes, drains, &c., or that he was guilty of negligence in respect of any of the same ; and also denied the damage to the plaintiff.

At the trial before Blackburn, J., at the last Trinity Sittings at Westminster, it appeared that the plaintiff and the defendant were respectively tenants and occupiers of adjoining houses, as stated in the claim. Under the premises of the defendant was an old drain which passed thence through several other houses, receiving the sewage of each, then turned back through the defendant's premises, passed under the plaintiff's cellar, and thence away to a public sewer. The fact of the drain turning back through his premises was unknown to the defendant, nor was he aware that it was out of repair ; but, by reason of the defective state from age and want of repair of the return-drain under the defendant's premises, the water and sewage from it flowed through the party-wall into the plaintiff's premises, and caused the damage complained of.

The jury found that the defective state of the drain was not attributable to any negligence on the part of the defendant ; and they assessed the damages sustained by the plaintiff at £30.

Talfourd Salter, Q. C., moved for judgment for the plaintiff for the damages found by the jury.

Robinson, Serjt., and Shortt, showed cause.

The judgment of the court (DENMAN and LINDLEY, JJ.) was delivered by DENMAN, J. The plaintiff and the defendant in this case are tenants and occupiers of adjoining houses ; and the plaintiff, upon the facts and findings of the jury, now complains of injuries caused to his premises and stock-in-trade by water and sewage coming into his cellar from the defendant's premises. The jury have found in effect that the injuries complained of were so caused, and have assessed the damages sustained by the plaintiff at £30. The plaintiff has moved for judgment for the amount of the damages so assessed.

The facts relied on as a defence to the action are in substance as follows :— An old drain which commenced on the defendant's premises and received his sewage, ran under and received the sewage of several other houses, turned back through the defendant's premises, ran under the plaintiff's cellar, and then away to a main sewer. This drain was not known to the defendant to turn back and run through his premises under those of the plaintiff, and was not known to be out of repair. It was, however, in fact, out of repair by reason of age and wear and tear ; and its defective state under the defendant's premises was the real cause of the mischief. The jury found that the defective state of the drain was not attributable to any negligence of the defendant.

Upon these facts, it is to be observed at the outset that the water and sewage which injured the plaintiff came on to the defendant's land by an artificial drain, made for the convenience of the defendant and the other persons whose houses were higher up. We have not, therefore, to deal, as the court had in Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 515; 18 L. J. C. P. 172, with the case of water or other matter coming naturally from or through the defendant's land on to the plaintiff's. Bearing this in mind, it appears to us that it is incumbent on the defendant to show what right he had to allow the filth brought artificially on his land to escape on to the land of the plaintiff.

The prima facie right of every occupier of a piece of land is to enjoy that land free from all invasion of filth or other matter coming from any artificial structure on land adjoining. He may be bound by prescription or otherwise to receive such matter; but the burden of showing that he is so bound rests on those who seek to impose an easement upon him. Moreover, this right of every occupier of land is an incident of possession, and does not depend on the acts or omissions of other people; it is independent of what they may know or not know of the state of their own property, and independent of the care or want of care which they may take of it.

That these are the rights of an occupier of land appears to us to be established by the cases of Smith v. Kenrick, 7 C. B. 515; 18 L. J. C. P. 172; Baird v. Williamson, 15 C. B. N. S. 376; 33 L. J. C. P. 101; Fletcher v. Rylands, 3 H. & C. 774; Law Rep. 1 Ex. 265; Law Rep. 3 H. L. 330, and the older authorities there referred to; and the recent decision of Broder v. Saillard, 2 Ch. D. 692.

In the present case the plaintiff was bound to receive sewage from the defendant's land through the old drain, but not otherwise; he was not bound to receive it through the surrounding earth or the party wall, through which in fact it came. Further, as the plaintiff was the occupier of a servient tenement, he was clearly not bound to repair the drain on any of the dominant tenements. The plaintiff's rights, therefore, have been infringed, and the loss he has sustained cannot be said to be damnum absque injuria. (See the note to Ashby v. White in 1 Sm. L. C. 284, 7th ed.)

But the question still remains, Has the defendant infringed those rights, and is he the person liable for the infringement? It is said this case is not like Tenant v. Goldwin, 2 Ld. Raym. 1089; 1 Salk. 360; or Fletcher v. Rylands, because in both of those cases the defendant himself brought on his land that which occasioned the mischief; whereas in this case the defendant received the sewage, and was bound so to do. So far, however, as we can judge, some of the sewage must in fact have come from the defendant's own premises in the first instance. But even if this is not to be taken as proved, we are of opinion that, as between the plaintiff and the defendant, it was the defendant's duty to keep the sewage, which he was himself bound to receive, from passing from his own premises to the plaintiff's premises otherwise than along the old accustomed channel. This duty is incidental to the defendant's possession of land (see Russell v. Shenton, 3 Q. B. 449), and is the necessary consequence of the right of the plaintiff. That duty, like its correlative right, is independent of negligence on the part of the defendant, and independent of his knowledge or ignorance of the existence of the drain. The duty of the defendant himself to receive the sewage evidently did not depend on such knowledge; and the fact that he unknowingly received it, affords no justification for allowing it to escape in a manner in which he had no right to let it pass. Fletcher v. Rylands is a strong authority to show that this conclusion is correct; for although in that case the defendant knew of the existence of his reservoir, he did not know that the ground underneath it was in such a state as to render its existence dangerous; and it was strenuously but ineffectually urged that he could not be liable in respect of damage caused by a state of things of which he knew nothing. Bell v. Twentyman, 1 Q. B. 766, is a strong authority to the like effect. Indeed, if it be once established that the plaintiff's rights have been infringed by the defendant, and that the plaintiff has been thereby damaged, the fact that the defendant infringed them unknowingly and without negligence cannot avail him as a defence to an action by the plaintiff. (See Lambert v. Bessey, Sir T. Raym. 421.) In short, we think that the true doctrine is contained in the following passage of the judgment of Blackburn, J., in the case of Hodgkinson v. Ennor, 4 B. & S. at p. 241; 32 L. J. Q. B. at p. 236:—"I take the law to be as stated in Tenant v. Goldwin, 2 Ld. Raym. 1089; Salk. 21, 360; 6 Mod. 311; Holt, 500, that you must not injure the property of your neighbor, and consequently, if filth is created on any man's land, then, in the quaint language of the report in Salk. 361, 'he whose dirt it is must keep it that it may not trespass.'"

The case of Hammond v. St. Pancras Vestry, Law Rep. 9 C. P. 316, which was relied upon by the counsel for the defendant, appears to us to have no real bearing upon the present case, inasmuch as the whole argument and decision of that case turned upon the effect of the clauses of a particular Act of Parliament imposing certain duties upon a public body; and no question arose as to the common law liability of the occupiers of adjoining premises. (See the judgment of Brett, J., Law Rep. 9 C. P. at p. 322.)

It was contended that the present case was governed by Ross v. Fedden, Law Rep. 7 Q. B. 661; but that was a case in which the plaintiff and the defendant occupied separate stories in the same house; and it was expressly distinguished from a case like the present, which depends simply on those principles of law which regulate the rights and duties of occupiers of adjacent pieces of land. The case of Carstairs v. Taylor, Law Rep. 6 Ex. 217, is also clearly distinguishable on the same ground.

The question whether the defendant was bound, as between himself and the plaintiff, to repair the drain, or so much of it as ran under the defendant's land, was much discussed, but does not really arise; for the plaintiff's cause of action as finally relied upon is, not that the defendant omitted to repair the drain, but that he omitted to prevent the sewage on his land from coming on the plaintiff's land otherwise than as the plaintiff was bound to receive it. If the defendant had prevented the sewage from so coming, the plaintiff would have had no cause of action, whether the drain was repaired by the defendant or not.

The defendant may perhaps be entitled, as between himself and the owners and occupiers of the other dominant tenements, to call upon them to contribute to the expenses of keeping his and their common drain in repair; and it may be that the plaintiff might have sued all those owners or occupiers (including the defendant) for the damage which he has sustained by reason of such non-repair. But even if the plaintiff could have sued them all, he was not, in our opinion, bound to do so: he was not bound to rest his case on his ability to establish a duty on them to repair the drain, and a breach of such duty by all who used it.

Lastly, it was contended that, as the defendant was only a tenant, and not an owner, he was not responsible; but he was in point of law tenant in possession, not only of the surface, but of whatever was beneath it, and as such responsible to the plaintiff (see Russell v. Shenton, 3 Q. B. 449); and he could himself have maintained an action for any invasion of such possession.

For these reasons our judgment is for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

HOWELL v. KING.

COMMON PLEAS. 1674.

[Reported 1 Mod. 190.]

TRESPASS for driving cattle over the plaintiff's ground. The case was: A. has a way over B.'s ground to Black Acre, and drives his beasts over B.'s ground to Black Acre, and then to another place lying beyond Black Acre. And, Whether this was lawful or no? was the question, upon a demurrer.

It was urged, That when his beasts were at Black Acre, he might drive them whither he would.

On the other side it was said, That by this means the defendant might purchase a hundred or a thousand acres adjoining to Black Acre, to which he prescribes to have a way; by which means the plaintiff would lose the benefit of his land : and that a prescription presupposed a grant, and ought to be continued according to the intent of its original creation.

THE WHOLE COURT agreed to this.—*And judgment was given for the plaintiff.*¹

TAYLOR v. WHITEHEAD. ✓

KING'S BENCH. 1781.

[Reported 2 Doug. 745.]

TRESPASS for breaking and entering the close of the plaintiff, at the parish of Otley, in Yorkshire. The defendant pleaded : 1. The general issue ; 2. A right of way, by prescription, through a lane of the plaintiff's contiguous to the locus in quo, to Otley Bridge on the River Wharfe : that the tenants and occupiers of the locus in quo were, from time whereof, &c., by reason of their tenure, bound to repair the lane, and the banks thereof next to the river; that, at the several times when, &c., the lane was out of repair and overflowed with water, so that the defendant could not use the way without imminent danger of the loss of his life, and goods ; and that he necessarily went into, through, and over the locus in quo, as near to his said way as he possibly could, as it was lawful for him to do for the cause aforesaid ; 3. That the locus, &c., lay contiguous to a lane of the plaintiff's, and that the said lane was adjoining to the River Wharfe ; that the defendant had a right of way, by prescription, through and over the lane ; and that, because the lane and way were overflowed with water from the said river so much that the defendant could not at the several times, &c., pass or re-pass, he did necessarily go out of the said way, as near to the said way as he possibly could, into, through, and over, &c.

The plaintiff having traversed the prescription to repair laid in the first special plea, and the right of way laid in the last, the cause came on to be tried, before Lord Loughborough, at the Summer Assizes for Yorkshire, 1780 ; and the jury found for the plaintiff on the general issue and the first special plea, and for the defendant on the last.

Afterwards, Fearnly obtained a rule to show cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to enter up judgment on that issue, as well as the others, notwithstanding the finding of the jury, on the ground that, in point of law, although the defendant had the right of way through the plaintiff's close, he was not entitled to go upon the adjoining land of the plaintiff when the way was out of repair.

Lee, Davenport, and Wood, for the defendant.
Walker, Serjt., for the plaintiff.

LORD MANSFIELD. The question is upon the grant of this way. Now, it is not laid to be a grant of a way, generally, over the land, but of a precise specific way. The grantor says, You may go in this particular line, but I do not give you a right to go either on the right or left. I entirely agree with my Brother Walker, that, by common law, he who has the use of a thing ought to repair it. The grantor may bind himself; but here he has not done it. He has not undertaken to provide against the overflowing of the river; and, for aught that appears, that may have happened by the neglect of the defendant. Highways are governed by a different principle. They are for the public service; and if the usual tract is impassable, it is for the general good that people should be entitled to pass in another line.

WILLES and ASHHURST, JJ., of the same opinion.

BULLER, J. If this had been a way of necessity, the question would have required consideration; but it is not so pleaded. It does not appear that the defendant had no other road. There can be no ground for a repleader, for the plea is substantially bad; there is no fact alleged in it which it could serve any purpose to deny, or go to issue upon.

*The rule made absolute.*¹

BALLARD v. DYSON. ✓

COMMON PLEAS. 1808.

[Reported 1 Taunt. 279.]

IN replevin the defendant avowed taking a heifer damage feasant. The plaintiff pleaded a right of way to pass and repass with cattle from a public street through and along a certain yard and way adjoining to the said place, in which, &c., towards and unto certain premises in his own occupation, as appurtenant thereto, at all times, 1. by prescription; 2. by a grant from a person in whom he supposed the seisin in fee, as well of the yard and way, as of the plaintiff's premises, to have been united. The defendant, in his replication, took issue upon these rights of way. Upon the trial of this cause, at Hertford Summer Assizes, 1807, before Mansfield, C. J., it appeared that the plaintiff's building

When the owner of the servient tenement has obstructed a way, the owner of the dominant tenement may deviate. Selby v. Nettlefold, L. R. 9 Ch. 111 (see contra, Williams v. Safford, 7 Barb. 309). In Selby v. Nettlefold there was a defined way. The law has been held the same in the United States. Farnum v. Platt, 8 Pick. 339; Leonard v. Leonard, 2 All. 543; Kent v. Judkins, 53 Me. 160; but in none of these was the way defined, except by ordinary use. See Haley v. Colcord, 59 N. H. 7, and cf. Hamilton v. White, 5 N. Y. 9.

had anciently been a barn, but had not been used as such for a great many years; that the folding doors of it opened not to the plaintiff's yard, but to a highway; for many years it had been converted to the purposes of a stable; the last preceding occupier, who was a pork-butcher, had used it as a slaughter-house for slaughtering his hogs, and the present occupier, who was a butcher, used it as a slaughter-house for slaughtering oxen. The yard in question, along which the right of way to these premises was claimed, was a narrow passage, bounded by a row of houses on each side, the doors of which opened into it: when a cart and horse was driven through it, the foot-passengers could not pass the carriage, but were compelled, on account of the narrowness, to retreat into the houses; and they would be exposed to considerable danger if they were to meet horned cattle driven through it. It was in evidence that the preceding occupier had been accustomed to drive fat hogs that way to his slaughter-house; and that the plaintiff had been accustomed to drive a cart, the only carriage which he possessed, usually drawn by a horse, but in one or two instances by an ox, along this passage to his barn, where he kept his cart; there was then no other way to it. He had lately begun to drive fat oxen that way to the premises for the purpose of killing them there; but there was no evidence of any other user than this of the way for cattle. No deed of grant was produced. The defendant produced no evidence that he had ever interrupted the occupiers of the plaintiff's premises in driving cattle there, nor that they had been usually possessed of horned cattle which had not been driven that way; he admitted that there was sufficient evidence of a right of way for all manner of carriages. It did not appear at what period the houses adjoining the way had been built. Best, Serjt., for the plaintiff, contended that a way for all manner of carriages necessarily included a right of way for all manner of cattle; and therefore proved the prescription. Mansfield, C. J., told the jury, that inasmuch as this was a private, and not a public way, they were not to conclude that a man might not grant a right of way to pass with horses and carts, and yet preclude the grantee from passing with all manner of cattle; and the degree of inconvenience which would attend the larger grant in this case, furnished an argument against the probability of it. He directed them, therefore, to say whether there was sufficient evidence of a right of way to drive cattle loose, or whether they would consider the grant or prescription as only co-extensive with the use that had been made of it. The jury found a verdict for the defendant.

Best, Serjt., having in Michaelmas Term last obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, Shepherd, Serjt., on a former day in this term, showed cause.

Best, contra.

MANSFIELD, C. J., having adverted to the facts of the case, observed that in general a public highway is open to cattle, though it may be so unfrequented that no one has seen an instance of their going there;

but the presumption would be for cattle as well as carriages, otherwise cattle could not be driven from one part of the kingdom to another. The authority cited from Hawkins only refers to Co. Lit., and the passage in Co. Lit. does not prove that Lord Coke was of opinion that in the case of a private way, which must originate in a grant, of which, the grant itself being lost, usage alone indicates the extent, evidence of a limited user could not be received to restrict the usual import of the grant. The general description given by Lord Coke does not seem to touch the question. He refers to Bracton, lib. 4, fol. 232, who only says, “there are iter, actus, and via;” but says not a word to explain the meaning of either, or the difference between them. Nor can I find in any of the books, nor even in any nisi prius case, any decision that throws light upon the subject. A parson has the via or aditus over a farm with carts to bring home his tithe; but he can use it for no other purpose. I have always considered it as a matter of evidence, and a proper question for a jury, to find whether a right of way for cattle is to be presumed from the usage proved of a cart-way. Consequently, although in certain cases a general way for the carriages may be good evidence from which a jury may infer a right of this kind, yet it is only evidence; and they are to compare the reasons which they have for forming an opinion on either side. As well at the trial, as since, I have thought that there might often be good reasons why a man should grant a right of carriage-way, and yet no way for cattle. That would be the case where a person who lived next to a mews in London should let a part of his own stable with a right of carriage-way to it, which could be used with very little, if any, inconvenience to himself; yet there it would be a monstrous inference to conclude that if a butcher could establish a slaughter-house at the inner end of the mews without being indictable for a nuisance, he might therefore drive horned cattle to it, which would be an intolerable annoyance to the grantor. So cases may exist of a grant of land, where, from the nature of the premises, permission must be given to drive a cart to bring corn or the like, and that right might be exercised without any inconvenience to the grantor; but it does not follow that cattle may be driven there. The inconvenience in this case is a strong argument against the probability of the larger grant. The defendant was the proprietor of all these houses. My Brother Chambre mentioned the case of a public way, restricted to carriages only, in which some public notice was affixed to caution the public that there was no drift-way, and thought that the absence of such notice in this case was an argument against the probability of the restricted grant. This notice might be requisite in a public way, but in a private way, out of which cattle were excepted, the grantor might reasonably think it unnecessary to give his grantees notice of that, of which he must already be conusant; he might justly suppose that the grantees, knowing the nature of his right, would not attempt to use the way otherwise than according to his grant. I can find no case in which it has been decided that a carriage-way necessarily implies a drift-way, though it appears sometimes to have been taken for granted. I speak with doubt, because my Brother Chambre is of a different opinion ; but I incline to hold that the verdict ought not to be disturbed.

HEATH, J. This is a prescription for a way for cattle, and a carriage-way is proved. A carriage-way will comprehend a horse-way, but not a drift-way. All prescriptions are stricti juris. Some prescriptions are for a way to market, others for a way to church, and in the ancient entries, both in Rastal and Clift, the pleadings are very particular in stating their claims. In Rastal, tit. Quod permittat, the distinction is clearly seen. Sometimes there is a carriage-way qualified. One claim is remarkable, fugare quadraginta averia. The usage then in this case is evidence of a very different grant from that which is claimed, namely, to drive fat oxen,—animals dangerous in their nature, and which there might be very good reason to except out of a grant of a way through a closely inhabited neighborhood. The jury having heard the evidence, and formed their opinion upon it, I am not prepared to say that the verdict shall not stand.

LAWRENCE, J. I should have been as well satisfied if the verdict had been the other way, but as the jury have decided upon the evidence, I am unwilling to disturb their verdict. This is the case of a prescriptive private way, which presumes a grant : the question then is, What was the grant in this case? That is to be collected from the use ; for it is to be presumed that the use has been according to the grant. A grant of a carriage-way has not always been taken to include a drift-way. In the entries are cases of prescription, not for carriages only, but for cattle also. Co. Ent. 5, 6. Quod permittat ad carriandum et recarriandum blada, foenum, et finum, ac omnia alia necessaria sua, cum carris et carectis suis, et ad fugandum omnia et omnimoda averia sua. The person who drew that entry certainly did not conclude that a carriage-way included a drift-way for cattle. The use proved here, is of a carriage-way : the grant is not shown, and the extent of it can only be known from the use. If the use had been confined to a carriage-way, I should have had no difficulty whatever in saying that it afforded no evidence of a way for horned cattle ; for till they were driven there, no opposition could be made, nor the limitation of the right shown ; but pigs have been driven that way, and stress is laid upon this circumstance. That then may be good proof of a right to drive pigs that way ; but the user of the way for pigs is not proof of a right of way for oxen. The grantor might well consider what animals it was proper to admit, and what not. The place is very narrow, and full of inhabitants. There is no danger from pigs, and carriages always have some one to conduct them. Cattle may do harm, and passengers cannot always get out of their way ; but if the cattle are driven forward, serious injury may be done. The nature of the place, therefore, may probably have suggested a limitation of the grant.

CHAMBRE, J. I think there ought to be a new trial ; for all the evidence was on one side, and the verdict went against the evidence. I never thought that a carriage-way necessarily included a drift-way; but I think it is prima facie evidence, and strong presumptive evidence, of the grant of a drift-way. Undoubtedly a person may restrict his grant as he pleases, and when he has so limited it, the pleadings must be adapted to the particular grant, — which accounts for the variety in the entries. But it rests with the grantor to prove the restriction of the grant, otherwise it must be intended to be of the usual extent. This inconvenience indeed may occur from such a determination, that if the evidence be lost, the grantor may lose the benefit of his restriction, but he may and ought to preserve the evidence of the restriction; and the inconvenience would be of small extent; for I believe the cases are very few where a carriage-way has not been accompanied with this right: there seems to be almost a necessity for including it. The grantee may send back his horses without his carriage. He may draw his carriage with oxen; and the oxen, as well as the horses, must be driven back loose to pasture. There is strong presumptive evidence then of a drift-way. If the burden of the proof lies on the tertenant, it certainly is possible that he may lose the right of restraining the way; but for one case where the evidence has been lost, and would be supplied by this decision, there will be a thousand cases where a restriction will be created that did not exist in the original grant. I fear these rights of way will be very much narrowed, if they are to be confined to such actual use of them as can be proved. The manner of using a way may vary from time to time. I think the proof of driving hogs is an important circumstance, and very strong evidence of a grant of way for cattle. According to the doctrine contended for, it would be necessary to drive every species of cattle in order to preserve the right of passing with that species. If a man had a little field where cows had not usually been pastured, it would be monstrous that he therefore should not drive his cow to it. Suppose any new species of cattle is introduced into the country, shall the grantees of private ways have no passage for them to their lands? Is it to be contended, for instance, that no ancient private way in the kingdom can be used for Spanish sheep? Much of the argument has been built upon these being horned cattle. Many breeds of kine have no horns: may the grantee drive those? As to the argument that the inconvenience of such an use amounts to a nuisance, nothing of that sort appears. The grantee has constantly driven all the carriages and all the cattle that he had. This is a claim by prescription, which imports great antiquity; and it does not appear how wide the way was at the time of the original grant, and how much the houses have encroached on it long since: but those encroachments cannot deprive the grantee of his ancient right of way.

Rule discharged.

[Reported 4 M. & W. 245.]

TRESPASS for breaking and entering a close, called the Birchín Acre, and with divers horses, and the wheels of divers carts, wagons, and other carriages, crushed and damaged the grass of the plaintiff, of great value, to wit, £5, there then also growing and being, and with the feet of the said horses, and with the wheels of the said carts, wagons, and other carriages, tore up, subverted, and damaged the earth and soil of the said close, &c.

Pleas, first, the general issue; secondly, that the defendant, from a period long before and at the said several times when, &c., in the said declaration mentioned, hath been, and then was and still is, in the lawful possession and the occupier of part of a certain close, called Little Marl Field, near to the said close in which, &c.; and he further saith, that on the north of the said close in which, &c., there was, and during all the time hereinafter mentioned hath been, and at the said several times when, &c., there was and still is, a certain common and public highway leading between a certain place, to wit, Leigh, and a certain other place, to wit, Tildesley, and from each of those places to the other of them, in the county aforesaid; and the defendant further saith, that he and all the occupiers of the said close in this plea first above mentioned, have actually as of right used and enjoyed, without interruption in respect of such occupation, for the full period of twenty years next preceding the commencement of this suit, and of right ought to have so used and enjoyed, and he the said defendant, being such occupier as aforesaid, at the several times when, &c., as of right used and enjoyed, and still of right ought to use and enjoy, the liberty, privilege, benefit, and easement, as often as he or they might have occasion, to go, return, pass, and repass on foot, and with horses, carts, wagons, and carriages, from the said close first above mentioned to the said highway between Leigh and Tildesley aforesaid and back again, of going and to go from and out of the said close first above mentioned, and to pass and repass on foot, and with horses, carts, wagons, and carriages, from the said close into and along a certain way leading from the said close first above mentioned to the said close in which, &c., and from thence unto, into, by, through, over, along, and across the said close in which, &c., unto and into a certain other way leading from the said close in which, &c., to the said highway so on the north side of the said close in which, &c., as aforesaid, and so back again from the said highway into the said last-mentioned way, and from thence, unto, into,

by, through, over, along, and across the said close in which, &c., and thence into the said first-mentioned way unto and into the said close first above mentioned, at all reasonable times of the year at his and their free will and pleasure: wherefore the defendants, at the said several times when, &c., the same then being reasonable times for that purpose, having occasion to use the way in this plea mentioned, then went, passed, and repassed on foot, and with the said horses, and with the said carts, wagons, and other carriages, from and out of the said close first above mentioned, into the said first-mentioned way, and thence out, into, by, through, over, along, and across the said close in which, &c., into the said other way as aforesaid, and thence unto and into the said highway so on the north side of the said close in which, &c., and so back again from the said highway into the said other way above mentioned and thence unto, into, by, through, over, along, and across the said close in which, &c., and thence into the said first mentioned way, unto and into the said close first above mentioned, using the said way there for the purpose and on the occasions aforesaid, as he lawfully might for the cause aforesaid, and in so doing the said defendant, with the said horses, and with the wheels of the said carts, wagons, and other carriages, unavoidably a little crushed and damaged the said grass of the plaintiff then growing and being in and upon the said close in which, &c., and with the feet of the said horses, and with the wheels of the said carts, wagons, and other carriages, a little tore up, subverted, and damaged the said earth and soil of the said close, doing no unnecessary damage to the plaintiff or the occupiers aforesaid, which are the said several trespasses in the declaration above mentioned, and whereof the plaintiff hath above thereof complained against him.

The third plea was similar, only stating the user for forty years instead of twenty.

The replication traversed both these pleas.

At the trial before Coleridge, J., at the last Spring Assizes at Liverpool, it was admitted that there was a right of way for farming purposes over the locus in quo, to a farm, of one of the fields of which, called the Little Marl Field, the defendant was the occupier; but the plaintiff's counsel contended that there was no right of carting coals, which was the purpose for which the defendant had used the road; and it was proved by the plaintiff that no coals had been raised under that farm for the last 70 years; that about 70 years ago there had been coal raised there, but that they were carted from the pit along a different road; that Tildesley, to which the road led, was then a very small village, consisting of merely a few houses; that there were then other coal-pits nearer than those on the defendant's farm; and that there was a gate across this road, the key of which was kept by a tenant of the plaintiff's ancestor. The defendant's counsel then objected, first, that the issue was, whether there was a right of way for horses, carts, and carriages; and that since it was admitted that such right existed, the verdict ought to be for the defendant; and that if the plaintiff relied on the defendant's using the road for mining purposes, and that he had no such right, he ought to have new assigned; and secondly, that a right of road for farming purposes, and with horses, carts, and carriages, proved a right for all purposes. The learned judge, after consulting Patteson, J., decided both points in favor of the plaintiff; and the defendant's counsel not claiming to have any question left to the jury, the learned judge directed them to find a verdict for the plaintiff, giving leave to the defendant to move to enter a verdict, if the court should be of a contrary opinion on either of the points taken. Alexander having, in Easter Term last, obtained a rule accordingly, Cresswell, Starkie, and Wortley, now showed cause.

Alexander and Wightman, in support of the rule.

LORD ABINGER, C. B. I do not give any opinion upon the effect of the evidence; but I should certainly say that it is not a necessary inference of law, that a way for agricultural purposes is a way for all purposes, but that it is a question for the jury in each particular case, to be determined upon the various facts established in each case. If a way has been used for several purposes, there may be a ground for inferring that there is a right of way for all purposes; but if the evidence shows a user for one purpose, or for particular purposes only, an inference of a general right would hardly be presumed. I wish to say nothing as to the inference to be drawn by the jury in this particular case. The question is entirely for them to determine on the facts submitted to them. I think there ought to be a new trial on payment of costs.

PARKE, B. I am clearly of opinion that the defendant is not entitled to succeed on the question as to the new assignment. [He then stated the plea.] To make out this plea, it is necessary to show an enjoyment of the way generally as of right, for the period during which the plea states it to have been used; he must have used it for all purposes as of right; and such user, for all purposes for which it was wanted, would be evidence to go to the jury of a general right. Under a plea of prescription of a way, it was necessary to show a user of it for all purposes time out of mind, according to the usual terms in which such a plea is pleaded. If it is shown that the defendant, and those under whom he claimed, had used the way whenever they had required it, it is strong evidence to show that they had a general right to use it for all purposes, and from which a jury might infer a general right. In this particular case, I think the user is evidence to go to the jury that the defendant had a right to a way for all purposes for twenty years. As to the effect of such evidence, it is unnecessary to offer any opinion. If the way is confined to a particular purpose, the jury ought not to extend it; but if it is proved to have been used for a variety of purposes, then they might be warranted in finding a way for all. You must generalize to some extent; and whether in the present case to the extent of establishing a right for agricultural purposes only, is a question for the jury.

Rule absolute for a new trial, on payment of costs.

COLCHESTER v. ROBERTS. ✓

EXCHEQUER. 1839.

[Reported 4 M. & W. 769.]

TRESPASS for breaking and entering a certain close of the plaintiff called "The Reddings," situate, &c., and breaking, &c., a gate then standing and being in the said close, and the locks, staples, and hinges with which the same was fastened, and with feet in walking, and also with the wheels of divers carts, wagons, and other carriages, tearing up and subverting the earth and soil of the said close, &c., &c., and then hauling over the said close large quantities, to wit, 100 tons of lime and 100 tons of building materials.

Pleas, first, Not guilty. Secondly, that the defendant, long before and at the several times when, &c., in the said declaration mentioned, was the lawful occupier of a messuage and divers (to wit) three closes of land with the appurtenances respectively, situate in the county aforesaid, and near to the said close of the plaintiff in the declaration mentioned, in which, &c.; and the defendant further says, that he the defendant, and all the occupiers for the time being of the said messuage and closes of the defendant have, and each of them hath had, used, and enjoyed as of right, and have and each of them hath been accustomed to have, use, and enjoy as of right, for and during the full period of twenty years next before the commencement of this suit, a certain way for himself and themselves, and his and their servants, to go, pass, and repass on foot and with horses, mares, geldings, carts, wagons, and other carriages, from and out of a certain common highway in the county aforesaid, towards, unto, into, through, over, and along the said close of the plaintiff in the declaration mentioned, and in which, &c., and from and out of the same towards, unto, and into the said messuage and closes of the defendant, and so from thence back again towards, unto, into, through, over, and along the said close of the plaintiff in the declaration mentioned, and in which, &c., and from and out of the same towards, unto, and into the said common highway, at all times of the year, at the free will and pleasure of the defendant and the said other occupiers for the time being of the said messuage and closes of the defendant, as to the said messuages and closes of the defendant belonging and appertaining: Wherefore the defendant, at the said several times when, &c., being the lawful occupier of his said messuage and closes, and having occasion to use the said way, went, passed, and repassed on foot and with his horses, mares, geldings, carts, wagons, and other carriages in the declaration mentioned, the said carts, wagons, and other carriages then being loaded with the stone, lime, and building materials in the declaration mentioned, in, by, through, and along the said way from the said common highway towards, unto, into, through, over, and along the said close of the plaintiff in the declaration mentioned, and in which, &c., towards, into, and unto the said messuage and closes of the defendant, and so from thence back again, in, by, through, and along the said way, towards, unto, and into the said common highway, as he lawfully might for the cause aforesaid ; and in so doing, &c. [justifying the trespasses]. Thirdly, leave and license.

The replication to the 2d plea was, that the defendant, and all the occupiers for the time being of the said messuages and closes of the defendant, have had, used, and enjoyed the said way in the 2d plea mentioned, for and during the said period therein also mentioned, by the leave, license, and permission of the plaintiff, to him and them for that purpose granted ; which was denied in terms by the rejoinder.

To the 3d plea, the plaintiff replied de injuria.

At the trial before Lord Abinger, C. B., at the last Summer Assizes for the county of Gloucester, it appeared that the defendant, and the preceding occupiers of his house and lands, had an admitted right of way from thence over the locus in quo to the highway, and across the highway to a close called " Ruddocks ;" and that for the last twenty years they had had a license from the plaintiff to use, whenever they pleased, a way from the defendant's house and lands, when they had not any intention of going to Ruddocks. The counsel for the defendant contended that the second issue was not supported by the evidence, and that the plaintiff ought to have new assigned. The learned judge directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff on the first and second issues, subject to a motion to this court to enter a verdict for the defendant on the second issue. Ludlow, Serjt., in Michaelmas Term last, having obtained a rule accordingly, Talpouard, Serjt., and W. J. Alexander, in Hilary Term, showed cause.

Ludlow, Serjt., and Whateley, contra.

The judgment of the court was now delivered by

PARKE, B. The plea to a declaration in trespass qu. cl. fregit in this case was, that the defendant and the occupiers of a house and land of the defendant's had for twenty years used and enjoyed, as of right, a certain way on foot and with horses, &c., from and out of a common highway, towards, unto, into, through, and over the plaintiff's close, to the defendant's house and lands and back, at all times of the year at their free will and pleasure. To this there is a replication which, in effect, admits that the defendant and the occupiers of his house and lands, had for twenty years used and enjoyed the way described in the plea as of right, in some sense, but avoids the plea, by stating that such enjoyment during that period was by the plaintiff's license ; and this license was denied by the rejoinder.

On the trial, it appeared that the defendant, and the preceding occupiers of his house and lands, had an admitted right of way from thence, over the locus in quo to the highway, and across the highway to a close called " Ruddocks," and that, for the last twenty years, they had a license from the plaintiff to use, whenever they pleased, a way from the defendant's house and lands over the locus in quo to the highway and back, when they had not any intention of going to Ruddocks ; and the point to be decided, which was reserved on the trial, is, whether this proof supports the replication ; and upon consideration, we think it does not.

The difficulty of this case (and it is one of considerable nicety) arises from the fact, that one terminus of the way is the high road. If it had been to and from Black Acre, a close of the defendant's in the same situation as the highway, the case would have been plain ; for a right to go, not to or from that close as a terminus, but over it to or from the Ruddocks beyond, would have been a different right. One proof of this is, that if the right of way to Black Acre had been pleaded, it would have been a good replication that the defendant went to or came from Ruddocks beyond, when he committed the trespass, for that would not be an exercise of the same right.

A license, therefore, to use a way to or from Black Acre, would not have included a permission to go to or come from beyond it ; and the allegation in the replication that his right of way to the close as a terminus was by the plaintiff's license, would have been proved. But the terminus here is not a close, but a highway ; and whenever a person gets to the highway, he has a right to go on to any place to which it leads, and vice versa. A right of way, therefore, to or from a highway, is in effect a right to go to it, and to each and every place beyond, to which it leads. The right of way across the highway to " Ruddocks" is included in the general right to the highway, and from thence to all other places. If we apply the same test to this case, as to the supposed one of a right of way to a close, instead of a highway, we shall find that it is so ; for to a plea, stating a right of way to the highway, it would not be a good replication to say " that the defendant went to the highway and thence to Ruddocks ;" it would not be an exercise of a different right, but of a part of the same general right, and the defendant would not be a trespasser by going to the highway for the purpose of going to Ruddocks, any more than he would be if he went from the highway to any other place. And if a right alleged in similar terms were traversed, the traverse would include the right of going to the highway and thence to Ruddocks.

The issue, therefore, which the plaintiff undertakes to maintain in this case, is, that the defendant enjoyed the right to go to or from the highway, and every place beyond to which it leads, to which the defendant might choose to go, by the plaintiff's license ; but such a license was not proved. For the proof was of an enjoyment by license to go to the highway and thence to every other place except Ruddocks, to which place the defendant could go of his own right. The issue, therefore, was not proved ; and if the verdict were to stand, the defendant would lose his admitted present limited right, for the verdict would be conclusive evidence that he enjoyed it by license only.

The case is, however, very fit for an amendment of the replication, on payment of costs of the trial ; by restricting the allegation of the license to the exercise of the road for all other purposes than for going to Ruddocks.

Rule accordingly.

ALLAN v. GOMME. ✓

KING'S BENCH. 1840.

[Reported 11 A. & E. 759.]

THIS cause was tried before Littledale, J., at the Buckinghamshire Summer Assizes, 1838, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to move to enter a nonsuit. In Michaelmas Term, 1838, Storks, Serjt., obtained a rule nisi for a nonsuit, or for arresting the judgment.

In Hilary Term last,¹ Kelly and Gunning, showed cause, and Storks, Serjt., and Byles, supported the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD DENMAN, C. J., in this term delivered the judgment of the court. The nature of the case, and the arguments used, will fully appear by the judgment.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, being part of a certain yard at Chesham, in the county of Buckingham, which is particularly described by the abutments, and committing trespasses there. The defendants pleaded, 1. Not guilty. 2. That the close was not the close of the plaintiff. 3. That, before the times when, &c., to wit on the 5th March, 1813, one James Millar, and two other persons, as assignees of Samuel Porter, a bankrupt, were seised in fee of certain messuages, hereditaments, and premises, comprising, as well the hereditaments and premises thereafter mentioned to have been appointed and conveyed to the plaintiff, and of which the close in which &c. is parcel, as the hereditaments and premises thereafter mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the defendant Gomme ; and that the said assignees and other persons, by lease and release of the 5th and 6th of March, 1813, conveyed the whole of the premises in this plea mentioned to one Browne and his heirs ;² and, by indenture of appointment of October 26, 1826, between Browne, the plaintiff, and other persons, Browne directed, limited, and appointed to the plaintiff a certain messuage, hereditaments, and premises, being part and parcel of the messuage, hereditaments, and premises hereinbefore mentioned to have been conveyed to Browne, and comprising, among other things, the close in which &c.; reserving, nevertheless, to and for the said Browne, his heirs and assigns, and his and their tenants, &c., occupiers for the time being of a certain messuage or tenement then in the occupation of one Thomas Creed, and thereafter mentioned to be bargained and sold to the defendant Gomme (the said last-mentioned messuage or tenement being other parcel of the said messuages, hereditaments, and premises mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the said Browne), a right of way and passage over the said close in which &c., to the stable and loft over the same, and the space or opening under the said loft and then used as a wood-house, and to the chaise-house then standing and being on the side of the said close in which &c. (the said stable, loft, and chaise-house then also being in the occupation of the said Thomas Creed, and being other parcel of the premises thereafter mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the defendant Gomme, and also of the hereditaments and premises thereinbefore mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the said Browne); and also the use of the said close in which &c., in common with the plaintiff, his appointees, heirs, and assigns, and his and their tenants for the time being; it being expressed in the said last-mentioned indenture to be the intent and meaning of the parties thereto that the whole of the said yard, of which the said close in which &c. was and is parcel (except a certain part thereof other and different from the said close in which &c.), should lie open and undivided as the same then was, without any other building to be erected thereon, and that the same should be used in common by the occupiers, as well of the said messuage or tenement appointed by the said last-mentioned indenture to the plaintiff, as of the said other messuage or tenement hereinafter mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the defendant Gomme, in the same manner as the tenants thereof had been accustomed theretofore to use the same. By virtue of which said indenture of appointment the plaintiff became and was and still is seised of and in the said close in which &c., subject to such right of way and to such use of the said close in which &c., as was and is reserved by the said last-mentioned indenture of appointment. The plea then stated that, before and at the time of the making of the said indenture of appointment, and thence until and at the time of the making of the indenture hereinafter next mentioned, the tenants and occupiers of the said messuage and of the said stable, loft, and chaise-house hereinafter mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the defendant Gomme, but at the time of the making of the said indenture of appointment in the occupation of the said Thomas Creed, and also the tenants and occupiers of the said messuage or tenement so appointed to the plaintiff, had been used and accustomed to use the said closes in which &c.; and the said close in which &c. during all the time aforesaid was open and undivided, and was used in common by the respective tenants and occupiers of the said several messuages, tenements, and premises for the purposes of passing and repassing in and along the same; and the said tenants and occupiers of the said messuage and premises hereinafter mentioned to have been bargained and sold to the defendant Gomme, during all that time, had been used and accustomed to use the said close in which &c., for themselves and their servants, for the passing and repassing in, along, and across the same every day and at all times of the day, at their free will and pleasure, for the necessary use, occupation, and enjoyment of the said messuage and premises hereinafter mentioned to have been conveyed to the defendant Gomme. The plea then stated several conveyances of the premises not conveyed to the plaintiff by the deed of 26th of October, 1826, and to which premises so not conveyed to the plaintiff the right of way and the use of the close so before mentioned had been reserved to Browne and his heirs, and by which conveyances these premises became vested in Joseph Birch, in trust for the defendant Gomme; and the defendant Gomme, by the license and permission of the said Birch, became and was and still is in the occupation of the said last-mentioned messuage and premises, with the appurtenances, as the tenant and occupier thereof, and, as such tenant and occupier, then became and was entitled to have and use a way over the said close in which &c., to the said stable and loft and chaise-house standing and being on the side of the said close in which &c., in common with the plaintiff and his tenants for the time being of the said messuage and premises of the plaintiff. And the said defendant Gomme then became and was entitled to use the said close in which &c., in common with the said plaintiff, so being the occupier of the said messuage and premises of the plaintiff, in the same manner as the tenants of the said several messuages had been respectively accustomed to use and occupy the said close in which &c., at the time of making the said indenture so bearing date the 26th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1826, as aforesaid. Wherefore, the said defendant Gomme so being such occupier, and being so entitled as aforesaid, at the said several times when &c., and having occasion to use the said way, and also to use the said close in which &c., for himself and his servants, for the purpose of passing and repassing in, along, and across the same for the necessary use, occupation, and enjoyment of the said messuage and premises so in the occupation of the said Gomme, he the said Gomme in his own right, and the said Joseph Darvell as his servant and by his command, at the said several times when &c., did pass and repass from the said messuage so in the occupation of the said defendant Gomme, in, through, over, and along the said close in which &c., unto and into the said stable, loft, and chaise-house, and so from thence back again unto and into the said close in which, &c., and from thence unto and into the said last-mentioned messuage, using the said way there for the purpose and on the occasion last aforesaid ; and did also use the said close in which &c. for the purpose of passing and repassing in, along, and across the same for the necessary use, occupation, and enjoyment of the said messuage and premises so in the occupation of the said defendant Gomme, as the tenants of the said last-mentioned messuage, before and at the time of the making of the said indenture so bearing date the 26th day of October, 1826, had been accustomed to use the same, as they the defendants lawfully might for the cause aforesaid.

² The habendum was to the use of such persons as Browne should appoint by deed, writing, or will ; and, in default, &c., to the use of one Woodham for Browne's life, in trust for Browne and his assigns, remainder to the use of Browne in fee. — REP.

And the plaintiff joined issue on the first and second pleas of the defendants.

To the plea of the defendants by them lastly above pleaded, the plaintiff said that he brought this action and declared therein, not for the said supposed trespasses in the said last plea mentioned, but for the trespasses thereafter mentioned. And the plaintiff said that, after the said conveyance to the said plaintiff as aforesaid, and after the defendant Gomme became such occupier as aforesaid, and before any of the said times when &c., to wit on the 1st February, 1833, the said defendant Gomme converted the said loft, and the space thereunder before then used as a wood-house as aforesaid, into a cottage ; and, before and at the said times when &c., the said loft and space were kept so converted into such cottage ; and, before and at the said times when &c., the said other defendant Darvell by the sufferance and permission of the said defendant Gomme, used and occupied the said cottage, and lived and resided therein, and, during all those times, the defendants ceased to use the same as a loft or wood-house as aforesaid. And the said plaintiff further said that the defendants broke and entered the said close in which &c. on other and different occasions than those in the last plea mentioned, and for other and different purposes than in that plea mentioned, to wit by then and there passing and repassing across the said close in which &c., from and to the said cottage so occupied by the defendant Darvell as aforesaid, and then and there passed to and from the said cottage, across the said close in which &c., unto and into the said other part of the said common yard in the said last plea mentioned, and thence unto and into a certain common highway there, and so from thence back again unto and into the said other part of the said common yard, and over the said close in which &c., unto and into the said cottage, for the purposes of the occupation of the same as aforesaid, and not for the said purposes in the said reservation in the said last plea mentioned. And the plaintiff said that the defendants, on the said days and times when &c., with force and arms &c., broke and entered the said close in which &c., and with feet in walking trod down, trampled upon, consumed and spoiled the grass and herbage of the plaintiff there then growing, on other and different occasions, and for other and different purposes, than in the said last plea mentioned, in manner and form as he the said plaintiff hath above thereof complained against the defendants.

And the defendants, as to the said several alleged trespasses above newly assigned, said that the said passing and repassing across the said close in which, &c., in the said new assignment mentioned, was done and committed by the defendants for the purposes mentioned in the said reservation in the said indenture bearing date the 26th day of October in the year of our Lord 1826, and in the manner and as the tenants of the said messuage and premises in the occupation of the said defendant Gomme, before and at the time of the making of the said last-mentioned indenture, had been accustomed to use the said close in which, &c., without this, that the defendants, or either of them, committed the said several trespasses above newly assigned, or any or either of them, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the plaintiff hath above thereof, by his said new assignment, complained against them; and of this the defendants put themselves upon the country &c. Upon which the plaintiff joined issue.

This cause was tried before our brother Littledale at Buckingham, at the Summer Assizes in 1838.

It was proved that the defendant Gomme converted the loft and the space thereunder, before then used as a wood-house, into a cottage, and that the other defendant, Darvell, by the sufferance and permission of Gomme, used and occupied the cottage, and that the defendants passed and repassed across the close in which &c. to and from the cottage as stated in the new assignment.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with 1*s.* damages.

The judge gave my brother Storks leave to move to enter a nonsuit, which he did, and also moved in arrest of judgment.

The question is, whether, under the terms of the deed of 26th October, 1826, the defendants were justified in going backwards and forwards to and from the cottage which was built upon the site of the space or opening under the loft and then used as a wood-house, mentioned in that deed, there being no cottage in existence there at the time of the execution of the deed.

The defendants claimed the right on two grounds.

First, that there is a right of way reserved to Browne, and those claiming under him and the future owners, to and from the space or opening under the loft then used as a wood-house; and that, such right being reserved in general terms, and without any restriction whatever, these future owners and tenants may use the way, not only to the mere site of the space or opening used as a wood-house, but also to whatever is built upon that site. The second ground of claim is, that, by the terms of the deed, Browne and those claiming under him had a right to use the yard in common with the plaintiff and his tenants, and in the same manner as the tenants had been accustomed theretofore to use the same; and that they had a right to the use of the yard under that clause of the deed without any reference to the reservation of the way.

We will give our opinion on the latter ground of claim first, as there is less difficulty in that than on the question on the reservation of the way.

The right to use the yard in question in common with the plaintiff and his tenants is confined to the use of it as it was at the time of the execution of the deed. But, when there was no cottage built on the site of the open space of ground used as a wood-house, the use of the yard was very different from what it would be when a cottage was built upon it. For, when the cottage was built, a much greater number of persons, perhaps some with more horses and carts, would come upon it, and be very likely to obstruct or put to inconvenience the plaintiff and his tenants, and prevent them from having the same enjoyment of it as before. And we think that, as the use of the yard by the defendant and his tenants since building the cottage is greater and more extensive, and may be more inconvenient to the plaintiff and his tenants, than it was before the cottage was built, that clause of the deed will not give the right to the defendants which they contend for.

Next, as to the reservation of the way.

It may be a question, in the first place, whether this is a way to a wood-house by the description of a wood-house, or whether it is a way to the open space of ground, and the saying "now used as a wood-house" was merely to ascertain what piece of open ground was meant, and where it was. And it was contended by the defendants that, whatever might be the construction of the deed, if it was a way to a wood-house specifically, in which case it might be said that the way was limited to a wood-house merely as such, and that therefore, if the wood-house was converted into a cottage, the way was gone, yet that if the wood-house was merely mentioned to ascertain and point out the locality of the open space of ground, it could not be intended that the construction of the deed could be to confine the way to a mere piece of open ground, and that it must be intended that the way was meant to apply to a right to go to the ground, whatever was the use to which the ground was put, whether by building or by a deposit of loose articles, such as wood, coals, or any movable property.

We think, as between these two different meanings, considered as with reference to this property, the way is to be taken to be to an open piece of ground generally; and that the words "now used as a wood-house" are to be taken as merely ascertaining the place where the piece of open ground was, and which, of course, must be particularly ascertained, either by name or abutments, or by the use which was made of it.

There is no direct authority to show whether, if the use of a place to and from which a way is by express words reserved or granted, be completely changed, the way can still be continued to be used.

It has been held that, if a man has a right of way to a close called A., he cannot justify using the way to go to A. and from thence to another close of his own adjoining to A. Vide 1 Rol. Abr. 391;¹

Howell v. King, 1 Mod. 190; ¹ Lawton v. Ward, 1 Ld. Raym. 75; s. c. 1 Lutw. 111. That, however, does not decide the question. The case of Ballard v. Dyson, 1 Taunt. 279, was a way claimed by prescription for cattle; the evidence was of a carriage way, and the question was, whether that proved a drift way for cattle. It was held by all the court that a carriage way did not necessarily prove a right of way for cattle, but it was evidence for the jury to consider along with other evidence. The case however was decided on the effect of the evidence as to the user, and whether the jury had come to a correct conclusion. In delivering the judgment of the court, Lord Chief Justice Mansfield, Mr. Justice Heath, and Mr. Justice Lawrence were of opinion that the extent of the usage of a way is evidence only of a right commensurable with the user. Mr. Justice Chambre, however, was of opinion that it was not so limited.

In Cowling v. Higginson, 4 M. & W. 245, the defendant pleaded, to an action of trespass, a right of way for horses, carts, wagons, and carriages. On the trial before Mr. Justice Coleridge, it was admitted that there was a right of way for farming purposes over the locus in quo; but the defendants wished to establish a right to cart coals. On a motion for a new trial, Lord Abinger seemed to be of the same opinion that the three judges had expressed in Ballard v. Dyson, and did not agree with the opinion of Mr. Justice Chambre. Mr. Baron Parke, however, was of opinion, according to that of Mr. Justice Chambre, that, if a party has time out of mind used a way for all the purposes he wanted, it would seem to him to give him a general right. See p. 252.

In the case of Jackson v. Stacey, Holt's N. P. C. 455, Mr. Baron Wood held that the user of a way for agricultural purposes only was not sufficient to support a general right.

All these three cases, however, turned upon the evidence of usage, and were all cases for the jury upon the usage. The present case does not, however, depend upon the mode of using the way, but upon the legal effect of the reservation. Upon that we are of opinion that, under the terms of this deed, the defendant is not entitled to have the right of way claimed, but that he is to be confined to the use of the way to a place which should be in the same predicament as it was at the time of the making the deed. We do not mean to say that he could only use it to make a deposit of wood there, for we consider the words "now used as a wood-house" merely used for the ascertaining the locality and identity of the place called a space or opening under the loft; and we think he might have the benefit of the way to make a deposit of any articles, or use it in any way he pleased, provided it continued in the state of open ground. But we think he could only use it for purposes which were compatible with the ground being open, and that, if any buildings were erected upon it, it was no longer to be considered as open for the purpose of this deed.

Suppose that this piece of ground, instead of being a small quantity, had been a field of many acres, and that Browne had sold off the part above mentioned to the plaintiff, reserving to himself this right of way to the land, calling it a field then in pasture, or in corn, and had subsequently filled the land with small cottages, or had built a factory, or established gas works: it surely never could be contended that it was the meaning of either of the parties to the deed that there should be a right of way over the yard to those buildings. The supposed intention of the parties cannot, indeed, be considered; and it can only be determined by the instrument itself what their intention was. In Luttrell's Case, 4 Rep. 86 a, the plaintiff declared that he was seised in fee of two old and ruinous fulling mills, and that, from time immemorial, a great part of the water of a certain rivulet ran from a certain place to the said mills; and that he afterwards pulled down those fulling mills, and in their place built two mills to grind corn; and that the water ran to the new mills till such a time; and the defendants diverted the water from his corn mills. The defendants pleaded Not guilty, and the plaintiff had judgment. Then the defendants brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber; and it was objected that the plaintiff, by pulling down the old fulling mills and building new mills of another nature, had destroyed the prescription, and could not have the benefit of the water for his grist mills. But the judgment of the court was affirmed; and the court held that the prescription did extend to the new grist mills, for the mill is the substance, and the addition of grist or fulling is but to show the nature of the mill. And, therefore, if the plaintiff had prescribed to have the watercourse to his mill generally, as he well might, then the case would be without question but that he might alter the mill into what nature of a mill he pleased, provided no prejudice should thereby arise either by diverting or stopping the water as it was before. And it should be intended that the grant to have the watercourse was before the building of the mills; for nobody will build a new mill before he is sure to have water; and then, the grant of the watercourse being generally to his mill, he may alter the quality of the mill at his pleasure. And the court said that, if a man has estovers, either by grant or prescription, to his house, although he alters the rooms and chambers so as to make a parlor where it was the hall, or the hall where the parlor was, and the like alteration of the qualities, and not of the house itself, and without making new chimneys, by which no prejudice arises to the owner of the wood, it is not any disturbance of the prescription; for then many prescriptions will be destroyed; and though he builds new chimneys, or makes a new addition to his old house, by that he shall not lose his prescription: but he cannot spend or employ any of his estovers in the new chimneys, or the part newly added; the same also of conduits and water pipes, and the like. So, if a man has an old window to his hall, and afterwards he converts the hall into a parlor or any other use, yet it is not lawful for his neighbor to stop it, for he shall prescribe to have the light in such a part of the house. And although in this case the plaintiff has made a question, forasmuch as he has not prescribed to have the water-course to his mill generally, but particularly to his fulling mill, yet, inasmuch as the mill was the substance, and the addition demonstrates only the quality, and the addition was not of the substance but only of the quality or name of the mill, without prejudice in the watercourse to the owner thereof, it was resolved that the prescription remained.

The court, therefore, appears to have put the case on whether the alteration of the thing, in respect of which the right was claimed, was of the substance and not merely of the quality of the thing. Now the alteration of a piece of vacant ground into a cottage is certainly an alteration of the substance, and not merely of the quality.

A great number of cases have occurred of late years, as to lights, where there has been an alteration in the building in respect of which the lights were claimed; and, in some of them, the question has been, whether the original right has not been altogether extinguished by the alteration. We do not think it necessary to advert to the particular circumstances of the cases; but in none of them was it contended that, if the substance of the thing in respect of which the right was claimed was altered so as to occasion any injury or prejudice to the person who supplied the easement, any additional right of easement could be acquired. We think therefore that the defendants had no right to use the way to the newly erected cottage, and that therefore there is no ground to enter a nonsuit.

As to the motion in arrest of judgment upon the new assignment, it is made upon the ground that the replication is no answer to the plea, and that the new assignment is only in respect of trespasses which on the record appear to be justified by the plea.

As to the replication being no answer to the plea, it is not in fact a replication properly so called, but it is a new assignment; and it begins with stating that the plaintiff brought his action, not for the trespasses mentioned in the plea, but for the trespasses thereafter mentioned; and then it goes on to enumerate other trespasses, and the circumstances under which they were committed. And we think that the plea, for the reasons we have before given, affords no answer to them, and that therefore there is no ground for arresting the judgment.

But besides, the merits of the cause being against the defendants on this point, the defendants could not, even in point of form, have the judgment arrested, as the record now stands; for at the end of the new assignment there is a general allegation, independent of the question about the way or the use of the yard, that the defendants committed the trespasses on other occasions, and for other purposes than those mentioned in the plea, to which no answer is given in any part of the record, except the traverse at the end of the plea to the new assignment, which is in effect only Not guilty.

The rule, therefore, for entering a nonsuit, and also for arresting the judgment, must be discharged.

EXCHEQUER. 1856.

[Reported 25 L. J. Ex. 245.]

TRESPASS quare clausum fregit, with carts and horses.

Plea — Right of way for cattle, horses, and carts. Issue thereon.

At the trial before Pollock, C. B., at the London Sittings after Hilary Term last, it appeared that the defendant was the owner of land, to which the only way was across the land of the plaintiff, the locus in quo, and that the defendant had for upwards of twenty years always used the way for the purpose of taking cattle to pasture, and this was the only use to which it was then necessary to apply the right of way until about twelve years before the action, when he had built the farm-house, and then used the way with carts and horses for carrying bricks and mortar to the house. And since that time he had used the way for all purposes connected with the occupation of the farm; and with carts and horses as well as for cattle only. Pollock, C. B., was of opinion that the exercise of the right for twelve years past for all purposes, and for twenty years for the only purposes to which the defendant could have required to apply it, was evidence from which the jury might infer the existence of the general right pleaded. A verdict, however, was found for the plaintiff; and a rule having been granted to set aside the verdict and enter it for the defendant, or for a nonsuit, —

J. Henderson (with him Channell, Serjt.), for the plaintiff, showed cause. — There was no evidence of the exercise of the right pleaded for twenty years.

¹ "In Allan v. Gomme a more strict rule was laid down than I should have been disposed to adopt; for it was said that the defendant was confined to the use of the way to a place which should be in the same predicament as it was at the time of the making of the deed. No doubt, if a right of way be granted for the purpose of being used as a way to a cottage, and the cottage is changed into a tan-yard, the right of way ceases; but if there is a general grant of all ways to a cottage, the right is not lost by reason of the cottage being altered. . . . The case of Allan v. Gomme, 11 A. & E. 759, would probably authorize us to make this rule absolute. I confess, however, that I do not concur to the full extent of the doctrine there laid down, although that decision may be supported by the context, because it was a reservation of a right of way to that space only, which was then used as a wood-house, and was not like the case of a general grant of a way to Greenacre, which would mean for whatever purpose the field was used, unless limited by the context." Per PARKE, B., in Henning v. Burnet, 8 Ex. 187, 192, 194.

sion for the exercise of the general right has only arisen within twenty years. The contrary doctrine would practically deprive the defendant of the power of ever asserting or establishing his right. The principle has often been applied in cases of prescription for moduses. In no other way could moduses for potatoes, for instance, ever have been established. Some potatoes have been introduced into this country since the time of legal memory commenced; so of many new grasses that have been brought into our agriculture in recent years. Bayley v. Drever, 1 Ad. & E. 449; s. c. 3 Law J. Rep. N. S. Exch. Ch. 369. You must generalize in some degree in all such cases. Surely it is some evidence that a party has a right, for all purposes, to show that he has exercised it from time to time for all the purposes for which he could exercise it.]

Shee, Serjt., and Bovill, for the defendant.

PER CURIAM (POLLOCK, C. B., ALDERSON, B., and MARTIN, B.). The case is clear. The principle was established in Cowling v. Higginson, 4 Mee. & W. 245; s. c. 7 Law J. Rep. N. S. Exch. 265. The direction was quite right, and therefore the rule will be absolute for a nonsuit.

Rule absolute.

WILLIAMS v. JAMES. ✓

COMMON PLEAS. 1867.

[Reported L. R. 2 C. P. 577.]

DECLARATION for trespass to land.

Fifth plea, that one Ann Morgan was owner in fee of certain land, and was entitled by immemorial user to a right of way over the plaintiff's land, on foot, and with wagons, carts, and horses, to a public highway from her said land, for the more convenient occupation thereof; that Ann Morgan demised this land with its appurtenances to one Jenkins; and that the alleged trespasses were the use of the right of way by the defendant, as the servant of Jenkins.

Issue and new assignment of excess in the user of the way.

At the trial before Pigott, B., at the Spring Assizes for Monmouthshire, the following facts were proved: Ann Morgan was owner in fee of a field called the Nine-acre field, and of two other fields adjoining, called Parrott's land. These three fields were in the occupation of R. Jenkins. There was from time immemorial a right of way on foot and for wagons, carts, and horses, from the Nine-acre field over the plaintiff's land to a public highway. There was no right of way over the plaintiff's land from Parrott's land. In the summer of 1866 Jenkins mowed the Nine-acre field and Parrott's land, and stacked all the hay upon the Nine-acre field. In September, 1866, Jenkins sold the hay to the defendant, who carted it over the plaintiff's land to the highway, which was the alleged trespass.

The jury found, first, that there was an immemorial right of way from the Nine-acre field to the highway; secondly, that the stacking of the hay was done honestly, and not to get the way further on; thirdly, that there was no excess in the user of the way by the defendant, apart from the question of defendant's right to cart the hay grown on Parrott's land over the plaintiff's land; fifthly, if Parrott's land hay could not be legally carried over the plaintiff's land, then damages 40s.

Pigott, B., directed a verdict for 40s. to be entered for the plaintiff, with leave to the defendant to move to enter the verdict for him.

A rule having been obtained accordingly, Huddleston, Q. C., and Jelf (J. O. Griffits with them), showed cause.

Gilmore Evans (H. Matthews with him), contra.

Bovill, C. J. In all cases of this kind which depend upon user the right acquired must be measured by the extent of the enjoyment which is proved. When a right of way to a piece of land is proved, then that is, unless something appears to the contrary, a right of way for all purposes according to the ordinary and reasonable use to which that land might be applied at the time of the supposed grant. Such a right cannot be increased so as to affect the servient tenement by imposing upon it any additional burden. It is also clear, according to the authorities, that where a person has a right of way over one piece of land to another piece of land, he can only use such right in order to reach the latter place. He cannot use it for the purpose of going elsewhere. In most cases of this sort the question has been whether there was a bona fide or a mere colorable use of the right of way. That was the question in Skull v. Glenister, 16 C. B. N. S. 81; 33 L. J. C. P. 185, and on which the case was ultimately decided. This question is excluded here by the finding of the jury.

With respect to the purposes for which the land was used, it is agreed on both sides that that question was raised and discussed at the trial; and the question whether there had been any excess in the user of the right of way, and also the question of the bona fides of Jenkins in stacking the hay, were left to the jury. The question, therefore, of what was the ordinary and reasonable use of the land, was practically left to the jury. They found that Jenkins acted honestly; and that is equivalent to finding that what had been done was done in the ordinary and reasonable use of the land to which the right of way was claimed, and in the ordinary and reasonable use of the right of way itself. It was for the plaintiff to show that there had been some excess of user on the part of the defendant, as by showing that the user of the right of way was only colorable, or that the Nine-acre field was used for purposes other than those included in the ordinary and reasonable use of the land. The finding of the jury excludes both these questions. In considering the matters submitted to them, the jury must have had to consider whether any additional burden had been cast upon the servient tenement. This was a necessary element for them to take into consideration in deciding whether there had been only an ordinary and reasonable use of the land in question. If no additional burden was cast upon the servient tenement, the jury might well find that there had been only the ordinary and reasonable use of the right of way. On the whole, the right of way being established, and the plaintiff not showing any excess in the user, I think the defendant is entitled to the verdict, and this rule must therefore be made absolute.

WILLES, J. I am of the same opinion. The distinction between a grant and prescription is obvious. In the case of proving a right by prescription, the user of the right is the only evidence. In the case of a grant, the language of the instrument can be referred to, and it is of course for the court to construe that language; and in the absence of any clear indication of the intention of the parties, the maxim that a grant must be construed most strongly against the grantor must be applied. Accordingly, in South Metropolitan Railway Company v. Eden, 16 C. B. 42, where a grant was produced without stating the object of the grant, it was the opinion of the judges that the grant was general, and that the way in that case might be used to any part of the land to which the way was granted.

I agree with the argument of Mr. Jelf that in cases like this, where a way has to be proved by user, you cannot extend the purposes for which the way may be used, or for which it might be reasonably inferred that parties would have intended it to be used. The land in this case was a field in the country, and apparently only used for rustic purposes. To be a legitimate user of the right of way, it must be used for the enjoyment of the Nine-acre field, and not colorably for other closes. I quite agree also with the argument that the right of way can only be used for the field in its ordinary use as a field. The right could not be used for a manufactory built upon the field. The use must be the reasonable use for the purposes of the land in the condition in which it was while the user took place. A right of way by user was here proved, and I think the verdict of the jury excludes the excess of the user charged by the plaintiff. Honest user of the Nine-acre field must have been understood by the jury in the large sense of bona fide and reasonable, not a user in order to get an advantage to which the defendant was not entitled. The finding of the jury was, that the land was used honestly, and not in order to get a right of way further on. This is equivalent to finding that the stacking of the hay on the Nine-acre field was in the reasonable and ordinary use of it as a field; also that the carting was from the Nine-acre field, and not from Parrott's land. I think both these propositions are included in the finding. I think, therefore, that the rule must be made absolute. We could not refuse this without splitting straws on a subject which ought to be dealt with substantially. The case has been well argued on both sides, and Mr. Jelf has said all that could be said for the plaintiff.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J. The proposition contended for by Mr. Jelf in his able argument is, that this question is to be decided by us as a matter of law. I think that is not so. It is an admitted fact that some of the hay carried from the Nine-acre field was grown on Parrott's land, and the carrying away of this hay is the excess in the user of the right of way which is complained of. This alone, however, does not determine the question for the plaintiff. The question is for the jury, whether the stacking of the hay in question and the carrying of it away was in the ordinary and reasonable use of the Nine-acre field. The jury have found that there is an immemorial right of way over the plaintiff's land for carts, carriages, and horses, for the more convenient use and occupation of the Nine-acre field. Before the jury could decide whether there had been any excess in the user of the right by the defendant they must have decided the extent of the right of way. The way here is claimed for the more convenient use of the Nine-acre field. The circumstances under which the hay was stacked, and the purpose and object of the defendant in carrying it away, are questions for the jury. As I read the finding of the jury, the stacking and the subsequent dealing with the hay were in the honest and reasonable use of the Nine-acre field. It was for the plaintiff to prove affirmatively upon this issue that there had been some excess of user by the defendant, but he has not done so; on the contrary, the jury have found against him. I think, therefore, the rule must be made absolute.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY. 1875.

[Reported 1 Ch. Div. 362.]

THIS was an appeal by the defendant from a decree of the Master of the Rolls granting a perpetual injunction.

By the Wimbledon and Putney Commons Act, 1871, the fee-simple of Wimbledon Common, including the roads hereinafter mentioned, became vested in the plaintiffs. Up to that time it had been vested in Earl Spencer, as lord of the manors of Wimbledon and Battersea and Wandsworth, or one of them.

Adjoining the south side of the common was an ancient earthwork known as Cæsar's Camp, enclosing about fifteen acres. On the eastern side of Cæsar's Camp were three messuages built in or soon after the year 1867, and adjoining the south side of the common. Access to these houses was obtained from the east by a road called the New Road, which ran westwardly over the common near its southern boundary, from a public road called Workhouse Lane, and by two short roads running southwards out of the New Road to the entrance gates of the messuages, these short roads being nearly at right angles to the New Road. The most westerly of these two cross-roads was at the western end of the New Road, and at a distance of about sixty yards from Cæsar's Camp.

Cæsar's Camp, the sites of the above three messuages, and the farm and lands on the southerly and westerly sides of them, known as Warren Farm, Shadwell Wood, and Warren Cottage, were the property of Mr. Drax, and Cæsar's Camp formed part of the farm. Before 1867, access for horses and carriages to these lands was obtained by an old private road running from Workhouse Lane to a cottage, called Camp Cottage, adjoining the northeast corner of the most easterly of the above three messuages, and by several old tracks over the common, leading from the end of the road near Camp Cottage, to a gate which formed the eastern entrance to Cæsar's Camp. This user was admitted to have been immemorial.

In 1867 Mr. Drax let to the defendant the site of the three above-mentioned messuages. The defendant negotiated with Earl Spencer for a right of way to them. No grant of a right of way was ever made, but Earl Spencer made the New Road and the two cross-roads at his own expense, making a complete road up to the most westerly of the cross-roads. There was some conflict of testimony as to whether the New Road was carried completely to the gate of the camp; but the result appeared to be that a finished road was made up to the cross-road, and that from that point to the gate little was done, but that something like a road existed. It appeared that up to Camp Cottage the New Road was nearly identical with the old private road mentioned above. Until the passing of the Act the defendant paid Earl Spencer £10 a year for the use of the roads.

In 1872 the defendant became tenant to Mr. Drax of part of Cæsar's Camp and some adjoining land, and made preparations for building a house within the camp. The plaintiffs thereupon gave him notice that they recognized no right of access to the camp over Wimbledon Common, except along the existing road or track to the gate of the camp for the purposes of agricultural occupation only. The defendant replied, asserting his right to use the roads for access to any houses he might build, but did not proceed any further till 1875, when he commenced building operations. The plaintiffs thereupon filed their bill, praying that the defendant might be restrained from drawing along the New Road leading from Workhouse Lane to the entrance to Cæsar's Camp, or any part of it, any building materials for the erection of houses or other buildings on Cæsar's Camp, or on any part of Warren Farm, and from otherwise using the New Road as a means of access to the camp and lands in excess of the user to which it was liable as a road made in substitution for the ancient tracks across the common.

It was not disputed by the plaintiffs that the occupier of Warren Farm and the other lands mentioned above had from time immemorial enjoyed the right of using the way for all ordinary agricultural purposes connected with the farm and adjoining land. Cæsar's Camp was much resorted to by visitors, who, when they wished to enter it in a carriage, used to send for the key of the gate, which was kept on the farm, the gate usually being locked. The defendant, however, claimed a right of way for all purposes, and in proof of the road having been used by the occupiers of the farm for all purposes, he adduced evidence to the following effect: That about thirty years ago, when a wing was added to the farm-house and a new stable built, the materials were carted along the road through the gate into Cæsar's Camp and thence to the farm; that about the year 1855 buildings were being erected on Wimbledon Hill, and that for several weeks large quantities of sand and gravel were dug out of the ground which afterwards was the site of the above-mentioned three messuages, and carted along the road past Camp Cottage and through the gate into the camp and thence to Wimbledon Hill; and that about the year 1859 Warren Cottage was altered from a clay tenement into a brick-built cottage, and the materials carted to it by the same way; and that the road was used by persons having the right of shooting on the farm. There was also some evidence as to another cottage having been built on the farm, and the materials brought along the New Road.

The Master of the Rolls granted a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant from drawing, or causing to be drawn, along the New Road leading from Workhouse Lane to or towards the entrance to Cæsar's Camp, or along any part of the said New Road, any bricks, stone, or other building materials to be used in the erection of houses or other buildings, other than ordinary farm buildings, upon Cæsar's Camp, or any part thereof, or upon any of the lands then or then lately forming part of the Warren Farm, and in which the defendant claimed to be entitled under his agreement with Mr. Drax, except for the ordinary farming purposes of the said camp and lands respectively; and from otherwise using the said New Road as a means of access to the said camp and lands in excess of the user to which it was liable as a road made in substitution for ancient tracks across Wimbledon Common. The defendant appealed.

Miller, Q. C., and Bush, for the appellant.

Chitty, Q. C., and W. R. Fisher, for the plaintiffs.

JAMES, L. J. I am of opinion that, subject to a slight alteration in the words of the injunction, the order of the Master of the Rolls ought to be affirmed.

The question between the parties is whether Mr. Dixon is entitled to convert a piece of land forming part of an estate or farm called Warren Farm, and hitherto uncultivated, into sites for several houses, and to use, for the purpose of bringing materials for their erection, and for all purposes connected with the houses when built, a right of way which the owners and occupiers of the farm have from time immemorial enjoyed over land of the plaintiffs. The right which Mr. Dixon claims under his landlord, Mr. Drax, is an unlimited right of way for all purposes over the plaintiffs' land to and from every portion of the land constituting the Warren Farm, after the whole of the farm has been laid out for building purposes and turned into a town, if he should be minded and able so to convert it. As far as we have any evidence before us, the farm in respect of which this right is claimed has been substantially in its present state from time immemorial, during which it is to be assumed that the right of way has been exercised, that is to say, there were a farm-house, farm-lands, and a piece of woodland. The only alterations of which we have any evidence in the state of the property, have been an enlargement of the farm-house to a small extent, the change of a mud cottage into a brick cottage, and probably the erection of another cottage, — whether an erection or change, I am not quite sure. But those are the only changes which are alleged to have taken place in the property. Now, that those changes may be material, and may be to some extent evidence of such a general right as is claimed, it is probably difficult to deny; but whether they amount to evidence sufficient to justify the inference of fact that such a right existed, is another question. I am of opinion that the mere fact that over a common some building materials were taken for the purposes I have mentioned, is not sufficient to justify the inference of fact that the right of way belonging to the house and property was to be an unlimited right of going to and from the land for all purposes, to whatever purposes the land might be applied. The way has also been used for ordinary agricultural purposes, — for sporting, which seems to me the same thing as an agricultural purpose, and for taking gravel from a gravel pit in one of the fields. That is insufficient, as it seems to me, to enable us to draw the inference of fact that the extended right claimed by Mr. Dixon ever existed. The evidence practically comes to this: that the right of way has been exercised for all purposes connected with the use of the farm for residential or agricultural purposes.

We have, then, to consider whether the character of the property can be so changed as substantially to increase or alter the burden upon the servient tenement. I said when this case was first opened, that I was strongly of opinion that it was the settled law of this country that no such change in the character of a dominant tenement could be made as would increase the burden on the servient tenement. The dicta and observations, which are entitled to very great weight, of Lord Abinger and Mr. Baron Parke in the cases which have been referred to, inclined me at first to think that the opinion I had formed was wrong. But when we consider those remarks in connection with the very clear language of the Court of Queen's Bench in Allan v. Gomme, 11 A. & E. 759, and of the Lord Chief Justice Bovill and Mr. Justice Willes in the case of Williams v. James, Law Rep. 2 C. P. 577, I am satisfied that the true principle is the principle laid down in these cases, that you cannot from evidence of user of a privilege connected with the enjoyment of property in its original state, infer a right to use it, into whatsoever form or for whatever purpose that property may be changed; that is to say, if a right of way to a field be proved by evidence of user, however general, for whatever purpose, qua field, the person who is the owner of that field cannot from that say, I have a right to turn that field into a manufactory, or into a town, and then use the way for the purposes of the manufactory or town so built. I therefore think that the Master of the Rolls was right in the result at which he arrived.

But I think it right to say, as the judgment of the Master of the Rolls has been read to us, that I am unable to agree with the view which apparently he formed, that there could be no right of way at all in respect of what are called the tracks over the common. I am not at all prepared to assent to that as a true statement of the law of this country. If from one terminus to another, say from the gate here to the end of a road 200 yards off, persons have found their way from time immemorial across a common, although sometimes going by one track and sometimes by another, I am not prepared to say that a right of road across the common from one terminus to the other may not be validly claimed, and may not be as good as a right over any formed road; but I fully concur in all that the Master of the Rolls has said as to there being no right to use the way further than for all purposes according to the ordinary and reasonable use of the land in the state in which it formerly was. It probably, however, would be better that the words in the order, "except for the ordinary farming purposes of the said camp and lands respectively," should be altered into some such expression as "except for the purposes to which the land has been heretofore applied."

MELLISH, L. J. I am of the same opinion. The question is whether Mr. Drax and his tenants are entitled to use this right of way for the purpose of turning the land into building land, for erecting new buildings upon it, and then, after the buildings are erected, for the purposes of those buildings. It is admitted in the bill, and proved in point of fact, that the right of way did exist for some purposes, and I do not, any more than the Lord Justice, agree with what was thrown out by the Master of the Rolls as to the consequence of the track not being a perfectly definite track over the common, but being a track going in varying lines previously to the time when the new road was made. No doubt if a person has land bordering on a common, and it is proved that he went on the common at any place where his land might happen to adjoin it, sometimes in one place and sometimes in another, and then went over the common sometimes to one place and sometimes to another, it would be difficult from that to infer any right of way. But if you can find the terminus a quo and the terminus ad quem, the mere fact that the owner does not go precisely in the same track for the purpose of going from one place to the other, would not enable the owner of the servient tenement to dispute the right of road. Suppose the owner of this common had granted by deed to Mr. Dixon the right to go from the gate leading out of Cæsar's Camp to the highway by the National School with carriages and horses at his free will and pleasure, I cannot suppose that the grant would fail in point of law because it did not point out the precise definite track between the one terminus and the other in which he was to go in using the right of way. If the owner of the servient tenement does not point out the line of way, then the grantee must take the nearest way he can. If the owner of the servient tenement wishes to confine him to a particular track, he must set out a reasonable way, and then the person is not entitled to go out of the way merely because the way is rough, and there are ruts in it, and so forth. In my opinion the bill has properly admitted that the defendant has a right of way for some purposes.

Then comes the question, What is the extent of that right of way? That depends partly on a question of law, and partly on a question of fact, but mainly on a question of law. When the question of law is settled, there is no great difficulty in arriving at a proper conclusion in point of fact. The question of law is this: Assuming that it is made out that Mr. Drax and his tenants have used this way, not exclusively for agricultural purposes, but for all purposes for which they wanted it, in the state in which the land was at the time of the supposed grant,—at the time when the way first began,—and assuming that there has been no material alteration in the premises since that time, does that entitle Mr. Drax to alter substantially and increase the burden on the servient tenement by building any number of houses he pleases on this property and giving to the persons who inhabit those houses a right to use the way for all purposes connected with the houses? I certainly was under the impression when this case was opened that the owner of the dominant tenement could not increase or alter the burden on the servient tenement in any such way as that. Mr. Miller called our attention very pointedly to the language of Mr. Baron Parke in Cowling v. Higginson, 4 M. & W. 245, which certainly raised some doubt in my mind as to what the true rule of law is. But now that the other cases have been cited, I doubt whether Baron Parke had the question now before us present to his mind, and I am of opinion that the true rule is that laid down by Lord Chief Justice Bovill and Mr. Justice Willes in the case of Williams v. James, and substantially assented to by Baron Parke himself in the case of Henning v. Burnett, 8 Ex. 187. In Cowling v. Higginson, 4 M. & W. 245, 256, Lord Abinger is cautious in the way in which he lays down the rule. He says (4 M. & W. 256): “If a way has been used for several purposes, there may be a ground for inferring that there is a right of way for all purposes; but if the evidence shows a user for one purpose, or for particular purposes only, an inference of a general right would hardly be presumed.” If he has used it only for purposes connected with the occupation of the land in its existing state, that may be considered to be a user for particular purposes, and I have a doubt whether Baron Parke really intended the contrary; for if the facts in Cowling v. Higginson are looked at, it will be found that the mines had been opened, and therefore, though they had not been worked for seventy years, it was a property with existing mines in it. The way, it is true, had not been used for those mines, but as the property was a property within which there were opened mines, it might fairly be inferred that the right extended to using the road for the purposes of the mines, the working them being a reasonable use of the land in the condition in which it was. But however that may be, in my opinion the true rule is that stated by Lord Chief Justice Bovill, that when a right of way to a piece of land is proved, then that is, unless something appears to the contrary, a right of way for all purposes according to the ordinary and reasonable use to which that land might be applied at the time of the supposed grant. Mr. Justice Willes evidently agrees with that view.

That being the rule, what are the purposes for which, according to the ordinary and reasonable uses to which this land might be applied, according to its state at the time of the grant or supposed grant, this road may be used? When Warren Farm was first enclosed we do not know, but at whatever time it may have been enclosed, one cannot suppose that anybody thought of its being used for general building purposes, though no doubt the owner of the farm must always have required, first of all, the way to the Kingston Road in one direction, and then a way to Wimbledon, which lies in another direction. Is there any such evidence of user for purposes beyond what was necessary, and beyond what was reasonably required for the occupation of the land in its existing state, as that we can find that the right extends beyond that? I agree, if we found that several houses had been built from time to time, and that the owner had carried the materials over this road; and the occupiers of the new houses had used the road, we might infer that the right of way was not to be confined to those particular houses, because that was not the original grant, but that the parties contemplated building generally at the time of the original grant, and intended to include in it a right of way to all future houses. I will not say that there is no evidence here of such a right, but there is not sufficient evidence for us to act upon, or to lead us to say that there is a right beyond what is necessary and reasonable for the occupation of the premises as a farm. The enlargement of Warren Farm-house does not carry the right beyond a right for farming purposes. It would be a very narrow construction to say that where a small farm-house with some small buildings was erected 200 or 300 years ago, the right of way to it did not include a right of carting materials to enlarge the farm buildings so as to adapt them to the present state of agriculture.

Then with regard to the changing a mud cottage into a brick cottage. That is very weak evidence, if it is evidence at all; because if a mud cottage becomes unfit for human habitation, and is rebuilt with brick, although there is the carrying of bricks for the time, the burden is not permanently increased, for going to the brick cottage after it is once built is no greater burden than the going to the mud cottage. The other users that occurred of taking away gravel, of going there for the purposes of shooting, are users reasonably connected with the occupation of the premises, as they have been during the whole time that the right of way has existed, as far as we know. I am therefore of opinion that it is not made out that there is any right to use this road for the purpose of erecting entirely new buildings, and then, after those buildings are erected, to use the road for the purpose of those buildings. I agree, therefore, that the appeal must be dismissed.

BAGGALLAY, J. A. I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that there are two questions for decision in this case. First, what is the extent of the right of way which is proved by the evidence in the case; and, secondly, if a right of way is established limited to particular purposes, whether it can be extended consistently with the rules of law applicable to questions of the like kind. I think the judgment of Mr. Baron Parke in the case of Cowling v. Higginson has been interpreted so as to extend its application beyond what that learned Baron intended. It is true that in one part of the judgment he uses this expression: "If it is shown that the defendant, and those under whom he claimed, had used the way whenever they had required it, it is strong evidence to show that they had a general right to use it for all purposes, and from which a jury might infer a general right." Those words taken by themselves point in the direction of Mr. Miller's argument; but I think those wide words are qualified by this further statement: "If the way is confined to a particular purpose, the jury ought not to extend it; but if it is proved to have been used for a variety of purposes, then they might be warranted in finding a way for all." Now let us take the case of an agricultural district where there had been a right of way to certain land exercised for agricultural purposes only for a length of time, and then it appears that there is valuable gravel on the estate, and the gravel is raised and sold from time to time, and carried over the way previously used for agricultural purposes alone; if afterwards other mineral produce is found and raised, and the way is used for carrying that away, and then the way is used for a variety of other purposes that from time to time arise in the course of the occupation of the land, I can understand that if the case went to a jury, with user for all this variety of purposes established, the jury would or might infer that the original grant was a grant for all purposes. No such case arises here. If it is not proved by evidence—as I think it is—it is admitted that the right of way was used for agricultural purposes from time immemorial. In addition to that, two or three users are suggested as going beyond agricultural purposes, but do not appear to me to do so, such as building a new barn, adding a wing to the house, and the shooting. Then we have two slight circumstances,—the replacing a mud cottage upon a portion of the property by a more substantial building, and the taking gravel and carting it away. We have no evidence of user for any purposes beyond the purposes I have referred to. If the case came before me as a juryman to say whether I would infer a right to use the way for all purposes, I should answer "No." It is not like a general user for all purposes, such as Baron Parke contemplated. Therefore the first question must be answered that the right of way extended to the purposes for which it has hitherto been enjoyed, and no further.

Then the second question is, whether the right to use this way being limited to the particular purposes, as to which there has been actual proof, can be extended to the purposes for which the defendant desires to use it. I think he cannot do that consistently with the rules of law which have been from time to time enunciated, and particularly in the case of Williams v. James, that you must neither increase the burden on the servient tenement, nor substantially change the nature of the user. Answering the questions that arise in this case in the way I have suggested, it appears to me that the judgment of the Master of the Rolls is correct; and, subject to the modification which has been mentioned by the Lord Justice, there must be an injunction.

BRAMWELL, B. I agree. I have nothing to add.

NEWCOMEN v. COULSON.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1877.

[Reported 5 Ch. Div. 133.]

IN 1760 an Act was passed for enclosing common lands at East Coatham, in Yorkshire. By the award made in pursuance of this Act, being in form a deed to which all the allottees were parties, the commissioners allotted to Richard Agar a portion of the common, containing 7a. 0r. 4p., and directed that he should maintain the southern and eastern fences. The award conferred upon Agar and some other allottees a right of way in the following terms:—

“The said commissioners do hereby award, direct, and appoint that the said W. Turner, R. Agar, &c., and the owner and owners for the time being of the lands hereby to them respectively allotted, shall forever hereafter have and enjoy a way-right and liberty of passage for themselves and their respective tenants and farmers of the said lands and grounds, as well on foot as on horseback, and with their carts and carriages, and to lead and drive their horses, oxen, and other cattle, as often as occasion shall require, from the common highway leading from Redcar aforesaid to the northeast end of the said R. Agar’s aforesaid allotment in the said East Stoney Butts, and from thence to the said old enclosures called West Dyke Closes, in, over, and through the east end or part of their said respective allotments in the said East Stoney Butts and Upper Half Acres to and from their said respective allotments without interruption, or paying any consideration for the same, doing as little damage to the soil or the corn, grass, or herbage as may be.”

The award also directed that in case the said allottees, or any of them, or any of the owners for the time being of their respective allotments, should “street out” the same way leading through their said respective allotments, the same should be made, and should forever remain, eleven yards broad, at the least, between the quicksets, but that such way was not, nor was intended to be, admitted to be a way of right for any other person or persons whomsoever than as aforesaid.

In pursuance of this award a road was set out with a quickset hedge on each side of it, being of the required width of thirty-three feet.

The defendants were the owners of a portion of Agar's allotment. The plaintiff was the lord of the manor, and also the owner of the land adjoining the highway mentioned in the award. The road set out by the award from Agar's allotment to the above-mentioned highway ran over part of the lord's said land.

The defendants had commenced building upon their land a number of villa residences, and for more convenient access to them they had commenced forming a solid granite road in lieu of the common cart-road which had for many years existed there; and they were also about to erect a bridge across a small stream called the Stell, which formed the boundary between the land allotted under the award and the high-road.

The plaintiff thereupon commenced this action, asking for an injunction restraining the defendants from erecting a bridge across the Stell, so as to rest upon or otherwise interfere with the piece of land belonging to the plaintiff situate on the south side of the high-road, and from making a road upon the eastern boundary of the plaintiff's said piece of land, and from exercising any rights of ownership thereupon, and from using the same piece of land otherwise than in accordance with their rights under the award, whereby, as the plaintiff alleged, a right of road solely for agricultural purposes over the plaintiff's said piece of land was given to the owners for the time being of the defendants' land; and for damages for wrongfully entering the plaintiff's piece of land and erecting the said bridge and making the road.

The plaintiff moved for an injunction as above. The motion was heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 21st of December, 1876.

When the case was opened, Glasse, Q. C., for the defendants, submitted, for the purpose of the present application, to an injunction as to the bridge proposed to be erected over the Stell. The Vice-Chancellor refused the motion as to the right of way, but continued the interim order as to the bridge. The plaintiff appealed.

Higgins, Q. C., and Procter, for the appellant.

Glasse, Q. C., and W. W. Karslake, for the defendants, were not called upon.

JESSEL, M. R. I think that this appeal cannot be maintained. The first question to be considered is, What is the effect of the grant? It is not very artificially worded, but we must look at it with regard to the nature of the case. The enclosure was carried out in a way that was common in former times, — by a deed to which all the allottees are parties. [His Lordship read the clauses which are set out above.]

The first point made was this : It was said that as this was a grant to the owner and owners for the time being of the lands, if the lands became severed the owners of the severed portions could not exercise the right of way. I am of opinion that the law is quite clear the other way. Where the grant is in respect of the lands and not in respect of the person, it is severed when the lands are severed, that is, it goes with every part of the severed lands. On principle, this is clear. It never could have been contemplated in the case of an award like this that the property was never to be divided, nor is it to be contended that if a man died and left two or three daughters co-heiresses, and they partitioned the estate, the right of way was lost, and their allotments forever deprived of access to the highway. But, in addition to that, I think that the case is fairly covered by authority. In Harris v. Drewe, 2 B. & Ad. 164, a pew was granted by a faculty to John Emery and his family forever, and the owners and occupiers of the said messuage, exclusively of all other persons. The plaintiff Harris occupied a summer-house which he had converted into a house, and into which he had thrown one room of the old house. It was held that he had a right in the pew in respect of his occupation of that one room. Lord Tenterden says (2 B. & Ad. 166) : "The plaintiff was the occupier of the summer-house and of one room which was part of the old dwelling-house. The faculty gave a right to the several persons who should be occupiers of the messuage to use the pew." And then Justice Littledale says : "I am of the same opinion. The plaintiff having a right by the faculty to use the pew, the churchwardens had no right to interfere as they did, and were wrongdoers. It may certainly happen, in consequence of a house being subdivided, that three or four families may become entitled to use a pew belonging to the original messuage." There are the very words, "owners and occupiers." The same point in another shape came before the Court of Queen's Bench in Codling v. Johnson, 9 B. & C. 933, 934, where in trespass quare clausum friggit the defendant prescribed in a que estate for a right of way over the locus in quo. It appeared that the defendant's land had within fifty years been part of a large common, and afterwards enclosed under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, and allotted to the defendant's ancestor, and it was held that notwithstanding this evidence the right claimed by the defendant's plea might in law exist, and the jury having found that in fact it did exist, the court refused to disturb the verdict. Justice Bayley there says : "It appears by the report that the jury were satisfied of the existence of this immemorial right of way. Suppose this land to have been part of the waste before the enclosure, then the lord might have the right for himself and his tenants to use the way, and then each person having an allotment under the enclosure would have the right of way." It seems to me, therefore, both on principle and authority, we must decide against the appellant.

The next point made was this : It was said that the grant conferred a right to use the way only so long as the allotment was used for agricultural purposes. I cannot find any such restriction. The right is to the owners or owner for the time being of the lands. Now land, according to English law, includes everything on or under the soil; all buildings that you may erect on it; all mines that you may sink under it. If an allottee builds a house, or, as it is said here, twenty-six houses, on the land, the owner of each house, with the soil on which it stands, is an owner of part of the lands, and entitled to the benefit of the grant. Irrespectively of the technical meaning of the word "land," it could hardly be contended that on the occasion of an enclosure it was contemplated that at no time thereafter would any allottee erect on any part of these large allotments, which I see include old enclosures, any laborers' cottages, or any house or dwelling of any kind, or even a stable for his horses. I have no doubt, therefore, that the word "land" is used advisedly. This being so, it appears to me the right is a general right of way, a right of way to all the houses which may be built on the land in question.

Then it is said the provision that the allottees shall do as little damage as may be to the soil or the corn, grass, or herbage, prohibits what is now being done. That provision obviously is put in to show that if the way was not fenced off, the persons using it must only go from point to point in the shortest way, and not deviate over the field so as to damage the corn and grass more than necessary. It appears to me that these words by no means limit the right of the grantee to use the way for all reasonable purposes.

Then it was said, admitting the owner of each house to have a right of way, still the grantees have no right to enter upon the allotments over which the right of way is granted for the purpose of laying down a metalled road. Now, it was conceded to be the principle of law that the grantee of a right of way has a right to enter upon the land of the grantor over which the way extends for the purpose of making the grant effective, that is, to enable him to exercise the right granted to him. That includes not only keeping the road in repair, but the right of making a road. If you grant to me over a field a right of carriage-way to my house, I may enter upon your field and make over it a carriage-way sufficient to support the ordinary traffic of a carriage-way, otherwise the grant is of no use to me, because my carriage would sink up to the navels of the wheels in a week or two of wet weather. It cannot be contended that the word "repair" in such a case is limited to making good the defects in the original soil by subsidence or washing away, it must include the right of making the road such that it can be used for the purpose for which it is granted. Therefore I think the defendants have a right to make an effective carriage-way going, as they are going, by the shortest route, and not interfering with the land to a greater extent in width than the width of the street pointed out by the deed itself.

The last point was this: It was said, "Assuming the defendant has such a right, at all events he has not that right now, he has not yet completely built his house or houses ; they are only in process of building, and he is preparing to make his road before it is wanted." As to that, it appears to me that we must look at the case in a reasonable way. If a man is building a house or houses, and he wants carts or carriages to go along the road, either to carry materials for the building, or with a view to the use of the inhabitants of the houses when built, it is not reasonable to say that he may not make his road till the house is completed and somebody is going to inhabit it. The reasonable thing is, that he may during the building do, by way of anticipation, that which he would, according to this argument, have the right to do the moment the house was completed. But there is an additional answer to that argument, that, assuming it to be sound, it would not justify an injunction. If a man is about completing a house, and would have the right to make a road to it as soon as it was completed, the intermediate damage occasioned by his making the road while the house is building must be of the most trifling description. It must be the loss for that short time of the grass which would grow over the road which was continually traversed by men, horses, and carriages. Such a case is certainly not one in which the court will interfere by injunction. Nor was the case really put on that ground. For these reasons, it appears to me that the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor ought to be upheld.

JAMES, L. J. I am of the same opinion. As to what was read from the Vice-Chancellor's judgment about this not being an easement, I think there must be some mistake. It is an easement, and our judgment is based upon its being such. Those rights which the Master of the Rolls has held to belong to the defendants, in which I fully concur, belong to them as the owners of an easement in respect of the dominant tenement as against the owner of the servient tenement. As to forming a substantial carriage-road, I agree with the Master of the Rolls. The case is not, in my opinion, one tenth part as strong or as difficult as Dand v. Kingscote, 6 M. & W. 174, on which we are told the Vice-Chancellor proceeded.

BAGGALLAY, J. A. I agree.

LONDON v. RIGGS.

CHANCERY DIVISION. 1880.

[Reported 13 Ch. D. 798.]

DEMURRER. The statement of claim alleged as follows : —

By an indenture dated the 6th of April, 1877, the defendant Heathcote granted to the plaintiffs, the Corporation of London, for value, certain pieces of open and enclosed land being waste land of the manor of Chingford and of Epping Forest, in the county of Essex, containing about 141 acres, to hold the same unto and to the use of the plaintiffs, their successors and assigns forever, subject to such rights of common (if any) as such hereditaments were then subject to: and the plaintiffs thereby declared that they would hold the said hereditaments as an open space forever, subject only to the forest laws and the rights of common (if any) subsisting over the said hereditaments or any part thereof.

By the Epping Forest Act, 1878, it was enacted that Epping Forest (which included the hereditaments conveyed by the said indenture) should be regulated and managed by the Corporation of London as conservators thereof. And by the said Act Epping Forest was disafforested; and it was provided that, subject to the provisions of the Act, the said conservators should at all times keep Epping Forest unenclosed and unbuilt upon as an open space for the recreation and enjoyment of the public, and should by all lawful means prevent enclosures, encroachments, and buildings, and all attempts for the purpose on any part thereof or to appropriate or use the same, or the soil, timber, or roads thereof, or any part thereof, for any purpose inconsistent with the objects of the Act.

At the date of the said indenture of the 6th of April, 1877, the defendant Heathcote, and for many years continuously before and down to the date thereof, he and his predecessors in title was and were seised in fee simple of the said hereditaments conveyed by the said indenture, and also of a piece of old enclosed land of about two acres called the Barn Hoppet, which was entirely surrounded by the hereditaments so conveyed to the plaintiffs.

During such unity of seisin in the defendant Heathcote of the said hereditaments so conveyed to the plaintiffs and of the Barn Hoppet, and down to the acts thereafter complained of, the Barn Hoppet was exclusively used for agricultural purposes, and there were no buildings thereon. There was a gate on the northwest side thereof, but no road, path, or defined track leading to such gate, or to any other part of the Barn Hoppet, and the defendant Heathcote and his predecessors, owners of the Barn Hoppet and of the lands conveyed to the plaintiffs, and the tenants of the Barn Hoppet, obtained access to the Barn Hoppet, and conveyed their crops, manure, and other things necessary for and arising from the cultivation thereof, to and from the same by crossing the lands so conveyed in various directions to and from a road or track leading from a road called Whitehall Road on the south side of the land so conveyed to a house called Queen Elizabeth's Lodge on the north side thereof, and to and from a barn near to and held with the house.

The said indenture of the 6th of April, 1877, did not expressly reserve any right of way for the defendant Heathcote, his heirs or assigns, tenants or occupiers, to the Barn Hoppet.

The defendant Riggs, in the month of September, 1879, entered into possession of the Barn Hoppet as tenant of the defendant Heathcote, and had since made preparations for the erection on the Barn Hoppet of a house and other buildings for the sale of refreshments to the public. He had also dug trenches for the foundations of the house, had erected a workshop, and had drawn timber and other materials for the erection of the workshop and other buildings across the land conveyed to the plaintiffs by the indenture of the 6th of April, 1877, and had thereby made an unlawful use of the said waste, and had injured the surface of the said land and the herbage growing thereon, and had encroached upon the soil of the said forest. He and the defendant Heathcote threatened and intended to continue the said acts, and by the use of the intended buildings to attract great numbers of persons and cause them to collect together in order to visit and frequent the same, and for those purposes to cross the lands so conveyed to the plaintiffs both in carriages and on foot, and would thereby do further injury to and make further encroachments upon the soil and herbage of the said forest ; and the defendants respectively claimed a right so to do.

The plaintiffs accordingly claimed, 1, that it might be declared that the defendants were not entitled to a greater or other way to and from the Barn Hoppet across the lands conveyed to the plaintiffs by the indenture of the 6th of April, 1877, than a way of necessity sufficient for the use of the Barn Hoppet for agricultural purposes only ; and that, if necessary, the position, dimensions, and other particulars of the said way of necessity might be set out and defined ; 2, that the defendant Riggs might be restrained from drawing or causing to be drawn across the lands so conveyed to the plaintiffs any timber or other materials for erecting upon the Barn Hoppet any building to be used for any purpose other than the ordinary agricultural purposes to which such piece of land was applied before and at the date of the conveyance to the plaintiffs ; and that both the defendants might be restrained from otherwise using the said way of necessity, or the said lands so conveyed to the plaintiffs, or any part thereof, as a means of access to the Barn Hoppet otherwise than in accordance with such declaration ; and, 3, damages.

The defendants demurred to the whole of the statement of claim, except so far as it claimed, if necessary, to have the position and dimensions of a way of necessity to the Barn Hoppet set out and defined. The demurrer also alleged that, except as aforesaid, the statement of claim was bad in law on the ground that the defendant Heathcote and his tenants were entitled to a way of necessity to the Barn Hoppet across the lands conveyed to the plaintiffs for the use of the Barn Hoppet for all purposes, and not for agricultural purposes only.

The demurrer now came on to be argued.

Davey, Q. C., and H. A. Giffard, for the demurrer.

Chitty, Q. C., and W. R. Fisher, for the plaintiffs.

JESSEL, M. R. I am afraid that, whatever I may call my decision, it will, in effect, be making law, which I never have any desire to do ; but I cannot find that the point is covered by any decided case, or even appears to have been discussed in any decided case. The only satisfaction I have in deciding the point is this, that it will in all probability be carried to a higher court, and it will be for that court to make the law, or, as we say, declare the law, and not for me.

The real question I have to decide is this,—whether, on a grant of land wholly surrounding a close, the implied grant, or re-grant, of a right of way by the grantee to the grantor to enable him to get to the reserved, or excepted, or enclosed close, is a grant of a general right of way for all purposes, or only a grant of a right of way for the purpose of the enjoyment of the reserved or excepted close in its then state.

There is, as I have said, no distinct authority on the question. It seems to me to have been laid down in very early times—and I have looked into a great number of cases, and among others several black-letter cases—that the right to a way of necessity is an exception to the ordinary rule that a man shall not derogate from his own grant, and that the man who grants the surrounding land is in very much the same position as regards the right of way to the reserved close as if he had granted the close, retaining the surrounding land. In both cases there is what is called a way of necessity; and the way of necessity, according to the old rules of pleading, must have been pleaded as a grant, or, where the close is reserved, as it is here, as a re-grant.

Now the question is, what is the re-grant? I fail to find any exact decision on the point, or anything coming near it, for it does not seem to have been discussed anywhere; and the only scintilla I can find going anywhere near the point is an observation of the Lord Chancellor Cairns in Gayford v. Moffatt, Law Rep. 4 Ch. 133, 135, in which he says, reading from Mr. Serjeant Williams's note to Pomfret v. Ricroft, 1 Wms. Saund., ed. 1871, pp. 571–574: “This principle seems to be the foundation of that species of way which is usually called a way of necessity;” and then he goes on to say, “Now, that is exactly the interpretation of the words used in this grant, ‘with all ways to the premises appertaining;’ it means, with such a way as the law would hold to be necessarily appertaining to premises such as these,—that is, a way of necessity; therefore, immediately after this lease was granted, this tenant occupying the inner close became entitled to a way of necessity through the outer close, and that way must be a way suitable to the business to be carried on on the premises demised, namely, the business of a wine and spirit merchant.”

It is therefore obvious to me that Lord Cairns thought a way of necessity meant a way suitable for the user of the premises at the time when the way of necessity was created; and that is all I can find in the shape of authority on the subject.

Well, now, if we try the case on principle—treating this right of way as an exception to the rule—ought it to be treated as a larger exception than the necessity of the case warrants? That of course brings us back to the question, What does the necessity of the case require? The object of implying the re-grant, as stated by the older judges, was that if you did not give the owner of the reserved close some right of way or other, he could neither use nor occupy the reserved close, nor derive any benefit from it. But what is the extent of the benefit he is to have? Is he entitled to say, I have reserved to myself more than that which enables me to enjoy it as it is at the time of the grant? And if that is the true rule, that he is not to have more than necessity requires, as distinguished from what convenience may require, it appears to me that the right of way must be limited to that which is necessary at the time of the grant; that is, he is supposed to take a re-grant to himself of such a right of way as will enable him to enjoy the reserved thing as it is.

That appears to me to be the meaning of a right of way of necessity. If you imply more, you reserve to him not only that which enables him to enjoy the thing he has reserved as it is, but that which enables him to enjoy it in the same way and to the same extent as if he reserved a general right of way for all purposes: that is—as in the case I have before me—a man who reserves two acres of arable land in the middle of a large piece of land is to be entitled to cover the reserved land with houses, and call on his grantees to allow him to make a wide metalled road up to it. I do not think that is a fair meaning of a way of necessity: I think it must be limited by the necessity at the time of the grant; and that the man who does not take the pains to secure an actual grant of a right of way for all purposes is not entitled to be put in a better position than to be able to enjoy that which he had at the time the grant was made. I am not aware of any other principle on which this case can be decided.

I may be met by the objection that a way of necessity must mean something more than what I have stated, because, where the grant is of the enclosed piece, the grantees are entitled to use the land for all purposes, and should therefore be entitled to a right of way commensurate with his right of enjoyment. But there again the grantees has not taken from the grantor any express grant of a right of way; and all he can be entitled to ask is a right to enable him to enjoy the property granted to him as it was granted to him. It does not appear to me that the grant of the property gives any greater right. But even if it did, the principle applicable to the grantees is not quite the same as the principle applicable to the grantor; and it might be that the grantees obtains a larger way of necessity—though I do not think he does—than the grantor does under the implied re-grant.

I am afraid that I am laying down the law for the first time, that I am for the first time declaring the law; but it is a matter of necessity from which I cannot escape.

The demurrer must, therefore, be overruled, with costs.

ATKINS v. BORDMAN.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1840.

[Reported 2 Met. 457.]

SHAW, C. J.¹ This cause, or rather several causes growing out of the same subject of controversy, has long been before the court; and it is to be regretted that all points of dispute, in regard to the relative rights of the parties, have not yet been adjusted. Several questions have heretofore been decided, and the parties have acquiesced in the decisions, and adjusted their buildings in conformity with them. 20 Pick. 291.

The main question, which now remains for consideration, between these parties, is, whether the defendants had a right to erect a building over the passage way which, it is conceded, the plaintiff has a right to have, use, and enjoy, on the southerly side of the defendants' land. It appears that heretofore both of these tenements belonged to one person, and of course neither estate was then subject to any easement for the benefit of the other; because the owner, as the exclusive proprietor, might build upon any part, or use and appropriate any and every part of the estate at his own pleasure, as his own sense of his interest and convenience might dictate. It is obvious, that so long as two tenements remain the estate of the same owner, no right of easement can be created by use, however long continued; because such use cannot be adverse. Whenever, therefore, such proprietor conveys away part of the estate so situated, he may create, annex, and convey with the estate granted, such rights of way over his other estate retained, or other easements therein, as he may think fit; and also he may reserve out of the estate granted, and annex to his own estate retained, such easements as he may deem proper. And the acceptance of the deed by the grantee, whilst it gives him the benefit of the easements granted, subjects the granted estate, both in his own hands and in those of all others who may come in under him, to the easements reserved. It stands, therefore, upon the ground of convention, between those who have a disposing power.

There are cases, indeed, in which it is held, that long use may be given in evidence to establish the right of the grantee, in such case, to easements in and over the estate of the grantor; but on a very different principle from that on which prescription or presumed grant is founded. The right claimed depends on grant; but the question often arises, from the ambiguity, brevity, or uncertainty of the descriptive words used, what was the extent of such grant; in other words, what was the intention of the parties in making and accepting the grant. In ascertaining this intent, several rules of exposition are adopted, founded upon experience, to enable courts to determine, or to approximate to such meaning and intent. It is a rule, that the language of a conveyance shall be construed most strongly against the grantor; because it is his act, and the language that of his choice or dictation. Again; a grant being made for a valuable consideration, it shall be presumed that the grantor intended to convey, and the grantee expected to receive, the full benefit of it, and therefore that the grantor not only conveyed the thing specifically described, but all other things, so far as it was in his power to pass them, which were necessary to the enjoyment of the thing granted. Thus the grant of a mill actually driven by water, though not described as a water-mill in the deed, carries with it a right to the stream which supplies the mill, although it comes to the mill wholly through other land of the grantor. He cannot divert it, and thus derogate from the beneficial effect of his grant. The grant of a messuage or tract of land, with no access to it but over other land of the grantor, is by implication a tacit grant of a convenient right of way to it over such other land. But there is another rule in ascertaining the meaning of parties where the deed is silent, or the language defective or ambiguous, and one to which we more particularly before alluded; and it is this: that it is competent, in order to show what the parties probably meant, where the language is not fully clear and unambiguous, to prove the local position, the relative situation of the estate granted, that of the estate reserved, and also the manner in which the grantor himself had used it, when owner of the whole. Such evidence of use of particular ways over one estate, in the occupation and enjoyment of the other, may tend to show what was necessary, or useful and convenient in this respect, and so considered by him who had a power to use both as he pleased, and therefore tends to show what, by necessary or reasonable implication, was intended. It is very clear that a grantor, by unequivocal words, may convey one estate by definite description, and create and annex thereto an easement in his own other land. This may also be done by necessary or reasonable implication, if the intent so to do can be inferred. Thus, if one grants an estate, with all the privileges and appurtenances, and there be a right of way over a third person's estate, that right of way passes. Indeed, such right of way passes as incident, though "appurtenances" are not expressed. Kent v. Waite, 10 Pick. 138. But if there be no such right of way, which may be legally and technically "appurtenant," but the grantor has commonly used a way thereto over his other land; in order to give effect to the manifest intent, it may be construed to pass a right over such land, not as an appurtenance before existing, but as an easement created by the deed itself, and annexed to the estate granted. So if one grant an estate, with the ways and other easements actually used and enjoyed therewith, evidence aliunde, by parol or otherwise, may be given to prove that a particular way was then in use by the grantor; and then it is held to pass as parcel of the estate conveyed. White v. Crawford, 10 Mass. 183. Story v. Odin, 12 Mass. 157. Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. 24. United States v. Appleton, 1 Sumner, 492. Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. 250. This view may perhaps tend to reconcile authorities which may seem conflicting, tending on the one side to show that no length of time, or constancy of use, can create an easement over one estate for the benefit of another, whilst there is unity of title in one owner—and on the other, that long use by the grantor may be evidence of title to the easement in the grantee. The long and constant use of a way over the land of another, without interruption or objection, is evidence of right, because it is not to be presumed that an owner would permit such use without right. But the long and frequent use of a way over a part of one's own estate, as conducive to the useful and convenient occupation of another part, tends to show that it was necessary or beneficial; and, therefore, if there be no other way, or if there be any words describing or alluding to a way actually used, or when ways "appurtenant" are expressed, and in fact there is no way technically appurtenant, such previous use by the owner may be available to give effect to the presumption that it was intended that such right of way should pass, as parcel of, or incident to, the estate granted.

With this view of the law before us, we are to look at the deed by which the defendants' estate was granted by the plaintiff's predecessor, to ascertain the nature and extent of the plaintiff's easements, for a disturbance of which, this action is brought. It has already been decided that in the present case the actual use and enjoyment, on the part of the plaintiff and his predecessors, over the estate of the defendants and their predecessors, have been so nearly in conformity with the provisions of the deed, that it is to be presumed that the parties intended to claim and hold their rights under it, and, therefore, that the plaintiff's rights depend on the reservations in the deed, and not on prescription. The law will not presume a non-appearing grant, or raise a prescription, where a grant is produced, to which his use, occupation and enjoyment may be ascribed. The court were of opinion, that the plaintiff's rights depended on the deed from Haugh to Henry Tew, in 1703. In this deed, the grantor, having described an existing gate and passage way, of about five feet wide, on the southerly side of the estate granted, leading from the street, now Washington Street, into the yard of said messuage, made the following reservation: "Reserving out of this bargain and sale, unto me the said Haugh, my heirs and assigns forever, free liberty of ingress, egress and regress through and upon the said gate or passage way, for carrying and recarrying wood, or any other thing through the same, and over the yard or ground of the said messuage hereby granted, into and from the housing and land of me the said Atherton Haugh adjoining, for the use and accommodation thereof, without damnifying or annoying thereby the said Henry Tew, his heirs and assigns." Upon the construction of this clause, the court decided, that a convenient right of passage way was reserved for the benefit of the plaintiff's estate, but that the width of it was not fixed. And we are still of opinion that that was the true construction. For, although the gate was described as "about five feet wide," there was no warranty of its width, and no words declaring that he should have the width of the way as it then existed, or any equivalent expression. And the word "about" indicates that it was not intended to be definite. It was therefore the right of a suitable and convenient passage for the purposes indicated. 20 Pick. 295.

On a subsequent trial, the plaintiff claimed a right to the use of the passage way, open to the sky, according to the lines of the south and west walls of the old building on the defendants' lot. As to arching over the passage way, the judge, at the trial, instructed the jury that if this did not occasion any inconvenience by darkening it, or otherwise, in respect to the uses for which it was reserved, the plaintiff would not be entitled to any damage on this ground; but on this point they were instructed to assess separate damages. It appears that upon that ground, on that trial, the jury assessed damages in the sum of one dollar. On the same ground, the jury on the trial now under review, assessed damages in the sum of $350. It therefore now becomes necessary more carefully to investigate the right thus claimed by the plaintiff, and examine the principle on which it rests; because, if it be true that the plaintiff has the right claimed, to have said passage way open to the sky, the defendants are under a corresponding obligation to take down their building, so far as it is erected over the said passage way.

The owner of an estate in fee, by virtue of his interest and power as proprietor, may make any and all beneficial uses of it at his own pleasure, and he may alter the mode of using it, by erecting or removing buildings over it, or digging into or under it, without restraint. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cœlum. If any other person has an easement in it, the owner has still all the beneficial use, which he can have consistently with the other's enjoyment of that easement. If the easement is a right of way, this consists in a right to use the surface of the soil, for the purpose of passing and repassing, and the incidental right of properly fitting the surface for that use; but the owner of the soil has all the rights and benefits of ownership, consistent with such easement. Perley v. Chandler, 6 Mass. 454. He is entitled to the herbage growing upon it. Adams v. Emerson, 6 Pick. 57. All which the person having the easement can lawfully claim is the use of the surface, for passing and repassing, with a right to enter upon and prepare it for that use, by levelling, gravelling, ploughing or paving, according to the nature of the way granted or reserved; that is, for a foot way, a horse way, or a way for all teams and carriages. When no actually existing way, as bounded and located, is granted or reserved, the right of way, in point of width and height, shall be such as is reasonably necessary and convenient for the purposes for which it is granted. If it be a foot way only, it shall be reasonably wide and high for all persons to pass on foot, with such things as are usually carried by foot passengers. If it be a way for teams and carriages, it shall be of sufficient height and breadth to admit of carriages of the largest size in common use, and high enough for loads of hay, and other similar vehicles usually moved by teams. Under such circumstances, what is a reasonable height and width, is partly a question of fact, and partly a question of law; the facts all being found by the jury, what is a reasonable width and height is a question of law; or, to express the same thing in other words, what was intended by the parties to be the nature and extent of the right granted, is an inference of law, to be drawn from the terms of the instrument of grant, interpreted and explained by the facts and circumstances thus found by the jury.

When no dimensions of a way are expressed, but the object is expressed, the dimensions must be inferred to be such as are reasonably sufficient for the accomplishment of that object. In the present case, the dimensions of the way are not expressed; but the purpose for which it was reserved is expressed, and it goes far to enable us to ascertain the dimensions. It was for the purpose of carrying wood, or any other thing, into and from the grantor's "housing and land adjoining, for the use and accommodation thereof." The grantor's adjoining house, being a dwelling-house, it is to be limited to articles usually carried to or from a dwelling-house, in its ordinary occupation as such. It thereby excludes the presumption that it was to be adapted to the carriage of merchandise, such as bales, boxes, or casks. Wood must be taken to be fire-wood, and not timber or wood to be used for the purposes of manufacturing. And "any other thing," though in terms of the largest sense, must be construed to mean other thing of like kind used in a dwelling-house; as vegetables, provisions, furniture, and the like. Without examining it more minutely, we are satisfied that the right reserved was that of a suitable and convenient foot-way to and from the grantor's dwelling-house, of suitable height and dimensions to carry in and out furniture, provisions and necessaries for family use, and to use for that purpose wheelbarrows, hand-sleds, and such small vehicles as are commonly used for that purpose, in passing to and from the street to the dwelling in the rear, through a foot passage, in a closely built and thickly settled town.

Upon these views of the rules and principles of law applicable to the present case, the court are of opinion that the defendants had a perfect right to build over the said passage way; it being one of the beneficial uses of the property which could be made, and which, as owners, they had a right to make, consistently with the full and free enjoyment of the foot way on the part of the plaintiff.

We think that this opinion is not inconsistent with the opinions heretofore given at nisi prius, and by the whole court, though perhaps the point was not stated with sufficient precision for the purposes of deciding definitely the rights of these parties, and putting an end to the long controversy which has subsisted between them. For this purpose, it is necessary to distinguish accurately between an act, which is of itself an infringement of another's right, and an act which of itself is not an infringement of the right of another, but which, in its consequences, may cause a damage to that other. In the former case, no special damage, no actual pecuniary loss, need be stated or proved; the law presumes that a party sustains some damage from the infringement of his right, and enables him to maintain an action, whether he have suffered actual damage or not. And in such case, it is often highly proper that a party should bring his action, though he may expect to recover nominal damages only, for the purpose of vindicating his right, and thereby preventing the adverse party from acquiring a right by long and uninterrupted use. 16 Pick. 247.

But there is another class of cases, where although the act complained of may not be unlawful, or, if unlawful, not an infringement of any right of the plaintiff, no action can be maintained without alleging and proving a special and particular damage to the plaintiff; and the damages to be recovered are confined to an indemnity for the loss thus proved to have been sustained. The plaintiff sets forth the act done, and alleges that by means thereof, he sustained the damage complained of, technically called declaring with a per quod. As where the plaintiff complained that while he was proceeding along a navigable creek with his barge laden, &c., the defendant obstructed the creek, per quod the plaintiff was compelled to carry his goods around, at a great expense. In such case the action lies for the special damage immediately occasioned by the obstruction; but it would not lie for the obstruction itself, without special damage, because although it was an infringement of a public right, and so was unlawful, yet it was not an infringement of the peculiar right of the plaintiff. Rose v. Miles, 4 M. & S. 101. So for special damage occasioned by obstructing a highway. Greasly v. Codling, 2 Bing. 263. So by a proprietor of land through which a watercourse runs, against a proprietor higher up, where the gravamen of the complaint against the upper proprietor was, that by damming up the water above, it came with greater impetuosity, and thereby injured his banks. Williams v. Morland, 2 Barn. & Cres. 910; s. c. 4 Dowl. & Ryl. 583. But it might be otherwise, where the plaintiff had acquired a right to the water by appropriation, and the complaint was for the infringement of that right. Bealey v. Shaw, 6 East, 208. It is manifest, we think, that this distinction has become important in the present case, because a jury have heretofore given one dollar for this item, treating it as a case of mere nominal damages; whereas, the verdict now under consideration assesses that item of damage at $350.

We have stated that the opinion now expressed will not appear, upon strict comparison, to be inconsistent with those formerly expressed, though in the former cases the rule prescribed may have been less precise and definite. It may, therefore, be proper to review them. On the first trial, the jury were instructed as to the passage way, that the reservation in the deed was answered, by giving the plaintiff a passage way as convenient as it was when the reservation was made; that if the present passage way was not so wide as before, and was not open above, yet if it was as convenient, &c.; but that the defendants had no right to narrow or cover the passage, so as to cause serious inconvenience to the owners, &c. The observation of the court, when this part of the case came before them on a motion for a new trial, was, that by the case it appeared that the passage had been narrowed and arched over, and rendered darker and less convenient. And in reference to the instruction to the jury, that so far as the plaintiff had suffered inconvenience from the alteration, he was entitled to recover damage, the court say that this was correct. 20 Pick. 295.

It is manifest, we think, that in these remarks, so far as they related to the dimensions of the passage way, the court considered that the passage way, as it was, in point of convenience, at the time it was reserved, and the width of it, for the purpose for which it was reserved, might be considered as equivalent, and that the one description was used instead of the other. For, in this same opinion the court say, that they are satisfied that a convenient right of way was reserved, but that its width was not fixed. 20 Pick. 295. But if it was to be a passage way as it existed at the time of the reservation, its width would have been fixed. In point of fact, as the buildings then stood, the passage used was of irregular breadth, being for a part of the way eight or nine feet wide. As a definition of the plaintiff's right, it would have been more exact to say, that it was a right of way suitable and convenient for the purpose for which it was reserved, namely, as a foot way from a public street to a dwelling-house in the rear, and for carrying wood and other articles, incident to the occupation and enjoyment of such a dwelling-house. This admits of any alteration and improvement in the estate over which the easement is reserved, consistent with the preservation and maintenance of the right of passage itself. So it has been held in analogous cases. A grant of water, sufficient to supply a grist mill, limits the quantity of water, but not the use to which it is to be applied. If, in the progress of improvement in the useful arts, the owner removes the grist mill, and erects a cotton factory, it is held, that he has a right to do so, taking no more water for his factory, than he had a right to take for his grist mill. Such construction is conformable alike to the rules of law, and to the principles of public policy. The law, carrying into effect the intention of the parties, does not intend to restrict the right of ownership of the real estate subjected, further than is necessary to give full effect to the easement; and public policy requires, as well in cities as elsewhere, that an owner of real estate should be allowed to make all the improvements upon it, which can be made consistently with the just rights of others.

So far as the remark of the court applied to the darkening of the passage way, it did not go on the distinction between doing an act, which the defendants have no right to do, by building over the passage way, and doing that which they had a right to do, but doing it in such a manner as to cause some slight consequential damage to the plaintiff. Besides, the damages given by the jury on that ground, being merely nominal, and the instruction not being wrong in point of law, and especially as the plaintiff was entitled to hold his verdict for other damages, the court had no good reason for setting aside the verdict, even though it might have appeared to them, that, upon the evidence, no case for any consequential damages was established in point of fact.

In saying, that the actual condition of the way, at the time of the reservation, is not the measure and definition of the plaintiff's right, it is necessary to guard against two misconstructions of this remark. We do not mean to say, that when a way is actually located and fixed by definite and visible objects, as by buildings or fences, the grant or reservation may not refer to such way actually existing, and that the limits then would not be fixed by the act of the parties themselves. The contrary is true in such case. Salisbury v. Andrews, 19 Pick. 250. Even where an estate is granted with all ways "appurtenant," and there is, strictly speaking, no way appurtenant, but there is an actually existing way over the grantor's other land, it shall be taken, that the way actually used and existing, though miscalled "appurtenant," shall pass; because it must be understood that such was the intent of the parties. Morris v. Edgington, 3 Taunt. 24. The other misconception, against which we would guard, is this: when it is said, that in such a case as the present, the actually existing state of the passage way, at the time of the reservation, is not the measure or description of the right reserved, we do not mean to say, that such state of the passage way may not be evidence, and often evidence of a very forcible and determinate character, to prove what is reasonable and convenient, and what those most conversant with the matter have, by their practice, shown to be in their opinion most reasonable and convenient, under given circumstances. And this goes far to show what was in the mind of the court, when they seemed to consider the actual condition of the way, at the time of the reservation, as equivalent to the convenient passage way reserved by the deed.

This cause again came before the court in June, 1838. The judge, on that trial, had instructed the jury, that as to arching over the passage way, if it did not occasion any inconvenience, by darkening it or otherwise, in respect to the uses for which it was reserved, the plaintiff would not be entitled to any damages on this ground. 20 Pick. 298. This is wholly consistent with the opinion now expressed, but without stating definitely what were the rights of the defendants, as owners, over the passage way, and therefore less explicit than it might have been useful to state it, under the circumstances. In regard to the breadth, the jury were instructed, that the defendants were bound to maintain a passage way, equal in breadth to the distance between the old gate posts, and otherwise convenient for the uses for which it was reserved. 20 Pick. 299. The former part of this direction was, we think, inaccurate, in taking the distance between the gate posts as the measure of the plaintiff's right; but supposing that width and a reasonable width to be practically the same thing, this mode of laying down the rule would lead to no practical error in the result. The opinion of the whole court, on this part of the case, was extremely brief, and we are apprehensive that from its conciseness, or from the implications which it carries, rather than from anything expressed, it may have led to an erroneous application of the rule of law, in the subsequent trial. It is thus stated: "The right of way from Washington Street to the rear of the defendants' buildings seems to be definite and certain. The use of it, as it existed in fact from the date of the reservation to the time of the trial, has been satisfactorily ascertained. It was then uncovered. No right to cover it was granted. The jury have found it to be darkened and injured by the arch over it, and have assessed damages for the injury. Of this there can be no complaint." 20 Pick. 302, 303.

The way, indeed, was definite and certain as to its direction and the purpose for which it was reserved; and the long use was good evidence of what the parties concerned understood as necessary and convenient. But when it is said, that the passage way was then uncovered, and no right to cover it was granted, especially as the plaintiff claimed a right to have it open to the sky, it may have been understood, though not so expressed, that without such right granted, the defendants had no such right. We think it could not have been so intended, and that the court did not pass upon that question; especially as the opinion immediately proceeds to state, that the jury have found that it had been "darkened and injured by the arch over it," and assessed damages for the injury. Supposing, then, that the defendants had a right to arch the passage over, yet, if in the exercise of that right, they had done it in such a manner as to injure the plaintiff, and that by means thereof he had suffered special damage, he might recover the damages given in that case, on the principle of the maxim, that every one shall so use his own property and his own right, as not to injure another. This principle may be well illustrated by a recent case. The defendants were erecting a steam boiler and apparatus on land adjoining the premises of the plaintiff, and by some mismanagement it exploded and did damage to the plaintiff's buildings. The defendants were held liable. Witte v. Hague, 2 Dowl. & Ryl. 33.

It therefore does not appear whether the damages, given for arching over the passage way, were given for a supposed violation of the plaintiff's right in the estate, or for a supposed consequential special damage done to the plaintiff, in the exercise of the defendants' own right in a careless or improper manner; and there was nothing in the instruction to the jury, under which that verdict was found, to show that they were not given on the latter ground; in which case there was no reason to set aside the verdict. The amount of the damages was not such as to indicate that the jury might not have proceeded on the latter ground, or to call the particular attention of the court to the distinction between these grounds. We think, therefore, that the question now distinctly brought before the court has not been decided by any of the opinions heretofore given by the court. That question is, whether the defendants had a right to build over the passage way. On that question, for the reasons hereinbefore expressed, the court are of opinion, that the defendants, as owners of the land, had a right to build over the ground on which the passage way in question was reserved; that the plaintiff, under his reserved privilege, had no right to have it open above to the sky, or to any other height, except so far as necessary and convenient for the uses of the foot way reserved, sufficient in height and breadth for the purposes expressed in such reservation.

Having taken this more broad and extended view of the rights of these parties, and the grounds of law on which they rest, it will be the less necessary to take into consideration the particular exceptions to the charge of the judge, upon which the cause now comes before us. So far as the judge charged the jury, that the defendants had no right to arch over the passage, and use the space over it for any purpose of building, such charge was erroneous, and had a tendency to mislead the jury. We are also of opinion, that so far as the judge instructed the jury, that the defendants were bound to keep open a passage way equal in width to the distance between the old gate posts, it was not strictly correct, although a passage of such width, and one of reasonable width, might not practically differ. We are aware that a similar instruction had before been given at nisi prius, but it was before the case had been so fully considered as at present.

For the reasons already given, the court are of opinion that the instruction of the judge was incorrect, so far as he directed the jury that the defendants were liable for damages if the new passage was rendered more inconvenient, by being covered, by reason of its being made a place of resort, or by being darkened, or otherwise.

As to the darkening, we think the jury should have been instructed, that the defendants were not liable for damages, unless, from the length of the passage way, it was so darkened as to render it unfit for the purposes of a passage way. We may conceive of a covered passage of eight or ten feet high, of a length so considerable, that unless openings were left, there would not be light enough admitted at the ends to enable persons to use it with comfort, for the purposes of a passage way. But unless darkened to that extent, it is not a case for damages. It must render the premises to a sensible degree less valuable for the purposes of business. Parker v. Smith, 5 Car. & P. 438; Back v. Stacey, 2 Car. & P. 465; Wells v. Ody, 7 Car. & P. 410; Pringle v. Wernham, 7 Car. & P. 377.

We think, also, that the jury should have been instructed, that the defendants were not liable for damages by reason of this covered passage being made, to a greater extent, a place of resort by other persons; first, because the consequential damage from that cause is too remote to be made the subject of an action; but more especially, because the plaintiff must either keep the passage closed, and thus prevent the entrance of other persons, or seek his remedy by law, against those who do the actual injury.¹

BAKEMAN v. TALBOT.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1865.

[Reported 31 N. Y. 366.]

THE action is in the nature of a bill in equity to establish a right of way claimed by the plaintiff over the land of the defendant, and to enjoin the latter from continuing certain fences which he had erected, and to compel him to remove them. A farm, of which the premises owned by the plaintiff and those owned by the defendant are parcels, embracing a certain lot No. 179, was formerly owned by one De Groot, who died intestate in 1838, leaving children, to whom the land descended. Partition was made between them by suit in chancery in the year 1839. The commissioners appointed by the court to make partition divided the farm into several smaller lots, and allotted the one numbered 12 to the party under whom the plaintiff derived title by a subsequent conveyance. Lots numbers 9, 10, and 11 were set off to parties under whom the defendant subsequently acquired title. The four lots were wood lots, and lay adjoining each other, and are bounded on the north by the northerly line of the original farm, the plaintiff's being the eastermost of the four lots. There is a public highway running westerly of the lots. The report of the commissioners (which was confirmed by the court) contains the following provision: "The right of way or passage is reserved to the said heirs respectively, and to their heirs and assigns, from the highway, near the west line of said lot number 179, and immediately adjoining the north line of the farm aforesaid, and extending east along the north line of said farm to the extreme east corner of the wood lots aforesaid, to enable them to pass to and from their respective wood lots for the purpose of obtaining wood and timber therefrom, or for any other purpose." The plaintiff's lot remained unimproved, but the defendant's had been cleared and were under cultivation. The defendant, before the commencement of the suit, had built a fence between his eastermost lot and the plaintiff's lot, and also fences between each of his other lots, each fence running quite to his northerly line. Two of the fences were built with stakes, "with rails to slip between them like bars." The other was of rails, and had what is called in the case a "slip gate" at the northerly end, which was the place he passed, so that the rails could be taken out and turned round, and so that the plaintiff could pass through. After the commencement of the suit, the defendant put up bars on the lines of three of the lots. The plaintiff's premises being a wood lot, he had no occasion to use the reserved passage way except at long intervals.

The plaintiff claimed that the defendant ought to have placed gates at the place of passage; but this the defendant refused to do, upon which the plaintiff threatened to leave the fences down, and the defendant threatened him with personal violence if he should do so.

The judge (Hon. Daniel Pratt, before whom the case was tried without a jury), after stating the foregoing particulars as conclusions of fact, determined, that although the plaintiff was entitled to a right of passage over the defendant's land at the place indicated, yet that the maintaining the fences there was not an obstruction which the plaintiff was entitled to have removed. Judgment was accordingly given in favor of the defendant, with costs, upon which the plaintiff prosecuted this appeal.

The case was submitted on printed points.

DENIO, CH. J. No question is made but that the plaintiff is entitled to a right of way or passage across the north end of the defendant's land. The extent of that right, and the duty of the respective owners towards each other, is to be determined by the language of the reservation and the circumstances of the case. The plaintiff insists, in substance, that the defendant was bound to keep open a narrow road or lane across the north end of his land, or if he will not do this, that he should, at least, insert swinging gates in his fences which might be opened and shut with ease whenever the plaintiff had occasion to pass. What the defendant did, as I understand the testimony and the judge's conclusions, was to subdivide his land in the manner which he found convenient for its occupation, running the fences quite to his northerly line, making arrangements, however, at the place indicated for passage, by which the bars or rails could be readily removed and conveniently replaced when the plaintiff should have occasion to go through. This would no doubt be somewhat less beneficial to the plaintiff than either a clear space like a common road, or a series of gates which could be opened and shut like doors. But it would be much less onerous to the defendant, who, upon the plaintiff's position, would have to forego the use of a considerable strip of land, and, in addition, to build a lateral fence across the whole north end of the premises, or to incur considerable expense in erecting gates. I am of opinion that the defendant's position presents the more reasonable view of the case. The main object of the reservation in the commissioner's report was to enable those of the proprietors who should become the owners of the lots most remote from the highway to go upon and pass over the land of the others situated between them and the highway, without committing a trespass, and to define the direction of such passage. We are not to intend that it was designed to make the burden unnecessarily onerous. The circumstance that the land was wholly in forest, and that the primary purpose indicated was the carrying of wood and timber, do not suggest the necessity of a thoroughfare like a highway, or an unimpeded private way. If the passage was made as convenient as the mode of access which a farmer usually provides for himself to get to and from his wood land, it seems to me that the purposes of the reservation would be confirmed. De Groot formerly possessed the whole farm. It was about to be subdivided and assigned in severalty to different owners. It would be improper that those to whom back lots were assigned should be precluded from getting to the highway except by committing a trespass, or by claiming a way by necessity,—a right but little known, and not of convenient application. Moreover the exigencies of the case did not contemplate a constant use of the passage, but only such an occasional use as the resort to wood land would require, and such as the plaintiff has since exercised. There is no reason to believe that if the plaintiff, besides owning the backwood lot, had also been the proprietor of the intervening cleared land, he would have found it necessary or thought it expedient to have fenced out a lane, or have erected these gates for his use in passing to and from his timber land; and if he would not have done so, it is unreasonable to require it of the defendant. The defendant certainly has no right to preclude the plaintiff from availing himself of the right of passage, or to render the exercise of that right unusually or unreasonably difficult or burdensome. I think he is not shown to have done so. It must be kept in mind that the plaintiff's lot is still wood land. It may remain so for many years; but it may be cleared up and cultivated, and have buildings erected on it and be applied to such uses as to require constant and frequent passage between it and the highway. There is nothing inconsistent in holding that the present arrangements are suitable and sufficient under existing circumstances; and after these circumstances have changed, and the question shall arise as to what shall then be proper, to determine that a passage perpetually open or a system of gates better adapted to such increased use than the present fences and bars, shall be required of the defendant. It would not be right at this time to oblige the defendant to furnish facilities for a state of affairs which may never arise, or which may not arise until some remote period. The doctrine that the facilities for passage where a private right of way exists, are to be regulated by the nature of the case and the circumstances of the time and place, is very well settled by authority. Hemp hill v. The City of Boston, 8 Cushing. 195; Cowling v. Higginson, 4 Mees. & Wels. 245. The last case determines, in effect, that the extent of the privilege created by the dedication of a private right of passage depends upon the circumstances, and raises a question for the determination of a jury. If, therefore, in the present case I felt less confidence in the conclusion I have stated than I do, I should hold the question had been settled by the judge sitting in the place of a jury in a manner that we could not disturb.¹

The judgment should be affirmed.

BAKER v. FRICK.

COURT OF APPEALS OF MARYLAND. 1876.

[Reported 45 Md. 337.]

APPEAL from the Superior Court of Baltimore City.

The case is stated in the opinion of the court.

The cause was argued before BARTOL, C. J., STEWART, GRASON, MILLER, and ALVEY, JJ.

Arthur W. Machen and Frederick W. Brune, for the appellant.

William F. Frick and S. Teachle Wallis, for the appellee.

BARTOL, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The appellant and appellee are owners of two parcels of land lying contiguous to each other in Baltimore county. Under certain deeds and contracts, contained in the record, the appellant is entitled to a right of way over the land of the appellee, by a road twenty-five feet wide, which has been laid out, graded and made at the joint expense of themselves and Alexander Rieman, another adjoining proprietor who is also entitled to the same right of way. The agreements under which the right of way is claimed were executed in September, 1873, and the road was constructed soon afterwards. The appellee, for the more secure and convenient use of his property, has placed gates upon the road at its termini, and claims the right to maintain the same; while the appellant, claiming that he is entitled to an open and unobstructed road of the width of twenty-five feet, has instituted this suit for an alleged unlawful obstruction of the same by the gates of the defendant. The case was docketed by consent, and all errors of pleading and questions of jurisdiction were waived by agreement.

Evidence was introduced showing the relative location of the lands of plaintiff and defendant, and the manner in which they were acquired, and have been occupied and used, and the several agreements which have been, from time to time, entered into between the successive owners thereof with regard to rights of way over each other's lands, and the mode in which such rights have been used and enjoyed. This evidence is quite voluminous, it is fully set out in the record and in the briefs, and need not be stated at length in this opinion.

The first question presented by this appeal is raised by the first prayer of the appellant, and the prayer of the appellee. By the former, the court was asked to instruct the jury, "if they find the excution by Frick, Baker, and Rieman of the several papers dated the 3d September, 1873, and that a road-bed had been made and constructed under said agreement twenty-five feet wide, from the point of intersection of the lands of said Frick, Baker, and Rieman, out to the old Frederick road, as shown by the plats made by Mr. Boughan, offered in evidence, then by the true construction of said agreement, said Frick had no right afterwards to obstruct said road by gates, or to diminish the width of it, by fences or other obstructions." This prayer was refused, and the prayer of the appellee was granted, instructing the jury "that upon a proper construction of the agreement of September 3d, 1873, or any other papers of that date, executed between the parties, there is nothing in the said agreement and papers, or any of them, which entitles the plaintiff as matter of law, to an open road without gates over the land of the defendant."

The agreements referred to, are designated as No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3. By No. 1, Frick agrees to give to Baker and Rieman "a right of way through his land and premises by a road twenty-five feet wide to be made;" then follows an agreement that the cost of making the road shall be paid by the parties jointly. The line of the road is then particularly designated.

No. 2 is an agreement between the same parties and Boughan the engineer, wherein the latter contracts to construct the road, "to cut, fill, grade, and make a good and practicable road twenty-five feet wide."

By No. 3, Baker agrees to grant to Frick a right of way not less than twenty-five feet wide, through Baker's lands, from the terminus of said before-mentioned roadway, and connecting therewith southwardly to the Frederick Turnpike road. But Baker to be under no obligation to grade or construct the road-bed of said right of way, until the uses of his lots fronting thereon shall in his opinion render the same necessary. The agreement further provides that "when the said road shall be so graded hereafter, as to make a continuous communication between the old Frederick road and the Frederick Turnpike road, the owners of all property fronting thereon, shall be entitled to use the same in either direction, as a common right of way, provided they pay their respective due proportions of the expenses of making, and keeping the same in good repair." It appears from the evidence that the road contemplated in this agreement has not yet been constructed.

Construing the agreements in the light of surrounding circumstances, as these are disclosed by the testimony, they do not, in the opinion of a majority of the court, either by their terms or legal effect, necessarily deprive the defendant of the right to erect gates on the road at its termini. His right to do so depends upon other considerations, and is not necessarily concluded by the agreements. These do not expressly grant to the plaintiff an open road without gates. The road in question is a private way over the defendant's lands. "Nothing passes as incident to such a grant, but that which is necessary for its reasonable and proper enjoyment." 3 Kent, 419, 420.

What is necessary for such reasonable and proper enjoyment of the way granted, and the limitations thereby imposed on the use of the land by the proprietor, depends upon the terms of the grant, the purposes for which it was made, the nature and situation of the property subject to the easement, and the manner in which it has been used and occupied.

As said by Marshall, C. J., in Maxwell v. McAtee, 9 B. Mon. 21 : " Notwithstanding such a grant, there remains with the grantor the right of full dominion and use of the land, except so far as a limitation to his right is essential to the fair enjoyment of the right of way which he has granted. It is not necessary that the grantor should expressly reserve any right which he may exercise consistently with a fair enjoyment of the grant. Such rights remain with him, because they are not granted. And for the same reason, the exercise of any of them cannot be complained of by the grantee, who can claim no other limitation upon the rights of the grantor, but such as are expressed in the grant, or necessarily implied in the right of reasonable enjoyment."

In that case it was decided that " the grant of a right of way over or through the lands of an individual, does not imply that the grantor may not erect gates at the points, where the way enters and terminates." That decision has been approved by courts of high authority in other States. Bean v. Coleman, 44 N. H. 539 ; Garland v. Farber, 47 N. H. 301 ; Hoopes v. Alderson, 22 Iowa, 161 ; Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N. Y. 366, 370, 371 ; Huson v. Young, 4 Lansing, 63. The appellant's counsel have referred to Woolrych on Ways, 49 (4 L. Lib.), in which it is said, " If a private man have a way over the land of another by prescription or grant, the grantor has no right to make a gate across the path, and action on the case will lie against the tortfeasor for so doing," and for this is cited James v. Hayward, Sir Wm. Jones, 222. The same case is cited in Gale on the Law of Easements, 395 m. There the language of Sir William Jones is differently stated, the words being " by prescriptive grant," and not as in Woolrych " by prescription or grant." By reference to the case of James v. Hayward, it appears that the way there in question was a highway, the plaintiff over whose land the way crossed erected a gate thereon, it was broken down by the defendant, and the latter was sued in trespass. The language of Jones, J., with reference to putting a gate across a private way, was used by him in pronouncing his judgment, by way of argument or illustration, and is too general to serve as an authority in the present case. It is clear that the decision in James v. Hayward has no application.

It follows from what has been said that, in the opinion of a majority of the court, there was no error in granting the defendant's prayer, and refusing the first prayer of the plaintiff. These prayers present the question of the legal construction and effect of the agreements. The second prayer of the plaintiff asked the court to instruct the jury that if they found the gates erected by the defendant, interfered with the reasonable and convenient use of the said road by the plaintiff, then the jury ought to render a verdict for the plaintiff. We state the substance of the prayer, not pursuing its form. It was specially excepted to by the defendant, "because there was no sufficient legal evidence in the case, to show that the gates in question interfered with the reasonable or convenient use of the road by the plaintiff, or otherwise to support the hypothesis of fact on which said prayer is founded." The court below rejected the prayer for the reason stated in the exception, and instructed the jury "that under the rulings of the court their verdict must be for the defendant."

To this instruction special exceptions were filed by the plaintiff as follows:

"1st. Because it assumes as matter of fact that the gates erected by the defendant are necessary to the exercise of defendant's rights in the premises."

"2d. Because it assumes the fact that the said gates are usual gates, under the circumstances of this case, as disclosed in the evidence."

"3d. Because it assumes that the lands of the plaintiff and defendant, affected by the road in question in this case, were, at the time of the making of the agreements, and of the grievances complained of, farm lands."

"4th. Because it assumes that the gates which the defendant might be entitled to erect were farm gates."

"5th. Because it assumes as matter of fact, that the gates erected by the defendant, as shown by the evidence, were usual and sufficient farm gates."

In our opinion there was error both in refusing the second prayer of the plaintiff, and in the instruction given to the jury, to find for the defendant.

The questions whether under all the circumstances of the case, as disclosed by the testimony, the gates were necessary to the defendant for the useful and beneficial occupation of his land, looking to the situation of his property; and whether the particular gates complained of, were usual and proper under the circumstances, and the further question whether their existence upon the road interfered with the reasonable use of the right of way by the plaintiff, considering the situation of his property and the manner in which it was occupied, and the interest of the parties as to the mode in which the right of way was to be used: these were all questions proper to be decided by the jury, upon the evidence in the case. On all these questions testimony was offered, legally sufficient to be submitted to the jury.

"The doctrine that the facilities for passage where a private right of way exists, are to be regulated by the nature of the case, and the circumstances of the time and place, is very well settled by authority. Hemphill v. City of Boston, 8 Cushing, 195; Couling v. Higginson, 4 Mees. & W. 245. The last case determines in effect, that the extent of the privilege created by the dedication of a private right of passage, depends upon the circumstances, and raises a question for the determinination of the jury." Bakeman v. Talbot, 31 N. Y. 370. (Per Denio, Ch. J.) We refer also to Hawkins v. Carbine, 3 Exch. 914, and Huron v. Young, 4 Lansing, 64.

Being of opinion that there was error in refusing the plaintiff's second prayer, and in the instruction given by the court to the jury, the judgment will be reversed and a new trial ordered.

Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.¹

GERRISH v. SHATTUCK.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1882.

[Reported 132 Mass. 235.]

BILL in equity, filed October 11, 1879, to restrain the defendant from obstructing a passage way running from Prescott Street in Lowell to the plaintiff's land.

After the former decision, reported 128 Mass. 571, the case was heard by Soule, J., on the form of the final decree. The plaintiff asked the judge to sign the following decree: "This cause came on to be heard, and was argued by counsel, and thereupon, upon consideration thereof, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendant, days from the entering of this decree, remove all erections and obstructions placed or built by him in and upon the passage way described in the plaintiff's bill, which passage way is located next southerly of the northerly line of the defendant's land, and extends the whole length thereof, from the plaintiff's land to Prescott Street, and is four feet in width throughout its entire length; and that within said time the defendant fill up the excavations in said passage way described in said bill, and restore the whole of said passage way and make the same as good and firm as it was before the earth therein was removed by him therefrom. And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the defendant be and he hereby is forever enjoined from erecting or placing any building, wall, or other obstruction in, upon, or over said passage way, or any part thereof, or in any manner interfering with or obstructing the plaintiff's peaceable use and enjoyment of the same over the whole length and breadth thereof. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff recover her costs, to be taxed by the clerk."

The judge declined so to do, and signed the following decree: "This cause came on to be heard, and was argued by counsel, and thereupon, on consideration of the court, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff is entitled to a foot way four feet in width immediately south of the northerly line of the defendant's land and extending from the line of the plaintiff's land to Prescott Street; and that the defendant be forever enjoined not to place, erect, or maintain any wall on any part of the land included in said way in such manner as to obstruct the plaintiff in the enjoyment of a foot way over the whole length and breadth thereof; but nothing in this decree is to be construed as forbidding the defendant temporarily to use the land included in said way in any reasonable manner for the purpose of repairing said foot way, or for any other purpose which shall not interfere with the plaintiff's enjoyment of said way, nor as forbidding him to extend any building over the same, at such height, not less than eleven feet above the ground, as not to interfere with the reasonable use and enjoyment of said foot way by the plaintiff, and in such manner as not to be dangerous to persons using said way. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff recover her costs, to be taxed by the clerk."

The plaintiff appealed; and the judge reported the case for the determination of the full court, the decree to be affirmed or such other decree to be entered as justice and equity required. The pleadings and the report of the case on which it previously came before this court were made part of the report. So much thereof as is necessary to an understanding of the case appears in the opinion.

J. N. Marshall and M. L. Hamblet, for the plaintiff.

D. S. Richardson and G. F. Richardson, for the defendant.

DEVENS, J. The rights of the plaintiff depend upon the construction to be given to the reservation in the deed of her father, Nathaniel Wright, in 1857. Wright in that year sold to William H. Burnap, whose rights have been acquired by the defendant, a parcel of land on Prescott Street by a deed containing the following: " Excepting however and reserving to myself my heirs and assigns a passage way four feet wide, in, through and over said premises from said Prescott Street to my tenement on the westerly side thereof." The plaintiff has acquired by inheritance, and by deed from the other heirs, the parcel of land on which was the tenement referred to, and the right of way over the defendant's land, which was reserved in the deed to Burnap.

The effect of the reservation was of a right of way only; and at the former hearing of this case it was held that, the way being of fixed width and having been definitely located by the subsequent acts of the parties interested, the plaintiff was entitled to have it kept open where it was thus located, and therefore that the defendant could not erect a wall sixteen inches in width on the northerly side of it, even if a way four feet in width was left for the plaintiff's use, as the plaintiff could not be compelled to accept a way substituted for the one to which she was entitled, even if equally convenient and useful. Gerrish v. Shattuck, 128 Mass. 571.

The contention of the plaintiff now is that the defendant cannot be permitted to extend any building over the way thus located, as it would necessarily render the passage way darker and less agreeable, and would also interfere with the plaintiff's enjoyment of light and air at his building. It is found by the original report, that eleven feet was a reasonable height for the way in question, that it never had been used for a carriage way, that it was not suitable for such a way, nor intended to be so used, and that the means of going to and from the plaintiff's lot would be practically as convenient and useful as any she had heretofore enjoyed.

Upon this state of facts, Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. 457, is apparently decisive of the case before us. It was there held that the owner of land over which a passage way had been reserved might lawfully cover such passage way with a building if he left a space so high, wide, and light that the way continued substantially as convenient as before for the purposes for which it was reserved. Nor can a distinction be drawn between that case and the present, as the plaintiff contends, because there the way reserved was a convenient way, while here the way had been definitely located by the acts of the parties. Such location had reference only to its position upon the surface of the soil, and, even if when thus defined the way was actually open, there was no location so far as height was concerned except so far as it was reasonably necessary for the use of such a way. The plaintiff has obtained no right to light and air above the way; she has only the right of passing and re-passing, with such incidental rights as are necessary to its enjoyment. The defendant has all the rights and benefit of the ownership of the soil consistent with this easement. Perley v. Chandler, 6 Mass. 454; Atkins v. Bordman, ubi supra.

The plaintiff further objects to the term "foot way" used in the decree appealed from; but this term is used in describing the passage way only to distinguish it from a horse or carriage way, for which it had never been used, and for which it was not suitable. It was not intended thereby to prevent the use on such way of vehicles such as are usually drawn or propelled by foot passengers.

In one respect the decree entered requires modification by an addition thereto. The bill avers and the answer admits the digging up by the defendant of the way (as it has been held by this court to exist) for its entire length and breadth to the depth of about ten feet, and the carrying away of earth therefrom. The defendant had no right thus to disturb the plaintiff in her enjoyment of her easement, and he should be ordered to fill up the excavation so far as it interferes with the surface of the way, or otherwise restore the way so that it shall be as firm, sound, and convenient as it was when his operations commenced. Tucker v. Howard, 128 Mass. 361; Nash v. New England Ins. Co., 127 Mass. 91.

The defendant calls our attention to the first report, where it is found "that the operations of the defendant would not be an unreasonable obstruction of the passage way or a violation of the plaintiff's rights." But this finding was made upon the basis of the opinion held by the learned judge, that the way to which the plaintiff was entitled was one not definitely located, which opinion was erroneous.

The decree as entered should be amended, therefore, by inserting, after the clause ordering the defendant "not to place, erect, or maintain any wall on any part of the land in said way in such manner as to obstruct the plaintiff in the enjoyment of a foot way over the whole length and breadth thereof," a clause providing that the defendant shall within thirty days from the final entry of the decree make the surface of said way as firm, sound, and convenient as it was before the earth was removed by him therefrom.

Decree accordingly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. WILLIAMS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1885.

[Reported 140 Mass. 329.]

INFORMATION in equity, at the relation of the Harbor and Land Commissioners, to restrain the erection of bay windows or projections extending into or over a passage way in the rear of the defendant's house on the corner of Boylston Street and Exeter Street in Boston. Hearing before Devens, J., who reserved the case for the consideration of the full court. The facts appear in the opinion.

H. N. Shepard, Assistant Attorney-General, for the plaintiff.

E. R. Hoar and F. A. Brooks, for the defendant.

C. ALLEN, J. The first question which we have considered is, whether an information in the name of the Attorney-General can be maintained to enforce the stipulations in respect to the passage way. In Attorney-General v. Gardiner, 117 Mass. 492, it is declared that the Commonwealth, in devising the scheme of improvement of the Back Bay lands, acted in a twofold capacity,—as the proprietor of lands which it held and might sell, and as the sovereign power, authorized to lay out highways for the benefit of the public; and that, in the latter capacity, it might enforce these provisions and restrictions, against all persons bound by them, by an information in equity in the name of the Attorney-General. It is suggested that there is a distinction between that case and the present in this particular,—that there the information was brought to enforce restrictions imposed against building on the front part of the lots bounding on the highway, for the benefit of the public, while here it is brought only in the interest of a few private owners of the adjacent property bounding on the passage way. But the Commonwealth properly reserved to itself the right to enter upon the premises by its agents, and, at the expense of the party in fault, to remove or alter, in conformity with the stipulations, any building, or portion thereof, which might be erected on the premises in a manner or to a use contrary to the stipulations. Also, by the Pub. Sts. c. 19, § 5, in all cases where the Commonwealth has such right, all grantees under the deeds by which such right is reserved, and their legal representatives and assigns, may by proceeding in equity compel the board of Harbor and Land Commissioners so to enter and remove or alter such building or portion thereof.

It does not, in this case, appear affirmatively that the Commonwealth has sold all of its land in the neighborhood of the premises in question, and that it has no direct pecuniary interest in enforcing the stipulations. But assuming the fact to be so, it still has a duty to perform in this respect. Moreover, it may be said to have constituted itself a trustee for all the parties in interest, by the form of the stipulation, with the implied assent of each grantee who takes a deed containing it. In either aspect, it has such an interest and duty as to entitle it, by its proper officer, to sue in this court on behalf of the rights and interests of those who claim its protection.

The principal ground of objection to the maintenance of the information is, that the defendant has not infringed upon the stipulation referred to. Before considering this question in the light of the particular stipulation, it may be well to review some of the principal authorities cited at the argument. The leading case upon this subject is Atkins v. Bordman, 2 Met. 457, where it was held that the owner of land, over which his grantor had reserved a passage way, might, under the peculiar circumstances of that case, lawfully cover such passage way with a building, if he left a space so wide, high, and light that the way was substantially as convenient as before for the purposes for which it was reserved. There, from the language of the reservation, construed in the light of the existing facts and circumstances, the right reserved was held to be that of "a suitable and convenient foot way to and from the grantor's dwelling-house, of suitable height and dimensions to carry in and out furniture, provisions, and necessaries for family use, and to use for that purpose wheelbarrows, hand-sleds, and such small vehicles as are commonly used for that purpose, in passing to and from the street to the dwelling in the rear, through a foot passage, in a closely built and thickly settled town." It was a use which was individual to the occupant of that house, and not for the public. It was limited to certain simple uses, connected with getting things into and out of the house. It is obvious that the rights of the single person entitled under such circumstances to a passage way are not necessarily identical with the rights involved in the present case.

In Schwoerer v. Boylston Market Association, 99 Mass. 285, the provision in the deed establishing the passage way declared that it should "not be subject to have any fence or building erected thereon;" and this was held to give a right to have the entire court or passage way, kept open to the sky, for light, air, and prospect, and every other accommodation and advantage which such an open court might furnish to an estate abutting upon it.

In Brooks v. Reynolds, 106 Mass. 31, the passage way was declared in the deed to be for light and air, and was always to be kept open for the purpose aforesaid; and this was held to give a right to the open and unobstructed passage of light and air from the ground upwards, and throughout the length of the passage way.

The case of Salisbury v. Andrews, 128 Mass. 336, is more like the present case. There tenants in common had laid out their land in Boston with a passage way or court, upon both sides of which they had erected buildings fronting upon the way; and, by a deed of partition of the property, they provided that the way "shall be left and always lie open for the passage way or court aforesaid, for the common use and benefit of both of said parties and their respective estates." It was held that the right of an owner under this deed was not simply a right of way, but a right to the use and benefit of an open court, extending as well to the light and air above as to actual travel upon the surface of the earth.

It is necessary now to look at the terms of the bond in which the stipulation relied on in the present case is contained, in order to see what it means. In the first place, it is to be borne in mind that the place in question is a part of a great scheme of improvement of waste land in a city, for streets and dwellings. The description of the land carefully defines the width and lines of the passage way: "running one hundred and twelve feet to a passage way sixteen feet wide; thence westerly on the line of said passage way; . . . also all that part of said passage way sixteen feet wide that lies southerly of its centre line, and between the easterly and westerly lines of said premises extended; reference being had to the plan accompanying the fifth annual report of the Commissioners on the Back Bay." A reference to the plan shows a system of streets, covering an extensive territory, with passage ways for the accommodation of the houses on two streets, and for access to their rear entrances. "Any building erected on the premises shall be at least three stories high for the main part thereof, and shall not in any event be used for a stable or for any mechanical or manufacturing purposes." There were also other provisions showing that dwelling-houses of a high class were contemplated. Afterwards followed the particular stipulation relied on, "that a passage way sixteen feet wide is to be laid out in the rear of the premises, the same to be filled in by the Commonwealth, and to be kept open and maintained by the abutters in common."

It was contemplated that buildings might be erected on both sides of this passage way. Each owner might build up to the line of it. The defendant has done so, and has built bay windows from a point eight feet above the sidewalk, and extending from three to four feet into the passage way, to the top of his house, six stories high. If the opposite owner should do the same, the passage way between the buildings, extending upwards from a point beginning eight feet above the surface of the ground, would be eight feet, instead of sixteen, in width. It would be half closed up, so far as light and air and prospect are concerned. And, if this may be done, it is difficult to place any practical limit to what might be done in this manner. The passage way was designed as a thoroughfare for the accommodation of many persons. In appearance, it is on the plan indistinguishable from a narrow street. It is connected at each end with broad and important streets. It was to be kept open. No gates could be put at the ends of it. It was to be "maintained," that is, kept in good order for use. Its width shows that it was designed for vehicles drawn by horses, as well as for travellers afoot. The supplies for all the houses on both sides of it, for its entire length, would be chiefly deliverable, and all refuse matter removable, by its means. Thus we have a passage way of defined dimensions, in the rear of all the houses on two broad streets, designed for use by all who may have occasion to seek the rear entrances to any of the houses on either street,—a passage way available also for police purposes and for use in the extinguishment of fires,—a passage way which is to be maintained, and kept open, and designed for horses and wagons, in a part of a large city which is designed to be wholly occupied by dwellings of a high class, to which air and light and prospect are not only desirable, but essential, in the rear as well as in the front, with no limitation to the use which may be made of it or of the persons by whom it may be used.

In view of these considerations, we think the language of the stipulation was designed to signify a separation of sixteen feet at least between the rear portions of the buildings abutting on the passage way. A passage way sixteen feet wide was not merely to be kept open at the ends, but open to the sky throughout its entire length, for the general convenience and benefit. It is easy to see that the rights of others would be lessened, upon any other construction. The opposite owner, who might not wish in like manner to build into the passage way, would have in the rear of his house a space just so much the narrower. The adjacent owner on the same side, who did not wish to occupy a part of the passage way with his building, would have light, air, and prospect cut off. The right themselves to occupy the passage in this manner would be no equivalent to owners who did not wish to build their houses so as to extend back to the line of it.

There is nothing in the facts proved at the hearing and reported to us which in any way controls the construction thus put upon the language of the stipulation. The result is, that a decree must be entered for the removal of the projections.

Decree accordingly.¹

NOTE. — MISCELLANEOUS EASEMENTS. — The principal easements are those above specified. Easements cannot be created ad libitum. See Norcross v. James, 140 Mass. 188, post, p. 511. Among easements which have been allowed are, to get water from a stream, Race v. Ward, 4 E. & B. 702, ante, p. 10; to fasten a sign-board to the wall of a house, Moody v. Steggles, 12 Ch. D. 261; to drive a pile in a river, Lancaster v. Eve, 5 C. B. N. S. 717; to pile and hoist boxes, Richardson v. Pond, 15 Gray, 387. Rights to pews and burial rights are of a very varied character: sometimes a freehold right in the soil is created; sometimes an easement; sometimes the right is personal property; sometimes it is only a license.

E. Remedies for Disturbance of Easements.¹

JESSER v. GIFFORD.

KING'S BENCH. 1767.

[Reported 4 Burr. 2141.]

THIS was an action for erecting a wall, whereby the plaintiff's lights were obstructed.

The declaration contained two counts: in the second, the plaintiff counted as the reversioner. And a verdict had been given for the plaintiff, and general damages.

On the second day of this term, Mr. Serjeant Burland moved in arrest of judgment; and had a rule to show cause.

His objection was,—that this action will not lie by a reversioner; being only an injury to the person in possession.

Mr. Justice Aston now said he had looked into it, and had found a case s. r. with the present; and accordingly cited Tomlinson v. Brown, as of H. 28 G. 2, but it was determined in Easter Term, 1755. It was an action brought by the owner of the inheritance, for a nuisance in obstructing lights and breaking his wall. A general verdict for the plaintiff. Mr. Norton, in arrest of judgment, objected, that a temporary nuisance can't be an injury to the inheritance; it may be abated before the estate comes into possession; and he cited Cro. Jac. 231, Some v. Barwisch; and observed, that if this would hold, the defendant would be liable to a double action; one, by the possessor of the estate; the other, by the reversioner. Mr. Crowle showed cause on behalf of the plaintiff; and insisted that it was a damage done to the inheritance: if the reversioner wanted to sell the reversion, this obstruction would certainly lessen the value of it. The court were of opinion, that an action might be brought by one, in respect of his possession; and by the other in respect of his inheritance for the injury done to the value of it.

LORD MANSFIELD. That is decisive.

*Whereupon the rule was discharged.*²

SHADWELL v. HUTCHINSON.

NISI PRIUS. 1830.

[Reported 4 C. & P. 333.]

ACTION on the case, for obstructing an ancient light to the injury of the plaintiff's reversionary interest. This was a second action for the obstructing the same light, for which the plaintiff recovered in the case of Shadwell, Knt., v. Hutchinson (reported 3 C. & P. 615). The declaration was exactly in the same form, except that the time of the obstruction in this case was stated to be from the 28th day of November, 1828, to the time of the commencement of the present action. Plea — Judgment recovered for the "same identical grievances." Replication — That the recovery in the former action was not for the "same identical grievances."

An admission was put in, by which the parties admitted that the obstruction of the light was in just the same state as at the time of the former action ; and that it had not been increased, altered, or removed.

Campbell and Coleridge, for the plaintiff.

J. Williams and Curwood, for the defendant.

LORD TENTERDEN, C. J. The plaintiff, by his declaration, complains of an injury occasioned by the continuance of the obstruction of this light, from November, 1828, to the commencement of the present action. That is the grievance he complains of now, and, unless I could say that the grievance during that time is the same grievance as the obstructing the light between two other and earlier dates, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict.

Verdict for the plaintiff — Damages £100.

In the ensuing term, Curwood moved for a new trial ; and contended, that there was no real substantial damage to the reversion, but only an ideal damage, for which the reversioner had recovered ; and that the continuance of the obstruction caused no new damage to the reversion, although it did to the possession. But the court refused the rule.

KIDGILL v. MOOR.

COMMON PLEAS. 1850.

[Reported 9 C. B. 364.]

THIS was an action upon the case, by a reversioner, for an obstruction of an alleged right of way.

The declaration stated, that, before and at the time of the committing of the grievances by the defendant as thereafter mentioned, the plaintiff was, and continually from thence hitherto had been, and still remained, seised in his demesne as of fee of and in one undivided seventh part, the whole into seven equal parts to be divided, of a certain close and premises, with the appurtenances, situate in the parish of Bradfield, in the county of Berks, as tenant in common thereof with William Kidgill, &c., the said William Kidgill, &c., then being possessed of the other six undivided parts of the said close and premises, with the appurtenances; that the said undivided seventh part of the said close and premises, with the appurtenances, during all the time aforesaid, was, and still remained, in the possession and occupation of Joseph Kidgill, as tenant thereof to the plaintiff, the reversion thereof, expectant on the determination of the said tenancy, then and still belonging to the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff, during all the time aforesaid, of right ought to have had, and yet of right ought to have, for his tenants, occupiers of the said undivided seventh part of the said close, &c., a certain way from and out of the said close, unto, into, through, and over a certain other close of the defendant, in the parish aforesaid, from and out of the same, unto and into a certain common and public highway in the county aforesaid, and so back again from the same common and public highway, unto, into, through, and over the said close of the defendant, unto and into the said first-mentioned close and premises, to go, pass, and repass, on foot, with horses, wagons, and carriages, every year, and at all times of the year, at their free will and pleasure; yet that the defendant, well knowing the premises, but wrongfully and unjustly intending to injure, prejudice, and aggrieve the plaintiff in his said reversionary estate and interest of and in the said undivided seventh part of the said close and premises, with the appurtenances, whilst the said undivided seventh part of the said close was so in the possession and occupation of the said Joseph Kidgill as tenant thereof to the plaintiff, and whilst he, the plaintiff, was so interested in the said undivided seventh part of the same, as aforesaid, to wit, on the 1st of May, 1849, and on divers days and times between that day and the commencement of this suit, wrongfully and unjustly locked, chained, shut, and fastened a certain gate standing in and across the said way, and wrongfully and injuriously kept and continued the said gate so locked, chained, shut, and fastened, in and upon the said way, for a long space of time, to wit, from thence until the commencement of this suit, and thereby during all that time wrongfully and injuriously obstructed the said way,—by means of which said several premises the plaintiff had been and was greatly injured, prejudiced, and aggrieved in his said reversionary estate and interest of and in the said undivided seventh part of the said close and premises, with the appurtenances, so in the possession of the said Joseph Kidgill as tenant thereof to the plaintiff; and also by means of the committing of the said grievances by the defendant as aforesaid, one J. G. Lewis, who, before the committing of the said grievances by the defendant, had contracted and agreed with the plaintiff for the purchase by him from the plaintiff of the said reversionary estate and interest of the plaintiff, for a large sum of money, to wit, the sum of £300, and who would otherwise have completed the said purchase, and have paid to the plaintiff the said sum of money, was deterred and prevented from completing the said purchase, and from paying the said sum of money to the plaintiff, and from thence continually had wholly declined to complete the said purchase, or to pay the said sum of money, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff; and thereby the plaintiff had been, and still was, hindered and prevented from completing the sale of his said reversionary estate and interest to the said J. G. Lewis, and had thereby not only lost and been deprived of the advantage and emoluments which he would have derived and acquired from the completion of the sale of his said reversionary estate and interest to the said J. G. Lewis, but had been forced and obliged to pay, lay out, and expend divers large sums of money, to wit, the sum of £100, in and about the said contract for the sale of his said reversionary estate and interest, and expenses incidental thereto, — to the damage of the plaintiff of £200, &c.

The defendant pleaded, — first, Not guilty ; secondly, A plea, traversing the seisin of the plaintiff as alleged in the declaration ; thirdly, A traverse of the alleged right of way : whereupon issue was joined.

The cause was tried before Rolfe, B., at the Summer Assizes for the county of Berks, in 1849, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff upon all the issues, damages 40s.

Whateley, in Michaelmas Term last, obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment,¹ on the ground that the declaration disclosed no cause of action, the alleged obstruction of the right of way not being shown to be an injury of a permanent nature, so as to affect the reversion. He cited Jesser v. Gifford, 4 Burr. 2141 ; Jackson v. Pesked, 1 M. & Selw. 234 ; Baxter v. Taylor, 4 B. & Ad. 72, 1 N. & M. 11 ; Bright v. Walker, 1 C. M. & R. 211, 4 Tyrwh. 509 ; and Tucker v. Newman, 11 Ad. & E. 40.

Keating and Matthews, now showed cause.

Whateley and Piggott, in support of the rule.

MAULE, J. I think the declaration in this case — which is objected to after trial and a verdict for the plaintiff, and which alleges that the defendant wrongfully and unjustly locked, chained, and fastened a certain gate in and across a certain way, and wrongfully and injuriously kept and continued the same so locked, chained, and fastened, and so obstructed the way, whereby the plaintiff was injured in his reversionary right and interest — states a cause of action which entitles the plaintiff to damages ; and that we cannot arrest the judgment. It may have been that no evidence was given at the trial of any such obstruction as could be a permanent injury to the plaintiff's reversion. That might have been ground for a nonsuit, or a verdict for the defendant; but it was not so put at the trial. The only question, therefore, for our consideration, is, whether the plaintiff's reversionary interest might be injured by the acts alleged in this declaration to have been done by the defendant. It appears to me that it might. It is not denied that the erection of a wall across the way — assuming, of course, that there was no contract as between the tenant of the land and the defendant — would be an injury to the reversion, although such wall might be pulled down before the plaintiff became entitled to the actual possession of the land; and I cannot doubt that there might be such a locking and chaining of a gate as would amount to as permanent an injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest as the building of a wall. The meaning of the allegation, that, by means of the premises, the plaintiff was greatly injured in his reversionary estate and interest, is not that the injury follows as a consequence of law from what is previously stated, — like an allegation that J. S. was seised in fee, and that he died so seised, whereby J. T., his son and heir at law, became entitled, — but it is an allegation of a matter of fact, as was lately held in this court, in the case of Brown v. Mallett, 5 M. Gr. & S. 599, which is for the jury to find, or not, according to the evidence. I therefore think upon the whole, that the declaration is sufficient.

CRESSWELL, J. I have entertained a good deal of doubt during the progress of the argument; but I concur in the judgment which has been pronounced by my Brother Maule. Jackson v. Pesked decides that a declaration of this sort is insufficient unless it contain an averment that the acts charged injured the plaintiff's reversionary interest. That case, however, impliedly recognizes the validity of a declaration which contains such an averment, and states facts which may or may not amount to such injury of the reversion. Here, the declaration alleges certain things to have been done by the defendant, so as to occasion injury to the plaintiff's reversionary interest. I agree with my Brother Maule that that is an allegation of fact, and that we must take it to have been proved, if the facts stated could so operate. It is impossible to say that a gate may not be so fastened as to inure as an injury to the reversion.

WILLIAMS, J. I am of the same opinion. If in point of fact the obstruction complained of took place under such circumstances as not to occasion any permanent injury to the plaintiff's reversion, the judge ought to have directed the jury to find for the defendant. The learned judge, however, did not so direct the jury; and no complaint is made on that score. We must, therefore, assume such a state of facts to have been proved as might exist consistently with what is charged in this declaration as being an injury to the plaintiff's reversion. There is clearly no ground for arresting the judgment.

MOORE v. HALL.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION. 1878.

[Reported 3 Q. B. D. 178.]

THIS was an action for obstruction of ancient lights. The case was tried before Cockburn, C. J., when it appeared that the plaintiff, as the owner of certain premises, was entitled by prescription to the access of light to certain windows in his premises. The defendant, by erecting a large building on the opposite side of the street, had sensibly diminished the light which found its way to the plaintiff's windows; but there was evidence to show that, the plaintiff's premises being used for the purpose of a cook's shop and coffee-house, and the windows that were darkened being those of rooms only used as bedrooms, the access of light was still quite sufficient for the purposes of the business then carried on. The defendant's counsel contended (inter alia) that the plaintiff was, at any rate, only entitled to nominal damages, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any damages in respect of the diminution, by reason of the obstruction of light, of the value of the premises for any other purposes than that for which the plaintiff had actually been in the previous enjoyment of the light. The Lord Chief Justice, however, left it to the jury to say whether any sensible diminution of light to the plaintiff's premises had been occasioned by the erection of the defendant's premises, so as to make them less available either for the purposes of occupation or business to which they were then or might thereafter be made applicable. If so, he directed them that the plaintiff was entitled to the verdict; but if they should be of opinion that there was no probability that the premises would ever be applied to other than their present purpose, and that consequently there was not, practically, any diminution in their value, the damages should be nominal only. If the jury were of opinion that there had been any sensible diminution of light sufficient to lessen or interfere with the use of the premises, or any part of them, for the purpose of occupation or business, then the damages should be substantial, according to the estimate of the jury of the diminution in value of the premises.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £50.

An order nisi had been obtained for a new trial, on the ground that the above ruling amounted to a misdirection.

H. D. Greene and Lake, showed cause.

A. Staveley Hill, Q. C., supported the rule.

MANISTY, J. I am of opinion that this order should be discharged. The facts appear to be as follows. The plaintiff had a building with certain windows, through which the light passed, and this state of things had continued for such a period of time as to entitle the plaintiff to a servitude as against the defendant, the owner of the opposite premises, in respect of such passage of light. That servitude would appear to be the right to have the light flow in the same quantity as theretofore through such windows uninterfered with by the defendant. The defendant did interfere with the flow of such light injuriously, and it is admitted that thereupon a cause of action arose. The question is as to what may be the measure of damages in respect of such cause of action.

The Lord Chief Justice told the jury that they might take into consideration the character of the neighborhood, the use to which the plaintiff's buildings were then applied, and also the use to which they might in future be applied. He left it to them to say, considering all the elements of the case, whether the damages were substantial or merely nominal. The only doubt I have is, whether the direction was not too favorable to the defendant. It appears to me that the plaintiff was entitled to the same quantum of light as he had theretofore enjoyed, irrespective of the purpose for which he had enjoyed it. Take this case as an illustration. Suppose an upper room with a window through which the light had been accustomed to pass in a certain quantity and direction. It might be that for many years that room had been used as a bedroom, to which use the full amount of light which actually had passed through the window might not be essential. The owner afterwards lets the room to an artist, who makes a skylight. The light so admitted vertically, superadded to the light before admitted horizontally, makes the room an excellent one for the purposes of an artist's studio. Why should the owner of the servient tenement, who had for many years been allowing a certain amount of light to enter through the window, be entitled to object to the alteration of the purpose for which the light was used? It is really quite immaterial to him for what purpose the light is used. It cannot be, in my opinion, that the servitude is greater or less according to the use of the light which is made by the owner of the dominant tenement. It appears to me that the real question for the jury was what the diminution in value of the hereditament was by reason of the interference with the access of light, and to ascertain that, I think that they were entitled to take into consideration the matters indicated by my Lord's direction.

MELLOR, J. I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that the direction of my Lord to the jury was quite correct. With regard to the case of Martin v. Goble, 1 Camp. 320, I agree with the Master of the Rolls in Aynsley v. Glover, Law Rep. 18 Eq. 544; 10 Ch. 283, in thinking that the actual mode of occupation of the dominant tenement is not the test. I am, therefore, of opinion that the test applied by McDonald, C. B., in Martin v. Goble was not the correct test. It seems to me that the owner of the dominant tenement is entitled to all the light that has been accustomed to come through the particular aperture or window without challenge on the part of the owner of the servient tenement. How is the owner of the servient tenement concerned with, or how can he know anything about, the mode of occupation of the dominant tenement? In Lanfranchi v. Mackenzie, Law Rep. 4 Eq. 421, an injunction was claimed on the ground that the access of light had been so far diminished that the room could no longer be used as a sampling room. The injunction was refused on the ground that it was not shown that the room had been so used for twenty years; and it is said that the Vice-Chancellor in that case approved of the views expressed in Martin v. Goble. I cannot agree with the Vice-Chancellor that the use of the room as a sampling room for twenty years would, in any other sense, have been material than as a test of the amount of light that had been accustomed to find access to the room during those years. The question what quantity of light actually obtained access through the window in respect of which the prescription is claimed is comparatively simple; but to determine what the extent of the enjoyment had been, with reference to the purpose for which the dominant tenement had been used, would require very different evidence. The purpose might vary from time to time, and there would be great difficulty in ascertaining the quantum of enjoyment, tried by this test. The light in this case was in fact enjoyed for the purposes of a cook's shop and coffee-house; but the use of it for this purpose is not the measure of what the plaintiff is entitled to. It is found that there is an actual diminution of light, and so the defendant's counsel admits that there must be a verdict against him; but he complains of the damages. For the reasons I have given, I cannot think his complaint is well founded. I do not think the present actual condition of the premises is the measure of the amount of damage. In estimating the damages you ought not, in my opinion, to stereotype the existing condition of the premises, but to calculate the reasonable probabilities of a different application of them. The jury have estimated those probabilities, and have found a verdict for substantial damages. I have no doubt of the accuracy of that verdict.

COCKBURN, C. J. The real question appears to be what the servitude is to which the servient tenement is subjected. It is, in my opinion, the right to the admission of a certain quantity of light by reason of certain apertures through which the light has for a certain period been accustomed to obtain access. The question for what purpose the owner of the dominant tenement has thought fit to use that light, to my mind, has nothing to do with the matter. To look at the matter by the light of the actual experience of life: a man builds a house or other building and opens a window in it. Does the owner of the tenement which, if the use of the window continues, will become the servient tenement consider to what purpose the light will be applied? Assuredly not. I quite concur in thinking that Martin v. Goble was wrongly decided. The matter, in my opinion, to be considered is, whether there is any diminution of light for any purpose for which the dominant tenement may be reasonably considered available. The rooms may now be used as bedrooms, — a purpose which may not require so much light as they actually had received ; but at any moment they may be put to some other purpose requiring the full amount of such light. With regard to the question of the measure of damages, I apprehend that it must be the diminution in the value of the premises by reason of the diminution of the light. The later authorities appear fully to bear out the view we now take. Lord Cranworth, in Yates v. Jack, Law Rep. 1 Ch. 295, at p. 298, says : "The right conferred or recognized by the Statute 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 71, is an absolute indefeasible right to the enjoyment of the light, without reference to the purpose for which it has been used." Vice-Chancellor Wood, in the subsequent case of Dent v. Auction Mart Co., Law Rep. 2 Eq. 238, took the same view ; and the Master of the Rolls, in the case of Aynsley v. Glover, Law Rep. 18 Eq. 544, at p. 551, after reviewing all the authorities, says : "Therefore I think it must be settled, or considered settled, at all events in a case where a reversioner is a party, that the mere change of use of a room will not deprive the party complaining of his right to the access of light ; and conversely, that in considering the injury to the light the court is bound to consider that the room may be used for some other purpose than that for which it is used at the moment when the injunction is applied for." Apply the principle so laid down to the case when the jury have to estimate the damages. It is clear they may consider future probabilities as to the use of the rooms. They may consider not only the actual present use of them, but any purpose to which it may reasonably be expected that in the future they may be applicable. It would be a great injustice to the owner of the dominant tenement if it were otherwise. For these reasons I think this order must be discharged.

NOTE that FINEUX [C. J.] and BRUDENELL [J.], in the King's Bench, were of opinion that where I have a lower house and another has an upper house above my house, as they are here in London, in this case I can compel him who has the upper house to cover his upper house so as to save the timbers of my house ; and in the same manner he can compel me to maintain my lower house by repairing the principal timbers so as to save his upper house. Nota et stude. For some at the bar were of opinion that I could allow my lower house to go to ruin, but all were agreed that I could not demolish my house so as to destroy his upper house. POMFRET v. RICROFT.

KING'S BENCH AND EXCHEQUER CHAMBER. 1669, 1671.

[Reported 1 Savard. 321.]

COVENANT: the plaintiff declares that, by indenture made between them, the defendant had demised and granted to the plaintiff a mes-susage and piece of land containing so many feet, save and except a small piece of land lying on the southwest corner thereof, upon which a pump was standing, in the parish of St. Leonard Shoreditch in Middlesex, and all ways, passages, &c., together with the use and occupation of the pump in common with the other tenants of the defendant there; to have for 31 years. And the plaintiff assigns the breach, that the defendant during the said term did not repair the pump; but the defendant afterwards, and before the end of the term, to wit, on the 29th day of September in the 16th year of the now king, did permit the pump to be in decay, broken, ruinous, prostrate, and totally spoiled, and did also permit the fountain and water of the pump to be filled, choked, and spoiled with earth, mud, and rubbish, for want of repairing thereof by the defendant, and did suffer the pump to remain so in decay, broken, ruinous, prostrate, and spoiled, and the fountain and water of the pump so filled, choked, and spoiled, from the said 29th day of September in the said 16th year of the now king hitherto, and the same are not repaired, maintained, or amended, whereby the plaintiff, could not, nor yet can, have the use and occupation of the pump, according to the form and effect of the said indenture; but the plaintiff by reason thereof hath, during the whole time aforesaid, totally lost and been deprived of the whole use, benefit, and advantage of the pump; and so the plaintiff said that the defendant had broken his covenant, to the damage, &c.; on which declaration the defendant demurred in law.

And after argument by Simpson for the defendant, and Jones for the plaintiff, KELYNGE Chief Justice, RAINSFORD and MORTON Justices, gave ¹ "I do not approve of the case in Keilway, 98 b, pl. 4, and the law seems to be doubtful in that point. In Fitz. N. B. 127 L., there is a writ to that purpose; but the writ is grounded upon the custom of the place, and not upon the common law. And there is such a custom in many places, and there is no other authority for it." Per Holt, C. J., in Tenant v. Goldwin, 2 Ld. Raym. 1089, 1093 (1704).

judgment for the plaintiff, that the action well lay on this ground, namely, that when the use of a thing is demised, and the thing falls to decay, so that the lessee cannot have the use and benefit of it, he shall have his action of covenant therefore on the word demisit, which raises a covenant in law. And their reasons were, because the lessee himself cannot repair it, not having any interest either in the pump, or in the land upon which it stands; for it appears that the land where the pump stands was specially excepted out of the lease, so that no interest therein passed to the lessee who is the plaintiff. If then the lessor will not repair it, he not only avoids his own grant, but the lessee will also be deprived of the benefit which he ought to have, and which perhaps induced him to give a greater fine or rent for a lease of his house; and yet he cannot help himself, but will be wholly without remedy unless this action of covenant lies. And they put the case, that if a man grants by deed a watercourse, now if the grantor stops it, the grantee shall have an action of covenant against him. So if a lease be made of a house and estovers, and the lessor destroy all the wood out of which the estovers were to be taken, the lessee shall have an action of covenant against the lessor. So, by Rainsford, if a man demise by deed a middle room in a house, and afterwards will not repair the roof, whereby the lessee cannot enjoy the middle room, an action of covenant lies for him against his lessor. Wherefore they held that the plaintiff should have judgment.

Twysden, Justice, contra, totis viribus, and that the action here does not lie. But he agreed to the cases above put, that where a man grants a watercourse and afterwards stops it, or demises a house and estovers and afterwards destroys the wood, in such cases the party grieved shall have his remedy by action of covenant; for these are wilful acts of the lessor or grantor, and it is a misfeasance in him to annul or avoid his own grant. But in this case there is no misfeasance, but only a nonfeasance, for which no action lies. As in the case where I grant a way over my land, I shall not be bound to repair it, but if I voluntarily stop it, an action lies against me for the misfeasance; but for the bare nonfeasance, viz., in not repairing it when it is out of repair, no action at all lies. But if any action had been maintainable, he said, that it would be rather an action upon the case than action of covenant. As if the lessor enter upon the lands leased, and cut down the timber trees and carry them away, whereby the lessee will lose the loppings and shade of them, he cannot have covenant, though he may have an action of trespass, or upon the case, for his special damage. And he further said, that covenant does not lie but for an actual ouster of the land demised, and in such action the possession shall be recovered as in an ejectment. Fitz. Covenant, 23; Judgment, 177. And he further held that in this case the plaintiff himself being the lessee might have repaired the pump; for although neither the soil itself nor the pump be granted to him, yet by the grant of the use of the pump the law has given to him this liberty; for when the use of a thing is granted, every thing is granted by which the grantee may have and enjoy such use. As if a man gives me a license to lay pipes of lead in his land to convey water to my cistern, I may afterwards enter and dig the land to mend the pipes, though the soil belongs to another and not to me.

But notwithstanding his opinion, which was much the better one, as I thought, judgment was given for the plaintiff as above, &c. And afterwards, namely, Hil. 22 & 23 Car. 2, the judgment was reversed in the Exchequer Chamber by VAUGHAN, Chief Justice of the Bench, HALE, Chief Baron, TURNER, ARCHER, WYLD, and LITTLETON, una voce, for the matter in law only, for the reasons of TWYSDEN above mentioned. And HALE said, that if I lend a piece of plate, and covenant by deed that the party to whom it is lent shall have the use of it, yet if the plate be worn out by ordinary use and wearing without my fault, no action of covenant lies against me.

[Reported 11 Mod. 7.]

FIRST, if a lessee for years build a house on the premises leased, it is waste ; and if he let it fall, it is a new waste.

Secondly, if a man has an upper room, an action lies against him by one who has an under room, to compel him to repair his roof. And so where a man has a ground room, they over him may have an action to compel him to keep up and maintain his foundation.

Sed quære: For if a man build a new house under the roof of an old house which is ready to tumble, Whether he shall have a writ de reparacione facienda? because debit et solet or consuevit are necessary words in the declaration. 1 Vent. 274. And Dent v. Oliver, Cro. Jac. 43, 122, where a man may have an action to charge a terre-tenant, he must lay a debit et solet, and show a title.

HOLT, Chief Justice, said, that every man of common right ought so to support his own house, as that it may not be an annoyance to another man's.

But POWELL, Justice, put this case : Suppose a man make a vault, and build a wall thereto, and then his neighbor makes a cellar adjoining to the vault, which is damaged by a default in the wall of the vault, he thought that the owner of the cellar might well have an action :

Which HOLT, Chief Justice, denied ; for by him, before the party could entitle himself to an action in that case, he ought first to build a wall to his cellar, as well as the other to his vault ; otherwise he ought not to have any benefit from the first wall ; unless it be indeed agreed, that he shall contribute to the repair of it, &c. Suppose a man has a vacant piece of ground, and builds a house upon part of it, and then sells the rest, the vendee cannot build so as to stop up any lights in the first house, but must take the ground subject to the encumbrance of the former lights.¹

LORING v. BACON.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1808.

[Reported 4 Mass. 575.]

ASSUMPSIT for labor and materials employed in repairing the defendant's house, and for money laid out and expended. The cause was submitted to the opinion of the court, without argument, upon an agreed statement of facts, the material parts of which are recited in the following opinion of the court as delivered by PARSONS, C. J. The plaintiff declares in case upon several promises. The first count is indebitatus assumpsit in the sum of eighty dollars, according to the account annexed to the writ, the items of which are for timber, boards, shingles, nails, and labor, and victualling the workmen. The second count is a quantum meruit for the same items, technically supposed to be different, but similar. The third count is a general indebitatus assumpsit for eighty dollars laid out and expended.

The facts being agreed by the parties, the question of law comes before the court on a case stated. From this case, it appears that the defendant is seised in fee simple of a room on the lower floor of a dwelling-house, and of the cellar under it; and that the plaintiff is seised in fee of a chamber over it, and of the remainder of the house; that the roof of the house was so out of repair, that, unless repaired, no part of the house could be comfortably occupied; that the defendant, though seasonably requested by the plaintiff, refused to join with him in repairing it; and the plaintiff then made the necessary repairs, and has brought this action to recover damages for her refusal to join in the repairs. It is also agreed that the parties had from time to time repaired their respective parts of the house at their several expense. And the question submitted to the court is, whether the plaintiff can recover in this action.

This is an action of the first impression. No express promise is admitted; but if there is a legal obligation on the defendant to contribute to these repairs, the law will imply a promise.

We have no Statute, nor any usage upon this subject, and must apply to the common law to guide us.

Although, in the case, the parties consider themselves as severally seised of different parts of one dwelling-house, yet, in legal contemplation, each of the parties has a distinct dwelling-house adjoining together, the one being situated over the other. The lower room and the cellar are the dwelling-house of the defendant; the chamber, roof, and other parts of the edifice, are the plaintiff's dwelling-house. And, in this action, it appears that, having repaired his own house, he calls upon her to contribute to the expense, because his house is so situated that she derives a benefit from his repairs, and would have suffered a damage, if he had not repaired.

¹ See Cubitt v. Porter, 8 B. & C. 257, ante, p. 208; Standard Bank v. Stokes, 9 Ch. D. 68; Leigh v. Dickeson, 12 Q. B. D. 194.

Upon a very full research into the principles and maxims of the common law, we cannot find that any remedy is provided for the plaintiff.

Houses for the habitation, and mills for the support, of man, are of high consideration at common law; and when holden in common or joint-tenancy, remedies are provided against those tenants, who refuse to join in necessary reparation, by the writ de reparacione facienda, Co. Lit. 200 b; Fitz. 295. In Co. Lit. 56 b, it is said that, if a man has a house so near to the house of his neighbor, and he suffers it to be so ruinous that it is like to fall on his neighbor's house, he may have a writ de domo reparanda, and compel him to repair his house. In Keilway, 98 b, pl. 4, there is a case reported, in the time of Henry the Eighth, in which Fineux and Brudenell, justices of the King's Bench, were of opinion that if a man have a house underneath, and another have a house over it, as is the case in London, the owner of the first house may compel the other to cover his house, to preserve the timbers of the house underneath; and so may the owner of the house above compel the other to repair the timbers of his house below; and this by action of the case. But some of the bar were of opinion that the owner of the house underneath might suffer it to fall; yet all agreed that he could not pull it down to destroy the house above. And in Fitz. N. B. 296, there is a writ of this kind. But in the case of Tenant v. Goldwin, 6 Mod. 314, Lord Holt was of opinion that this writ was by virtue of a particular custom, and not of the common law; and he doubted the case in Keilway.

But there is unquestionably a writ at common law de domo reparanda, the form of which we have in Fitz. N. B. 295, in which A. is commanded to repair a certain house of his in N., which is in danger of falling, to the nuisance of the freehold of B. in the same town, and which A. ought, and hath been used, to repair, &c. This writ, Fitzherbert says, lies, when a man, who has a house adjoining to the house of his neighbor, suffers his house to lie in decay, to the annoyance of his neighbor's house. And if the plaintiff recover, he shall have his damages; and it shall be awarded that the defendant repair, and that he be restrained until he do it. But it is otherwise in an action of the case; for there the plaintiff can recover damages only. And there appears no reasonable cause of distinction in the cases, whether a house adjoin to another on one side, or above, or underneath it.

But if the case in Keilway is law, the plaintiff cannot recover; for by that case the defendant could have compelled the plaintiff to repair his house, or compensate her in damages for the injury she had sustained from his neglect to repair it. And he has the like remedy against her.

If the case in Keilway is not law, then, upon analogy to the writ at common law, the plaintiff cannot compel the defendant to contribute to his expenses in repairing his own house. But if his house be considered as adjoining to hers, she might have sued an action of the case against him, if he had suffered his house to remain in decay to the annoyance of her house.

In every view of this case, there is no legal ground on which the plaintiff's action can be supported. We do not now decide on the authority due to the case in Keilway; but if an action on the case should come before us, founded on that report, it will deserve a further and full consideration. The plaintiff must be called.¹

CAMPBELL v. MESIER.

COURT OF CHANCERY OF NEW YORK. 1820.

[Reported 4 John. Ch. 334.]

THE CHANCELLOR.² From the proof in this case, it is manifest, that the wall in question was a party wall, in which the owners of the two houses and lots had an equal interest. All the witnesses who examined the lots and houses, and have expressed any opinion on the subject, unite in establishing that fact. Three of the witnesses were master builders or masons, and skilled in questions and observations of that kind. It is, also, a fact, equally well ascertained, that this party wall, in 1803, when it was taken down by the plaintiff, was in a state of ruin and decay, and dangerous, and utterly incapable of being partially cut down. It was impossible for the plaintiff to rebuild on his lot without taking down that whole party wall to the foundation. The plaintiff had the wall examined in April, 1803, by the city surveyor, and a master carpenter and mason, and they united in a certificate, that the wall was unfit to stand, and incapable of being repaired, and that the plaintiff could not build on his lot with safety, without taking it down. This certificate was served upon the defendant Mesier, as agent for his father, the then owner, with a proposition from the plaintiff, that the owners should unite in the expense of rebuilding the wall. The answer to this proposition contained a refusal to have the wall taken down, or to unite in the expense of rebuilding it, and forbidding the plaintiff to pull down or injure the wall, under the pain of being responsible as a trespasser. The wall was taken down, and a new wall rebuilt by the plaintiff, on the site of the old one, with all reasonable care and diligence; and the question now is, whether the defendant Mesier, as heir and devisee of the original owner, who sold the lot to the other defendant, after the new wall was erected, ought not to be held to contribution for a moiety of the expense.

I have not found any adjudged case in point, but it appears to me, that this case falls within the reason and equity of the doctrine of contribution, which exists in the common law, and is bottomed and fixed on general principles of justice. In Sir William Harbert's Case, 3 Co. 11, and in Bro. Abr. tit. Suite and Contribution, many cases of contribution are put, and the doctrine rests on the principle, that where the parties stand in equali jure, the law requires equality, which is equity, and one of them shall not be obliged to bear the burden in ease of the rest. It is stated in F. N. B. 162 b, that the writ of contribution lies where there are tenants in common, or who jointly hold a mill, pro indiviso, and take the profits equally, and the mill falls into decay, and one of them will not repair the mill. The form of a writ is given, to compel the other to be contributory to the reparations. In Sir William Harbert's Case, it was resolved, that "when land was charged by any tie, the charge ought to be equal, and one should not bear all the burden, and the law, on this point, was grounded in great equity." Lord Coke illustrates the rule of law requiring equity, and, consequently, contribution, by a case from 11 Hen. VII., and in reference to this most just and reasonable doctrine of contribution, he breaks out into an animated eulogy on the common law, as being "the perfection of reason, and not according to any private or sudden concit or opinion." The doctrine of contribution is founded, not on contract, but on the principle, that equality of burden, as to a common right, is equity; and the solidity and necessity of this doctrine were forcibly and learnedly illustrated by Lord Chief Baron Eyre, in the case of Dering v. Earl of Winchelsea, 1 Cox's Cases, 318; 2 Bos. & Pull. 270, s. c.

In the case before me, the parties had equality of right and interest in the party wall, and it became absolutely necessary to have it rebuilt. It was for the equal benefit of the owners of both houses, and the plaintiff ought not to be left to bear the whole burden. The inconvenience of the repair was inevitable, and as small and as temporary as the nature of the case admitted. This is the amount of the proof. The case of the mill, stated in Fitzherbert, is analogous, and no reason applies to the one case, but what will equally apply to the other. In England, the Statute of 14 Geo. III. c. 78, has made special and very ample provision on this subject in respect to houses and partition walls in the city of London; but in the absence of Statute regulation, we are obliged to call up and apply the principles of the common law. As was observed by Ch. B. Eyre, the doctrine of equality operates more effectually in this court than in a court of law. There is more difficulty in enforcing contribution at law, and this was felt in the case in Coke. There the parties were put to their audita querela, or scire facias. Contribution depends rather upon a principle of equity, than upon contract. The obligation arises not from agreement, but from the nature of the relation, or quasi ex contractu; and as far as courts of law have, in modern times, assumed jurisdiction upon this subject, it is, as Lord Eldon said, 14 Ves. 164, upon the ground of an implied assumpsit. The decision at law, stated in the pleadings, may, therefore, have arisen from the difficulty of deducing a valid contract from the case; that difficulty does not exist in this court, because we do not look to a contract, but to the equity of the case, as felt and recognized, according to Lord Coke, in every age, by the judges and sages of the law.

Papinian, Dig. 17, 2, 52, 10, states it as a rule of the civil law, that if one part owner of a house in decay, repairs it at his own expense, upon the refusal of the others to unite in the expense, he can compel them to contribute their proportion, with interest, or upon their default, at the end of four months, the house, at his election, becomes his sole property. This unreasonable penalty, or forfeiture, has, in modern times, gone into disuse, but the claim to contribution remains. Voet ad Pand. h. t. sec. 13.

The rules and doctrines of the French law, may be referred to by way of illustration, and to show the prevailing equity and justice of the rule of contribution, in respect to party walls.

A common, or party wall, by that law, is, when it has been built at common expense, or if built by one party, when the other has acquired a common right to it. Every wall of separation between two buildings, is presumed to be a common or party wall, if the contrary be not shown; and this is not only a rule of positive ordinance, but is a principle of ancient law. Code Civil, No. 653; Fournel, Traité de Voisinage, édit. 1812, tom. 2, 217; Pothier's Contrat de Société, Première Appendice, No. 199, 203. If the common wall be in a state of rūln, and requires to be rebuilt, one party can compel the other, by action, to contribute to the expense of rebuilding it; but the necessity of the reparation must be established by the judgment of men skilled in the business, and made on due previous notice; and if the new wall is made wider or higher, &c., the party building it must bear the extra expense. Pothier, ubi sup., No. 214-222; Fournel, ubi sup., pp. 236, 237, 239, 242; Code Civil, No. 655.

The customs of Paris and of Orleans, have special and minute regulations on this subject; and the previous view and judgment of skilful men, and the judicial process in these cases, to ascertain the state of the wall, and to compel contribution, resemble the provisions of the Statute of 13 Geo. III. in respect to the city of London. Either neighbor may, in certain cases, discharge himself from the duty of contribution, by abandoning entirely his right in the middle wall (Fournel, tom. 1, p. 2; Code Civil, No. 656); and there is another principle in the French law, which applies directly against the claim set up on the part of the defendant Mesier to damages for the annoyance of the repairs. "If I, necessarily," says Pothier, "deprive my neighbor of the profits of his business arising from the use of his side of the wall, during the time of the repair of the party-wall, I am not bound to indemnify him for his loss, because I am only in the exercise of a lawful right, unless I consume unnecessary time in the reconstruction of the wall."

In the present case, the defendant M. had not previous notice of the examination of the wall, in April, 1803. It was altogether ex parte. But the defendant, in his answer, put himself upon the denial of the right of the plaintiff, and refused absolutely to unite in a friendly arrangement. The ruinous state of the wall, and the necessity of taking it down, and the character of the wall as a common or party wall, depended then upon the proof to be exhibited in the cause; and, in all these respects, the plaintiff has supported the charges in his bill, and the defendants have failed in proof to the contrary. But the estimate of the expense furnished by the plaintiff, does not discriminate between the expense of the wall up to the former height, and up to the height to which the new wall was carried by the plaintiff; and on this point a reference may be necessary.

The materials of the new wall were better than those of the former wall, but they were such as are usual, and proper, and beneficial, and they were of the same nature. If the new materials had been of a different and unusual kind, such as marble, for instance, then, undoubtedly, the plaintiff ought to have borne the extra expense of the new and rare materials, and this, according to Pothier, is the rule in the French law.

I am very forcibly struck with the equity of the demand. The houses on each side of the lot were old and almost untenable; and it would be the height of injustice to deny to the plaintiff the right of pulling down such a common wall, and of erecting a new one suitable to the value of the lot, in the most crowded part of a commercial city. It would be equally unjust to oblige him to do it at his exclusive expense, when the lot of the defendant was equally benefited by the erection, and much enhanced in value. Persons who own lots in the midst of a populous city, must, and ought to submit to the law of vicinage, which applies to such cases, and flows from such relations.

I shall, accordingly, declare, that the wall in question was a party wall; that it was ruinous; and that the plaintiff was in the exercise of a lawful right when he took it down and erected a new one; and that the defendant M., as heir and devisee of his father, P. M. (and it is admitted in the answer that for the purpose of this case, he represents his father), ought to contribute ratably to the expense of the new wall, and that a reference be had to ascertain the amount.

PRESCOTT v. WHITE.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1838.

[Reported 21 Pick. 341.]

TRESPASS quare clausum for entering and digging out the raceway from the defendant's mill, where it runs through the plaintiff's land. Trial before Morton, J.

The judge instructed the jury, that the defendant, as owner of an ancient mill above, and an artificial raceway as appurtenant to or connected with it, had the incidental right to enter upon the plaintiff's land and clear out the raceway in the ordinary and usual method, and to throw the materials so cleared out, upon the banks of the same, doing no unnecessary damage.

No evidence was introduced of the defendant or the former proprietor of the mill ever having cleared out the raceway or ever having entered for that purpose.

The plaintiff objected to the ruling of the judge; and if it was erroneous, the verdict, which was for the defendant, was to be set aside and a new trial granted.

Mann and Clarke, for the plaintiff.

Simmons and Cushing, for the defendant.

SHAW, C. J., afterwards drew up the opinion of the court.

As we understand the direction of the judge, we are of opinion that it was correct. There is a slight ambiguity in the report of the instruction to the jury. It was taken for granted, and it seems to have been so understood at the argument, that the usual and ordinary method of clearing out similar raceways in the country, is to pass over the grounds through which such raceways are conducted, and remove that portion of material which has fallen into it and place it upon the adjoining bank. The effect therefore of the rule adopted by the judge and applied to the actual circumstances of this case was, that where one is the owner of an ancient mill, to which there has been attached a raceway, being an artificial canal for conducting off the water from the mill, and without the free and unobstructed current of which the mill could not be worked, and such canal has from time immemorial passed through the land of another, and there is no grant or contract regulating the rights of the parties, the owner of the mill has a right to enter upon the land through which the raceway passes, and to clear out the obstructions therefrom, in the usual and ordinary mode in which such canals are cleansed, doing no unnecessary damage, and that if the defendant had so done, it would have been a good justification for entering the plaintiff's land and clearing out the raceway.

In the first place it must be taken, according to established rules of the law, that the run of such a canal through the land of another, for the time stated, is evidence of an antecedent grant from the owner of the land to the owner of the mill, to construct and keep such a canal, and to make the beneficial use of it for which it was obviously intended.

It must be also taken as an inference of law, in the absence of a grant or contract, that the party who enjoys the benefit of the easement is to keep it in repair. Taylor v. Whitehead, 2 Doug. 744. When the use of a thing is granted, everything is granted by which it may be enjoyed. Pomfret v. Ricroft, 1 Wms. Saund. 323, and note 6. It follows as a necessary consequence, that the non-appearing grant carried with it to the grantees the right to do all necessary and proper acts to keep the raceway in a condition fit for the purposes for which it was intended. If it passes through the grantor's land, it carries an implied authority and license to enter upon the land to examine and clear the canal in a reasonable and proper manner, and of what is reasonable, the usual and customary mode is good evidence.

As to placing the materials taken from the bed of the stream, on the adjoining bank, the right and the duty to do so may depend upon circumstances. If the canal is walled up, and the stones have fallen in, it would seem to be the right and the duty of the mill-owner, in removing the stones from the bed of the raceway, to replace them on the wall of the ditch. If the material be soil, which has fallen from the adjoining bank, and which may be useful or beneficial to the owner of the land, for the purpose of enriching the soil or otherwise, it would be the duty of the mill-owner to place it on the bank for his use. But if it be material not useful or beneficial, it would be the duty of the mill-owner to remove it off the land in a reasonable time, and in a manner least prejudicial to the owner of the land.

We consider that this rule would not apply to a case, where the mill-owner owns the land upon either side of the mill-race; there he may make use of his own land, and no grant from the owner will be presumed, being not necessary to the use of his mill.

Nor will it apply to a case, where the rights of the parties in this regard, are regulated by any express grant or contract.

Nor will it apply to cases, where another and different mode of keeping such raceway clear of obstruction, has for a long time been used and practised.

We consider the incidental right of entering to keep the race clear of obstructions where it passes another's land, to arise from the principle of presumed grant, and the terms, limitations and extent of such grant, must be determined from the obvious purposes for which the easement is designed, and to which it is adapted, and upon the manner in which it has been in fact used in past time, if any such use has been shown.

But we do not consider it necessary for the defendant to show actual previous entries and clearings, to establish the right, because no such clearing may have been necessary, within time of memory. But in the absence of such instances of actual entry and clearing, the obvious necessity and fitness of doing so, in order to enjoy the principal right granted, must be proved, from which a grant of the incidental privilege may be inferred.

Motion for a new trial overruled.¹

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1872.

[Reported 109 Mass. 374.]

TORT. Writ dated September 18, 1871. The first count of the declaration alleged "that the plaintiffs are, and were prior to the year 1870 and the defendant's tenure herein referred to, owners of a dwelling-house situated in Truro in this Commonwealth, and the defendant has been, to wit, since the year 1862, owner and possessor of a house adjoining the house of the plaintiffs; that the two tenements were built as and designed for one dwelling-house by the owner thereof; that there is no partition wall between the said two tenements or parts of said dwelling-house, but they are separated only by an imaginary line passing through the rooms thereof; and that, since the defendant's ownership, the defendant, designing to harm the plaintiffs and their property, has injured and permitted to be injured and to decay his tenement, till it became ruinous, the roof, sides and interior thereof, whereby the plaintiffs' said house has been greatly damaged, and the plaintiffs have been unable to keep the same in any repair, through the wrongful acts of this defendant." The second count was as follows: "And the plaintiffs further say, that they and the defendant are and were owners as aforesaid of two several tenements in the town of Truro aforesaid; that said tenements adjoin each other as aforesaid, and originally formed one dwelling-house, held by one and the same owner; and that the defendant has wrongfully suffered his house to remain out of repair and to decay, and has neglected and refused to repair the same, whereby the interior of the plaintiffs' house became exposed to storms of rain and wind, and said house suffered great damage and injury, the plaintiffs' windows and doors were shattered, the walls and ceilings damaged, the timbers of said house and flooring decayed, and said house has been otherwise greatly damaged." The defendant demurred on the ground "that none of the acts or omissions charged upon him in said declaration can be the basis of an action by the plaintiffs against him." The Superior Court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiffs appealed.

G. A. King, for the defendant.

I. Knowles, Jr., for the plaintiffs.

COLT, J. The plaintiffs' action, in both counts, is founded on the alleged right of the owner of one part of a dwelling-house to recover damages at law for the wilful neglect of the other owner in permitting his part to become ruinous and fall into decay, whereby the plaintiffs' house was damaged. The allegation of the first count, that the defendant "injured and permitted to be injured and to decay his tenement, till it became ruinous," must be construed to charge wilful neglect to repair, and does not allege with sufficient distinctness any positive act of destruction or injury by the defendant. There is a wide difference between injuries which arise from negligence, and those which result from positive misfeasance; and if the latter were relied on as a ground of action, they should have been distinctly alleged. The second count plainly charges only wrongful neglect and refusal to repair.

It is to be assumed as settled, that, where two or more houses, so constructed as to require mutual support, are conveyed to different owners, or where separate portions of one dwelling become vested in different owners, a right of support, as incident to the property, passes by the conveyance to each grantee, unless excluded by the terms of the grant. Richards v. Rose, 9 Exch. 218. Easements of this description are acquired by grant; but, in construing the conveyance, it is to be presumed that the parties intended to preserve the obviously existing relations and dependencies of the estate, and all those incidents necessary to the present enjoyment of the thing granted are held to pass. There is an obligation upon each adjacent proprietor in favor of the other, beyond what is implied in the maxim which requires every one to use his own so as not to injure his neighbor. The exclusive dominion of each is so far qualified, that neither can take away the support of the other, however prudent and careful on his part the act may be.

It is argued that the right of support and shelter, to which the purchaser of one part of a dwelling thus becomes entitled, and which may not be taken away by any wrongful act of the other owner, imposes also the active duty to repair the premises and maintain the existing condition of things.

The nature, extent, and duration of the servitudes thus imposed by implication upon each adjoining estate, are not well defined in the reported cases. As a restriction upon the free use of property conveyed in fee, the right is not to be extended beyond apparent necessity. Upon principle, the extent of the burden imposed must be limited by the presumed intention of the parties, having regard to the relations and dependencies of the two estates, and the changes which may reasonably be expected to take place. It is to be considered that the necessity which lies at the foundation of the right arises from the existing relations of artificial structures, for the time being constituting part of the freehold, but liable to be destroyed by the action of the elements, or by mere lapse of time. When thus destroyed, it is fair to presume that the parties intend, in the absence of any agreement, that the easement shall end with the necessity which created it. There can be by implication no mutual easement of perpetual support, applicable to future structures.

In Sherred v. Cisco, 4 Sandf. 480, it was held that, where a party wall was destroyed by fire, the law would imply no obligation on the adjoining owners to join in rebuilding a new wall, where there was no agreement so to do, the parties being remitted to their original unqualified title up to the division line. And Denio, C. J., in speaking of that case, declares that he sees no solid distinction between a total destruction of the wall and buildings, and a state of things which would require the whole to be rebuilt from the foundation; that in either case there is great force in saying that the mutual easements have become inapplicable. Partridge v. Gilbert, 15 N. Y. 601; Kerr on Injunctions, 376.

In Cheeseborough v. Green, 10 Conn. 318, which was an action on the case, brought by the owner of the lower part of a store against the owner of the upper part and roof, to recover damages for suffering the roof to be out of repair, the court held that the action could not be sustained, suggesting that the plaintiff could have relief only in a court of chancery.

The civil law recognizes the existence of an easement to compel the owner of the servient tenement to repair, as distinguished from the ordinary easement of support; but the additional obligation to repair can only arise from express stipulation, or by proof of a prescriptive right to the easement of repair as well as support. Gale on Easements (4th ed.), 312.

The plaintiffs' declaration in this case does not allege as a fact, in direct terms, that they were entitled to have their part of the house supported or protected by the defendant's part, or that any easement of that description existed in their favor. But, giving it the most favorable construction, and assuming that title to such support can be inferred, as matter of law, from the allegations contained in it, yet, as we have seen, the obligation to repair cannot be so inferred, and without such obligation an action cannot be maintained for mere refusal and neglect. Peyton v. London, 9 B. & C. 725.

A WRIT of trespass was brought. And the plaintiff declared that the defendant, with force and arms, entered into his close at F., and with his cattle broke down his hedges to his damage of ten pounds. Yelverton. You ought not to have an action, for we say, as to the coming with force and arms and the entry into the close, Not guilty. And as to the remainder of the trespass, we say that we were seised of an acre of land in the vill of B., which adjoins your close in F., and we say that we put our beasts into our lands to pasture them, and we say further that there is a hedge which is between the land of the plaintiff in which, &c., and our land aforesaid, which the plaintiff and all those whose estate he has in the same close, have been used, from time immemorial, to make and repair, and because the hedge was open and broken, and waste, our beasts entered into his close, and did the trespass, which is the same trespass for which he has brought this action. And it was held for a good plea by the whole court. *Quod nota.*¹

KING'S BENCH. 1710.

[Reported 1 Salk. 335.]

ERROR was brought on a judgment by default in C. B. in an action on the case, wherein the plaintiff declared, that he was possessed of a close adjoining to the defendant's, and that the tenants and occupiers of that close had time out of mind made and repaired the fence between the plaintiff's and defendant's close, and that for want of repair the defendant's cattle came into the plaintiff's close, &c. Et per Cur.:

1st, Either trespass or case lies: trespass, because it was the plaintiff's ground and not the defendant's; and case, because the first wrong was a nonfeasance and neglect to repair, and that omission is the gist of the action; and the trespass is only consequential damage.

¹ One who is bound to fence is under no duty or liability to one whose cattle are not lawfully on the adjoining land. See Dovaston v. Payne, 2 H. Bl. 527, post p. 580.

2dly, This is a charge upon the defendant against common right; for the law bounds every man's property, and is his fence, and this is obliging another to make a fence for him.

3dly, That where a charge is imposed on another, and that against common right, and the charge is laid on him as owner of the soil, or tertenant, the plaintiff in his declaration must make himself a good title; but where he declares against the defendant as a wrong-doer only, and not as tertenant, it is sufficient that the plaintiff declares on his possession.

4thly, That the plaintiff has made himself a sufficient title in this declaration, by showing the defendant bound to this charge by prescription; which prescription is sufficiently alleged; for by tenentes is meant the owners of the fee-simple, and by occupatores, those that come in under them. That tenentes is so taken, appears by the writ de curia claudenda; which is a writ of right, and lies only for a tenant in fee; and as this is a charge upon the land, which runs with it, there is good reason why every occupier should be bound. And it is sufficient for the plaintiff to charge the tenentes and occupatores, because it is impossible that he who is a stranger should be able to know and set forth their particular estates, titles, and interests; but the prescription is annexed to the tenentes, i. e., tenants of the fee. Yet on a traverse of the prescription it would be good evidence, that the tenants for years have from time to time fenced and repaired, for perhaps the estate has not since time of memory been in the actual occupation of the very owner of the fee. The judgment was affirmed.¹

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1873.

[Reported L. R. 8 Q. B. 274.]

CASE on appeal from the County Court of Monmouthshire holden at Newport.

The plaintiff's cause of action was thus laid in the plaint. The plaintiff claims £40, the damages sustained by reason of two of his cows, on or about the 27th of December, 1871, being killed from eating the foliage of a yew tree, which had been then recently felled in a wood of the defendant, which adjoins the plaintiff's land, and into which wood the cows escaped from the plaintiff's land in consequence of the neglect of the defendant to repair a fence belonging to him dividing the wood and land, and which fence the defendant of right ought to maintain in repair.

The plaintiff was possessed of and occupied a close of land, and the defendant was possessed of and occupied another close of land, being wood land, adjoining the close of the plaintiff, and separated from it by a fence, which was on the defendant's close and was the property of the defendant.

In October, 1871, the defendant sold the fallage of the wood on his close to one Higgins, who accordingly, by his servants, felled the trees and underwood growing thereon; but the defendant did not part with any portion of the soil of his close, which he continued to occupy.

A short time before the 27th of December, 1871, the servants of Higgins felled a beech tree standing near the fence in such a manner that it fell over the fence and broke down a large part of it. Whilst the beech tree lay on the fence the branches filled up the gap made by its fall; but a few days afterwards the branches were removed by the servants of Higgins, and after they were so removed, until the 27th of December, there was a considerable gap or opening in the fence, sufficiently large for cattle to pass from one close to the other, during all which time the fence was out of repair; but it was not brought to the knowledge of the defendant or his bailiff that the fence had been so broken.

On the 26th of December the servants of Higgins had felled a yew tree a few yards from the fence and near the spot where the beech tree had been felled. The yew tree was allowed to remain during the night of the 26th in the place where it had been felled. During the night of the 26th the plaintiff's cows, then being lawfully upon the plaintiff's close, escaped through the gap in the fence out of the close of the plaintiff into that of the defendant, and in the morning of the 27th they were found on the close of the defendant near the yew tree.

About midday on the 27th the cows died; and the judge found as a fact that they died from eating some of the foliage of the yew tree, which when eaten to excess is destructive to cattle. At that time of the year there was very little verdure or green food in the fields, and the cows, from being foddered on dry food, were the more inclined to browse the green foliage.

Evidence was given that for more than forty years the fence had been repaired whenever repairs were necessary by the owners and occupiers of the defendant's wood; and also, that on several occasions during the last nineteen years the fence had been repaired by the defendant and his predecessors in estate upon notice being given to him or his bailiff by the occupier for the time being of the plaintiff's close. Whenever the fence was so repaired, it was for the purpose of preventing cattle, lawfully being in the plaintiff's close, from escaping out of it into the close of the defendant.

It was contended for the plaintiff, first, that the facts established an obligation on the part of the defendant to repair and keep in repair the fence for the purposes aforesaid; secondly, that the damage was not too remote to enable the plaintiff to maintain this action; thirdly, that the defendant was liable in this action. Each of these points was contested by the defendant, who also contended that the damage was attributable to the felling of the yew tree, relying on Butler v. Hunter, 7 H. & N. 826 ; 31 L. J. Ex. 214.

The judge found as a fact that there was an obligation on the part of the defendant to repair, and keep in repair, the fence, for the purpose of preventing cattle, lawfully being in the plaintiff's close, from escaping out of the same into the close of the defendant.

He also considered that the damage was not too remote to enable the plaintiff to maintain this action.

The judge found as a fact that the escape of the cows from their own pasture was caused by the negligence of the servants of Higgins, either in not so felling the beech tree as to prevent its falling on the hedge, or, if that was not preventible, in not temporarily fencing round the gap until the tree could be removed and the gap be properly stopped ; and he was of opinion that it was the duty of Higgins to so cut and remove the wood as not to injure the rights of the plaintiff. He also found that, neither the defendant nor his bailiff, to whom the management of this wood land was intrusted, received notice of the fence having been broken down. And he held, on the authority of Longmeid v. Holliday, 6 Ex. 761 ; 20 L. J. Ex. 430, and Butler v. Hunter, that Mr. Higgins (and not the defendant) was responsible for the loss of the cows, as the result of his servants' negligence ; and he directed a nonsuit to be entered.

In case of this decision being reversed on appeal, he assessed the plaintiff's damages at £40.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the defendant is liable in this action.

Herschell, Q. C. (with him Petheram), for the plaintiff.

Michael, for the defendant.

The judgment of the court (COCKBURN, C. J., MELLOR and ARCHIBALD, JJ.), was delivered by ARCHIBALD, J.¹ The only point in this case as to which we felt any degree of hesitation at the time of the argument, was the question whether or not the defendant was entitled to a reasonable time to repair the fence after he might or ought to have had notice that it had been broken down. For, assuming that the obligation to which he was subject was to maintain, at all times, and without notice to repair it, a sufficient fence for the benefit of the plaintiff's close, we had no doubt that the learned judge of the county court was wrong in holding that the defendant was not legally responsible for the loss of the plaintiff's cows.

We concur in opinion with the learned judge, that the damage was not too remote ; but we think that the cases cited by him, Longmeid v. Holliday and Butler v. Hunter, are inapplicable ; and, without expressing any opinion as to the liability of Higgins, we are of opinion that, if the obligation to maintain the fence be such as we have assumed, the defendant would be liable in this action.

On further consideration we have come to the conclusion, upon the evidence set forth in the case, that the defendant was bound at his peril to maintain at all times, and without notice to repair it, a sufficient fence; and that, except in the case of damage by the act of God or vis major, he would be answerable for damage sustained by cattle escaping from the plaintiff's close by reason of the defective state of the fence, and proximately due to that cause.

At common law the owners of adjoining closes are not bound to fence either against or for the benefit of each other; but in the absence of fences each owner is bound to prevent his cattle or other animals from trespassing on his neighbor's premises.

By prescription, however, a landowner may be bound to maintain a fence upon his land for the benefit of the occupier of the adjoining close. This obligation is described by Gale in his work on Easements as in the nature of a spurious easement affecting the land of the party who is bound to maintain the fence. Gale on Easements, 4th ed. p. 460; Star v. Rookesby, 1 Salk. 335; Boyle v. Tamlyn, 6 B. & C. at pp. 337-9.

A party entitled by prescription to the benefit of the fence might formerly, by means of a writ de curia claudenda (Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 127), have compelled the adjoining owner to repair it, and have recovered damages as well for the non-repair; and a plea in an action of trespass for injury done by cattle, that the plaintiff is bound by prescription to fence against the defendant's cattle, is a good plea: Novel v. Smith, Cro. Eliz. 709 — the party bound by prescription being answerable to the owner for whose benefit the fence is to be maintained for all damage reasonably attributable to its defective condition.

It was held, therefore, in an anonymous case in Ventris, 1 Vent. 264, where a horse of the plaintiff's escaped into the defendant's field through defect of a fence which the defendant was bound to maintain, and was killed by falling into a ditch in the field, that the defendant was liable; and in a later case, Rooth v. Wilson, 1 B. & Ald. 59, that it made no difference that the plaintiff was only a gratuitous bailee of the horse which escaped and was killed. The same view of the law was acted upon in the case of Powell v. Salisbury, 2 Y. & J. 391, where the defendant was held liable for the loss of cattle which escaped from an adjoining field through a defective fence which he was bound to repair, and were killed on his premises by the falling of a haystack.

In all these cases, however, the prescription to maintain and repair obviously implies the pre-existence of the fence, and the right consequently to have it always existing as a fence; in other words, in a condition sufficient both to prevent the cattle of the owner entitled to it from escaping out of his close, and also to protect him from trespasses by his neighbor's cattle, and renders it, we think, incumbent on the party upon whom the prescriptive obligation is imposed to repair the fence in time to prevent its becoming defective, and subjects him to all risks of injury that may be done to it by strangers or trespassers.

We think, therefore, that, as the true nature of the prescription is that the defendant was bound at his own risk to have a sufficient fence always existing, he was liable to the plaintiff notwithstanding he had no knowledge of the injury done to the fence; and consequently that the decision of the County Court should be reversed, and judgment given for the plaintiff.

BRONSON v. COFFIN.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1871, 1875.

[Reported 108 Mass. 175; 118 Mass. 156.]

CONTRACT on the covenant against incumbrances contained in a deed of land from the defendants to the plaintiff, dated May 24, 1866. Trial in the Superior Court before Putnam, J., and a verdict for the plaintiff. The judge reported the case, and it was argued at October Term, 1870, before all the judges, except Colt, J.¹

J. Brown, for the defendants.

T. M. Stetson, for the plaintiff.

GRAY, J. The deed made by Timothy G. Coffin to the New Bedford and Taunton Railroad Company in 1839 conveyed a strip of land between four and five rods wide, and bounded on each side by the lands retained by Coffin and afterwards granted by his devisees to the plaintiff; and contained this clause: "I, the said T. G. Coffin, hereby covenant that I and my heirs and assigns will make and maintain a sufficient fence through the whole length of that part of the railroad which runs through my farm; this covenant of maintaining the fence to be perpetual and obligatory upon me and all persons who shall become owners of the land on each side of the railroad."

The principal question in the case is, whether the obligation thus expressed, to maintain a division fence between the land granted and the adjoining lands of the grantor, created a charge upon those lands, binding upon any assignee thereof, either by way of covenant running with the lands, or grant of an interest in the nature of an easement therein, which constituted an incumbrance, within the meaning of the covenant against incumbrances in a subsequent deed thereof from the grantor or those claiming title under him.

"On general principles," said Chief Justice Parsons, "every right to or interest in the land granted, to the diminution of the value of the land, but consistent with the passing of the fee in it by the conveyance, must be deemed in law an incumbrance." Prescott v. Trueman, 4 Mass. 627, 629.

Words sounding in covenant only may operate by way of grant of an easement, wherever it is necessary to give them that effect in order to carry out the manifest intention of the parties. Bro. Ab. Covenant, 2. Holms v. Seller, 3 Lev. 305; Rowbotham v. Wilson, 8 H. L. Cas. 348; Greene v. Creighton, 7 R. I. 1; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 64 No. Car. 1.

In order to make a covenant run with the land of the covenantor and bind his heirs and assigns, the covenantee must, according to all the authorities, have such an interest in that land as to amount to a privity of estate between the parties to the covenant. In this Commonwealth, at least, it is not necessary that their relation should be that of landlord and tenant; but an interest in the nature of an easement in the land which the covenant purports to bind, whether already existing, or created by the very deed which contains the covenant, constitutes a sufficient privity of estate to make the burden of a covenant to do certain acts upon that land, for the support and protection of that interest and the beneficial use and enjoyment of the land granted, run with the land charged. And an obligation, duly expressed, that the structures upon one parcel of land shall forever be of a certain character for the benefit of an adjoining parcel, is equally a charge upon the first parcel, whether the obligation is affirmative or merely restrictive, and whether the affirmative acts necessary to carry the obligation into effect are to be done by the owner of the one or the owner of the other.

In Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. 459, several owners of mills drawing water from the same stream by means of one dam, for themselves, their heirs, administrators and assigns, mutually covenanted with each other, that each of the mills should have wheels of a certain construction and limited power; and a party to the indenture brought an action on this covenant against a subsequent purchaser of some of the mills who was not himself a party to the indenture. Mr. Justice Wilde very clearly stated the rule, as follows: "As there is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, it follows that the defendants are not liable in this action, unless there is a privity of estate between them. Where such a privity exists between the covenantor and the covenantee, and the covenantor assigns his estate, the privity thereby created between the assignee and the other contracting parties renders the former liable on all such covenants as regulate the mode of occupying the estate, and the like covenants concerning the same. And so if the covenantee assigns his estate, his assignee will have the benefit of similar covenants. These covenants are annexed to the land and run with it. But if there is no privity of estate between the contracting parties, the assignee will not be bound by, nor have the benefit of, any covenants between the contracting parties, although they may relate to the land he takes by assignment or purchase from one of the parties to the contract. In such a case, the covenants are personal and are collateral to the land." And it was held that the action could not be maintained, solely because there was no privity of estate between the covenanting parties, but their estates were several, and there was, upon the true construction of the peculiar terms of that indenture, no grant of any interest in the real estate of either party, to which the covenants could be annexed.

So in Plymouth v. Carver, 16 Pick. 183, land was conveyed upon condition that the grantees should become bound by sufficient bond to make and maintain a portion of the highway passing by the land; and the grantees gave bond accordingly, for themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns. This bond was held not to be a covenant running with the land, because the only condition in the deed was, that the grantees should give bond to maintain the highway, and upon their giving such a bond the estate vested in them absolutely, and the grantor had no longer any interest in the land, and no right or estate therein was conveyed by them to him, so that there was no privity of estate between the parties to the covenant, and no land with which the covenant could run; and the bond was but a personal obligation of the obligors, not subjecting the land which had been conveyed to them in any other way than any of their estate might be liable to the performance of their personal covenants or obligations.

In Wheelock v. Thayer, 16 Pick. 68, the action was against the original covenantor, and the question was whether, in a grant of a privilege of drawing water from a pond, a covenant respecting the same would support an action by an assignee of the grantee; and it was held that it would not, for the reason that it was a mere covenant in gross, and not for the benefit of any land of the covenantee, and therefore not assignable.

In Morse v. Aldrich, 19 Pick. 449, and 1 Met. 544, the owner of a tract of land and a mill-pond conveyed a portion of both by metes and bounds, with liberty to enter upon the rest to dig and carry away the whole or any part of the soil. After the grantee had conveyed the same premises to the plaintiff, the original grantor, by indenture with the plaintiff, covenantanted to draw off his pond six days in August and September in each year, upon the plaintiff's request, for the purpose of giving the plaintiff an opportunity of digging and carrying out mud from the pond. The covenantor died and his estate descended to his heirs, of whom one conveyed his share to the others. It was held that, this covenant being made for the purpose of securing to the plaintiff the full benefit of the land granted to him, and there being a privity of estate in the rest of the land between the parties to the covenant at the time it was made, it ran with the land; and that the heirs and assigns of the covenantor, though not named, were liable to an action thereon for neglecting to draw off the pond after being requested so to do.

But perhaps the strongest case in this court in favor of the position that the clause in question in Coffin's deed was strictly a covenant running with the adjoining lands is Savage v. Mason, 3 Cush. 500. In that case, an indenture of partition between the owners in common of a large tract of land contained mutual covenants, which it was expressly declared should be binding upon and be available to heirs and assignees, and should be deemed perpetual and fundamental, and to run with the land thereby divided. One of these covenants was, that the centre of party walls of every brick or stone building might be placed upon the lines dividing the lots from contiguous lots, and that the owner of such contiguous lots, whenever he should make use of the same in any building, should pay for one half of the wall by him so used. A lot set off to one of the parties to the indenture was conveyed by his heirs to persons who afterwards conveyed it to another person, who entered and took possession and built a brick dwelling-house thereon, and placed the centre of the party wall of one side thereof upon the line dividing this lot from the contiguous lot, and then conveyed the lot with the dwelling-house thereon to persons who again conveyed to the plaintiffs. The contiguous lot was set off by the partition to another of the parties to the indenture, and upon his death and a division of his estate, to the defendant as one of his heirs, and while he owned it and after all the conveyances above mentioned, a brick dwelling-house was erected thereon, in which the party wall built by the owner of the plaintiffs' lot was used ; and the plaintiffs after demand sued him upon the covenant for half of the value of the wall. Upon these facts, it will be observed that by the indenture the entire fee in the defendant's lot had vested in his ancestor, leaving no reversion in the other parties to the indenture, under whom the plaintiffs claimed ; that the plaintiffs did not themselves build the party wall in question ; that the defendant did not acquire his title until after the walls had been built, and did not use the wall until after the plaintiffs had acquired their title ; that the only privity of estate between the parties consisted in the mutual right and obligation created by the same instrument which contained the covenant sued on, to have the division wall stand half on each lot, and to contribute to the expense thereof ; and that the obligation sought to be enforced against the defendant was an affirmative covenant to pay money. The court gave judgment for the plaintiffs, saying : "The liability to perform, and the right to take advantage of this covenant, both pass to the heir or assignee of the land to which the covenant is attached. This covenant can by no means be considered as merely personal, collateral and detached from the land. There was a privity of estate between the covenanting parties in the land to which the covenant was annexed. The covenant is in terms between the parties and their respective heirs and assigns ; it has direct and immediate reference to the land ; it relates to the mode of occupying and enjoying the land ; it is beneficial to the owner as owner, and to no other person ; it is in truth inherent in and attached to the land, and necessarily goes with the land into the hands of the heir or assignee." The decision was thus put upon the ground of a privity of estate between the owners of the two lots, created by the indenture itself, and sufficient to support the covenant to pay for half of the wall as strictly a covenant running with the land; and not upon the theory (since applied in Maine v. Cumston, 98 Mass. 317, to the case of a similar agreement not under seal) that the person erecting the wall, and his assigns, had by virtue of the indenture a property in the whole wall until it was used by the owner of the adjoining lot in building thereon, and the right then to recover from him a proportion of the cost of the wall. The covenant to maintain a fence in the case at bar falls within the reason of the decision in Savage v. Mason.

The same doctrine was long ago recognized in Holmes v. Buckley, reported in Pre. Ch. 39, and 1 Eq. Cas. Ab. 27, and cited as undoubted law upon this point by Lord St. Leonards in Sugd. Vend. (14th ed.) 593, in which a covenant, in a grant of a watercourse, to clear it and keep it in repair, was held to be a covenant running with land of the grantor through which the watercourse passed. See also Van Rensselaer v. Read, 26 N. Y. 558, 574-577; Woodruff v. Trenton Water Power Co., 2 Stockt. 489; Carr v. Lowry, 27 Penn. State, 257.

In the general definitions of easements in the text-books, it is, indeed, sometimes said that they consist either in suffering something to be done, or in abstaining from doing something, upon the servient tenement. 3 Kent Com. (6th ed.) 419; Washburn on Easements (2d ed.) 4, 5; Gale on Easements (4th ed.) 5. But the obligation to maintain a fence by prescription or agreement is classed by the same writers with easements, though Mr. Gale calls it a "spurious easement," and one of his editors "a right in the nature of an easement." 3 Kent Com. 438; Washburn on Easements, 524; Gale on Easements, 117, 460, 487, 488, 524 note. See also Hunt on Boundaries and Fences (2d ed.) 49, 51, 99.

In England, it has been well settled from very early times, and never denied, that an obligation of the owner of land to fence against land adjoining may be established by prescription, and if so established is a charge upon his land. Had this not been so, the point, formerly much mooted, whether such a charge was extinguished by unity of possession and title of the two closes, could not have arisen. Fitz. N. B. 128 note; Anon. Dyer, 295 b; Sury v. Pigot, Pop. 166, 170, 172; s. c. Noy, 84; Latch. 153, 154; Polus v. Henstock, 1 Ventr. 97; s. c. 2 Keb. 686, 707; T. Raym. 192; Star v. Rookesby, 1 Salk. 335; Vin. Ab. Fences, pl. 164, 166; Boyle v. Tamlyn, 9 D. & R. 430; s. c. 6 B. & C. 329; Barber v. Whiteley, 34 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 212. In Boyle v. Tamlyn, Mr. Justice Bailey said: "Such a right to have fences repaired by the owner of adjoining lands is in the nature of a grant of a distinct easement, affecting the land of the grantor." 9 D. & R. 437, and 6 B. & C. 338, 339. And Justices Littledale and Holroyd appear to have concurred in his view. 9 D. & R. 439, 440.

In Massachusetts, the doctrine has always been recognized, that the owner or occupier of land may be bound by prescription to a more extensive obligation to keep up and repair the division fences that would be imposed upon him by the common law or by the Statutes of the Commonwealth. Rust v. Lowe, 6 Mass. 90, 94, 97; 2 Dane Ab. 659, 660; Minor v. Deland, 18 Pick. 266, 267; Thayer v. Arnold, 4 Met. 589, 590. In Binney v. Hull, 5 Pick. 503, 506, it was adjudged that the owner of one of two adjoining lots of land might be bound by prescription to maintain the fence between them; and Chief Justice Parker spoke of the right to have him do so, as an easement in his land.

In the Court of Appeals of New York, Chief Justice Denio assumed, as settled beyond question, that there might be a valid prescription by which the owner of land might become bound to maintain perpetually the whole of the division fence between his and the adjoining land; and said that he did not entertain any doubt "but that, when such prescription is established, it fastens itself upon the land charged with the burden and in favor of the tenements benefited by it." Adams v. Van Alstyne, 25 N. Y. 232, 235. And in two cases in inferior courts in that State covenants to erect and keep in repair division fences have been deemed covenants running with the land and binding the assigns of the covenantor. Blain v. Taylor, 19 Abbott Pract. 228. Duffy v. New York & Harlem Railroad Co., 2 Hilton, 496.

In Easter v. Little Miami Railroad Co., 14 Ohio State, 48, after a careful review of the leading cases in this Commonwealth and elsewhere, a positive opinion was expressed that, in a deed to a railroad corporation of a right of way over land of the grantor on which its track had been laid out, a covenant that the grantor, his heirs and assigns, would build and forever keep up a fence on each side thereof through the grantor's land, was a covenant running with that land; and it was held, that an assignee of that land was so far bound thereby that he could derive no advantage from its breach.

The only difference of opinion manifested in the cases cited at the bar, as to the operation of an agreement to build a fence, by way of charging the land with the obligation, has been where it expressed the undertaking of the grantee in a deed poll. If a grantee accepts such a deed, a promise binding himself and his representatives personally is doubtless implied. Minor v. Deland, 18 Pick. 266; Newell v. Hill, 2 Met. 180. But in Parish v. Whitney, 3 Gray, 516, it was held that such a clause, even if purporting to bind the grantee's heirs and assigns, was not a covenant in any sense, and did not create an incumbrance upon the land. If that decision can be supported, it must be as falling within the rules that no easement in or right affecting real estate can be created by contract of the party, except by deed, and that an agreement not sealed by the party who is to perform it cannot create a covenant or run with the land. Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. 395; Goddard v. Dakin, 10 Met. 94; Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray, 302; Maine v. Cumston, 98 Mass. 317, 320; Wright v. Wright, 21 Conn. 329, 342; Standen v. Christmas, 10 Q. B. 135; Bickford v. Parson, 5 C. B. 920. On the other hand, it has been held in Vermont and New Hampshire, that such a promise by the grantee in a deed poll, for the benefit of the adjoining land of the grantor, who retained no other interest in the land granted, was equivalent to a covenant running with the land, and created an incumbrance thereon. Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Verm. 276; Burbank v. Pillsbury, 48 N. H. 475. But the present case does not require us to consider the effect of such a stipulation when not under the seal of the promisor; nor whether, as suggested in Burbank v. Pillsbury, an obligation not amounting to a covenant or other charge upon the land, but which might be enforced by a court of chancery in its discretion, is an incumbrance, the effect of which can be assessed in damages by a jury in a court of common law.

In the deed now before us, the covenant to maintain a fence upon the line of division between the land granted to the railroad corporation and the lands retained on either side thereof is made by the grantor, and is in terms declared to bind his heirs and assigns and to be intended to be perpetual and obligatory upon him and all persons who shall become owners of the lands on each side of the railroad; and this obligation is imposed upon all of them only as owners and by virtue of their ownership. It would be difficult to express more clearly an intention that the duty of maintaining the fence should be a charge upon these lands into whose hands soever they should come. The manifest purpose was to regulate the mode of occupying the lands retained, for the purpose of securing to the grantees the full beneficial use of the land granted, by establishing a permanent barrier to prevent all persons and cattle from straying upon it. The necessary conclusion is, upon principle and authority, that the terms of Coffin's deed conveyed to his grantees an interest in the nature of an easement in his adjoining lands, and thus created a sufficient privity of estate between them and his assigns to support the covenant to maintain the fence as a covenant running with the lands adjoining; and that such easement and covenant constituted an incumbrance, which was a breach of the covenant against incumbrances in the subsequent deed to the plaintiff, upon which this action is brought. It was therefore rightly ruled at the trial that the clause in Coffin's deed did not create a merely personal obligation, but constituted an incumbrance upon his adjoining lands.

Questions have sometimes arisen upon the effect of a covenant, the burden of which runs with the land, as against an assignee of part of the land charged with the burden. Where the assignees are tenants in common, they have been held jointly liable upon the covenant. Morse v. Aldrich, 1 Met. 544; Merceron v. Dowson, 5 B. & C. 479; s. c. 8 D. & R. 264. Upon covenants to keep in repair, the assignee of part of the land has been held liable for not repairing his part. Shep. Touchst. 199; Ards v. Watkin, Cro. Eliz. 637, 651; Congham v. King, Cro. Car. 221; s. c. 1 Rol. Ab. 522; W. Jon. 245; Bally v. Wells, Wilmot, 341, 346; s. c. 3 Wils. 25, 29; Stevenson v. Lambard, 2 East, 575, 580; Com. Dig. Covenant, C. 3. And in Adams v. Van Alstyne, 25 N. Y. 232, 235, Chief Justice Denio was of opinion that every part of the premises charged with maintaining a fence was as much bound as the whole of the premises originally charged. But no such question is presented by the case at bar. The land conveyed by the defendants to the plaintiff included the line upon which the fence was to be maintained ; and no point appears to have been made by the defendants at the trial, that, if the clause in Coffin's deed created any charge upon the plaintiff's land, it did not affect the whole of it.

The obligation to maintain the fence, being a continuing charge upon the land, was not impaired by the omission to perform it for more than twenty years, without any evidence of its having been released or extinguished. Arnold v. Stevens, 24 Pick. 106 ; Bannon v. Angier, 2 Allen, 128.

The covenant upon which this action is brought is the covenant against incumbrances in the deed to the plaintiff, dated May 24, 1866 ; the breach of this covenant and cause of this action arose at that date, and could not be affected by the Statute of Limitations until twenty years afterwards. Clark v. Swift, 3 Met. 390.¹

After this decision the case was tried in the Superior Court before Bacon, J., who allowed a bill of exceptions in substance as follows :—

The land in question is situated in New Bedford, and came to the defendants under the will of the late Timothy G. Coffin, and was a portion of his farm.

On April 6, 1839, the said Coffin conveyed a strip of land, fifty-five rods in length, and four and three tenths rods wide, running through the land in question, to the New Bedford and Taunton Railroad Company, by a deed which contained the following clause : “ I the said T. G. Coffin hereby covenant that I and my heirs and assigns will make and maintain a sufficient fence through the whole length of that part of the railroad which runs through my farm, this covenant of maintaining the fence to be perpetual and obligatory upon me and all persons who shall become owners of the land on each side of said railroad.”

The land conveyed by the defendants was that portion of the farm which lay west of a street called Acushnet Avenue, which runs nearly parallel with the railroad and at a distance of about one hundred and four rods easterly therefrom. About thirty acres thereof lay between the avenue and the railroad, and about nine acres on the other or westerly side of the railroad.

The plaintiff contended that the incumbrance was a charge, and would continue so to be upon all the land conveyed to the plaintiff, and not merely upon the land adjoining the railroad, however the whole land might be divided into lots by the plaintiff or his assigns, and conveyed to different persons in severalty. To this construction of the covenant the defendants objected, and requested the judge to rule, as a proper construction thereof, that there being about thirty acres on the east side of the railroad, if the plaintiff or his assigns should divide twenty-five acres of the land nearest to Acushnet Avenue and most remote from the railroad into convenient lots of one acre each, leaving a lot of land of about five acres next to and adjoining the railroad, the western boundary of which should be the entire length of the easterly line of the railroad, and the eastern boundary line thereof parallel thereto and extending from the southern to the northern line of the plaintiff's land, and then should convey each of those one acre lots to different persons, making twenty-five several owners of one acre of land each, each separated from the railroad by the said five acre lot, the incumbrance would not be a charge upon either of these one acre lots, but would remain only as a charge upon the five acre lot, and the burden of fencing, under the covenant, would be upon whomsoever was or became the owner of that five acre lot.

The judge refused so to rule; but ruled that the incumbrance would be and remain a charge upon the whole of the land granted to the plaintiff, and, in whatever form it might hereafter be divided into lots of any size and conveyed to different grantees, the incumbrance would still be a charge upon each separate lot, however remote from the railroad, and the burden of fencing would continue to be a charge in common upon every lot, and upon each lot in common with all the other lots by whomsoever owned.

The defendants made a similar request for ruling in regard to the land lying on the west side of the railroad which was refused. The defendants also asked the judge to rule that the covenant to maintain a fence on the west side of the railroad by the terms of Coffin's deed did not constitute an incumbrance on the land lying on the east side of the railroad. The judge refused so to rule, and ruled that it did constitute an incumbrance on all the plaintiff's land on the east side of the railroad as well as on the west side, however it might be divided and whoever became owners thereof.

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing the damages in the sum of $1,500; and the defendants alleged exceptions.

MORTON, J. At the trial the plaintiff contended that the burden of maintaining the fence "was a charge and would continue so to be upon all the land conveyed to the plaintiff, and not merely upon the land adjoining the railroad, however the whole land might be divided into lots by the plaintiff or his assigns and conveyed to different persons in severalty."

To meet this argument, the defendants requested the court to rule, in substance, that if the plaintiff should divide the land now owned by him into lots and should sell the lots remote from the railroad, leaving a lot intervening between them and the railroad, the burden of maintaining the fence would not attach to or be an incumbrance upon such remote lots. They also requested the court to rule that the covenant to maintain a fence on the west side of the railroad did not constitute an incumbrance upon the land on the east side.

The presiding judge refused these requests, and ruled that the incumbrance was a charge upon the whole of the land granted to the plaintiff, and if the land was divided into lots which were conveyed to different grantees, the burden of maintaining the fence would continue to be a charge upon each and every lot, however remote from the railroad.

This presents the question, adverted to but not decided in the former opinion in this case, as to the effect of a covenant which runs with the land, as against an assignee of part of the land charged with the burden; and we are of opinion that the instructions upon this question were erroneous. In cases of covenants running with land, the assignee of the covenantor is bound, not by reason of any privity of contract with the covenantee, but solely by reason of his privity of estate. As stated in the former opinion, "in order to make a covenant run with the land of the covenantor and bind his heirs and assigns, the covenantee must, according to all the authorities, have such an interest in that land as to amount to a privity of estate between the parties to the covenant." 108 Mass. 180. And it was held that the terms of Coffin's deed conveyed to his grantees an interest in the nature of an easement in his adjoining lands, and thus created a sufficient privity of estate between them and his assigns to support the covenant to maintain the fence as a covenant running with the lands adjoining. The covenant runs with the adjoining land of the grantor, not because such land is regarded as a security for the performance of the covenant, but because he, exercising his rights as owner, has qualified and restricted the mode of occupying and enjoying the land retained, and has imposed upon it a servitude for the benefit of his grantees. It runs with the land to which the servitude is attached, but no further. If the grantor or his assign should sell a portion of the whole lot, so situated that the easement or servitude, from its nature, would not attach to or affect it, we see no reason why the covenant should run with such portion.

Suppose, for instance, the owner of a large tract of land should sell a part of it and covenant that his grantees should enjoy a right of way, defined by metes and bounds, over the land retained by him, and should afterwards sell a lot remote from the way. The covenant is one which runs with the land; but upon what principle can it run with such remote lot so as to bind the purchaser? The way does not touch this lot; it is not an incumbrance or easement upon it. There is no privity of estate between such purchaser and the original covenantee or his assigns. The easement which is the medium which creates the privity of estate does not attach to or affect his land.

The same considerations apply to the case at bar. In the case supposed in the instructions given to the jury, the remote lot has no duty or obligation, inherent in or incident to it, as to the fence between the railroad and the intervening lot.

Under our laws, the owner is required to maintain one half of the division fence between his lot and the lot adjoining it; but whether a fence is maintained between such adjoining lot and the railroad, does not concern or affect his land. The easement, or servitude in the nature of an easement, which Coffin imposed upon his land adjoining the railroad, is in its nature such, that it does not reach or affect the remote lot after a division, and the covenant in support of it does not relate to the mode of occupying and enjoying such lot.

There is therefore no privity of estate between the owner and the original covenantee, and it follows that he cannot be held liable on the covenant.

It is true that this question did not properly arise at the trial. The plaintiff owns all the land retained by Coffin on both sides of the railroad, and by reason of his ownership of the adjoining land is bound by the covenant to maintain all the fence. But the argument of counsel and the instructions of the court upon this point would naturally tend to mislead the jury and inflame the damages, and therefore we think there should be a new trial. As, however, the question of the defendants' liability has been fairly tried, the case should be opened only upon the question of damages.¹

Exceptions sustained.

SECTION IV.

EXTINCTION OF EASEMENTS. LICENSES.

NOTE. — One mode, as will be seen, of extinguishing an easement, is by the owner of the dominant tenement granting to the owner of the servient tenement a license to create a state of things inconsistent with the existence of the easement, and by the owner of the servient tenement acting upon the license. In this place have been put the cases illustrating the revocability or irrevocability of licenses, although some of them relate to the creation and not to the extinction of rights; for the development of the law on the subject has taken such a course that it is instructive, if not necessary, to bring the whole subject of licenses together.

FENTIMAN v. SMITH.

KING'S BENCH. 1803.

[Reported 4 East, 107.]

IN an action on the case for diverting a watercourse from the plaintiff's mill, the declaration stated that whereas the plaintiff on the 1st of January, 1803, and long before, was and still is lawfully possessed of a certain cotton mill, with the appurtenances, situate at Addingham, in the county of York, near to two certain rivulets there called the Town Beck and the Back Beck, the water of which rivulet called the Back Beck until the interruption complained of had flowed into and still of right ought to flow into the Town Beck by means of a certain tunnel or goit there above the plaintiff's weir there erected across the Town Beck a little above the said mill; and the plaintiff by reason of his possession of the said mill, during all the time of working the same, of right ought to have had, and still of right ought to have, the use and benefit of both the said rivulets called the Town Beck and Back Beck: yet the defendant, knowing the premises, and to deprive the plaintiff of part of the use and benefit of his said mill with the appurtenances, whilst the plaintiff was so possessed thereof as aforesaid at, &c., cut a channel, &c., whereby the water of the Back Beck was diverted from running into the said tunnel or goit, and so to the mill, and the plaintiff was prevented from working his said mill, &c.

At the trial before Rooke, J., at the last assizes at York, it appeared in evidence that the tunnel or goit which was made and fixed into the ground with stone-work, had been made in part over an old road purchased by the defendant about eight years ago for a guinea, who at that time agreed for the same price to let the plaintiff lay the tunnel there for the purpose of conveying the water to the mill; that the defendant even assisted at the making of the tunnel under the plaintiff's directions; but no conveyance was made of the land to the plaintiff. The guinea was afterwards tendered to the defendant, but he refused to receive it or to give his assent to the continuance of the tunnel, and made the obstruction complained of. It was objected on the part of the defendant, that the plaintiff ought to be nonsuited, this being a right claimed in or over the land, which could not pass by parol license without deed; and the declaration states that the plaintiff had a right to the goit by reason of his possession of the mill, whereas it appeared that he had it by virtue of the agreement. But the learned judge refused to nonsuit the plaintiff, on the ground that as the agreement was made in respect of the mill, and as it might be disputable whether if the mill were taken away the plaintiff could have a right to the water for other purposes, the declaration stated the right with sufficient correctness, and his claim might be supported without deed, but reserved the point. The defendant then called witnesses, and there was a verdict for the plaintiff with nominal damages.

Park and Topping showed cause shortly against a rule for setting aside the verdict and entering a nonsuit, on the ground that it was sufficient for the plaintiff against a wrong-doer to declare upon his possession of the mill with the appurtenances. But

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., said, that such an allegation could not be sustained without showing that the appurtenances were legally such. Now here the title to have the water flowing in the tunnel over the defendant's land could not pass by parol license without deed; and the plaintiff could not be entitled to it, as stated in the declaration, by reason of his possession of the mill, but he had it by the license of the defendant, or by contract with him; and if by license, it was revocable at any time. The enjoyment with the defendant's assent was not left as evidence to the jury to presume a grant, but it was supposed that it gave a title in point of law, which it clearly did not.

WINTER v. BROCKWELL.

KING'S BENCH. 1807.

[Reported 8 East, 308.]

THIS was an action on the case for a nuisance, wherein the plaintiff complained, that being lawfully possessed of a dwelling-house with the appurtenances in Long Acre, &c. (Westminster), into which the light and air entered by means of a window from a certain open area between the said window and an adjoining house; by means of which open area also noisome smells which came from the adjoining house evaporated, without occasioning any nuisance to the occupier of the plaintiff's house; the defendant wrongfully placed a skylight over the area above the plaintiff's window, by means of which the light and air were prevented from entering the plaintiff's window into his house, and noisome smells arising from the adjoining house were prevented from evaporating, and entered the plaintiff's dwelling-house, &c. Plea, the general issue. At the trial before Lord Ellenborough, C. J., at the last sittings at Westminster, the defence set up was that the area which belonged to the defendant's house had been enclosed and covered by a skylight in the manner stated, with the express consent and approbation of the plaintiff, obtained before the enclosure was made, who also gave leave to have part of the framework nailed against his wall. But some time after it was finished the plaintiff objected to it, and gave notice to have it removed. But his lordship was of opinion, that the license given by the plaintiff to erect the skylight, having been acted upon by the defendant, and the expense incurred, could not be recalled, and the defendant made a wrongdoer,—at least not without putting him in the same situation as before, by offering to pay all the expenses which had been incurred in consequence of it; and under this direction the defendant obtained a verdict.

Wigley (in the absence of the Attorney-General) now moved for a new trial; but after stating the point,¹

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., said that the Attorney-General, who led the cause at the trial, had himself mentioned this case at the beginning of the term, in the argument of the case of the Quarriers in the Isle of Purbeck, certainly without intimating any disapprobation of the opinion which had been delivered at the trial, but insisting upon it in support of his argument. His Lordship added that the point was new to him when it occurred at the trial; but he then thought it very unreasonable, that after a party had been led to incur expense in consequence of having obtained a license from another to do an act, and that the license had been acted upon, that other should be permitted to recall his license and treat the first as a trespasser for having done that very act. That he had afterwards looked into the books upon this point, and found himself justified by the case of Web v. Paternoster (best reported in Palmer, 71, but reported also in other books, Poph. 151; 2 Roll. Rep. 143, 152), where Haughton, J., lays down the rule, that a license executed is not countermandable, but only when it is executory. And here the license was executed.

Wigley thereupon waived his motion.²

² "All that the defendant there [in Winter v. Brockwell] did, he did upon his own land. He claimed no right or easement upon the plaintiff's. The plaintiff claimed a right and easement against him; viz., the privilege of light and air through a parlor window, and a free passage for the smells of an adjoining house through defendant's area: and the only point decided there was, that as the plaintiff had consented to the obstruction of such his easement, and had allowed the defendant to incur expense in making such obstruction, he could not retract that consent without reimbursing the defendant that expense. But that was not the case of the grant of an easement to be exercised upon the grantor's land, but a permission to the grantee to use his own land in a way in which, but for an easement of the plaintiff's, such grantee would have had a clear right to use it." Per Bayley, J., in Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & C. 221, 233 (1826).

HOLMES v. GORING.

COMMON PLEAS. 1824.

[Reported 2 Bing. 76.]

THESE were actions of trespass for breaking and entering plaintiff's close at Lymister, otherwise Leominster, in Sussex, and forcing and breaking open his gate and its fastenings.

The defendant Goring pleaded, first, Not guilty, on which issue was joined; secondly, A right of way of necessity, alleging that the close in which, &c., together with another close adjoining on the east, did lie between two other closes belonging to the defendant, and in the occupation of William Elliott, as his tenant; that the defendant, at the time of the conveyance afterwards stated, was seised of all the four closes, and on the 7th October, 1801, enfeoffed George Duke of the close in which, &c., and the other close adjoining thereto on the east, and that at the time of the feoffment, defendant had no other way to one of the said closes in the occupation of Elliott but over the close in which, &c., and the other close adjoining thereto on the east, and was therefore entitled to, and still of right ought to have for himself and tenants a convenient and necessary way thereto over the close in which, &c., and in the exercise thereof committed the supposed trespasses.

Replication, that the defendant had not necessarily, and of right ought not to have had, and still of right ought not to have for himself and tenants such convenient and necessary way as in the said second plea mentioned, in manner and form as in that plea alleged.

The plaintiff also made new assignment.

Issue was joined on the above replication to the special plea, and also upon a plea of Not guilty to trespasses newly assigned.

These issues came on to be tried at the Sussex Spring Assizes, 1822, before Wood, B., and a special jury, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff on the issues joined on the plea of Not guilty to the declaration, with 1s. damages; and for the defendant on the issue on the plea of Not guilty to the new assignment, and on the replication to the second plea,—subject to the opinion of the court upon a case in substance as follows:—

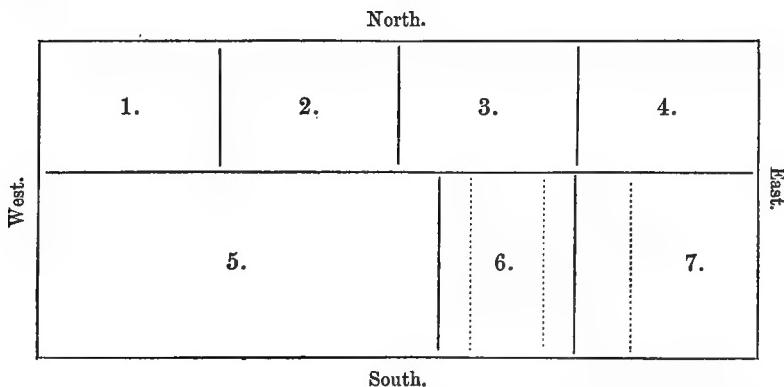

Previously to the year 1798, the defendant was seised in fee of the first and fourth of four closes,¹ called the Brooks (in the parish of Lymister in Sussex), extending in a line eastward from the Littlehampton and Arundel Road which skirted the western side of the first close; and having no means of approach from the Arundel Road to the fourth close without passing through the third, enjoyed a right of way out of the first close through the south end of the second and third closes into the fourth.

In 1798, the defendant being then and still seised in fee of a fifth close, in the occupation of Mrs. Falconer, which extended from the Arundel Road along the south side of the first, second, and a part of the third close,—and of a seventh, which extended along the south side of the fourth close,—purchased in fee the sixth close, which extended along the residue of the south side of the third; and also purchased in fee the second and third closes, subject to a term in George Duke, to expire in 1807.

In 1801, the defendant conveyed to George Duke by feoffment in fee the second and third closes, together with a slip out of the sixth, extending from the south side of the third to the south side of and bisecting the sixth close, and another slip extending from the south side of the fourth, along the western and down to the south side of the seventh close.

These two slips, out of the sixth and seventh closes, the defendant repurchased in fee of George Duke about the year 1810.

The plaintiff, who held the second and third closes under Duke, brought this action against the defendant for entering the second close in 1820, in the exercise of his alleged right of way over it.

It appeared in evidence, that at the time when the oldest witnesses remembered the premises (about seventy years back), the four closes called the Brooks were all occupied by one Amey, and after him by one Ridding; but that about forty years ago, and since, one Stevens, and after him Ridding, held the two outer ones, Duke then holding the two middle ones only, and that as far back as living memory could reach, there had been a gate leading from close 1 into the highway from Arundel to Littlehampton, and also gates of communication between the closes 1, 2, 3, and 4, respectively at the southwest corners of each of the three last of them, and during that time, until such obstruction as in the said second plea mentioned, the occupier for the time being of the close 4, had been accustomed to drive wagons and carts from the highway over the southern extremity of the closes 1, 2, and 3, into close 4, and so back again, for the convenience, use, and occupation of the said last-mentioned close.

The plaintiff contended, that from the time of the feoffment in 1801, the defendant and his tenant, even though they should up to that time have had a way of necessity over the locus in quo, ought to have gone from the Arundel Road over his own land, the fifth close, towards close 3, without going over the close 2; and that at the time of the trespasses, they might and ought to have gone from the Arundel Road into close 4, entirely over closes 5 and 6, defendant's own lands.

The defendant contended that the necessity of the way was to be considered with reference to the situation of the properties at the date of the feoffment.

The learned Baron, in an early stage of the trial, required that these points, if raised by the evidence, should be reserved for the opinion of the court. The jury found that the ancient and usual way from and to close 4, had been and was immemorially over said closes 3, 2, and 1, into the said highway.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether, under the circumstances above mentioned, the defendant was entitled to a verdict on the issue so joined on the replication to the second plea, and if the court should be of opinion in the affirmative, the verdict was to be entered, and defendant to have judgment according to that opinion; but if the court should be of opinion, on the other hand, that the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict on that issue, then the verdict was to be entered for the plaintiff generally.

In the other action against Elliott, Goring's tenant, there was a third plea, stating a right of way by non-existing grant; and in which it appeared that Elliott had married Mrs. Falconer, and occupied close 5. In other respects, the two cases were alike.

This case was argued twice: by Lens and Taddy, Serjts., in Trinity Term, 1823, and by Bosanquet and Taddy, Serjts., in this term (Easter, 1824).

BEST, C. J. Substantially there is no difference between these two cases; in the second there is a plea of a way by prescription, but as that has been extinguished by unity of possession, the point to be decided is in effect the same in both, and the question is, Whether or no the defendant is entitled to a way of necessity over the plaintiff's close. This is an action for a trespass committed in the close No. 2, to which the defendant has pleaded, that in 1801 he enfeoffed George Duke of the close in which, &c., and that at the time of the feoffment he had no way to his own close except over the close in which, &c., and was therefore entitled to a convenient and necessary way to his own close, over the close in which, &c.; so that the issue to be tried was whether or no he had any other way? Considering that as the question, much that has to-day been advanced in argument has no bearing upon it; because if the defendant has not made out that he had no other way, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. But I had rather take the case on the broad ground on which it has been argued, than on this narrow ground. The plaintiff complains that the defendant has trespassed on his land ; the defendant insists that he was entitled to pass over it in the enjoyment of a way of necessity : all the four closes, he says, were originally his, and he was then accustomed to pass from the first unto the fourth ; he parted with the two in the middle, and contends that it is still necessary for him to pass through them. On behalf of the plaintiff it is asserted, that this necessity does not exist ; that at the time of the trespass he might have passed from close 4 into his own land, close 6, and thence over his own land into the high road ; or that, at all events, and at all times, he might have passed out of close 3 into close 5, and so have avoided close 2, the locus in quo. My judgment will be on the latter course ; if the defendant could have pursued that, and I am of opinion he could, he is entitled to no way of necessity. It has been contended that we are to look to the state of things at the time of the feoffment, and that at that time the defendant could not have passed into close 5, because it was in the occupation of Mrs. Falconer ; if so, the defendant ought to have shown in her an interest sufficient to exclude him ; instead of that, the case only states that she was in the occupation of close 5, — a statement consistent with a mere tenancy at will, which the defendant might at any time have determined. It is clear, therefore, that he ought to have passed from close 3 into close 5, and if so, he could not claim a way of necessity over close 2. On the part of the plaintiff the case has been put on its right ground. If I have four fields, and grant away two of them, over which I have been accustomed to pass, the law will presume that I reserve a right of way to those which I retain ; but what right ? the same as existed before ? No ; the old right is extinguished, and the new way arises out of the necessity of the thing. The passage which has been cited from Serjt. Williams's note contains a complete answer to the argument on the part of the defendant. "A way of necessity, when the nature of it is considered, will be found to be nothing else than a way by grant ;" but a grant of no more than the circumstances which raise the implication of necessity require should pass. If it were otherwise, this inconvenience might follow, that a party might retain a way over 1,000 yards of another's land, when by a subsequent purchase he might reach his destination by passing over 100 yards of his own. A grant, therefore, arising out of the implication of necessity, cannot be carried farther than the necessity of the case requires ; and this principle consists with all the cases which have been decided. It has been argued, that the new grant operates as a prevention of the extinction of the old right of way ; but there is not a single case which bears out that proposition, or which does not imply the contrary. By the grant a new way is created, and that way is limited by necessity. Serjt. Williams says, "Where a man having a close surrounded with his own land grants the close to another, the grantees shall have a way to the close over the grantor's land, as incident to the grant; for without it he cannot derive any benefit from the grant. So it is where he grants the land, and reserves the close to himself." What way is it the grantees shall have? not the old, but a new way, limited by the necessity. The case of Buckby v. Coles [5 Taunt. 311] is not very clearly reported, and I do not altogether understand it; but in Clarke v. Cogge [Cro. Jac. 170] the court says that "although the grantor in such a case reserve not a way, it shall be reserved for him by law;" that is, not the old way, but a new one of necessity, if he hath not any other way. In Jorden v. Atwood [Owen, 121], Popham, C. J., says that, "if a man had three fields adjoining, and makes a feoffment of the middle field, the feoffee shall have a way (not the way) to this through the other close." Then in Packer v. Welsted [2 Sid. 39], it was expressly found that the party had not any other way; but in the present case there might be a sufficient way reserved, although the defendant should never pass over close 2. The claim, therefore, to a way of necessity is completely answered; and as for a way by prescription, it cannot for a moment be doubted that such a way was extinguished by unity of possession. I think, therefore, that on the present occasion our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

PARK, J. On the former argument, Dallas, C. J., and the rest of the court were satisfied that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment, but granted a second argument at the instigation of the defendant's counsel. I am still of the same opinion, and that, from what appears on the face of the plea. The defendant states that he had no other way at the time of the feoffment; but that assertion has not been made out in proof; and from all the authorities referred to, it is clear, that when a way is claimed of necessity, it is a good answer to show that there is another way which the party may use.

BURROUGH, J. The defendant's case is disposed of by the facts which have come out. The lease to Duke ended in 1807, long before the time of the trespass complained of; at that time there was no impediment to the defendant's reaching the Arundel Road by passing over his own land, unless it were Mrs. Falconer's occupation; but we are nowhere informed what the nature of her interest was, and may therefore presume the defendant might have passed over land of which he owned the fee. Upon the former argument it was contended, that the only necessity which could support the defendant's plea must be a necessity continuing up to the time of the trespass justified under it: in this I entirely agree, and am therefore satisfied our judgment must be for the plaintiff. *Judgment for plaintiff accordingly.*¹

¹ "PARKE, B. The extent of the authority of Holmes v. Goring is that, admitting a grant in general terms, it may be construed to be a grant of a right of way as from time to time may be necessary. I should have thought it meant as much a grant forever as if expressly inserted in a deed, and it struck me at that time that the court was wrong; but that is not the question now. ALDERSON, B. Probably, if this case be taken to a court of error, Holmes v. Goring will be reviewed." Proctor v. Hodgson, 10 Ex. 824, 828 (1855).

MOORE v. RAWSON. ✓

[Reported 3 B. & C. 332.]

CASE for obstructing lights. Plea, Not guilty. At the trial before Hullock, B., at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Derby, it appeared, that the plaintiff was seised in fee of a messuage and building, with a yard, garden, and appurtenances, situate at Ripley, in that county, in the occupation of a tenant from year to year. The defendant was the owner of other messuages and premises next adjoining the plaintiff's, on the northern side thereof. The plaintiff's messuage was an ancient house, and adjoining to it there had been a building formerly used as a weaver's shop. The old shop had ancient windows, for the convenience of light to the weavers who worked looms there. About seventeen years ago the then owner and occupier of the premises took down the old shop, and erected on the same site a stable, having a blank wall next adjoining to the premises of the present defendant. This building had latterly been used as a wheelwright's shop. About three years ago, and while the plaintiff's premises continued in this state, the defendant erected a building next to the blank wall, and the plaintiff then opened a window in that wall, in the same place where there had formerly been a window in the old wall, and the action was brought for the obstruction of this new window by the building so erected by the defendant. The learned judge directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff, but reserved liberty to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit. A rule nisi having been obtained accordingly, Vaughan, Serjt., and N. R. Clarke, showed cause.

Denman and Reader, contra.

ABBOTT, C. J. I am of opinion that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain this action. It appears that many years ago the former owner of his premises had the enjoyment of light and air by means of certain windows in a wall of his house. Upon the site of this wall he built a blank wall without any windows. Things continued in this state for seventeen years. The defendant, in the interim, erected a building opposite the plaintiff's blank wall, and then the plaintiff opened a window in that which had continued for so long a period a blank wall without windows, and he now complains that that window is darkened by the buildings which the defendant so erected. It seems to me that, if a person entitled to ancient lights pulls down his house and erects a blank wall in the place of a wall in which there had been windows, and suffers that blank wall to remain for a considerable period of time, it lies upon him at least to show, that at the time when he so erected the blank wall, and thus apparently abandoned the windows which gave light and air to the house, that was not a perpetual, but a temporary abandonment of the enjoyment, and that he intended to resume the enjoyment of those advantages within a reasonable period of time. I think that the burden of showing that lies on the party who has discontinued the use of the light. By building the blank wall, he may have induced another person to become the purchaser of the adjoining ground for building purposes, and it would be most unjust that he should afterwards prevent such a person from carrying those purposes into effect. For these reasons I am of opinion, that the rule for a nonsuit must be made absolute.

BAYLEY, J. The right to light, air, or water, is acquired by enjoyment, and will, as it seems to me, continue so long as the party either continues that enjoyment or shows an intention to continue it. In this case the former owner of the plaintiff's premises had acquired a right to the enjoyment of the light; but he chose to relinquish that enjoyment, and to erect a blank wall instead of one in which there were formerly windows. At that time he ceased to enjoy the light in the mode in which he had used to do, and his right ceased with it. Suppose that, instead of doing that, he had pulled down the house and buildings, and converted the land into a garden, and continued so to use it for a period of seventeen years; and another person had been induced by such conduct to buy the adjoining ground for the purposes of building. It would be most unjust to allow the person who had so converted his land into garden ground, to prevent the other from building upon the adjoining land which he had, under such circumstances, been induced to purchase for that purpose. I think that, according to the doctrine of modern times, we must consider the enjoyment as giving the right; and that it is a wholesome and wise qualification of that rule to say, that the ceasing to enjoy destroys the right, unless at the time when the party discontinues the enjoyment he does some act to show that he means to resume it within a reasonable time.

HOLROYD, J. I am of the same opinion. It appears that the former owner of the plaintiff's premises at one time was entitled to the house with the windows, so that the light coming to those windows over the adjoining land could not be obstructed by the owner of that land. I think, however, that the right acquired by the enjoyment of the light, continued no longer than the existence of the thing itself in respect of which the party had the right of enjoyment, — I mean the house with the windows; when the house and the windows were destroyed by his own act, the right which he had in respect of them was also extinguished. If, indeed, at the time when he pulled the house down, he had intimated his intention of rebuilding it, the right would not then have been destroyed with the house. If he had done some act to show that he intended to build another in its place, then the new house, when built, would in effect have been a continuation of the old house, and the rights attached to the old house would have continued. If a man has a right of common attached to his mill, or a right of turbary attached to his house, if he pulls down the mill or the house, the right of common or of turbary will prima facie cease. If he show an intention to build another mill or another house, his right continues. But if he pulls down the house or the mill without showing any intention to make a similar use of the land, and after a long period of time has elapsed, builds a house or mill corresponding to that which he pulls down, that is not the renovation of the old house or mill, but the creation of a new thing, and the rights which he had in respect of the old house or mill, do not in my opinion attach to the new one. In this case, I think, the building of a blank wall is a stronger circumstance to show that he had no intention to continue the enjoyment of his light than if he had merely pulled down the house. In that case he might have intended to substitute something in its place. Here, he does in fact substitute quite a different thing,—a wall without windows. There is not only nothing to show that he meant to renovate the house so as to make it a continuance of the old house, but he actually builds a new house different from the old one, thereby showing that he did not mean to renovate the old house. It seems to me, therefore, that the right is not renewed as it would have been if, when he had pulled down the old house, he had shown an intention to rebuild it within a reasonable time, although he did not do so eo instanti.

LITTLEDALE, J. According to the present rule of law a man may acquire a right of way, or a right of common (except, indeed, common appendant) upon the land of another, by enjoyment. After twenty years' adverse enjoyment the law presumes a grant made before the user commenced, by some person who had power to grant. But if the party who has acquired the right by grant ceases for a long period of time to make use of the privilege so granted to him, it may then be presumed that he has released the right. It is said, however, that as he can only acquire the right by twenty years' enjoyment, it ought not to be lost without disuse for the same period; and that as enjoyment for such a length of time is necessary to found a presumption of a grant, there must be a similar non-user, to raise a presumption of a release. And this reasoning, perhaps, may apply to a right of common or of way. But there is a material difference between the mode of acquiring such rights and a right to light and air. The latter is acquired by mere occupancy; the former can only be acquired by user, accompanied with the consent of the owner of the land; for a way over the lands of another can only be lawfully used, in the first instance, with the consent, express or implied, of the owner. A party using the way without such consent would be a wrongdoer; but when such a user, without interruption, has continued for twenty years, the consent of the owner is not only implied during that period, but a grant of the easement is presumed to have taken place before the user commenced. The consent of the owner of the land was necessary, however, to make the user of the way (from which the presumption of the grant is to arise) lawful in the first instance. But it is otherwise as to light and air. Every man on his own land has a right to all the light and air which will come to him, and he may erect, even on the extremity of his land, buildings with as many windows as he pleases. In order to make it lawful for him to appropriate to himself the use of the light, he does not require any consent from the owner of the adjoining land. He therefore begins to acquire the right to the enjoyment of the light by mere occupancy. After he has erected his building the owner of the adjoining land may, afterwards, within twenty years, build upon his own land, and so obstruct the light which would otherwise pass to the building of his neighbor. But if the light be suffered to pass without interruption during that period to the building so erected, the law implies, from the non-obstruction of the light for that length of time, that the owner of the adjoining land has consented that the person who has erected the building upon his land shall continue to enjoy the light without obstruction, so long as he shall continue the specific mode of enjoyment which he had been used to have during that period. It does not, indeed, imply that the consent is given by way of grant; for although a right of common (except as to common appendant) or a right of way being a privilege of something positive to be done or used in the soil of another man's land, may be the subject of legal grant, yet light and air, not being to be used in the soil of the land of another, are not the subject of actual grant; but the right to insist upon the non-obstruction and non-interruption of them more properly arises by a covenant which the law would imply not to interrupt the free use of the light and air. The right, therefore, is acquired by mere occupancy, and ought to cease when the person who so acquired it discontinues the occupancy. If, therefore, as in this case, the party who has acquired the right once ceases to make use of the light and air which he had appropriated to his own use, without showing any intention to resume the enjoyment, he must be taken to have abandoned the right. I am of opinion, that as the right is acquired by mere user, it may be lost by non-user. It would be most inconvenient to hold, that the property in light and air, which is acquired by occupancy, can only be lost where there has been an abandonment of the right for twenty years. I think, that if a party does any act to show that he abandons his right to the benefit of that light and air which he once had, he may lose his right in a much less period than twenty years. If a man pulls down a house and does not make any use of the land for two or three years, or converts it into tillage, I think he may be taken to have abandoned all intention of rebuilding the house; and, consequently, that his right to the light has ceased. But if he builds upon the same site, and places windows in the same spot, or does anything to show that he did not mean to convert the land to a different purpose, then his right would not cease. In this case, I think that the owner of the plaintiff's premises abandoned his right to the ancient lights, by erecting the blank wall instead of that in which the ancient windows were; for he then indicated an intention never to resume that enjoyment of the light which he once had. Under those circumstances, I think that the temporary disuse was a complete abandonment of the right.

*Rule absolute.*¹

LIGGINS v. INGE.

COMMON PLEAS. 1831.

[Reported 7 Bing. 682.]

TINDAL, C. J.² It will be unnecessary on the present occasion to consider more than one of the questions which have been argued at the bar; namely, whether the present action, upon the facts stated in the award of the arbitrator, is maintainable against the defendants.

The action is, in point of form, an action of tort, and charges the defendants with wrongfully continuing a certain weir or fletcher, which the defendants had before erected upon one of the banks of the river, and by that means wrongfully continuing the diversion of the water, and preventing it from flowing to the plaintiff's mill in the manner it had been formerly accustomed to do.

It appeared in evidence before the arbitrator that the bank of the river, which had been cut down, was the soil of the defendants; and that the same had been cut down and lowered, and the weir erected, and the water thereby diverted by them, the defendants, and at their expense, in the year 1822, under a parol license to them given for that purpose by the plaintiff's father, the then owner of his mill; and that in the year 1827 the plaintiff's father represented to the defendants that the lowering and cutting down the bank were injurious to him in the enjoyment of his mill, and had called upon them to restore the bank to its former state and condition; with which requisition the defendants had refused to comply.

The question, therefore, is, whether such non-compliance, and the keeping the weir in the same state after, and notwithstanding the countermand of the license, is such a wrong done on the part of the defendants as to make them liable to this action.

The argument on the part of the plaintiff has been, that such parol license is, in its nature, countermandable at any time at the pleasure of the party who gave it. That to hold otherwise would be to allow to a parol license the effect of passing to the defendants a permanent interest in part of the water which before ran to the plaintiff's mill; which interest, at common law, could only pass by grant under seal, being an incorporeal hereditament, and which, at all events, would be determinable at the will of the grantor since the Statute of Frauds, as being "an interest in, to, or out of lands, tenements, and hereditaments."

If it was necessary to hold that a right or interest in any part of the water, which before flowed to the plaintiff's mill, must be shown to have passed from the plaintiff's father to the defendants under the license, in order to justify the continuance of the weir in its original state, the difficulty above suggested would undoubtedly follow. For it cannot be denied that the right to the flow of the water, formerly belonging to the owner of the plaintiff's mill, could only pass by grant, as an incorporeal hereditament, and not by parol license.

But we think the operation and effect of the license, after it has been completely executed by the defendants, is sufficient, without holding it to convey any interest in the water, to relieve them from the burden of restoring to its former state what has been done under the license, although such license is countermanded; and, consequently, that they are not liable to an action as wrongdoers for persisting in such refusal.

The parol license, as it is stated in the award of the arbitrator, was a license to cut down and to lower the bank and to erect the weir. Strictly speaking, if the license was to be confined to those terms, it was at once unnecessary and inoperative; for the soil being the property of the defendants, they would have the right to do both those acts without the consent of the owner of the lower mill. But as the diversion of part of the water which before flowed to that mill would be the necessary consequence of such acts, it must be taken that the object and effect of such license was to give consent, on the part of the plaintiff's father, to the diverting of the water by means of those alterations.

We do not, however, consider the object, and still less the effect, of the parol license, to be the transferring from the plaintiff's father to the defendants any right or interest whatever in the water which was before accustomed to flow to the lower mill, but simply to be an acknowledgment, on the part of the plaintiff's father, that he wanted such water no longer for the purposes of his mill; and that he gave back again and yielded up, so far as he was concerned, that quantity of water which found its way over the weir or fletcher, which he then consented should be erected by the defendants. And we think, after he has once clearly signified such relinquishment, whether by words or acts, and suffered other persons to act upon the faith of such relinquishment, and to incur expense in doing the very act to which his consent was given, it is too late then to retract such consent, or to throw on those other persons the burden of restoring matters to their former state and condition.

Water flowing in a stream, it is well settled, by the law of England, is publici juris. By the Roman law running water, light, and air, were considered as some of those things which had the name of res communes, and which were defined "things, the property of which belong to no person, but the use to all." And, by the law of England, the person who first appropriates any part of the water flowing through his land to his own use, has the right to the use of so much as he thus appropriates, against any other. Bealey v. Shaw and Others, 6 East, 207. And it seems consistent with the same principle that the water, after it has been so made subservient to private uses by appropriation, should again become publici juris by the mere act of relinquishment. There is nothing unreasonable in holding that a right which is gained by occupancy should be lost by abandonment. Suppose a person who formerly had a mill upon a stream should pull it down, and remove the works, with the intention never to return. Could it be held that the owner of other land adjoining the stream might not erect a mill and employ the water so relinquished? Or that he could be compellable to pull down his mill if the former mill-owner should afterwards change his determination and wish to rebuild his own?

In such a case it would undoubtedly be a subject of inquiry by a jury, whether he had completely abandoned the use of the stream, or had left it for a temporary purpose only; but that question being once determined, there seems no ground to contend that an action would be maintainable against the person who erected the new mill, for not pulling it down again after notice. And if, instead of his intention remaining uncertain upon the acts which he had done, the former proprietor had openly and expressly declared his intention to abandon the stream, — that is, if he had licensed the other party to erect a mill, — the same inference must follow with greater certainty. Or suppose A. authorizes B., by express license, to build a house on B.'s own land, close adjoining to some of the windows of A.'s house, so as to intercept part of the light: could he afterwards compel B. to pull the house down again, simply by giving notice that he countermanded the license? Still further, this is not a license to do acts which consist in repetition, as to walk in a park, to use a carriage way, to fish in the waters of another, or the like, — which license, if countermanded, the party is but in the same situation as he was before it was granted; but this is a license to construct a work which is attended with expense to the party using the license; so that, after the same is countermanded, the party to whom it was granted may sustain a heavy loss. It is a license to do something that, in its own nature, seems intended to be permanent and continuing. And it was the fault of the party himself, if he meant to reserve the power of revoking such a license, after it was carried into effect, that he did not expressly reserve that right when he granted the license, or limit it as to duration. Indeed the person who authorizes the weir to be erected becomes, in some sense, a party to the actual erection of it, and cannot afterwards complain of the result of an act which he himself contributed to effect.

Upon principle, therefore, we think the license in the present case, after it was executed, was not countermandable by the person who gave it, and consequently that the present action cannot be maintained. And, upon authority, this case appears to be already decided by that of Winter v. Brockwell [8 East, 308], which rests on the judgment in

Web v. Paternoster [Palm. 71]. We see no reason to doubt the authority of that case, confirmed, as it since has been, by the case of Tayler v. Waters [7 Taunt. 374] in this court, and recognized as law in the judgment of Mr. Justice Bailey, in the case of Hewlins v. Ship-pam [5 B. & C. 221], in the Court of B. R.

We therefore think the rule for setting aside the award of the arbitrator must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

EXCHEQUER. 1835.

[Reported 2 C. M. & R. 34.]

CASE—The declaration stated that the plaintiff, before and at the time of the committing of the grievances, &c., was, and from thence had been, and still was, lawfully possessed of a certain messuage or dwelling-house, yard, and premises, with the appurtenances, situate and being in the county of Devon, to wit, in the borough and town of Crediton, in the said county, and of a certain thatched wall standing and being in and upon those premises; and by reason of such possession, during all that time, she, the plaintiff, for the necessary use and enjoyment of her said premises, ought to have had, and still of right ought to have, the use and benefit of a certain channel, drain, gutter, or sewer, leading and running, by and from the said messuage or dwelling-house, over, across, along, and through the said yard of the plaintiff unto and into certain premises in the possession or occupation of the defendants there, near to the said premises of the plaintiff, by, through, and along which the said drain, &c. (stating the particular easement). And also, by reason of such possession as aforesaid, she, the plaintiff, was, during all the time aforesaid, entitled to the benefit, easement, privilege, and advantage of having and permitting the eaves and thatch of her said wall to extend and project a convenient space beyond and from the said wall over and upon the said premises so as aforesaid in the possession or occupation of the defendants, for the convenience and use of conveying and carrying off from her said wall and thatch thereof the rain which from time to time descended and fell thereupon. Yet the defendants, well knowing all the premises, but contriving, &c., whilst the plaintiff was so possessed, &c., as aforesaid, to wit, on, &c., wrongfully and injuriously shut, closed, stopped up, and obstructed the said drain, channel, gutter, or sewer, to wit, by and by means of divers large quantities of brick, &c., and the same so shut, closed, stopped up, and obstructed as aforesaid, kept and continued for a long space of time, to wit, from, &c. And thereby and from no other cause whatsoever, during all the time aforesaid, divers large quantities of the refuse and foul water, and other filth, arising and proceeding from the said messuage and premises of the plaintiff, have been and still were prevented and hindered from running, flowing, and passing off in their usual course, through and out of the said channel, drain, gutter, or sewer, in the manner aforesaid; and by reason thereof, not only divers noisome, noxious, offensive, and unwholesome smells, &c., during all the time aforesaid, have ascended, &c., into the said messuage, dwelling-house, and premises of the plaintiff, but also thereby the said premises, &c., of the plaintiff became and were greatly overflowed and wholly untenable, and the plaintiff and her family thereby had been and were greatly annoyed, &c., in the occupation, possession, and enjoyment thereof. And the defendants furthermore, on the same day and year aforesaid, and on divers other days and times, &c., wrongfully, injuriously, without the leave, and against the will of the plaintiff, erected, put, and placed, close to the said wall of the plaintiff, divers large quantities of brick, mortar, stone, wood, and other materials, and divers erections and buildings; and the same respectively there kept and continued for a long space of time, to wit, &c., so near to the said wall and to the thatch thereof, that by reason thereof, and from no other cause whatever, the rain, which from time to time descended to and fell upon the thatch of the said wall, was wholly prevented from dripping and falling from the thatch thereof in manner aforesaid, as the same ought to have done; and in consequence thereof great quantities, to wit, ten perches of the said thatch, and of the covering and coping of the said wall, had respectively become and been greatly rotten, decayed, damaged, injured, and destroyed; and by reason thereof, not only the plaintiff, during all the time aforesaid, lost the use and advantage of the said wall, but also by means of the said thatch covering and coping of the said wall having been so damaged and destroyed as aforesaid, large quantities of rain and moisture have from time to time, during all the time aforesaid, fallen upon and penetrated into the said wall of the plaintiff, and the same has thereby been greatly injured and damnified, and has been rendered ruinous, insecure, and dilapidated; so that, by means of the several premises aforesaid, the plaintiff hath been, during all the time aforesaid, greatly inconvenienced, &c. Pleas.—First, Not Guilty. Secondly. As to the part of the said declaration which relates to the said channel, drain, gutter, or sewer in the said declaration mentioned, the defendants say that the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain, &c., because, they say, that the surplus or foul water, or other filth, which from time to time arose, were collected and proceeded from the said messuage or premises of the plaintiff, were not, during all the time aforesaid, used and accustomed, nor of right ought to enter, flow, pass, and be carried away from and off the said premises of the plaintiff into the said premises of the defendants, in manner and form as the plaintiff hath in her said declaration in that behalf alleged ; and of this the defendants put themselves upon the country. Thirdly, And as to that part of the said declaration which relates to the eaves and thatch of the said wall in the said declaration mentioned, the defendants say that the plaintiff ought not to have or maintain, &c., because they say that the plaintiff was not, during all the time aforesaid, entitled to the benefit, easement, privilege, and advantage of having and permitting the eaves and thatch of the said wall to extend and project a convenient space beyond and from the said wall over and upon the said premises so as aforesaid in the possession or occupation of the defendants, for the convenience and use of conveying and carrying off and from her said wall and the thatch thereof the rain which from time to time descended and fell thereupon, and of this the defendants also put themselves upon the country. Upon these pleas, issue was joined.

At the trial before Patteson, J., at the last assizes for the county of Devon, the following appeared to be the facts of the case :—Joseph Thomas, the father of the defendants, being seised in fee of the land and premises occupied by the defendants at the time of the alleged injury, purchased the adjoining premises occupied by the plaintiff at the time of the alleged injury, in which there was a term of 500 years. By his will, dated the 18th April, 1816, the former property was devised to his wife for life, with remainder in fee to his son John Vicary Thomas, one of the defendants ; and the latter property was bequeathed for the residue of the term of 500 years to his wife for life, and afterwards to his son William, the husband of the plaintiff. Joseph Thomas died on the 28th of May, 1820, having made Abraham Wreyford the trustee under his will, in whom the legal estate in all the property vested.

The defendants for some time after the death of their father occupied the premises in question as tenants from year to year ; but, on the 10th of April, 1834, a lease of those premises was granted by Mrs. Thomas, the mother of the defendants, and by Wreyford, to the defendant John Vicary Thomas, for sixty years, in case Mrs. Thomas should so long live. Both the defendants continued to carry on their business upon the premises. The plaintiff was in the actual possession of the other premises held for the residue of the term of 500 years, having been put into possession by Wreyford in the month of May, 1834. It appeared, that at one period of time after the death of Joseph Thomas the testator, and before the lease to the defendant John Vicary Thomas, Wreyford the trustee was in possession of both the premises.

The situation of the respective premises with regard to the drain did not become material, the defendants admitting the obstruction, and contesting the plaintiff's right to the easement. With regard to the claim of easement for the eavesdropping, it appeared, that, about thirteen years since, the top of the plaintiff's wall was covered with pantiles, which projected several inches ; but that upon the buildings being accidentally burned, the wall was thatched, and the thatch projected some inches further than the pantiles had done. On this occasion, also, the wall was raised about three feet. The obstruction of the eavesdropping was caused by the defendants building a wall close up to the wall of the plaintiff, within the space over which the pantiles had formerly projected, and within the projection of the thatch.

The existence of the easements in question for the period of upwards of twenty years was proved, and the obstruction of the plaintiff in the user of them was admitted; but it was insisted for the defendants that the right to the easements was determined by the unity of possession of the premises in Wreyford the trustee. It was likewise insisted with regard to the eavesdropping, that by the alteration made by the plaintiff in the height of the wall and the substitution of the thatched for the tiled roof, the right to that easement had ceased. The jury having found a verdict for the plaintiff with 40s. damages, the learned judge gave the defendants leave to move upon the first objection to enter a nonsuit.

Erle now moved accordingly, or for a new trial.

LORD ABINGER, C. B. The union of possession in the trustee did not extinguish the easement, but only suspended it during that unity of possession; and upon his parting with the premises to different tenants, the right revived. The verdict is correct, and ought not to be disturbed.

BOLLAND, B., concurred.

ALDERSON, B. If I am seised of freehold premises, and possessed of leasehold premises adjoining, and there has formerly been an easement enjoyed by the occupiers of the one as against the occupiers of the other, while the premises are in my hands the easement is necessarily suspended, but it is not extinguished, because there is no unity of seisin; and if I part with the premises, the right, not being extinguished, will revive. That was the case here.

TRESPASS for breaking and entering plaintiff's close. Plea (besides others not material here), as to entering the close, that defendant, before the time when, &c., was lawfully possessed of a large quantity of hay, which was upon plaintiff's close in which, &c., and that defendant, at the times when, &c., by leave and license of the plaintiff to him for that purpose first given and granted, peaceably entered the close, to carry off the said hay, and did then and there peaceably take his said hay from and out of the said close, as he lawfully, &c., which are the said alleged trespasses, &c. Replication, de injuria.

On the trial before Erskine, J., at the last Somersetshire Assizes, it appeared that the plaintiff was tenant of a farm, including the locus in quo; and that, his landlord having distrained on him for rent, the goods seized, comprehending the hay mentioned in the plea, were sold on the premises; the conditions of the sale being that the purchasers might let the hay remain on the premises till the Lady-day following (1838), and enter on the premises in the meanwhile, as often as they pleased, to remove it. The defendant purchased the hay at the sale, and evidence was given to show that the plaintiff was a party to these conditions. After the sale, on 26th January, 1838, plaintiff served upon defendant a written notice not to enter or commit any trespass on his, the plaintiff's premises. In February following defendant served plaintiff with a written demand to deliver up the hay, or to suffer him, defendant, to have access thereto and carry it away; threatening an action in default thereof. The plaintiff, however, locked up the gate leading to the locus in quo, where the hay was; and the defendant, on 1st March, 1838, broke the gate open, entered the close, and carried away the hay. The learned judge told the jury that, if the plaintiff assented to the conditions of sale at the time of the sale, this amounted to a license to enter and take the goods, which license was not revocable: and he therefore directed them to find on this issue for the defendant, if they thought the plaintiff had so assented. Verdict for the defendant.

Crowder now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

LORD DENMAN, C. J. Mr. Crowder's argument goes this length,—that if I sell goods to a party who is, by the terms of the sale, to be permitted to come and take them, and he pays me, I may afterwards refuse to let him take them. The law countenances nothing so absurd as this: a license thus given and acted upon is irrevocable.

PATTESON, J. Tayler v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 374, shows that a license to use a seat at the opera-house, paid for and acted upon by sitting there, cannot be countermanded. Here the conditions of sale, to which the plaintiff is a party, are that any one who buys shall be at liberty to enter and take. A person does buy: part of his understanding is that he is to be allowed to enter and take. The license is therefore so far executed as to be irrevocable equally with that in Tayler v. Waters. The case put by Mr. Crowder is different. I do not say that a mere purchase will give a license; but here the license is part of the very contract.

WILLIAMS, J. The plaintiff, having assented to the terms of the contract, put himself into a situation from which he could not withdraw.

COLERIDGE, J. The pleadings raise the issue whether, when the act complained of was done, the leave and license existed: it did exist if it was irrevocable; and I think it was irrevocable. Although no one of the cases referred to is exactly the same as this, yet all proceed on the principle that a man, who, by consenting to certain terms, induces another to do an act, shall not afterwards withdraw from those terms.

WOOD v. LEADBITTER.

EXCHEQUER. 1845.

[Reported 13 M. & W. 838.]

ALDERSON, B.² This was an action tried before my Brother Rolfe at the sittings after last Trinity Term. It was an action for an assault and false imprisonment. The plea (on which alone any question arose) was that at the time of the alleged trespass the plaintiff was in a certain close of Lord Eglintoun, and the defendant, as the servant of Lord Eglintoun, and by his command, laid his hands upon the plaintiff in order to remove him from the said close, using no unnecessary violence. Replication, that, at the time of such removal, the plaintiff was in the said close by the leave and license of Lord Eglintoun. The leave and license was traversed by the defendant, and issue was joined on that traverse. On the trial it appeared that the place from which the plaintiff was removed by the defendant was the enclosure attached to and surrounding the great stand on the Doncaster race-course; that Lord Eglintoun was steward of the races there in the year 1843; that tickets were sold in the town of Doncaster at one guinea each, which were understood to entitle the holders to come into the stand and the enclosure surrounding it, and to remain there every day during the races. These tickets were not signed by Lord Eglintoun, but it must be assumed that they were issued with his privity. It further appeared, that the plaintiff, having purchased one of these tickets, came to the stand during the races of the year 1843, and was there or in the enclosure while the races were going on, and while there, and during the races, the defendant, by the order of Lord Eglintoun, desired him to depart, and gave him notice that if he did not go away, force would be used to turn him out. It must be assumed that the plaintiff had in no respect misconducted himself, and that, if he had not been required to depart, his coming upon and remaining in the enclosure would have been an act justified by his purchase of the ticket. The plaintiff refused to go, and thereupon the defendant, by order of Lord Eglintoun, forced him out, without returning the guinea, using no unnecessary violence.

My Brother Rolfe, in directing the jury, told them that, even assuming the ticket to have been sold to the plaintiff under the sanction of Lord Eglintoun, still it was lawful for Lord Eglintoun, without returning the guinea, and without assigning any reason for what he did, to order the plaintiff to quit the enclosure, and that if the jury were satisfied that notice was given by Lord Eglintoun to the plaintiff, requiring him to quit the ground, and that, before he was forcibly removed by the defendant, a reasonable time had elapsed, during which he might conveniently have gone away, then the plaintiff was not, at the time of the removal, on the place in question by the leave and license of Lord Eglintoun. On this direction the jury found a verdict for the defendant. In last Michaelmas Term, Mr. Jervis obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for misdirection, on the ground, that, under the circumstances, Lord Eglintoun must be taken to have given the plaintiff leave to come into and remain in the enclosure during the races; that such leave was not revocable, at all events without returning the guinea; and so that, at the time of the removal, the plaintiff was in the enclosure by the leave and license of Lord Eglintoun. Cause was shown during last term, and the question was argued before my Brothers PARKE and ROLFE and myself; and on account of the conflicting authorities cited in the argument, we took time to consider our judgment, which we are now prepared to deliver.

That no incorporeal inheritance affecting land can either be created or transferred otherwise than by deed, is a proposition so well established that it would be mere pedantry to cite authorities in its support. All such inheritances are said emphatically to lie in grant, and not in livery, and to pass by mere delivering of the deed. In all the authorities and text-books on the subject, a deed is always stated or assumed to be indispensably requisite.

And although the older authorities speak of incorporeal inheritances, yet there is no doubt but that the principle does not depend on the quality of interest granted or transferred, but on the nature of the subject matter: a right of common, for instance, which is a profit à prendre, or a right of way, which is an easement, or right in nature of an easement, can no more be granted or conveyed for life or for years without a deed, than in fee simple. Now, in the present case, the right claimed by the plaintiff is a right, during a portion of each day, for a limited number of days, to pass into and through and to remain in a certain close belonging to Lord Eglintoun; to go and remain where if he went and remained, he would, but for the ticket, be a trespasser. This is a right affecting land at least as obviously and extensively as a right of way over the land, — it is a right of way and something more; and if we had to decide this case on general principles only, and independently of authority, it would appear to us perfectly clear that no such right can be created otherwise than by deed. The plaintiff, however, in this case argues, that he is not driven to claim the right in question strictly as grantee. He contends, that, without any grant from Lord Eglintoun, he had license from him to be in the close in question at the time when he was turned out, and that such license was, under the circumstances, irrevocable. And for this he relies mainly on four cases, which he considers to be expressly in point for him : viz., Webb v. Paternoster, reported in five different books, namely, Palmer, 71 ; Roll. 143 and 152 ; Noy, 98 ; Popham, 151, and Godbolt, 282 ; Wood v. Lake, Sayer, 3 ; Tuyler v. Waters, 7 Taunt. 374 ; and Wood v. Manley, 11 Ad. & E. 34 ; 3 Per. & D. 5.

As the argument of the plaintiff rested almost entirely on the authority of these four cases, it is very important to look to them minutely, in order to see the exact points which they severally decided.

Before, however, we proceed to this investigation, it may be convenient to consider the nature of a license, and what are its legal incidents. And for this purpose we cannot do better than refer to Lord C. J. Vaughan's elaborate judgment in the case of Thomas v. Sorrell, as it appears in his Reports. The question there was as to the right of the Crown to dispense with certain Statutes regulating the sale of wine, and to license the Vintners' Company to do certain acts notwithstanding those Statutes.

In the course of his judgment the Chief Justice says, Vaughan, 351 : “A dispensation or license properly passeth no interest, nor alters or transfers property in anything, but only makes an action lawful which without it had been unlawful. As a license to go beyond the seas, to hunt in a man's park, to come into his house, are only actions which, without license, had been unlawful. But a license to hunt in a man's park and carry away the deer killed to his own use ; to cut down a tree in a man's ground, and to carry it away the next day after to his own use, — are licenses as to the acts of hunting and cutting down the tree, but as to the carrying away of the deer killed and tree cut down, they are grants. So, to license a man to eat my meat, or to fire the wood in my chimney to warm him by, as to the actions of eating, firing my wood, and warming him, they are licenses ; but it is consequent necessarily to those actions that my property may be destroyed in the meat eaten, and in the wood burnt. So as in some cases, by consequent and not directly, and as its effect, a dispensation or license may destroy and alter property.”

Now, attending to this passage, in conjunction with the title “License” in Brooke's Abridgment, from which, and particularly from paragraph 15, it appears that a license is in its nature revocable, we have before us the whole principle of the law on this subject. A mere license is revocable ; but that which is called a license is often something more than a license : it often comprises or is connected with a grant ; and then the party who has given it cannot in general revoke it, so as to defeat his grant, to which it was incident.

It may further be observed, that a license under seal (provided it be a mere license) is as revocable as a license by parol ; and, on the other hand, a license by parol, coupled with a grant, is as irrevocable as a license by deed, provided only that the grant is of a nature capable of being made by parol. But where there is a license by parol coupled with a parol grant, or pretended grant, of something which is incapable of being granted otherwise than by deed, there the license is a mere license ; it is not an incident to a valid grant, and it is therefore revocable. Thus, a license by A. to hunt in his park, whether given by deed or by parol, is revocable ; it merely renders the act of hunting lawful, which, without the license, would have been unlawful. If the license be as put by Chief Justice Vaughan, a license not only to hunt, but also to take away the deer when killed to his own use, this is in truth a grant of the deer, with a license annexed to come on the land ; and supposing the grant of the deer to be good, then the license would be irrevocable by the party who had given it ; he would be estopped from defeating his own grant, or act in the nature of a grant. But suppose the case of a parol license to come on my lands, and there to make a water-course, to flow on the land of the licensee. In such a case there is no valid grant of the watercourse, and the license remains a mere license, and therefore capable of being revoked. On the other hand, if such a license were granted by deed, then the question would be on the construction of the deed, whether it amounted to a grant of the watercourse ; and if it did, then the license would be irrevocable.

Having premised these remarks on the general doctrine, we will proceed to consider the four cases relied on by Mr. Jervis for the plaintiff. The first was Webb v. Paternoster. That, as appears from the report in Rolle, was an action of trespass, brought against the defendant for eating, by the mouths of his cattle, the plaintiff's hay. The defendant justified under Sir William Plummer, the owner of the fee of the close in which the hay was, averring that Sir W. Plummer leased the close to him, and therefore, as lessee, he turned his cattle into the close, and they ate the hay. The plaintiff replied, that, before the making of the lease, Sir W. Plummer had licensed him to place the hay on the close till he could conveniently sell it, and that, before he could conveniently sell it, Sir W. Plummer leased the land to the defendant. The defendant demurred to the replication.

From the arguments, as given in Rolle, it appears that the plaintiff's counsel, who was first heard, contended, first, that the license, being a license for profit and not merely for pleasure, and being also for a certain time only, namely, till he could sell his hay, was not revocable ; and secondly, even if the license was revocable, still that the lease to the defendant was an implied, and not an express revocation, and therefore was inoperative against him without notice ; and for this he referred to Mallory's Case, 5 Rep. 111. To this latter proposition the court appears to have assented ; but Dodderidge, J., suggested, that, even if the license was in force, still the licensor did not by such a license preclude himself, nor, consequently, his tenant, from turning cattle on the land, and that the licensee ought to have taken care to protect the hay from the cattle. As to this, however, the Chief Justice expressed a doubt. The defendant's counsel was heard some days afterwards, and he alleged that it appeared by the record that the plaintiff had had two years to sell his hay before the defendant's cattle had eaten it; and he argued that the court would say, as matter of law, that this was more than reasonable time; and to this the court assented. The plaintiff's counsel, in reply, reverted to the distinction between the license for profit and a license for pleasure; but Dodderidge denied it, and said that a license to dig gravel, though a license for profit, is revocable; and he said that the true distinction was between a mere license, and a license coupled with an interest. Judgment was eventually given for the defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff had had more than reasonable time to sell the hay.

It will be seen, therefore, that the only two points decided were, first, that the question of reasonable time was for the court, and not for the jury; and secondly, that two years was more than a reasonable time. The decision, therefore, itself has no bearing on the point for which it was cited; and the only support which the case affords to the doctrine contended for by the present plaintiff is what is said, in the report of the case in Popham, to have been agreed by the court, namely, that a license for profit for a term certain is not revocable,—a proposition to which, with the qualification we have already pointed out, we entirely accede. It is, moreover, by no means certain that the license in Web v. Paternoster was not a license under seal. The defendant's counsel appears, from the report in Rolle, to speak of the plaintiff as grantee of the liberty to stack hay, &c.,—a form of expression not very appropriate, if used in respect of a party who had a mere parol license; and the Chief Justice, according to the report in Popham and Palmer, says that the plaintiff had an interest which charged the land, into whose hands soever it should come. And Dodderidge, J., according to the report in Palmer, arguing that the lessee certainly might turn his cattle into his own field, and was not bound to stop their mouths, says it was folly of the plaintiff that he did not together with the license, take a covenant that it should be lawful for him to fence the hay with a hedge. From these expressions (and there are others in the various reports of the case having a similar aspect), it certainly seems possible that the license was under seal; and then the only point would be that which alone was in fact decided, namely, whether, supposing the plaintiff to have acquired by grant a right to stack his hay on the land for a limited time, that limited time had expired. Even supposing the license to have been a mere parol license, yet the strong probability is, that Webb had purchased the hay from Sir W. Plummer as a growing crop, with liberty to stack it on the land, and then the parol license might be good as a license coupled with an interest. Be this, however, as it may, the decision, as we have already pointed out, has very little, or rather no bearing on the case before us; and the judgment of Dodderidge, J., as given both in Rolle and Palmer, is in strict accordance with what was afterwards laid down by Vaughan, C. J., and which we consider to be consonant both to principle and authority.

The next decision in order of time is that of Wood v. Lake, in Sayer, p. 3. There the defendant had, by a parol agreement, given liberty to the plaintiff to stack coals on the defendant's land for a term of seven years. After the plaintiff had enjoyed this privilege for three years, the defendant locked up the gate of the close. No report is given in Sayer of the arguments at the bar. But from a MS. report of the same case, referred to by Gibbs, C. J., in the case of Tayler v. Waters, and which MS. we have had an opportunity of consulting, through the kindness of the representatives of the late Mr. Justice Burrough,¹ it appears that the argument turned wholly on the point whether the privilege of stacking the coals did or did not amount to a lease; for if it did, then the defendant contended it was void after three years, under the Statute of Frauds, as not being in writing. Lee, C. J., and Denison, J., held it to be no lease, nor uncertain interest in land; but Foster, J., doubted, and desired time to consider. On the last day of term, the court gave judgment for the plaintiff, Foster non dissentiente.

Supposing the court to have been right in deciding that this was not

CASE. — A parol agreement that the plaintiff should have liberty of laying and stacking of coals upon defendant's close, for seven years. Afterwards, defendant forbids plaintiff to lay any more coals there, and shuts up his gates. Defendant says, that plaintiff was but tenant at will. Quære, if this was an interest within the description of the Statute of Frauds.

Sergeant Booth. This is but a personal license or easement: 1 Roll. Abr. 859, p. 4; Roll. Rep. 143, 152; 1 Saund. 321. A contract for sale of timber growing upon the land has been determined to be out of the Statute, 1 Ld. Raym. 182. Vide the difference of a license and a lease, 1 Lev. 194. This must be taken only as a license, for that the coal-loaders also are to have benefit, as well as plaintiff.

Sergeant Poole, for defendant. Question is, if any interest in land passed by the agreement; for, if interest passed, it is within the Statute, ergo void, being for longer term than three years: Bro. License, p. 19; Thome v. Seabright, Salk. 24; Web v. Paternoster, Poph. 151. A license to enter upon and occupy land amounts to a lease. The plaintiff not confined to a particular part of the close, and might have covered the whole if he pleased; on that account it is an uncertain interest. The distinction of license to plaintiff and his coal-loader is nothing; he could not stack the coal himself, and it is merely vague. Easement may be of more value than the inheritance; ex gr. way-leave.

LEE, C. J. If this be a lease, as it is argued, it is within the Statute, and void, for not being in writing. No answer as yet is given to the case in Popham, when the stacking of hay, which is similar, was determined to be a license. The word uncertain, in the Statute, means uncertainty of duration, not of quantity. License was not revocable, and here is no case to show this to be considered as a lease.

DENISON, J. This seems not to be an interest, so called in the language of the law, although easements, in general speaking, may be called interests. Had the plaintiff such an interest as to have maintained a clausum fregit? Certainly not. If a man licenses to enjoy lands for five years, there is a lease, because the whole interest passes; but this was only a license for a particular purpose.

FOSTER, J. These interests, grounded upon licenses, are valuable, and deserve the protection of the law, and therefore may perhaps have been within the intention of the words of the Statute. Desired further time for consideration: stood over.

N. B. Afterwards, upon motion for judgment the last day of term, and gave judgment for plaintiff, Foster non dissentiente.

a lease (which, however, is doubted by Sir E. Sugden, see 1 V. & P., last edit., p. 139), yet no grounds are stated on which it could be held good as an easement originating merely by parol. Up to this case not a single decision is to be found giving countenance to any such proposition; and we are compelled to say, that, if the court proceeded on the ground that the plaintiff had acquired the easement by the parol license, we do not think it can be supported. But the case may, perhaps, have been decided on another ground. The defendant himself was the party who had agreed to give the easement to the plaintiff; and although the action is stated to have been an action on the case, it may have been a mere assumpsit, — an action on the case on promises; and in such an action the plaintiff would certainly be entitled to recover, if the contract was not (and probably the court considered it was not) a contract concerning land, within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds.

The next case on which the plaintiff relies is Taylor v. Waters, reported in 7 Taunt. 374. It was an action by the plaintiff against the door-keeper of the Opera-house, for preventing him from entering the house during the performance of an opera. It appeared that one W. Taylor, being in possession of the Opera-house, as lessee for a long term of years, by a deed, dated the 24th of August, 1792, assigned his interest therein to trustees, on various trusts, for creditors and other claimants, and ultimately in trust for himself. After the execution of this deed, Taylor continued in possession by the permission of the trustees, and he carried on and managed the affairs of the theatre. In March, 1799, he, by deed, granted to one Gourgas, for a valuable consideration, six silver tickets, entitling the holders to admission to the theatre. One of these tickets was sold by Gourgas to the plaintiff, in July, 1799, but no deed of assignment to him was executed. In 1800, Taylor's trustees took possession of the theatre. The plaintiff, however, was allowed to attend the theatre, by virtue of his ticket, until the year 1814, when the defendant Waters, as servant of the trustees, prevented him from entering the theatre; and for this obstruction the action was brought. The cause was tried before C. J. Gibbs, and a verdict found for the plaintiff, and that verdict was afterwards upheld by the Court of Common Pleas. The grounds of the judgment were, that the right under the silver ticket was not an interest in land, but a license irrevocable to permit the plaintiff to enjoy certain privileges thereon; that it was not required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing, and consequently, might be granted without a deed.

The Chief Justice, in support of that doctrine, relied on Web v. Paternoster, which, he said, showed that a beneficial license, to be exercised upon land, might be granted without deed, and could not be countermanded, at least after it had been acted on. The same case, he added, showed that the interest was not such an interest in land as was required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing; as to which last point all doubt, if there remained any, had (he said) been removed by the case of Wood v. Lake.

This judgment is stated by the learned reporter to have comprised the substance of the arguments on both sides, and which, therefore, he does not give in his report. We must infer from this that the attention of the court was not called in the argument to the principles and earlier authorities, to which we have adverted. Brooke, in his Abridgment, Dodderidge, in the case of Web v. Paternoster, and Lord Ellenborough, in the case of Rex v. Horndon-on-the-Hill, 4 M. & Selw. 562, all state in the most distinct manner that every license is and must be in its nature revocable, so long as it is a mere license. Where, indeed, it is connected with a grant, there it may, by ceasing to be a naked license, become irrevocable; but then it is obvious that the grant must exist independently of the license, unless it be a grant capable of being made by parol, or by the instrument giving the license. Now in Tayler v. Waters there was no grant of any right at all, unless such right was conferred by the license itself. C. J. Gibbs gives no reason for saying that the license was a license irrevocable, and we cannot but think that he would have paused before he sanctioned a doctrine so entirely repugnant to principle and to the earlier authorities, if they had been fully brought before the court. Again, the Chief Justice is represented as saying that the interest of the plaintiff was not an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds, and that consequently it might be granted without deed. How the circumstance, that the interest was not an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds showed it to be grantable without deed, we cannot discover. The precise point decided in Web v. Paternoster is not adverted to, and it is assumed, without discussion, that the license there must have been a parol license, and a naked license, unconnected with an interest capable of being created by parol. The action was not, as it may have been in Wood v. Lake, an action founded on the contract. It was an action on the case for the obstruction, and was founded on the supposition that an actual right to enter and remain in the theatre had vested in the plaintiff, under the license conferred by the silver ticket. With all deference to the high authority from which the judgment in Tayler v. Waters proceeded, we feel warranted in saying that it is to the last degree unsatisfactory,—an observation which we have the less hesitation in making, in consequence of its soundness having obviously been doubted by the Court of King's Bench and Mr. Justice Bayley in the case of Hewlins v. Shippam.

The fourth and last case relied on by Mr. Jervis was the recent case of Wood v. Manley, in the Queen's Bench, 11 Ad. & E. 34; 3 Per. & D. 5. That was an action for trespass quare clausum fregit: plea, that defendant was possessed of a large quantity of hay being on the plaintiff's close, and that by leave of plaintiff he entered on the close in question to remove it. Replication, de injuria. It was proved at the trial that the hay in question was sold in January, 1838, by the plaintiff's landlord, who had seized it as a distress for rent. The conditions of the sale were, that the purchaser of the hay might leave it on the close until Lady-day, and might in the mean time come on to the close from time to time, as often as he should see fit, to remove it. These conditions were assented to by the plaintiff. The defendant became the purchaser, and afterwards, and before Lady-day, the plaintiff locked up the close. The defendant broke open the gate in order to remove the hay. A verdict was found for the defendant, Erskine, J., telling the jury that the license to come from time to time to remove the hay was irrevocable. Mr. Crowder moved to set aside this verdict, on the ground that the license was necessarily revocable, and was in fact revoked. But the Court of Queen's Bench refused to grant a rule, and we think, quite rightly. This was a case not of a mere license, but of a license coupled with an interest. The hay, by the sale, became the property of the defendant, and the license to remove it became, as in the case of the tree and the deer, put by C. J. Vaughan, irrevocable by the plaintiff; and the rule was properly refused. The case was analogous to that of a man taking my goods, and putting them on his land, in which case I am justified in going on the land and removing them: Vin. Abr. Trespass, (H) a 2, pl. 12; and Patrick v. Colerick, 3 M. & W. 483.

It appears, therefore, that the only authority necessarily supporting the present plaintiff in the proposition for which he is contending, is the case of Tayler v. Waters, in which the real difficulty was not discussed, nor even stated. It was taken for granted, that, if the Statute of Frauds did not apply, a parol license was sufficient, and the necessity of an instrument under seal, by reason of the interest in question being a right in nature of an easement, was by some inadvertence kept entirely out of sight; and for these reasons, even if there had been no conflicting decisions, we should have thought that case to be a very unsafe guide in leading us to a decision, on an occasion where we were called on to lose sight of the ancient landmarks of the common law.

We are not, however, driven to say that we shall disregard that case merely on principle. Giving it the full weight of judicial decision, it is met by several others, which we must entirely disregard, before we can adopt the argument of the plaintiff. In the cases of Fentiman v. Smith, 4 East, 107, and Rex v. Horndon-on-the-Hill, 4 M. & Sel. 565, which were before Tayler v. Waters, Lord Ellenborough and the Court of King's Bench expressly recognized the doctrine, that a license is no grant, and that it is in its nature necessarily revocable, and the further doctrine, that, in order to confer an incorporeal right, an instrument under seal is essential. And in the elaborate judgment of the Court of King's Bench, given by Bayley, J., in Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & C. 222, the necessity of a deed, for creating any incorporeal right affecting land, was expressly recognized, and formed the ground of the decision. It is true that the interest in question in that case was a freehold interest, and on that ground Bayley, J., suggests that it might be distinguished from Tayler v. Waters; but in an earlier part of that same judgment, he states, conformably to what is the clear law, that, in his opinion, the quantity of interest made no difference; and the distinction is evidently adverted to by him, not because he entertained the opinion that it really was of importance, but only in order to enable him to decide that case without, in terms, saying that he did not consider the case of Tayler v. Waters to be law. The doctrine of Hewlins v. Shippam has since been recognized and acted upon in Bryan v. Whistler, 8 B. & C. 288; Cocker v. Cowper, 1 C. M., & R. 418; and Wallis v. Harrison, 4 M. & W. 538; and it would be impossible for us to adopt the plaintiff's view of the law without holding all those cases to have been ill-decided. It was suggested that, in the present case, a distinction might exist, by reason of the plaintiff's having paid a valuable consideration for the privilege of going on the stand. But this fact makes no difference: whether it may give the plaintiff a right of action against those from whom he purchased the ticket, or those who authorized its being issued and sold to him, is a point not necessary to be discussed; any such action would be founded on a breach of contract, and would not be the result of his having acquired by the ticket a right of going upon the stand, in spite of the owner of the soil; and it is sufficient, on this point, to say, that in several of the cases we have cited (Hewlins v. Shippam, for instance, and Bryan v. Whistler) the alleged license had been granted for a valuable consideration, but that was not held to make any difference. We do not advert to the cases of Winter v. Brockwell, 8 East, 308, and Liggins v. Inge, 7 Bing. 682, or other cases ranging themselves in the same category, as they were decided on grounds inapplicable to the case now before us, and were, in fact, admitted not to bear upon it.

In conclusion, we have only to say, that, acting upon the doctrine relative to licenses, as we find it laid down by Brooke, by Mr. Justice Dodderidge, and by C. J. Vaughan, and sanctioned by Hewlins v. Shippam, and the other modern cases proceeding on the same principle, we have come to the conclusion that the direction given to the jury at the trial was correct, and that this rule must be discharged.

DEVONSHIRE v. EGLIN.

CHANCERY. 1851.

[Reported 14 Beav. 530.]

THIS bill was filed by the Duke of Devonshire and sixteen other persons against Thomas Eglin.

It stated that in 1840 the town of Grassington was much inconvenienced by the want of a supply of water, and that the plaintiffs discovered that a good supply might be obtained by conveying it through the lands of the intermediate proprietors to the town. That the plaintiffs and others raised a subscription for that purpose, and that the plaintiff Mason, on behalf of himself and the other subscribers, applied to the defendant to permit the proposed watercourse to pass under his land, which he agreed to do. "That on behalf of the subscribers," it was agreed that 2*s. 6d.* a year should be paid the defendant for his permission. That such watercourse was completed in 1840, at an expense of £86, and was used down to 1849; but some disputes as to other matters having arisen, the defendant stopped the watercourse. The bill stated that the 2*s. 6d.* had never been applied for, but that the plaintiffs were willing to pay it. It alleged that the expenditure had been made on the faith of the agreement, and that no grant by deed had ever been made.

The bill prayed a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to the use and enjoyment of the watercourse, and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from obstructing the flow of water through his land.

The defendant admitted he consented to the passage of the water through his land "upon condition of his being paid a proper and reasonable sum or price for that consent and permission;" but he said that no sum had at any time been agreed on between him and the plaintiffs as the price of such consent or permission.

That after it had been made the defendant repeatedly applied to the plaintiffs to come to an agreement as to the price to be paid, but no agreement had ever been come to and no price had ever been fixed.

He admitted he had, in December, 1849, diverted the water, and stated that negotiations had taken place, and that he had offered to take 10*s.* a year for the past, and £1 for the future, but that such offer had not been accepted. He said that he had always been ready to grant the right, upon payment of a just and reasonable sum, but that he had never sold or agreed to sell the watercourse, or to make a grant thereof, and that he never directly or indirectly encouraged the plaintiffs in laying out money in making the watercourse. There being no contract in writing, he insisted on the benefit of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Charles II. cap. 3. He denied the agreement to pay the 2*s. 6d.* a year, and that fact was not proved.

There was evidence to show that the defendant, without objection, saw the works in their then progress, and said to the workmen: "Take care that you don't stop up my drains in cutting through them, for if you do, I shall tear up your watercourse." There was no other proof that the defendant encouraged the proceedings.

The cause now came on for hearing.

Mr. R. Palmer and Mr. Currey, for the plaintiffs.

Mr. Elmsley and Mr. Prendergast, for the defendant.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS [SIR JOHN ROMILLY]. I think that the frame of this bill is defective; but I will give leave to amend, and express my opinion on the assumption that the record will be put into a proper state.

I am of opinion that the passages read from the answer show that there was a parol agreement to allow the watercourse to be made through the defendant's land, in consideration of payment of a reasonable sum. The watercourse was made in the year 1840, and from that time until the latter end of 1849, this easement was enjoyed without any dispute or contest on the part of the defendant. In that year the defendant, in consequence of other disputes, insisted on the price being ascertained, and the evidence shows that the parties have not since been able to agree. The work has, however, been effected and used nearly ten years, and I am of opinion that the defendant cannot prevent the plaintiff's enjoyment of this right.

The subscribers, who were the contracting parties, are not all plaintiffs; but I will give leave to the plaintiffs to amend the bill by making it on behalf of all the subscribers, and at the same time allowing the defendant to make any objection to the frame of the amended record which he may think fit.

I am of opinion that the inhabitants are entitled to the relief asked, and to the benefit of this water, paying a proper compensation to the defendant; and it appears to me that the regular mode of ascertaining the amount will be to refer it to the master, to ascertain what will be a proper compensation for the past and future use.

The bill being amended by making it on behalf of all the subscribers, the decree was made, declaring the plaintiffs entitled, referring it to the master to ascertain a proper rent, and to settle a proper deed, and granting a perpetual injunction in the terms prayed.

WARD v. WARD.

EXCHEQUER. 1852.

[Reported 7 Ex. 838.]

TRESPASS for breaking and entering two closes of the plaintiff, with horses, carts, &c.

The defendant pleaded, first, Not guilty. Secondly, that he was seised of a close called the Stubbing Pits; and he then prescribed for an immemorial right of way over the closes in question to and from the Stubbing Pits, and for the occupation thereof. Thirdly and fourthly, forty and twenty years' user respectively of such right of way, under the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 71. The plaintiff joined issue on the first plea, and traversed the rights respectively set up in the other pleas ; and he also new assigned for trespasses committed extra viam ; to which new assignment the defendant pleaded Not guilty ; and issue was joined thereon.

At the trial, before Jervis, C. J., at the last Derbyshire Assizes, it appeared that the defendant was the owner of the close called the Stubbing Pits, and that in former times the owners of that close were entitled to use, and did use, the disputed way in question ; but that, in point of fact, the user had not been exercised from the year 1814 up to the time of the alleged trespasses. During this interval the plaintiff himself held the Stubbing Pits, with other land ; and then a tenant named Bishop held it, and paid an acknowledgment to the plaintiff for using a different means of access ; and then another tenant held it for twenty-six years, during all which time he made no use of the way in question, because he had other lands of his own adjoining the Stubbing Pits, which furnished him with a shorter and more convenient way to and from the Stubbing Pits ; but, in order to prevent any question arising as to a right being acquired on his own land, he regularly obtained an allowance of 1*s.* out of his rent as an acknowledgment for the use of the way over his own land. Under these circumstances a verdict was entered for the plaintiff with 40*s.* damages, with leave to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for him upon the issue raised by the second plea.

A rule nisi having been obtained accordingly,

Hayes (with whom was Deighton) showed cause. The disuse of the right of way for upwards of twenty years amounts to an abandonment of the right. The defendant has therefore lost the right of way which originally belonged to the Stubbing Pits. This is a right which may be presumed from a continued user, and by non-user the right may be presumed to have been given up : Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 332. Littledale, J., there says : "After twenty years' adverse enjoyment the law presumes a grant made before the user commenced, by some person who had power to grant. But if the party who has acquired the right by grant, ceases for a long period of time to make use of the privilege so granted to him, it may then be presumed that he has released the right." [ALDERSON, B. The presumption of abandonment cannot be made from the mere fact of non-user. There must be other circumstances in the case to raise that presumption. The right is acquired by adverse enjoyment. The non-user, therefore, must be the consequence of something which is adverse to the user. Here the owners of the Stubbing Pits did not use the way in question, for the simple reason that they had a more easy and convenient means of access to that part of their property. If the owner of that close were now precluded from recovering the original right, he would be without the means of any access to his property. POLLOCK, C. B. It is a question of fact, and one which could only be found one way. The only inference that could reasonably be drawn from the non-user by this party is, that he had no occasion for it.]

Macaulay and Brewer, in support of the rule, were not called upon.
PER CURIAM.¹ The rule must be absolute.

*Rule absolute.*²

HARVEY v. WALTERS. ✓

COMMON PLEAS. 1873.

[Reported L. R. 8 C. P. 162.]

THE third count of the declaration alleged that the plaintiff was entitled to a right of having rain-water drop from the eaves of certain roofs on the plaintiff's land on to the defendant's land adjoining, and of having the eaves of such buildings project over the defendant's land, and complained that the defendant wrongfully removed the said eaves and built upon the said land close to and higher than the said roofs, so as to prevent the said eaves from projecting over the said land, and the rain-water from dropping from the said eaves on the said land, &c.

Fourth count for negligence by the defendant in erecting certain buildings in close proximity to buildings of the plaintiff, so that the walls and roof of the plaintiff's buildings were injured and the spouts for carrying off the rain-water from the said roof were damaged.

Pleas (inter alia): Third plea to the third count denying that the plaintiff was entitled as alleged.

Fifth plea to the fourth count alleging that the plaintiff had wrongfully placed the spouts and part of the roof of plaintiff's buildings, so that they overhung defendant's land, wherefore defendant removed the same, doing no unnecessary damage, &c.

Issues.

At the trial before Quain, J., at the Nottingham Spring Assizes, the facts appeared to be as follows: The plaintiff and defendant were owners of adjoining properties, and it was not denied that the plaintiff had become entitled by user to a right of having the eaves of buildings on his land project over the defendant's land; but the plaintiff had some short time before the action pulled down the buildings that had formerly stood on his land, and rebuilt them, and in so doing had carried the wall on which the projections had been to a greater height than the old building, and so increased the height of the eaves from the ground by three or four courses of bricks. There was no alteration in the character of the eaves save the slightly increased height, nor was there anything to show that the water fell from the eaves in a different manner from that in which it had previously fallen so as to render the servitude more onerous. The defendant had thereupon removed some of the spouting of plaintiff's building and put back the eaves to make room for buildings which she erected on her own land. On these facts the verdict was entered for the plaintiff for 40s., leave being reserved to move to enter it for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff had lost his right to have his eaves project over defendant's land by raising his roof.

A rule nisi having been accordingly obtained,—

Field, Q. C., and Kennedy, showed cause.

Cave and J. C. Lawrence, supported the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the court (BOVILL, C. J., GROVE and DENMAN, JJ.) was delivered by GROVE, J. This action was tried before Quain, J., at the Nottingham Spring Assizes, 1872, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to a point reserved upon the 3d count of the declaration, which was for an interference with a right of eavesdropping from a roof of the plaintiff upon the defendant's premises. A rule was subsequently obtained by Mr. Cave, on the part of the defendant, to enter the verdict for her upon the issues on this point, on the ground that plaintiff, by raising his roof, had lost the right to project his eaves and gutter over the defendant's land, and that is the only point which is open to the defendant on the present rule. The question was reserved at the trial, in order to enable the defendant to take the opinion of the court upon the point raised in Thomas v. Thomas, 2 C. M. & R. 34. But for the alteration the right to the easement was established by the evidence and the verdict of the jury. In 1867 the plaintiff made some alteration in his building by which the eaves were raised higher by three or four courses of bricks, but the extent of projection of the eaves remained as before the alteration. Things being in this state, the defendant shortly before the time of the action removed some spouting, and put back the eaves to make room for some buildings which she erected, and thereby damaged the plaintiff by causing the water which had flowed off to percolate into crevices, and obliging him to construct a new gutter along the roof. It was contended by Mr. Cave, on behalf of the defendant, that by the change in the position of the eaves in 1867, the mode of enjoyment was changed and the easement destroyed. Mr. Field, on the other hand, contended, on the authority of Thomas v. Thomas, that there being no substantial variance in the enjoyment, the right to the easement was not affected. In that case, which was very similar to the present, and not distinguishable in principle from it, it was held that the raising a wall about three feet, from which water dropped on the servient tenement, and also slightly increasing the projection by substituting thatch for pantiles, did not destroy the easement. It was, however, argued by Mr. Cave that, on the principle of cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum, there was a trespass in this case which the person trespassed on had a right to abate. Mr. Field, contra, contended that the point did not arise upon the rule, and that in the case of Pickering v. Rudd, 4 Camp. 219, Lord Ellenborough held, that for nailing a board so as to overhang the plaintiff's close the proper remedy was case and not trespass; and, assuming the point as to trespass to be open to the defendant upon this rule, which was granted only on the point reserved at the trial, the original projection would seem to be the real trespass, and the projection above it a mere user of the space taken possession of by such trespass. The real and indeed the only point reserved, however, was whether the easement was destroyed by the alteration. It is difficult to see how the mere raising of the eaves, which would, if anything, cause the water falling from them to become more dispersed, could affect injuriously the defendant's property. No real difference was pointed out to us in the effect of the slight raising of the height of the eaves. It did not appear that any greater burden was thereby cast upon the servient tenement, and in the civil law it was considered that the raising of the eaves diminished instead of increasing the burden of the servitus in the passage cited by Mr. Field.

It appears to us that to hold that any, even the slightest, variation in the enjoyment of an easement would destroy the easement, would virtually do away with all easements, as by the effect of natural causes some change must take place. Thus water percolating or flowing would produce some wear and tear, and alter the height or width of the conduit; so would weather, alternations of heat and cold, &c. In the case of ancient lights, changes in the transparency of glass, wear and tear of frames, growth of shrubs, &c., would produce effects which would vary the character of the enjoyment. In the user of a footpath the footsteps would never be on the same line, or confined accurately to the same width of road. We are of opinion that the question here, as in Hall v. Swift, 4 Bing. N. C. 381, and other cases, is, whether there has been a substantial variance in the mode of or extent of user or enjoyment of the easement, so as to throw a greater burden on the servient tenement. In the language of Sir Richard Kindersley, which was adopted by the Master of the Rolls in the late case of Heath v. Bucknell, Law Rep. 8 Eq. at p. 5, there must be an additional or different servitude, and the change must be material either in the nature or in the quantum of the servitude imposed. It was not suggested, nor was there any evidence that any such additional burden had been cast upon the defendant's premises by the alteration in this case, and therefore we are of opinion that the defendant is not entitled to have the verdict entered in her favor upon the issues in question, and that the present rule must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

RERICK v. KERN.

SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA. 1826.

[Reported 14 S. & R. 267.]

ON the return of a writ of error from the Common Pleas of Union county, it appeared from the record, that this was a special action on the case, brought by Henry Kern, the defendant in error, against Henry Rerick, the plaintiff in error, for diverting a watercourse, in consequence of which he lost the use of his saw-mill. The defendant pleaded, Not guilty.

The material facts, proved on the trial, were that some years before the institution of the suit, Henry Kern, the plaintiff below, being about to erect a saw-mill on a stream which was designated by the witnesses as the right-hand stream, a better seat for the mill was found by his millwright on what was termed the left-hand stream. Kern thereupon applied to Rerick for permission to turn the water into the left-hand stream, which was granted. In consequence of this permission, he built the saw-mill upon the left-hand stream. Without the aid of the right-hand stream, the water of the left-hand stream would have been wholly insufficient; but the right-hand stream alone would have served the purposes of the mill three or four months during the year. By a union of the two streams, the mill was rendered about a third more valuable than it would have been with the right-hand stream alone. No deed was executed, nor was any consideration given; but Kern, in consequence of the permission given by Rerick, built a very good mill, which did a great deal of business, and which he would not have built on the left-hand stream, if the permission had not been given. When the water was turned away by Rerick, the mill was in good order, and it was further proved, that, at the time the trial took place, there was as much or more water in the left-hand stream than there had been before the erection of the saw-mill.

The President of the Court of Common Pleas (Chapman) charged the jury as follows:—

“ Two questions arise in this cause. The first is, whether Henry Rerick, after permitting and agreeing that Henry Kern should turn the water from the right-hand stream to the left-hand stream, when, if he had not given that permission, he would have built his mill upon the right-hand stream, can he, Henry Rerick, afterwards withdraw his permission, and thereby destroy the use of Kern’s saw-mill. His withdrawing that permission after the mill was built, by removing the stones laid for the purpose of turning the water, if the jury believe these facts, would be a fraud and imposition upon Henry Kern, and he would have no right to remove them. But if he had withdrawn his permission, and removed the dam before Henry Kern was at the expense of building a mill, he would have been justifiable in so doing. Or if the permission was by parol to enjoy a right which could only pass by grant for a consideration, it would be within the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries, and not good in law. But if the jury believe the act was fraudulent in Henry Rerick, he is liable to pay damages to Henry Kern for the injury done him. Of the amount of damages the jury are the judges. The second question,— if the jury believe that no fraud has been committed by Henry Rerick, is, did Rerick, by removing the dam, divert the water from the left-hand stream, so as to leave less water running in the left-hand stream than there was formerly before the dam was erected? This is a fact for the jury; and if the jury believe that Rerick has diverted the water from the ancient channel, which he had no right to do to the injury of Kern, and that Kern has suffered damage thereby, the jury are to determine to what amount if any damage the plaintiff has suffered."

The court was requested, by the counsel for the defendant, to instruct the jury in the following manner:—

"1. That if Rerick, about the year 1811, did allow the plaintiff, as proved by William Teats, to place an obstruction in the natural channel of one branch of the stream on Rerick's own land, yet that being without any consideration, and merely by parol, no legal right to the stream, or the use thereof, passed thereby to Kern, but Rerick had a right, at any time, to remove the said obstruction, so that the water could flow at any time in its natural channel."

Answer. "In answer to the first question,— he would have a right to remove the said obstruction, before Kern had incurred the expense of building a saw-mill on the faith of Rerick's promise, or he would have had a right, if the permission or promise had been after the building of the mill, but not after he had induced Kern to be at the expense of building the mill."

"2. That an action for diverting an ancient watercourse does not lie for removing an artificial obstruction from the natural channel, whereby the water was made to flow as it used to do from time immemorial."

Answer. "That is the general principle of the law; but to this there are exceptions, where, by so doing, the party commits a fraud and an action will lie."

"3. That if the jury believe the whole evidence exhibited by the plaintiff in this cause, Rerick could legally, in the fall of 1821, remove the dam placed in the forks of the stream by Kern on Rerick's land, and for removing the same no action lies, whether Kern sustained thereby a loss or not."

Answer. "If the jury believe that there was no fraud in Rerick's removing the dam, in which case he would have a legal right to do it, no action would lie."

"4. That if the jury believe the water, ever since the removal of the obstruction at the forks, has run, and continues to run, in its natural channel, as it used to do from time immemorial, their verdict should be for the defendant."

Answer. "If the jury so believe, and that no fraud was committed by removing this obstruction, or dam, then your verdict should be for the defendant."

The counsel for the defendant excepted to the opinion of the court, both in their charge to the jury and in their answers to the several propositions submitted to them.

Greenough, for the plaintiff in error.

Lashells, for the defendant in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

GIBSON, J. To the objection, that an action for diverting an ancient watercourse is not supported by evidence of the removal of an artificial obstruction, it is sufficient to answer, that in the case before us, the right depends, not on the antiquity of the watercourse, but on the agreement of the parties; and the question therefore is, Would equity carry this agreement into effect?

That such an agreement may be proved by parol, was settled in Le Fevre v. Le Fevre, 4 Serg. & Rawle, 241, which, in this respect, goes as far as the case before us. The defence there was, that the right, being incorporeal, and therefore lying in grant, could pass only by deed. But as the agreement was for a privilege to lay pipes, it is evident that the right acquired under it was no further incorporeal than that which passes by the grant of a mine, or of a right to build, which indisputably vests an interest in the soil. A right of way, which has been thought to approach it more nearly, in fact differs from it still further. But the defence in this case is put on other ground, it being contended that a mere license is revocable under all circumstances, and at any time.

But a license may become an agreement on valuable consideration, as where the enjoyment of it must necessarily be preceded by the expenditure of money; and when the grantee has made improvements or invested capital in consequence of it, he has become a purchaser for a valuable consideration. Such a grant is a direct encouragement to expend money, and it would be against all conscience to annul it, as soon as the benefit expected from the expenditure is beginning to be perceived. Why should not such an agreement be decreed in specie? That a party should be let off from his contract on payment of a compensation in damages, is consistent with no system of morals but the common law, which was in this respect originally determined by political considerations, the policy of its military tenures requiring that the services to be rendered by the tenant to his feudal superior should not be prevented by want of personal independence. Hence the judgment of a court of law operates on the right of a party, and the decree of a court of equity on the person. But the reason of this distinction has long ceased, and equity will execute every agreement for the breach of which damages may be recovered, where an action for damages would be an inadequate remedy. How very inadequate it would be in a case like this, is perceived by considering that a license which has been followed by the expenditure of ten thousand dollars, as a necessary qualification to the enjoyment of it, may be revoked by an obstinate man who is not worth as many cents. But, besides this risk of insolvency, the law in barely compensating the want of performance, subjects the injured party to risk from the ignorance or dishonesty of those who are to estimate the quantum of the compensation. In the case under consideration, no objection to a specific performance can be founded on the intrinsic nature of the agreement, nor, having been partly executed, on the circumstance of its resting in parol; but it is to be considered as if there had been a formal conveyance of the right, and nothing remains but to determine its duration and extent.

A right under a license, when not specially restricted, is commensurate with the thing of which the license is an accessory. Permission to use water for a mill, or anything else that was viewed by the parties as a permanent erection, will be of unlimited duration, and survive the erection itself, if it should be destroyed or fall into a state of dilapidation; in which case the parties might perhaps be thought to be remitted to their former rights. But having had in view an unlimited enjoyment of the privilege, the grantee has purchased by the expenditure of money a right, indefinite in point of duration, which cannot be forfeited by non-user, unless for a period sufficient to raise the presumption of a release. The right to rebuild, in case of destruction or dilapidation, and to continue the business on its original footing, may have been in view as necessary to his safety, and may have been an inducement to the particular investment in the first instance. The cost of rebuilding a furnace, for instance, would be trivial when weighed with the loss that would be caused by breaking up the business and turning the capital into other channels; and therefore a license to use water for a furnace would endure forever. But it is otherwise where the object to be accomplished is temporary. Such usually is the object to be accomplished by a saw-mill, the permanency of which is dependent on a variety of circumstances, such as an abundance of timber, on the failure of which the business necessarily is at an end. But, till then, it constitutes a right for the violation of which redress may be had by action. With this qualification it may safely be affirmed that expending money or labor, in consequence of a license to divert a watercourse or use a water-power in a particular way, has the effect of turning such license into an agreement that will be executed in equity. Here it was not pretended that the license had expired, and we are unable to discover an error in the opinion of the court on the points that were propounded.

BRIDGES v. PURCELL.

SUPREME COURT OF NORTH CAROLINA. 1836.

[Reported 1 Dev. & B. 492.]

THIS was a petition filed by the plaintiff for an injury to his land and dwelling, caused by a mill-pond of the defendants.

Upon the trial before Strange, Judge, at Roberson, on the last Fall Circuit, the only question being whether the plaintiff had a right to recover, and if so, how much, the defendants proved that the father of the plaintiff, under whom he claimed, being informed, previously to the erection of the dam, by the person under whom they claimed, of his intention to build a mill, expressed his satisfaction at the prospect, and gave his permission to raise the dam as high as might be necessary.

His Honor informed the jury that if they believed this testimony, the plaintiff could not recover, unless the dam had, subsequently to the license, been raised still higher.

A verdict was returned for the plaintiff; but he, being dissatisfied with the amount of damages, appealed.

No counsel appeared for either party.

Gaston, Judge. The error assigned upon this appeal is to be found in an exception to the charge of the judge. The instruction complained of lays it down for law, that if the owner of a tract of land has, by the erection of a mill-dam, ponded the land of another, under a parol license from him, those who succeed to the estate in the land thus ponded, cannot, because of a continuance of the nuisance, recover against the alienee of him who erected the dam, unless the dam has been raised to a greater height than was originally permitted. We suppose that this instruction is founded upon a principle recognized, or thought to be recognized, in several adjudications, that a verbal authority is not only an excuse for what has been done under it, but cannot be countermanded if once acted upon, without, at least, putting the person licensed in the same condition wherein he was before acting on the license. The occasion does not call upon us to examine the correctness of this principle, or to define its extent, should the correctness be admitted; and on questions of acknowledged difficulty,

The favor once shown to it in Maine, Ricker v. Kelly, 1 Greenl. 117; in New Hampshire, Ameriscoggin Bridge v. Bragg, 11 N. H. 102; and in Illinois, *Russell v. where we have not the benefit of a discussion (and in this case there has been no counsel), we feel ourselves bound to exercise caution in forbearing to decide any unnecessary point. The cases that bear upon this doctrine, so far as we know of them, and they are accessible to us, have been carefully examined, and the result is, a conviction that they do not warrant the instruction given; or, if they do, that the instruction, notwithstanding these decisions, is, nevertheless, erroneous. One of the latest of these decisions is Liggins v. Inge, reported 7 Bing. 682. It is not amiss to remark the extreme caution with which that case is spoken of by Chief Justice Denman, in delivering his very able opinion, and the judgment of the court on the case of Mason v. Hill, reported 5 Barn. & Ald. 1. Supposing it, however, to have been properly decided (of which we say nothing), it seems to us to have been determined on grounds not applicable to the subject now under consideration. In that case the plaintiff's father, by parol license, had permitted the defendants to lower the banks of a river, and make a weir above the plaintiff's mill, whereby less water flowed to it than before; and it was held that the plaintiff could not sue the defendants for refusing to raise the bank to its former height, and to remove the weir, and thus continuing the diminished flow of water to the plaintiff's mill. The determination is distinctly placed upon these positions, that the water in the river is public property, open to the use of all; that the party who first appropriates to his own use any portion of it flowing through his own land, has the right to the use of what is thus appropriated, against all others; and that the water, after such appropriation, may be given back to the public, and then appropriated by other individuals to their use. The parol license was regarded, not as transferring to the defendants any right or interest in the water accustomed to flow to the plaintiff's mill, but as giving back and yielding up to the public—for the use of whoever might afterwards appropriate it—that quantity of the water which found its way over the weir and the lowered banks. In the present case the defendants claim the privilege to throw the water of their mill-pond upon the land of the plaintiff. They certainly have it not of common right. They claim it as having belonged to their vendor, because of a license from the former proprietor of the plaintiff's land, and as having been transmitted to them, along with his sale of the land, which they hold as an appurtenance to the thing thereby conveyed.

The case of Tayler v. Waters, reported 2 Mars. 551, and 7 Taunt. 374, though connected with this subject, decides nothing upon this question. It decides that a license of free admission for the term of twenty-one years to a theatre, on nights of public exhibition, granted for a valuable consideration, is valid. It also decides that such a license may be granted by parol, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds. Of the first position we see no cause to doubt. A license for a valuable consideration for a specified time, is in law a grant of the thing, or the use thereof for that time, and by the force of the executed contract as a lease, or a grant, passes an irrevocable right during the time to the privilege thereby granted. Popham, 151; Vin. Abr. tit. License, E. Vaughan, 351.

The correctness of the second position has been questioned (see 2 Chitty's Prac. 339, and Sugden on Vendors, 57), and is opposed by a strength of reasoning not easily answered. But we have no concern with it. Our Statute of Frauds certainly does not embrace such a license, whatever interest it may pass, for that Statute applies not to executed contracts. The case of Winter v. Brockwell, 8 East, 309, comes from a high authority. The plaintiff brought an action on the case for a nuisance in erecting a skylight over an open area, by means whereof the light and air were kept from his windows, and noisome smells arising from the adjoining house were forced into them. On the general issue the defendant gave in evidence that the erection complained of was made with the plaintiff's express approbation, but that after it was finished, the plaintiff became dissatisfied, and required it to be put down. Lord Ellenborough admitted the point to be new to him, but he thought it unreasonable that after a party had been led to incur expense in consequence of having a license from another to do an act, and that license had been acted upon, the other should be permitted to recall his license, and treat the first as a trespasser for having done the act. At the trial he instructed the jury, that the plaintiff could not recall his license without offering to pay all the expenses incurred. When a motion was made by one of the counsel for a new trial, Lord Ellenborough remarked that he found himself justified in the opinion he had given the jury by the case of Web v. Paternoster, and thereupon the counsel waived the motion. It is impossible, I think, not to feel with Lord Ellenborough that the plaintiff's conduct was unreasonable, and that he ought not to be permitted to insist on the erection being destroyed without some compensation to the defendant for the expense incurred. The quantum of compensation could not be ascertained in that action, and the question would seem to be, whether compensation must be made before the license can be revoked at law, or whether a legal revocation could not be made, and then the execution of the judgment enjoined until compensation made. The case of Web v. Paternoster (said to be best reported in Palmer, 71) was determined upon the point, not that the license was not countermandable, but that it was a license for a convenient time only, and that such time had expired before the act done whereof the plaintiff complained. Two of the judges, Montague and Haughton, expressed an opinion that the license, which was a permission from the owner of the land to put a cock of hay thereon for a reasonable time, passed an interest, which charged the land in the hands of the lessee, notwithstanding a countermand. Dodderidge doubted thereof, but remarked, among other things, that every license which is in its nature a license, is countermandable; and Haughton then said that there was a distinction between licenses executed and licenses executory; — that the former were not countermandable, but the latter were. It is not improbable that he regarded the former as irrevocable, because they passed an interest. As the case occurred in the reign of James the 1st, long before the Statute of Frauds, it was argued and decided on common law principles. The case of Wood v. Lake, in Sayer, 3, does not apply. There, according to the reporter, it was held that an agreement for one to stack coals on another's land for seven years, may be granted by parol, because it is not an interest. The report is confessedly an inaccurate one, — the decision, if made, is clearly wrong (see Sugden on Ven., ut supra; Phillips v. Thompson, 1 John. Ch. Rep. 131); but if the decision were right, it bears not upon the present point.

A license is a power or authority given to a man to do a lawful act. Unquestionably, no countermand can make the act done under it illegal. Here it was not a license to erect a dam, for no license was needed for any such purpose. It was a license, by means of a dam on his own land, to pond water on the land of him who gave the license. It is often difficult to distinguish between a license or a mere authority, and an interest or a license coupled with an interest. It necessarily follows that what is done under either, while in force, is binding upon him who has granted it. Until the license was revoked, the keeping of the water upon the land was lawful. It is a general principle that a mere license may be countermanded; and it is equally a general principle that an interest once passed cannot be recalled. The extent of the grant, whether it be of an authority or an interest, depends not on any technical words, but upon the intention of the parties. Whether a license to do an act which in its consequences permanently affects the property of him who gives it, when so acted on, that what is done cannot conveniently be undone, may be regarded as the grant of an interest to the extent of the consequences thereby authorized, and therefore not revocable; or whether such a license does not necessarily imply a permission for the thing done to remain, notwithstanding the continuing consequences; and therefore the licensor, on a principle of good faith, may be forbidden to withdraw it, without indemnifying him who trusted thereto: whether these or either of these principles can or cannot be extracted from the adjudications, we are of opinion that they do not uphold the instructions complained of. The right to pond water on another's land is an incorporeal hereditament, — a right not indeed to the land itself, but to a privilege on and upon the land, impairing to that extent the dominion of the proprietor therein. Set up as a permanent interest granted to the vendor of the plaintiff, transferable by him, passing with the land to the defendants, it is inoperative, because it is a freehold interest, and cannot pass but by deed. Regarded as a mere license, however irrevocable, between the parties (if, indeed, there can be such without an interest), it is difficult to see how it can be binding between the plaintiff and the defendants. The ancestor of the plaintiff granted a license, and the plaintiff has succeeded to all his estate. Now, if the effect of the license be not to pass any interest out of, or impose any charge upon, the land, the plaintiff has succeeded to an unlimited and unshackled fee simple therein. A mere authority necessarily ceases with the life of the grantor. The plaintiff's ancestor granted a license to the vendor of the defendants; but regarded as a license, how does it inure to the benefit of the defendants? If it passed as an appurtenance to the land, it partook of its nature; it was more than an authority, it was an hereditament. To hold that a permission thus given shall operate forever for the benefit of the grantee and his assigns, against the grantor and his heirs, would be, in effect, to permit a fee simple estate to pass under the name of an irrevocable license. Purchasers would never know what incumbrances were upon their lands, and instead of the solemn and deliberate instruments which the law requires as the indispensable means of transferring freeholds, valuable landed interests would be made to depend wholly on the integrity, capacity, or recollection of witnesses.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to award a new trial.

PER CURIAM.

Judgment reversed.¹

MORSE v. COPELAND.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1854.

[Reported 2 Gray, 302.]

ACTION of tort for diverting water from the plaintiffs' mill-pond in Easton. The case was submitted to the court upon the following statement of facts:

Josiah and Horatio Copeland, on the 10th of May, 1825, conveyed their interest in a factory and water privilege to the Easton Manufacturing Company, together with the privilege of flowing all the land that either of the grantors then owned, which could be flowed with the height of the dam and saw-mill flume, as it then was, which is also its present height. The Easton Manufacturing Company conveyed the factory and privilege to Shepard Leach, from whom, by mesne conveyances, they have since become the property of the plaintiffs.

Josiah and Horatio Copeland, at the time of making their deed to the Easton Manufacturing Company, each owned land on the northerly side of the factory pond. Josiah Copeland conveyed away his land on that side of the pond in 1836; and his grantee, in 1838, conveyed the same to Caleb Swan, who has since continued to own it. Horatio Copeland conveyed away his land on that side of the pond in 1834; and the defendants acquired his title in 1838, and have since held it. All these conveyances were made expressly subject to the right of flowage granted to the Easton Manufacturing Company by said Copelands.

Leach, while he owned the factory and privilege, in 1831, gave to Josiah and Horatio Copeland an oral permission or license to erect, on their land, a dam or embankment across the mouth of a cove that was formed by the water raised by the factory dam, for the purpose of excluding the water from certain parts of their land; and said Copelands made such a dam or embankment, at their own expense, which remained, and effected the purpose for which it was built, until September, 1853. In the same year (1831) Leach also gave said Copelands an oral permission or license to dig a ditch across his (Leach's) land, now owned by the plaintiffs, for the purpose of draining the water of the factory pond which might accumulate on their land, after the erection of the dam or embankment by them. This ditch was dug by them, and continued till September, 1853.

In June, 1853, the plaintiffs gave written notice to the defendants and to Caleb Swan, requesting a discontinuance of said ditch and a removal of the dam or embankment, and revoking the license under which the same was made. The defendants did not discontinue the ditch nor remove the embankment; and in September, 1853, the plaintiffs stopped the ditch, at a place in their land, and made an incision in the embankment, on the defendants' land; and the water from the factory pond then flowed over the defendants' land and Swan's land, as it did from 1825 to 1831, before the embankment was made. The defendants thereupon dug a ditch on their own land (Swan contributing to the expense thereof), through which all the water, which flowed through the incision made by the plaintiffs in the dam or embankment, was drained off from the defendants' and Swan's land into the stream below the plaintiffs' factory and pond.

For diverting the water through this last ditch from land that the plaintiffs claim as part of their mill-pond, this action is brought. The parties agree that if the plaintiffs had a right to make the said incision in the dam, and are entitled to recover, they shall have judgment for one dollar damages and full costs; if they are not entitled to recover, they are to become nonsuit.

This case was argued at Boston on the 17th of January, 1854.

C. I. Reed, for the plaintiffs.

E. Ames, for the defendants.

METCALF, J. By the deed of Josiah and Horatio Copeland to the Easton Manufacturing Company, dated May 10th, 1825, that company acquired a right to flow all the land of each of the grantors, which could be flowed by the factory dam, as it then existed. The right thus acquired was an easement in the lands of the grantors. That right was transferred, by the company, to Shepard Leach, who thus acquired the same easement. And Leach, in 1831, while he owned the factory and water privilege — which was the dominant tenement — gave an oral license to Josiah and Horatio Copeland, owners of the servient tenement, to erect a dam or embankment on their own land, which should exclude the water from a part of the land which, by their above-mentioned deed, he had a right to flow. That license was executed by them. They made the dam, and it effected the purpose for which it was made, for more than twenty years. In 1853 the plaintiffs, who derive title to the factory and water privilege from Leach, through intermediate conveyances, undertook to revoke the license of 1831; required the defendants to prostrate the dam; and, on the defendants' refusal so to do, prostrated it themselves.

The first question in the case is, whether the plaintiffs can justify that act. We are of opinion that they cannot. For it is a rule of law, that an easement, whether acquired by known grant or by prescription, may be extinguished, renounced or modified, by a parol license granted by the owner of the dominant tenement, and executed by the owner of the servient tenement. The authorities on this point are conclusive. Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. 395; Winter v. Brockwell, 8 East, 308; Liggins v. Inge, 7 Bing. 682, and 5 Moore & Payne, 712; Addison v. Hack, 2 Gill, 221.

The next question is, whether the license, given by Leach to Josiah and Horatio Copeland, to cut a ditch through his land, and thereby draw off a part of the water of the factory pond, was revocable by the defendants [plaintiffs], and therefore their act in stopping the ditch was justifiable. And it is well settled that it was revocable. An easement in real estate can be acquired only by deed, or by prescription, which supposes a deed. Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. 533; Fentiman v. Smith, 4 East, 107; Wallis v. Harrison, 4 M. & W. 538; Hewlins v. Shippam, 7 Dowl. & Ryl. 783, and 5 B. & C. 221; Cocken v. Cowper, 5 Tyrw. 103, and 1 C. M. & R. 418; Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. 838; Adams v. Andrews, 15 Ad. & El. N. R. 284.

The authorities referred to on these first two questions show that the rule, sometimes laid down in the books, that a license executed cannot be countermanded, is not applicable to licenses which, if given by deed, would create an easement; but to licenses which, if given by deed, would extinguish or modify an easement. They also show that the distinction, sometimes taken in the books, between a license to do acts on the licensee's own land, and a license to do acts on the licensor's land, is the same distinction that is made between licenses which, if held valid, would create, and licenses which extinguish or modify, an easement. Generally, if not always, a license which, when executed, extinguishes or modifies an easement, is, from the nature of the case, a license to do acts on the servient tenement,—the tenement of the licensee. See Gale & Whatley on Easements, Pt. 1, c. 3, § 1.

The last question is, whether the defendants can justify the making of the ditch on their own land, and thereby drawing off the water which flowed through the breach made in the dam erected by them in 1831, on Leach's license. As that water was thrown upon their land by the wrongful act of the plaintiffs, we cannot doubt their right to relieve their land from it by the means which they have adopted.

Plaintiff's nonsuit.

CHURCHILL v. HULBERT.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1872.

[Reported 110 Mass. 42.]

MORTON, J. This is an action of tort for an assault and battery. The evidence tended to show that the defendant forcibly entered the premises of the plaintiff for the purpose of removing certain manure which he claimed as his property; that the plaintiff, being present, forbade his entering, and resisted it by seizing the heads of the defendant's horses to prevent them from proceeding further, and thereupon the defendant struck him with a shovel and broke his arm, and then proceeded to remove the manure. The defendant claimed that he had an irrevocable license to enter and remove the manure, and asked the court to instruct the jury, "that if the defendant had a license from the plaintiff, unrevoked or irrevocable, to enter the plaintiff's premises to remove manure which belonged to the defendant, and the defendant did no more than was necessary to enter and remove the same manure, he is not liable in this action." The court refused this request, and instructed the jury in substance, that though the defendant had an irrevocable license to enter and remove the manure which belonged to him, yet if the plaintiff resisted the defendant's entry, under a claim that the defendant had no manure left on the premises, the defendant had no right to use personal violence to overpower the plaintiff's resistance and enforce his claim.

We are of opinion that these instructions were at least sufficiently favorable to the defendant. The cases cited by his counsel show that if he had an irrevocable license to enter, he would not be liable in an action of trespass quare clausum for an entry, if he could make it without opposition or resistance; but the authorities are clear that if resisted, he had no right to enforce his claim by a breach of the peace. Sampson v. Henry, 13 Pick. 379; Commonwealth v. Haley, 4 Allen, 318; 3 Bl. Com. 4. If it be assumed, therefore, that the defendant had an irrevocable license to enter the plaintiff's premises, yet upon being resisted it was his duty to desist from his attempt to enter, and resort to his legal remedies. He cannot justify a resort to personal violence to enforce his rights. *Exceptions overruled.*¹

CANNY v. ANDREWS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1877.

[Reported 123 Mass. 155.]

BILL in equity, filed December 27, 1876, to restrain the defendant from removing a chimney in which the plaintiff claimed certain easements. Upon the filing of the bill, a temporary injunction was granted. At the hearing, before Colt, J., the following facts were admitted by the parties : —

About a hundred years ago, a block of three houses was erected on the corner of Clark Street and Hanover Street, in Boston. On September 13, 1869, the city of Boston passed an order authorizing the widening of Hanover Street, and, in pursuance of said order, purchased by deed of warranty, from Nancy Pierce, the corner lot of the block, with the building thereon, which fronted on Clark Street twenty-nine and one half feet, and on Hanover Street seventy-two feet. On May 10, 1870, the city of Boston sold the building on the corner lot to George W. Gerrish, who proceeded at once to tear down the building, and removed all the materials constituting the same. After the sale and removal, the city of Boston appropriated to the widening of Hanover Street a strip of said corner lot of land, twenty-four feet and nine inches wide, and filled up the cellar formerly under the building. The removal of the building was necessary from the widening of the street. On December 26, 1876, the city of Boston sold by public auction the remaining part of the corner lot, without any building thereon, to the plaintiff, and delivered to him a quitclaim deed thereof on the same day, and he has since been in possession thereof. The defendant is seised of the lot and house adjoining the plaintiff's land. Before the removal of the building by Gerrish, there was no wall between the two buildings, and they were a mutual protection to each other, beams running lengthwise between the two buildings supporting the floor timbers of both houses. The beams projected and still project over the line of the plaintiff's estate six inches at the Clark Street end, but inclined entirely under the defendant's building at the rear end. There is a chimney covering thirty-six square feet of land standing wholly in and belonging to the land of the defendant, in which there were fireplaces, and closets adjacent to the fireplaces, opening into each floor of the building removed. An easement by prescription existed to the use of the fireplaces, closets, and beams supporting the floor timbers, which now exists, unless terminated by the destruction of the building. Upon the removal of the building by Gerrish, the side of the defendant's building was laid open and left unprotected from the elements, and in such a condition that the beams and rafters which supported the floorings and roof of the defendant's building were uncovered, and the plaster and lathing, which had been the only partition between the buildings, were exposed to view, and were the only protection of the defendant's building from the inclemency of the weather. The building became untenable, and, for its proper use and enjoyment, it became necessary to erect a suitable outside wall on the side of her building next adjoining the plaintiff's land. The defendant began to tear down the chimney and build a wall, when she was restrained by injunction.

The plaintiff contended that he had the right to rebuild on the remaining strip of land, and again use the fireplaces, closets, and beams for the support of floor timbers.

The defendant contended that the easements were coextensive with the existence of the buildings, and ended with the necessity which created them; and that, the city of Boston having caused the dominant tenement to be destroyed, the easements were extinguished by operation of law, and that its grantee was therefore estopped from asserting any easements therein.

The judge reserved the case for the consideration of the full court.

C. F. Donnelly, for the plaintiff.

C. D. Adams, for the defendant.

SOULE, J. The easement which the plaintiff claims was not gained by deed, but by the continuous use and enjoyment of the chimney of the defendant, by the owners of the house which formerly stood in part on the premises now owned by the plaintiff. The city of Boston, the plaintiff's grantor, on May 10, 1870, sold this house as personal property, and caused it to be destroyed, not because it was falling to decay and was unsafe, but because the city wished to appropriate the greater part — about five sixths — of the land on which it stood to the widening of Hanover Street. The cellar which had been under the house was filled up, and the street was widened, as intended. This having been done, the city continued to own that part of the land not included in the street, until December 26, 1876, without erecting any building thereon. The destruction of the house by the city left the house of the defendant open and exposed to the weather, so that the erection of a wall was necessary to its safe occupation. In order to build such wall, the defendant began to destroy the chimney, but was stopped by an injunction granted in favor of the plaintiff.

It is well settled that an easement gained by prescription may be lost by abandonment, and that such abandonment may be shown by a cesser to use for even a short period, accompanied by acts of the owner of the dominant estate indicating an intention to abandon the right. Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. 395; Pope v. Devereux, 5 Gray, 409; The Queen v. Chorley, 12 Q. B. 515; Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 332.

The unavoidable inference, from the acts of the city in respect to the matter, is that, when it removed the house and converted the larger part of the lot of land on which it had stood into a street, it abandoned all right to use the chimney of the defendant. This purpose is made still more clear by the fact that the remaining part of the lot was permitted to lie vacant during a series of years. The easement, therefore, was extinguished by operation of law, while the premises were owned by the city, and did not pass to the plaintiff, as appurtenant to the land, by the quitclaim deed under which he holds. The defendant, in taking down the chimney and building a wall to protect her house, rendered unfit for occupation by the act of the city, the plaintiff's grantor, was exercising a right of ownership in a proper manner, and was not invading any right of the plaintiff. Bill dismissed.

PRATT v. SWEETSER.

SUPREME COURT OF MAINE. 1878.

[Reported 68 Me. 344.]

ON exceptions from the Superior Court.

Trespass quare clausum.

The defendant set up a right of way over the locus in quo, which was the upland mowing field of the plaintiff, for taking off marsh hay from his marsh adjoining the premises on which the trespass was alleged to have been committed, and introduced evidence tending to show that such right of way had been acquired by him and those under whom he claimed, by prescription.

The plaintiff claimed that there had never been an adverse or continuous use of the way in question for said purpose, for twenty consecutive years, and introduced evidence tending to show non-user, an abandonment and an interruption of use of the way, and that the line of travel over which the hay had been taken off was not the same each year.

The presiding justice instructed the jury as in the opinion appears; and the defendant alleged exceptions.

M. P. Frank and P. J. Larrabee, for the defendant.

A. A. Strout and G. F. Holmes, for the plaintiff.

VIRGIN, J. The defence set up was a prescriptive right of way across the locus. To this the plaintiff replied that, if the defendant had acquired such a right, he subsequently lost it by abandonment. Upon this point the presiding justice instructed the jury as follows:

"The question is whether, at any period in the past, the owners of the marsh, by such use as I have described, had obtained a right of way by prescription. Such a right of way, if once obtained, would continue until it was voluntarily abandoned with an intention to abandon it, or until it had ceased to be used for a period of twenty years."

"If you should find at some time there was such a right of way, then, upon the question whether it continued or not down to the trespass, this would be the rule. It could be destroyed in two ways; and these two ways are all it is necessary for me to consider. First, by voluntary abandonment of it. If at any time the owners of the marsh had another right of way and gave up this right of way with the intention to abandon it, if that is proved, their right would cease at once. On the other hand, if there is no proof of that, notwithstanding they did not intend to abandon, ~~but~~ did not use it, then that non-use must continue for twenty years before the right by prescription fails. Having once obtained a right of way, they may abandon it at any time they see fit, and if the intention is proved, that is the end of it; or if they cease to use it for twenty years, then their right terminates in that way."

By giving this unqualified statement as to the effect of non-user, though some of the authorities sustain it, we think the learned judge erred. For, even if, as suggested by some of the authorities, there is any sound distinction between easements created by deed and those acquired by prescription, the right is not necessarily lost by mere non-user for twenty years. The better doctrine seems to be that non-user for the period mentioned is evidence of an intention to abandon; but it is open to explanation, and it may be controlled by evidence that the owner had no such intention while omitting to use it. In Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania it has been held that an easement or profit created by deed cannot be extinguished by mere non user, in contradistinction to an easement created by prescription, which, it is said, can be lost by non user. Arnold v. Stevens, 24 Pick. 106; Bannon v. Angier, 2 All. 128; Owen v. Field, 102 Mass. 90, 114; Barnes v. Lloyd, 112 Mass. 224; Smyles v. Hastings, 22 N. Y. 217, 224; Wiggins v. McCleary, 49 N. But it has never been decided in either of these States that an easement gained by prescription can be lost by mere non user. See Angell on Watercourses (7th ed.), § 252, note; *Veghte v. WISEMAN v. LUCKSINGER.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1881.

[Reported 84 N. Y. 31.]

APPEAL from judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court in the Fourth Judicial Department, entered upon an order made April 26, 1879, affirming a judgment in favor of plaintiff, entered upon a decision of the court on trial at a Special Term.

This action was brought to restrain defendant from interfering with plaintiff's alleged right of drainage across defendant's premises, and for damages, &c.

The facts appear sufficiently in the opinion.

D. Pratt, for appellant.

Wm. C. Ruger, for respondent.

DANFORTH, J. Although the action is in equity, the plaintiff sought compensation in damages as well as equitable relief. The former was denied to him, but the latter has been granted to the full extent asked for. I can discover no ground upon which it can be approved.

The parties are owners of adjoining city lots in the city of Syracuse. The defendant built an underground drain or sewer of plank from the basement of his house, through his own lot and that of one Stern, to Jefferson Street sewer, and afterward "and more than twenty-five years last past, the plaintiff," as the trial court finds, "purchased of the defendant the right and easement to drain his premises, by an underground drain and covered sewer, through the defendant's premises, for the consideration of seven dollars, which the plaintiff paid and the defendant accepted;" and thereupon the plaintiff, partly upon his own premises and partly on those of the defendant, built an underground sewer of plank to connect with the sewer of the defendant. The connection was made a short distance from the line dividing the respective lots. It is further found, that "the plaintiff for over twenty-five years enjoyed the privilege as of right of draining his own premises through this sewer, until July 22, 1876, when the connection was cut off by the defendant on his own land." At that time he denied the plaintiff's right, obstructed the flow of water, "and refused to allow the plaintiff to go upon his premises to maintain and repair the said sewer." It is also found that "before this, and in 1873, the plaintiff caused his old sewer to be taken up and replaced with a tile sewer of a capacity greater than that of defendant's sewer, with which it was connected." The plaintiff had also made changes in the form of his privy vault, and the court found that "after this change, and the alteration and enlargement of his sewer by the plaintiff, the filth and foul water from his privy flowed back into the cellar of the defendant, creating stench and a great nuisance to defendant, rendering his house unfit to live in, and that to prevent such injury to his premises the defendant tore up said sewer." The learned court also found, as a fact, that "no deed of conveyance of said easement or right to drain through said defendant's premises was ever executed by defendant to plaintiff, nor was any written contract agreeing to convey ever executed by defendant or any one for him, except the receipt for seven dollars for the right to drain through defendant's premises." The receipt referred to was not produced upon the trial, but after proving its loss, the plaintiff was allowed to show its contents by his witnesses. Neither of them had seen the paper for many years, and there was some difference as to its form. It is not stated by the court in any other way than in the above finding, but it is given by one witness in these words: "Received of Joseph Wiseman, seven dollars, for the right to drain through my premises;" and this, he says, bore the signature of the defendant. It is adopted by the learned counsel for the respondents in his points, and is the form most favorable to his contention. The trial court found, "as conclusion of law and equity, that the plaintiff acquired the right of draining his premises on the defendant's premises more than twenty-five years before the said obstruction, and during all that time enjoyed the same as of right; that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment declaring his said right and easement on the defendant's premises and restraining him from interfering with the plaintiff's enjoyment of such easement; and that the plaintiff is entitled to go upon the defendant's premises to rebuild and repair the same." Judgment was entered accordingly, and it having been affirmed by the General Term, the defendant has appealed to this court.

The right awarded to the plaintiff to have his drain pass through the defendant's land is in the terms of the judgment an easement, and for its enjoyment requires that the plaintiff shall have an interest in the defendant's land.

In Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 B. & C. 221; 11 Eng. Com. Law Rep. 207, the question was, whether a right to a drain running through the adjoining land could be conferred by parol license, and after the fullest examination it was decided that it could not. The facts in that case are singularly like those now before us, and make the conclusion reached of value upon this inquiry. Cocker v. Couper, 1 C. M. & R. 418, was a similar case. The plaintiff therein sued for the obstruction of a drain which had been originally constructed at his expense on the defendant's land by his consent verbally given. After it had been enjoyed for eighteen years, the defendant obstructed it. It was contended by the plaintiff that the license, having been acted upon, could not be revoked; but the court held that Hewlins v. Shippam was decisive to show that such an easement cannot be conferred except by deed. To the same effect are authorities cited by the appellant's counsel. It is, therefore, within the Statute "of fraudulent conveyances and contracts relative to land," and could neither be created, granted or declared, except by deed or conveyance in writing (2 R. S., tit. 1, chap. vii. part 2, § 6, p. 184); so that consent, although in writing, will be of no more avail than it would be if given by word of mouth. Indeed this is conceded by the learned counsel for the plaintiff to be so at law; but he contends that in equity the case is otherwise, and says, that "courts of equity give effect to parol agreements for the grant of an easement when founded upon a valuable consideration." Assuming that to be so, we may inquire whether there is anything in this case to call for the exercise of such extraordinary jurisdiction. And first, the contract which equity will regard as equivalent to the grant required at common law or by the Statute must be a complete and sufficient contract, founded not only on a valuable consideration, but its terms defined by satisfactory proof, and accompanied by acts of part performance unequivocally referable to the supposed agreement. In such a case the application of the Statute is withheld, lest by its interposition the mischief would be encouraged which the legislature intended to prevent. There is, I think, little danger of that in the present case. If we look at the situation of the parties at the time the contract was entered into, it will be difficult to infer that they considered the arrangement indicated by the writing to be a permanent one. The lots of both parties fronted upon a public street; in it there was no sewer. If there had been, it cannot be doubted, that as the easiest, cheapest, and most natural way of drainage, they would have used it. As it was, the defendant was obliged, not only to carry his drain the whole length of his lot, but first by license, and then by purchase, acquire the right to cross another lot before an outlet for his drain could be had. His drain was built of plank, at little expense and soon perishable. While in this condition, the plaintiff applies, according to his own testimony, for the privilege of draining his lot into the defendant's drain, and obtains it by the payment of seven dollars. So much the receipt indicates. There is nothing more. Its language is equivocal. It would be satisfied by drainage during the pleasure of the defendant, or during the life of the plaintiff, or until a public sewer should be constructed in the street by which the lot was bounded. There is nothing said as to how long it should continue. And when we consider the heavy imposition that would rest upon the defendant's lot, the annoyance from smells, the perpetual lien and incumbrance, necessarily rendering the land unsalable or of less value in the market, — less available for improvement, — compelling the defendant so to build that his structure should not interfere with the plaintiff's right of drainage, of inspection, of rebuilding and reparation, we find nothing which permits the inference that the permission indicated by the receipt was intended to be in perpetuity. The nature and character of the easement, the purpose which it was intended to serve, and other circumstances above adverted to, must be taken into account. The effect of the judgment is to deprive the defendant of the full enjoyment of his property, and subject it to the control of another. I am unable to find, in the words of the parties, any intention to produce that result. It is not expressed in the receipt, nor is it fairly to be implied. Full effect may be given to it by regarding it as a temporary arrangement; and it should, I think, be so construed.

Nor has anything been done referable to such an agreement as one giving a right in perpetuity. The connecting sewer constructed by the plaintiff was of plank, of short length and trifling expense, temporary and not permanent in character, and, as subsequent events have shown, easily and necessarily displaced to make room for another better adapted to the increasing necessities of the plaintiff and his improved method of removing filth from his premises. The case is not analogous to Wetmore v. White, 2 Cai. Cas. 87; Brown v. Bowen, 30 N. Y. 541; Rindge v. Baker, 57 Id. 209; Babcock v. Utter, 1 Abb. Ct. of App., Dec. 27; Pierrepont v. Barnard, 6 N. Y. 304; Miller v. A. & S. R. R., 6 Hill, 63; or Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 93, cited by the learned counsel for the respondents. So far as they bear upon the question as to the effect of part performance, it will be seen that large expenditures were made upon permanent and valuable improvements, not reasonably to be accounted for except upon the belief, on the part of the person making them, that an actual interest or estate in the land had been acquired, not depending upon any contingency, or the will or acquiescence of another. This was so in Wetmore v. White. Mills were erected, for the use of which the easement in question was indispensable. The court say: "Public accommodation and private emolument were probably the primary inducements for building the mills and diverting the water; the same reasons, for anything that appears, now exist for their continuance." The defendant claimed the right to restore the water to its original channel, but the court denied it, on the ground that his conduct in not disclosing his right at the time of selling the mills, his sleeping so long upon the claim and permitting the appellant to expend his money in repairing and rebuilding the mills, was unconscientious, and formed strong grounds for the interposition of a court of equity. Brown v. Bowen was an action for damages caused by defendants' acts in setting water back upon the plaintiff's mills, and a verdict for the plaintiff was sustained upon the ground that the defendants were by their conduct estopped from setting up a right to do the acts complained of. On the other hand, in Babcock v. Utter, 1 Abb. Ct. of App., Dec. 27, it was held that the easement then in question, and which in character was like the one claimed here, was an interest in real estate, incapable of transmission by parol, and the question was, "whether it could be done by a court of equity, against the positive provisions of the Statute." There the license given permitted the doing of an act on the land of the licensor by which water power had been secured. The defendant interfered with it and the plaintiff brought an action in equity to establish his easement, to restrain the defendant from diverting the water and for damages for the diversion already made. He failed in the action, the court saying: "A mere verbal license to do an act or a series of acts upon the land of the licensor necessarily excludes all idea of a right to do the act or acts by virtue of a contract, or promise, which equity might enforce specifically;" adding: "To grant the relief here prayed for would effectually subvert the legal right, or, which is the same thing in effect, forever prevent the exercise of those rights which unavoidably pertain to one seised of the undisputed legal title, and with which he has never consented to part." The consequences thus pointed out are illustrated by the judgment in this case. It gives to the plaintiff a right to the perpetual use of the defendant's land, although "there is no stipulation as to such title or right," and it is, therefore, as declared in the case cited, "as repugnant to the principles of equity as to the rules of law." I do not in detail state the other cases cited by the appellant, for as to them it is enough to say they decide nothing contrary to the views expressed in the case just referred to. While the argument of the learned Judge Welles, in Pierrepont v. Barnard, 6 N. Y. 279, distinguishes between an easement and a license, Miller v. A. & S. R. R. Co., 6 Hill, 63, and Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 93, seem to support the appellant's view of the proper limitation to the plaintiff's rights. There are no doubt many cases in which courts recognize an equitable right to an easement without a deed; but there will be found in them either an express agreement for an easement, or an acquiescence or consent by conduct which has led to the erecting of permanent works, or valuable and lasting improvements, or some other fact which would make the assertion of a legal title operate as a fraud upon the persons setting up the equitable right. But here there is no agreement for an easement, and no circumstances which render it inequitable in the defendant to insist upon the application of the Statute.

The agreement, however, to be implied from the receipt was undoubtedly good as a license, giving to the plaintiff immunity while acting under its privilege, but no vested right entitling him to its use or enjoyment against the will of the grantor; and this presents the point of difference between the parties. In behalf of the plaintiff is claimed an indefeasible right to an easement, such as passes by deed only; while the defendant denies to him any interest except as licensee, and construes the receipt as a mere dispensation or license, which "properly passes no interest nor alters or transfers property in anything, but only makes an action lawful, which, without it, had been unlawful." Per Vaughan, Ch. J., Thomas v. Sorrell, Vaughan, 351. Therefore, the plaintiff had liberty to enter upon the defendant's land and lay his sewer, subject to interruption at the defendant's will, but nothing more; and this, except for the license, would have been unlawful. The principle upon which, after the fullest consideration, Babcock v. Utter, and St. Vincent Orphan Asylum v. City of Troy (hereafter referred to), and Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. 838, were decided, applies here; and the case itself seems a reproduction of the one put by Alderson, J., in the one last cited. "Suppose," he says, "the case of a parol license to come on my lands, and there to make a watercourse, to flow on the lands of the licensee. In such a case there is no valid grant of the watercourse, and the license remains a mere license, and therefore capable of being revoked. On the other hand, if such a license were granted by deed, then the question would be on the construction of the deed, whether it amounted to a grant of the watercourse; and if it did, then the license would be irrevocable." Now the receipt contains a mere license or permission to drain, and no agreement to convey an easement; nor is the license coupled with any interest in the land. It was, therefore, revocable, and its revocation did not operate as a fraud upon the plaintiff. His expenditures were trifling, and for aught that appears, have been more than repaid in the use already had by the plaintiff of the privilege given to him. There is no finding that by the action of the defendant he will be deprived of the means of drainage; and the contrary may not only be presumed, from the fact that the lot is on one of the public streets of the city, but if we look into the evidence, we see that there are sewers in neighboring streets to which access may be had, although doubtless with more expense and labor. Without regard, however, to these considerations, which apply to the equity of his case and not to any right, we have no doubt of the power of the plaintiff [defendant] to revoke the permission or license given. Nor does the fact of payment for the license alter the defendant's right. His permission to drain was still a mere license, and none the less revocable that it was paid for. Hewlins v. Shippam, 5 Barn. & Cress., ante.

It is also contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the judgment may be sustained upon the ground that he has a prescriptive right to the easement. This claim is inconsistent with the theory of the action as we find it disclosed in the complaint. There an agreement of purchase is set out, naming the price paid, and the averments of right subsequently made evidently refer to a right so acquired; and following that theory is the finding of the trial judge, based upon an agreement for which a consideration was paid. Moreover it is opposed to the claim that the agreement exists of which specific performance may be decreed; for to support it the possession and part performance must be with consent of the vendor, and in pursuance of and in reliance upon a contract; for otherwise there would be no fraud in the refusal of the vendor to execute or abide by his agreement. So if the possession was adverse; and in neither aspect would it present a feature for the jurisdiction of a court of equity. But I find nothing upon which this point can stand. The finding of the trial court is distinct: That within a short time after 1842, "and more than twenty-five years last past, the plaintiff purchased of the defendant the right and easement, for the consideration of seven dollars." Thus the acts of possession commenced by permission purchased for a price, the minds of both parties concurring. If we look at the testimony given on the trial, we also find that the plaintiff's theory, from the beginning to the end, was that "an arrangement was made between the plaintiff and the defendant in reference to the sewer." Such is the plaintiff's own evidence. He says he applied to the defendant for the privilege and obtained it, — that he first obtained this right. He says: "He permitted me to get a sewer there at the time I built the house; I made the bargain with him to connect the sewer," and then did so. The defendant confirms this. Denying the receipt of money, he admits that he gave permission. As to that fact, there was no controversy between the parties; and it follows that there could be no adverse possession until after July, 1876, when the defendant did the thing complained of, and cutting off the plaintiff's sewer, forbade his entrance upon the premises. Up to that time, possession under the license or permission of the defendant prevented it from being adverse. But the question is well settled by authority. White v. Spencer, 14 N. Y. 247-249; Jackson v. McConnell, 19 Wend. 177; Jackson v. Parker, 3 Johns. Cas. 124. The St. Vincent Orphan Asylum v. City of Troy, 12 Hun, 317, came before the Supreme Court in 1877. It appeared that in 1853 the defendant, by formal resolution of its common council, relinquished certain land theretofore used as a street, and in the same manner declared that the Troy Hospital, which then stood on the adjacent lot, was at liberty to enclose the land so relinquished within its grounds, for the use of that institution. This was done, and possession retained for more than twenty years. But thereafter the city sought to remove the wall, and in an action commenced against them, the plaintiff recovered. Upon appeal the General Term sustained the verdict, upon the ground that under the resolution of 1853, possession had been taken and permanent improvements made on the faith thereof, and held that the defendant was concluded by its resolution, "followed as it was by actual and continued occupation under claim of absolute right, especially in view of the improvements made on the faith of the action of the common council." Upon appeal to this court (76 N. Y. 108), the judgment was reversed. The view taken by the Supreme Court was relied upon in support of the judgment, and it was also urged that the plaintiff's possession was adverse to the title of any other claimant. This court, however, held first, that the resolution of the common council was invalid for want of power; but in answer to the plaintiff's claim as one holding by adverse possession, say: "The plaintiff's occupation, at least previous to the rescission by the common council in 1868, was not an adverse possession within the Statute of Limitations;" adding: "The occupation of a grantee of the fee is perhaps hostile to his grantor, but not so as to a licensee." I am not able to see why this decision is not in point and conclusive upon us in this case. The resolution was general and unlimited in terms; it gave permission "to enclose" the land "for its use." It was held to be a license. It was also held to be invalid. But the court say: "The entry of the plaintiff was, nevertheless, under it, and the holding is not adverse." In the case before us, the words of the receipt are general and unlimited, "for the right to drain through my premises;" but if construed so as to give an interest in land or an easement, is invalid, because not in conformity to the Statute. And the court further say: "The license, being invalid and void, could of course be the foundation of no right in the plaintiff; but its entry and occupation thereunder was nevertheless no more adverse to the defendant than if the license had been valid." The same doctrine is asserted in many other cases, and is deemed so well settled that it has found its way into the text-books, where, in various forms of words, it is declared that enjoyment had under a license or permission from the owner of the servient tenement confers no right as to the easement (Angell on Watercourses, § 216); and so the effect of the user would be destroyed, if it were shown that it took place by the express permission of the owner of the servient tenement; and the reason is, that such enjoyment is consistent with the right of the owner of that tenement, and consequently confers no right in opposition thereto. White v. Spencer, supra.

The case of Sibley v. Ellis, 11 Gray, 417, cited by the respondent, is not in conflict with these propositions. It there appeared that the user began in a trespass and had continued open and adverse for twenty years. It was therefore held that the defendant had a prescriptive right. To the same effect are many other cases cited by him; but they have no tendency to support the demand of the plaintiff. His user has not been adverse, nor has it been under a claim of right. The trial court does not so find it, nor that it was adverse. In the recent case of Ward v. Warren, 82 N. Y. 265, lately decided by this court, and to which our attention is called, the plaintiff claimed the title by prescription; and it was adjudged in his favor, because the trial court found "that the use of the way by him and his predecessors in the title had been adverse, under claim of right, exclusive, open and notorious, with the knowledge and acquiescence of defendants and their grantors, for forty-eight years." It was substantially so in the other cases cited by the respondent. Here there is no finding that the use was under a claim of right, or that it was adverse. On the contrary, the source of the plaintiff's possession was the defendant's permission; never under any claim of right, or in any sense adverse to the defendant. Our attention has been also directed to the following as authorities in favor of the plaintiff's contention. Washburn on Easements, § 88; La Frombois v. Jackson, 8 Cow. 589; Briggs v. Prosser, 14 Wend. 227. It is said by Washburn that although a right of way cannot be created by parol agreement, yet where, under such an agreement, the way was used for twenty years, and the same was acquiesced in by the owner of the servient estate, a prescriptive right was thereby gained. The learned author as authority for this statement cites Ashley v. Ashley, 4 Gray, 197. It depends on quite other considerations. It appeared that when a deed of certain land was delivered to the defendant, the grantor's agent stated it reserved no right of way to her own lot, and the defendant replied that she might pass over the land as much as she pleased, "as much as if the right of way was in the deed;" and the user having thereafter continued twenty years, this evidence was admitted, as having a tendency to show that the plaintiff used the way openly, as of right, against the owner of the soil, and so was adverse. La Frombois v. Jackson is to the effect that an entry under color of title will be adverse, however groundless the supposed title may be, while possession, without claim of title, will never confer a title on the possessor. In Briggs v. Prosser the defendant, for the purpose of showing adverse possession, offered to show that he was in under contract for the conveyance of land, the price of which had been fully paid, so that he was in equity the owner, and also to show declarations of the plaintiff to the effect that he had sold the premises to the defendant, and that they belonged to him; and all this for the purpose of establishing an adverse possession. It was held proper for that purpose, because the defendant was equitably entitled to a deed, and there was nothing in the character of the possession under it inconsistent with the idea of an adverse possession. Whether it were adverse or not, the court say "would depend upon the circumstances of each particular case." In both cases, possession was taken under a contract for a deed, and it was held, and nothing more, that this did not per se necessarily preclude the adverse character of the subsequent possession. In the case before us there was no contract for a deed, or any engagement to confer a title. The cases are not in point. In all, there was an equitable title and a claim of right; and in each of the last two, an agreement for a deed. In all, an obvious intention to claim the title and a possession inconsistent with the plaintiff's ownership. As I have above undertaken to show, the possession of the plaintiff here was under no claim of right, and was entirely consistent with the defendant's title. The plaintiff's enjoyment was permissive, and he had no title, either in law or equity.

It is clear that the defendant, in the acts complained of, has gone no further than to exercise his legal rights. Of these he should not be deprived, unless he has acted in such a way as to make it fraudulent for him to set them up. There is no finding to that effect; nor would the evidence warrant such conclusion. The plaintiff has made out no case against this appeal; and the judgments of the General and Special Terms should therefore be reversed and a new trial granted, with costs to abide the event.

STEERE v. TIFFANY. ✓

SUPREME COURT OF RHODE ISLAND. 1882.

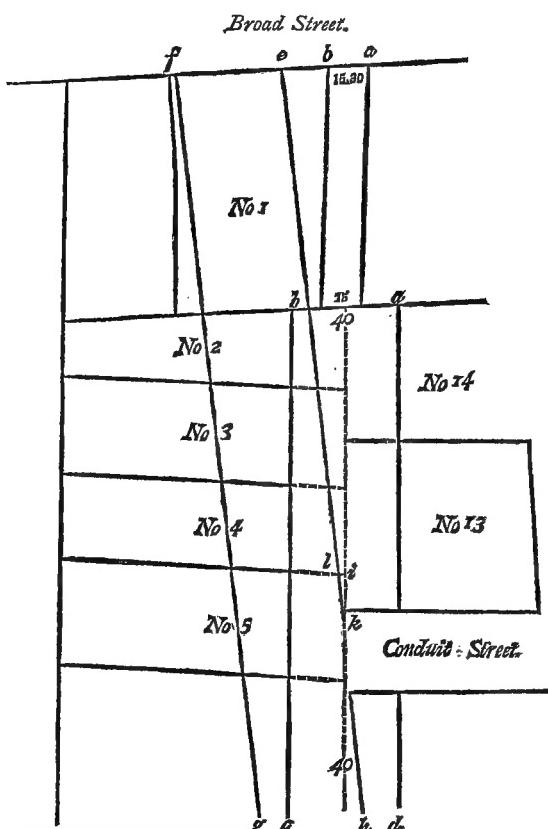

[Reported 13 R. I. 568.]

TRESPASS on the case. Heard by the court, jury trial being waived. This action was trespass on the case for obstructing a right of way over the small triangle of land marked i, k, l, on the accompanying plat. The plaintiff and the defendant both derived title from the same proprietor, and their lots extended by the descriptions of their deeds to the middle line of the way b, a, c, d, the way being laid out and platted for the common use of all the lot owners on the plat. After all the platted lots had been sold, the city of Providence laid out the area enclosed by the lines f, e, h, g, as a public highway, called Summer Street. Subsequently the owner of lot No. 5 obstructed the triangle marked l, i, k, and the owner of lot No. 13 thereupon brought this action.

DURFEE, C. J. The only defence set up by the defendant is, that the way which he is sued for obstructing had been lost before obstruction by renunciation or abandonment. It is well settled that an easement may be so lost, though where the only proof of it is cesser of use, the cesser of use must have continued for at least twenty years. Where, however, there is other proof showing clearly an intent to renounce or abandon, the easement may be lost in a much briefer time. Thus where A. had an easement of light in the land of B., enjoyed by means of a window opening in an ancient wall of his house, which he pulled down and rebuilt without the window, it was held, after seventeen years, B. meanwhile having built so as to intercept the light, that the easement had been abandoned and lost. Moore v. Rawson, 3 B. & C. 332. See also Liggins v. Inge, 7 Bing. 682; Pope v. Devereaux, 5 Gray, 409; Canny v. Andrews, 123 Mass. 155. It is not, it has been said, so much the duration of the cesser as the nature of the act done by the owner of the easement, or of the adverse act acquiesced in, and the intention which the one or the other indicates, that is material. Regina v. Chorley, 12 Q. B. 515, 519. Where A., having a way leading from his house and barn on his own land to the highway over the land of B., removed house and barn, ploughed and planted the land, and fenced up the end of the way, it was held, twelve years after the removal of the house, that the way had been renounced and lost. Crain v. Fox, 16 Barb. S. C. 184. The case of Corning v. Gould, 16 Wend. 531, is still more like the case at bar. There the parties owned adjoining lots, with a private way for their common use along the dividing line, which was the centre of the way. The plaintiff, four or five years before suit, built a house on his lot which encroached on the way, and then ran a fence through the centre, thus taking half to himself and leaving the other half to the adjoining owner, who sold to the defendant. The defendant proceeded to occupy a part of his half with a house. The court held that the way had become extinct, the acts of both parties being incompatible with its continuance. In Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. 395, Chief Justice Shaw declared that, to prove an abandonment, it was only necessary to show that the acts relied on were done by the owner in fee of the dominant tenement, and were of such a character as to show decisively an intent to abandon. And see Taylor v. Hampton, 4 McCord, 96; 3 Kent Comment. 352; Washburn on Easements and Servitudes, *542-*549.

In the case at bar the way, considered as a private way, was created for the common use of the owners, whose opposite lots met in the centre of it subject to the easement. After the lay out of Summer Street diagonally across the way, the plaintiff or his predecessor in title took exclusive possession of the half in front of his lot by moving his house forward. His next neighbor did likewise. The owner of the lot on which was the gangway leading from the way to Broad Street closed the gangway. These acts were all done without objection. The result is that the way as originally established has practically ceased to exist; and when the defendant, following the plaintiff's example, took possession of the small bit of the way lying between the plaintiff's lot and Summer Street, he thereby unmistakably signified his consent to its destruction. The plaintiff, in suing him, is suing for an obstruction, not of the way as created, but of a mere bit of it, which is convenient for his individual use, but which, partly in consequence of his own acts, is no longer capable of being used as originally intended. Can he maintain his action? We think not. The way, if it ever existed as a private way, so existed by implication or estoppel, not by express grant. To ascertain its character, therefore, we must look to the circumstances of its creation; and doing so, we think it is manifest that the way was intended to exist as a whole, and not in halves, and that consequently to take away either half is to destroy it, and the party taking must be held to have renounced or abandoned his right in the other half. The case in this aspect is almost identical with Corning v. Gould, of which the court, in Crain v. Fox, remarks, that the fence erected in the centre of the way was an unequivocal act of renunciation, for the plain reason that the use of the way in common was rendered impossible by it. We do not see how it is possible for us to hold in the case at bar that the defendant is liable, without also holding implicitly that the way as originally established still exists, and that the plaintiff is liable likewise for obstructing it. This result, however, the plaintiff disavows, and his disavowal must be taken conclusively against him as a renunciation of the easement.

The plaintiff has access to the public street otherwise than over the defendant's land, and it is therefore unnecessary to inquire if he could, in the circumstances, maintain his action if he were claiming the way as a way of necessity. We give the defendant judgment for costs.

CHAPTER IV.

COVENANTS AS TO THE USE OF THE LAND.

SECTION I.

IN GENERAL.

STANDEN v. CHRISMAS.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1847.

[Reported 10 Q. B. 135.]

LORD DENMAN, C. J., delivered the judgment of the court.¹

In this case, the plaintiff being entitled to five eighths, and one Richardson to three eighths, of certain copyhold premises, Richardson, by lease in writing, not under seal, demised them to the defendants in his own name for one year, at a rent payable half yearly, and under certain terms of repairing. Before the first half year's rent became due Richardson surrendered his interest to the plaintiff, of which the defendants had notice, and afterwards paid the half year's rent to an agent employed both by Richardson and the plaintiff.

The present action is for non-repair, and for use and occupation, to recover the last half year's rent; and a verdict was found for the defendants. It was objected, at the trial, that no evidence was given of the existence of a manor of which the premises were copyhold. But surrenders purporting to be copies of the rolls of the manor, and which were admitted under a judge's order, were given in evidence, and, we think, were abundant evidence on that point.

With regard to repairs, it was objected that Stat. 32 H. 8, c. 34, applies only to cases of demise by deed, and that the assignee of the reversion cannot sue in assumpsit on the contract made by the assignor. We are entirely of this opinion, and that the verdict on the first count is right. So on the second count, which is on an implied contract to repair arising out of the relation of landlord and tenant. No such implied contract arises where the tenant holds under an express contract which provides for the very matter. Therefore, the verdict on the second count is also right.

The count for use and occupation requires more consideration. No doubt, the plaintiff was landlord during the time that the rent in question accrued, and when it became due, and was entitled to receive it. He might have distrained for it, supposing the tenancy to have continued ; or he might have brought an action of debt for it. But the question is, whether an action of assumpsit will lie, in which he states that the defendants occupied by his sufferance and permission. It was said that a new tenancy might be inferred when the defendants had notice of the surrender to the plaintiff; but there is no ground whatever for any such inference. It is quite plain that the defendants held under the lease made by Richardson, and under that alone, and the plaintiff could not have prevented them from so holding. The permission to occupy emanated from Richardson, the grantor of the lease, and was complete when the lease was executed, and never could emanate from the person who subsequently became assignee of the reversion ; unless, indeed, Richardson having granted for himself and his assigns, the permission of any person who might become assignee of the reversion during the lease can be said to be virtually included, so that the occupation became in point of law permissive on the part of the assignee as soon as his interest took place. We think that this is the right view of the case, and that, the occupation being in point of law by the permission of the plaintiff, the action is maintainable in its present form by virtue of the Statute 11 G. 2, c. 19, § 14. In most of the cases referred to on the argument the tenancy was from year to year. It is obvious that the assignee of the reversion has then the power of determining the tenancy by notice ; and, if he refrains from so doing, the occupation may well be said to be by his permission. In Lumley v. Hodgson, 16 East, 99, the tenancy was from year to year, and a notice to quit had actually been given, but not persevered in. The action was for a year and a half's rent : the last year's rent all accrued after the expiration of the notice to quit ; and the occupation during that time was clearly by the permission of the plaintiff; the first half year not so ; and the same question might have arisen as in the present case : but it was not made. In Mortimer v. Preedy, 3 M. & W. 602, the court felt the same difficulty as arises here ; but the point was not expressly determined. The case of Buckworth v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 834 ; s. c. 5 Tyr. 344, was also upon a tenancy from year to year : so was the case of Dolby v. Iles, 11 A. & E. 335, which, however, turned upon the defendant being estopped by his own acts of recognition. No case appears yet to have been determined where an absolute lease in writing, not under seal, for a fixed term of years, having been granted, and the landlord having assigned his reversion, it has been held that the assignee can maintain an action of assumpsit for use and occupation. We are, however, of opinion, for the reasons already given, that he can ; and we think that the direction of the learned judge on this part of the case was wrong, though right as to the question of repair.

The rule must be absolute for a new trial.

SPENCER'S CASE.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1583.

[Reported 5 Co. 16 a.]

SPENCER and his wife brought an action of covenant against Clark, assignee to J., assignee to S., and the case was such : Spencer and his wife by deed indented, demised a house and certain land (in the right of the wife) to S. for a term of 21 years, by which indenture S. covenanted for him, his executors, and administrators, with the plaintiffs, that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would build a brick wall upon part of the land demised, &c. S. assigned over his term to J., and J. to the defendant; and for not making of the brick wall the plaintiff brought the action of covenant against the defendant as assignee: and after many arguments at the bar, the case was excellently argued and debated by the justices at the bench: and in this case these points were unanimously resolved by SIR CHRISTOPHER WRAY, Chief Justice, SIR THOMAS GAWDY, and the whole court. And many differences taken and agreed concerning express covenants, and covenants in law, and which of them run with the land, and which of them are collateral, and do not go with the land, and where the assignee shall be bound without naming him, and where not; and where he shall not be bound although he be expressly named, and where not.

1. When the covenant extends to a thing in esse, parcel of the demise, the thing to be done by force of the covenant is quodammodo annexed and appurtenant to the thing demised, and shall go with the land, and shall bind the assignee although he be not bound by express words: but when the covenant extends to a thing which is not in being at the time of the demise made, it cannot be appurtenant or annexed to the thing which hath no being: as if the lessee covenants to repair the houses demised to him during the term, that is parcel of the contract, and extends to the support of the thing demised, and therefore is quodammodo annexed appurtenant to houses, and shall bind the assignee although he be not bound expressly by the covenant: but in the case at bar, the covenant concerns a thing which was not in esse at the time of the demise made, but to be newly built after, and therefore shall bind the covenantor, his executors or administrators, and not the assignee, for the law will not annex the covenant to a thing which hath no being.

2. It was resolved that in this case, if the lessee had covenanted for him and his assigns, that they would make a new wall upon some part of the thing demised, that for as much as it is to be done upon the land demised, that it should bind the assignee; for although the covenant doth extend to a thing to be newly made, yet it is to be made upon the thing demised, and the assignee is to take the benefit of it, and therefore shall bind the assignee by express words. So on the other side, if a warranty be made to one, his heirs and assigns, by express words, the assignee shall take benefit of it, and shall have a Warrantia Chartae, F. N. B. 135, & 9 E. 2. Garr' de Charters 30, 36 E. 3. Garr. 1, 4 H. 8. Dyer 1. But although the covenant be for him and his assigns, yet if the thing to be done be merely collateral to the land, and doth not touch or concern the thing demised in any sort, there the assignee shall not be charged. As if the lessee covenants for him and his assigns to build a house upon the land of the lessor which is no parcel of the demise, or to pay any collateral sum to the lessor, or to a stranger, it shall not bind the assignee, because it is merely collateral, and in no manner touches or concerns the thing that was demised, or that is assigned over; and therefore in such case the assignee of the thing demised cannot be charged with it, no more than any other stranger.

3. It was resolved, if a man leases sheep or other stock of cattle, or any other personal goods for any time, and the lessee covenants for him and his assigns at the end of the time to deliver the like cattle or goods as good as the things letten were, or such price for them; and the lessee assigns the sheep over, this covenant shall not bind the assignee, for it is but a personal contract, and wants such privity as is between the lessor and lessee and his assigns of the land in respect of the reversion. But in the case of a lease of personal goods there is not any privity, nor any reversion, but merely a thing in action in the personality, which cannot bind any but the covenantor, his executors, or administrators, who represent him. The same law, if a man demises a house and land for years, with a stock or sum of money rendering rent, and the lessee covenants for him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to deliver the stock or sum of money at the end of the term, yet the assignee shall not be charged with this covenant; for although the rent reserved was increased in respect of the stock or sum, yet the rent did not issue out of the stock or sum, but out of the land only; and therefore as to the stock or sum the covenant is personal, and shall bind the covenantor, his executors and administrators, and not his assignee; and it is not certain that the stock or sum will come to the assignees' hands, for it may be wasted, or otherwise consumed or destroyed by the lessee, and therefore the law cannot determine at the time of the lease made, that such covenant shall bind the assignee.

4. It was resolved, that if a man makes a feoffment by this word dedi, which implies a warranty, the assignee of the feoffee shall not vouch; but if a man makes a lease for years by this word concessi or demisi, which implies a covenant, if the assignee of the lessee be evicted, he shall have a writ of covenant; for the lessee and his assignee hath the yearly profits of the land which shall grow by his labor and industry for an annual rent, and therefore it is reasonable when he hath applied his labor, and employed his cost upon the land, and be evicted (whereby he loses all) that he shall take such benefit of the demise and grant, as the first lessee might, and the lessor hath no other prejudice than what his especial contract with the first lessee hath bound him to.

5. Tenant by the courtesy, or any other who comes in in the post shall not vouch (which is in lieu of an action). But if a ward be granted by deed to a woman who takes husband, and the woman dies, the husband shall vouch by force of this word grant, although he comes to it by act in law. So if a man demises or grants land to a woman for years, and the lessor covenants with the lessee to repair the houses during the term, the woman marries and dies, the husband shall have an action of covenant as well as on the covenant in law on these words (demise or grant) as on the express covenant. The same law is of tenant by Statute-merchant or Statute-staple, or elegit of a term, and he, to whom a lease for years is sold by force of any execution, shall have an action of co-tenant in such case as a thing annexed to the land, although they come to the term by act in law; as if a man grants to lessee for years, that he shall have so many estovers as will serve to repair his house, or as he shall burn in his house, or the like, during the term, it is as appurtenant to the land, and shall go with it as a thing appurtenant, into whose hands soever it shall come.

6. If lessee for years covenants to repair the houses during the term, it shall bind all others as a thing which is appurtenant, and goeth with the land in whose hands soever the term shall come, as well those who come to it by act in law, as by the act of the party, for all is one having regard to the lessor. And if the law should not be such, great prejudice might accrue to him; and reason requires, that they, who shall take benefit of such covenant when the lessor makes it with the lessee, should on the other side be bound by the like covenants when the lessee makes it with the lessor.

7. It was resolved, that the assignee of the assignee should have an action of covenant. So of the executors of the assignee of the assignee; so of the assignees of the executors or administrators of every assignee, for all are comprised within this word (assignees), for the same right which was in the testator, or intestate, shall go to his executors or administrators, as if a man makes a warranty to one, his heirs and assigns, the assignee of the assignee shall vouch, and so shall the heirs of the assignee: the same law of the assignee of the heirs of the feoffee, and of every assignee. So every one of them shall have a writ of Warrantia Chartæ. Vide 14 E. 3. Garr. 33. 38 E. 3. 21, 36 E. 3. Garr. 1. 13 E. 1. Garr. 93. 19 E. 2. Garr. 85, &c. For the same right, which was in the ancestor, shall descend to the heir in such case without express words of the heirs of the assignees.

Observe, reader, your old books, for they are the fountains out of which these resolutions issue, but perhaps by these differences the fountains themselves will be made more clear and profitable to those who will make use of them. For example in 42 E. 3, 3, the case is; grandfather, father, and two sons, the grandfather was seised of the manor of D. whereof a chapel was parcel, a prior with the assent of his covent by deed covenanted for him and his successors, with the grandfather and his heirs, that he and his covent would sing all the week in his chapel, parcel of the said manor, for the lords of the said manor and his servants, &c. The grandfather did enfeoff one of the manor in fee who gave it the younger son and his wife in tail; and it was adjudged that the tenants in tail, as terretenants (for the elder brother was heir) should have an action of covenant against the prior, for the covenant is to do a thing which is annexed to the chapel, which is within the manor, and so annexed to the manor, as it is there said. And Finchden related, that he had seen it adjudged, that two coparceners made partition of land, and one did covenant with the other to acquit him of suit, which was due, and that coparcener to whom the covenant was made did alien, and the suit was arrear; and the feoffee brought a writ of covenant against the coparcener to acquit him of the suit; and the writ was maintainable, notwithstanding he was a stranger to the covenant, because the acquittal fell upon the land; but if such covenant were made to say divine service in the chapel of another, there the assignee shall not have an action of covenant, for the covenant in such case cannot be annexed to the chapel, because the chapel doth not belong to the covenantee, as it is adjudged in 2 H. 4, 6 b. But there it is agreed, that if the covenant had been with the lord of the manor of D. and his heirs, lords of the manor of D. and inhabitants therein, the covenant shall be annexed to the manor, and there the terretenant shall have the action of covenant, without privity of blood. Vide 29 E. 3, 48, and 30 E. 3, 14, Simpkin Simeon's Case, where the case was, that the Lady Bardolf by deed granted a ward to a woman who married Simpk. S., against whom the Queen brought a writ of right of ward, and they vouched the Lady Bardolf; and afterwards the wife died, by which the chattel real survived to the husband (and resolved that the writ should not abate). The vouchee appeared, and said, What have you to bind me to warranty? The husband shewed, how that the lady granted to his wife before marriage the said ward; the vouchee demanded judgment for two causes.

1. Because no word of warranty was in the deed; as to that, it was adjudged that this word (grant) in this case of grant of a ward (being a chattel real) did import in itself a warranty.

2. Because the husband was not assignee to the wife, nor privy. As to that it was adjudged that he should vouch, for this warranty implied in this word (grant) is in case of a chattel real so annexed to the land that the husband who comes to it by act in law, and not as assignee, should take benefit of it. But it was resolved by Wray, Chief Justice, and the whole court, that this word (concessi or demisi) in case of freehold or inheritance doth not import any warranty. 11 H. 6, 41, acc', vide 6 H. 4. 12 H. 4, 5. 1 H. 5, 2. 25 H. 8. BARNARD v. GODSCALL.

KING'S BENCH. 1612.

[Reported Cro. Jac. 309.]

Covenant on an indenture of demise of a house to the defendant.

The breach assigned was, for not repairing the house within a month after warning given the first of January, 9 Jac. 1, there being an express covenant on the part of the lessee for himself, his executors and assigns, that he would repair within a month after warning.

The defendant pleads, that long time before that warning, viz. 3 Jac. 1, he assigned over his term to J. S., who had paid his rent always afterward to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff accepted thereof; and avers performance of all the covenants until the assignment.

The plaintiff thereupon demurred: for this assignment doth not take from the lessor his advantage of the express covenant; and notwithstanding his acceptance of the rent by the hands of the assignee, yet he may charge the lessee or assignee at his election.

All the COURT was of that opinion; wherefore, without argument, it was adjudged for the plaintiff. And WILLIAMS said he knew it to be so adjudged when he was a serjeant, upon a demurrer in the Common Pleas. And in this term there was another case, Varnis v. Goodcheape, where a like writ of covenant was brought against a lessee for years, on an express covenant for reparations, and such a plea pleaded, and a demurrer thereupon; and adjudged accordingly for the plaintiff.

MAYHO v. BUCKHURST.

KING'S BENCH. 1617.

[Reported Cro. Jac. 438.]

ERROR of a judgment in the King's Bench, in a writ of covenant brought against him as assignee of one Thomas Mayho; for that the lessee covenanted to pay annually during the term of twenty-one years, twenty shillings to the churchwardens of Saint Saviour's in Southwark, and to repair the houses and leave them well repaired at the end of the term; and because the assignee did not pay the rent, nor repair the said tenements, the action was brought: and judgment being given upon a nihil dicit, and entire damages found, it was adjudged for the plaintiff.

And now error assigned, because the assignee is not chargeable with this covenant of the payment of an annual sum, but it is a mere collateral covenant: also, it is not well assigned; for it is not shown for what time the sum was arrear.

And all the JUSTICES and BARONS held that this declaration was not good for both causes; and therefore, the damages being entire, the judgment was reversed.¹

CONGHAM v. KING.

KING'S BENCH. 1631.

[Reported Cro. Car. 221.]

COVENANT against the defendant as assignee of an assignee, for not repairing of an house let inter alia.

The defendant takes issue upon the mean assignment of the lease laid in the declaration.

Wright, after verdict for the plaintiff, took divers exceptions to the declaration in arrest of judgment, that the plaintiff shows the lease to be to J. S., and by him devised to J. D., and made J. N. his executor, and that he virtute legationis entered and assigned to W. S., and he entered and assigned one house, parcel of the premises, to the defendant, who entered and made spoil in an hall and chamber, parcel of the demised premises, &c. One exception was, Because he shows that the devisee entered and was possessed virtute legationis, and doth not say that the executor assented.— Sed non allocatur: for being alleged, that he thereof was possessed virtute legationis, and issue being taken upon a collateral matter, it shall be intended that he entered with the assent of the executor.

Another exception was, Because the breach was assigned in such an house parcel præmissorum, and doth not say præmissorum prædimissorum, and to him assigned; for in the lease are divers things excepted, and it may be that this is parcel of the things excepted, or not parcel of the premises assigned.— Sed non allocatur: for præmissa shall be intended prædimissa et assignata, and shall not be extended to any lands not dimissa.

The next exception alleged was, That the defendant is but assignee of parcel of the things demised; and then he is not chargeable with this covenant, no more than the assignee of parcel shall be charged in debt for the rent; but the action lies against the first lessee, as it is held, Walker's Case, 3 Co. 23.— Sed non allocatur: for this covenant is dividable, and follows the land, with which the defendant, as assignee, is chargeable by the common law, or by the Statute of 32 Hen. 8, c. 37. Whereupon it was adjudged for the plaintiff.

COLE'S CASE.

KING'S BENCH. 1692.

[Reported 1 Salk. 196.]

By indenture H. leases a house, excepting two rooms, and free passage to them. The lessee assigns, and the assignee disturbs the lessor in the passage thereto, and for this disturbance the lessor brought covenant. Et PER CUR. The action lies; the diversity is this, If the disturbance had been in the chamber, it is plain then no action of covenant would have lain; because it was excepted, and so not demised: Aliter, where the lessee agrees to let the lessor have a thing out of the demised premises, as a way, common, or other profit apprendre; in such case covenant lies for the disturbance. Vide 3 Cro. 657; Mo. 553. And this covenant goes with the tenement, and binds the assignee. Judgment pro quer.

HOLFORD v. HATCH.

[Reported 1 Doug. 183.]

THIS was an action of covenant, for rent in arrear, brought against the defendant as assignee of one Saunders. The declaration stated (in the common form), that the plaintiff demised to Saunders for seven years, by virtue whereof he entered and was possessed, and that afterwards, all the estate, right, title, and interest, of Saunders, in the premises, came to the defendant, by assignment thereof, by virtue whereof he entered and was possessed, and that, after the assignment, rent had become due, which the defendant had not paid. The defendant pleaded, that all the estate, right, title, and interest, of Saunders in the premises, did not come to him by assignment thereof in manner and form as the plaintiff had alleged.

On the trial, it appeared, that the defendant was in possession of the premises during the time when the rent in arrear became due, but that, by the deed under which he held, they were conveyed to him, by Saunders, for a day, or some days less than the original term, and that he had actually surrendered them before the action was brought. Some receipts also were produced for rent which had been paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, and which run thus: "Received of Saunders by the hands of Hatch."

Upon this evidence, it was contended, at the trial, which came on before Lord Mansfield, at the sittings for Middlesex, in last Hilary Term: 1. That, in point of law, a person holding of the first lessee, by an under-lease, like the present, is not liable to be sued by the original lessor, on the covenant for rent contained in the original lease; 2. That the fact put in issue on the record, viz., that all the estate, &c., of Saunders, came to the defendant, was not proved.

A verdict was found for the plaintiff, but Lord Mansfield saved the points made by the defendant's counsel, for the opinion of the court. Accordingly, in Hilary Term (Thursday, the 4th of February), Davenport obtained a rule to show cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered. He cited Poultney v. Holmes, M. 7 G. 3, at N. Pr. before Pratt, Ch. Just., 1 Str. 405; Crusoe v. Bugby, C. B. T. 11 G. 3; 3 Wils. 234; since reported 2 Blackst. 766; and Hare v. Cator, B. R. E. 18 G. 3.

Cause was shown on the Thursday following (the 11th of February).

The Solicitor-General, for the plaintiff.

Dunning and Davenport, for the defendant.

LORD MANSFIELD. It is fit that we should look into the authorities; therefore let the case stand over.

The court were understood to be for some time divided, and judgment was not given till this day [May 8, 1779], when Lord Mansfield delivered their unanimous opinion, as follows:

LORD MANSFIELD. This is an action of covenant by a lessor against an under-lessee, and the single question is, whether the action can be maintained against him, as being, substantially, an assignee. For some time we had great doubts; we have bestowed a great deal of consideration on the subject, and looked fully into the books, and it is clearly settled (and is agreeable to the text of Littleton), that the action cannot be maintained, unless against an assignee of the whole term.

The rule made absolute.¹

Mills demised certain premises to plaintiff, habendum for fourteen years; and among other covenants in the lease, the declaration set forth the following one: that at the end or expiration, or other sooner determination of the said demise, a fair valuation and appraisement should be made by two indifferent persons (one to be chosen by each of the parties to the said indenture, or their

(among other things), covenant to and with the said plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, that he the said William Mills, his executors or administrators, should and would well and truly pay, or cause to be paid to the said plaintiff, his executors, administrators, or assigns, immediately after such valuation or appraisement should be made by two indifferent persons, as aforesaid, all such sum or sums of money for such trees and bushes as the same trees and bushes should be valued or appraised at. The declaration then alleged plaintiff's entry, and that all the said William Mills's interest in the premises, before the expiration of the term, became vested in the defendants; and then a breach of the said covenant by the defendants as assignees.

TATEM v. CHAPLIN.

KING'S BENCH. 1793.

[Reported 2 H. Bl. 133.]

THIS was an action of covenant, brought by the lessor of a farm, against the assignee of the lessee, for the breach of the following covenant: "And the said Samuel Norfolk (the lessee) for himself, his executors and administrators, did covenant, promise, and agree, to and with the said George Tatem (the lessor), his heirs and assigns, that he the said Samuel Norfolk, his executors and administrators, should and would constantly during that demise, with his and their family and servants, reside, inhabit and dwell in and upon the said demised messuage or tenement, farm, and lands, and in default thereof, would pay or cause to be paid to the said George Tatem, his heirs or assigns, the sum of five pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, as a penalty for every month he or they did not or should not reside, inhabit, or dwell in and upon the said demised premises, over and above the yearly rent then and there reserved," &c.

The breach assigned was, "that the said Richard Chaplin (the assignee) after the said assignment of the said demised premises to the said Richard, and during his possession thereof, to wit, from the 9th day of May in the year of our Lord 1790, to the day of filing the original writ of the said George, hath not, nor did during such time as aforesaid, with himself, his family and servants, reside, inhabit, and dwell, nor does he now reside, inhabit, and dwell in and upon the said demised messuage or tenement, farm or lands, but on the contrary hath totally absented himself with his family and servants from the same, for a long space of time, to wit, for the space of two years and three months, yet the said Richard Chaplin hath not paid or caused to be paid to the said George Tatem the sum of £5 of lawful money of Great Britain, as a penalty for each and every month he the said Richard Chaplin with his family and servants as aforesaid, have not resided, inhabited, and dwelt in and upon the said demised premises, over and above the yearly rent so then and there reserved, or any part thereof, but hath therein wholly failed and made default, contrary to the form and effect of the aforesaid covenant of the said Samuel Norfolk, so made with the said George Tatem in that behalf as aforesaid," &c. To this there was a general demurrer.

There were also issues joined on the breaches of other covenants.

Runnington, Serjt., in support of the demurser.

Bond, Serjt., contra.

The COURT said, though the deed was very ill drawn, they were clearly of opinion, that the covenant in question was quodam modo annexed and appurtenant to the thing demised, according to the first and sixth resolutions in Spencer's Case, which were directly in point, and therefore that the assignee was bound, though he was not named.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

CONGLETON v. PATTISON.

KING'S BENCH. 1808.

[Reported 10 East, 130.]

THE plaintiffs declared in covenant upon an indenture, made the 23d November, 1752, whereby they demised to John Clayton a piece of ground in Congleton called the Byflatt, and a certain slip of land, through which a watercourse was intended to be made, with liberty for making and repairing the same, and with liberty for Clayton, his executors, administrators, or assigns, to erect in the Byflatt a silk-mill, &c., habendum the said piece of ground and premises, &c., to Clayton, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for three hundred years from the date of the indenture ; yielding and paying as therein mentioned. And Clayton covenanted for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, with the corporation, that he, his executors, &c., would at all times during the term, before any persons should be received as servants, workmen, or apprentices, in such silk-mill, give notice of their names to the town clerk of the borough for the time being ; and if he should immediately give satisfactory information to Clayton, his executors, &c., or to the then owner or occupier of the silk-mill, that any of the persons in such notice were legally settled in any other parish or township, and not in Congleton, then they should not be received to work in the business of such silk-mill, before a certificate of the settlement of such person under the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3 c. 30, should be given to Congleton. The declaration then stated the entry of J. Clayton, and the building of the silk-mill ; and that on the 1st of January, 1790, all the estate and interest, &c., of J. Clayton in the premises duly came to and vested in the defendants by assignment, by virtue of which they entered and were possessed, &c. : and then assigned as a breach, that after the defendants became so possessed, and while they were working the silk-mill, and during the continuance of the term, they received divers persons as servants, workmen, and apprentices to work in the said mill, without giving the previous notice before mentioned to the town clerk of Congleton, and that the persons so received worked in the said mill without any such notice, and that they had not previously gained any settlement in Congleton ; by reason of which the township of Congleton had become liable to relieve them and their families, and had expended a large sum in the same, and continued liable to the burden, &c. ; and that the plaintiffs had also incurred great expense in the premises, and their estate and property in the township had been lessened in value.

The defendants, after craving oyer of the indenture, by which it appeared further, that the term was granted by the corporation in consideration of £80 paid, and of a nominal yearly rent, demurred generally to the declaration.

Littledale, in support of the demurrer.

Richardson, contra.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J. This is a covenant in which the assignee is specifically named ; and though it were for a thing not in esse at the time, yet being specifically named, it would bind him if it affected the nature, quality, or value of the thing demised, independently of collateral circumstances ; or if it affected the mode of enjoying it. But this covenant does not affect the thing demised, in the one way or the other. It may indeed collaterally affect the lessors as to other lands they may have in possession in the same parish, by increasing the poor's rate upon them ; but it cannot affect them even collaterally in respect of the demised premises during the term. How then can it affect the nature, quality, or value of the thing demised ? Can it make any difference to the mills whether they are worked by persons of one parish or another ; or can it affect the value of the thing at the end of the term, independently of collateral circumstances ? The settling an additional number of persons in this place may, indeed, by means of the increased population, bring an increased burden at the end of the term on those who are to pay the rates ; but that increase of population may also be an increased benefit of the land-owners, as it has happened within our own experience in many parts of this kingdom, the seats of manufactures, where the value of land has, in consequence, risen in a great proportion. But the covenant in question does not affect the thing demised immediately, but only, if at all, in respect of collateral circumstances ; that is, through the medium of an increased population, and the increased expense of providing for them on the one hand, with the increased value of the lands to be set against it on the other hand. How then does it affect the mode of occupation ? The carrying on of a particular trade on the premises may be said to do that ; but where the work to be done is at all events the same, whether it be done by workmen from one parish or another cannot affect the mode of occupation. The covenant, therefore, not directly affecting the nature, quality, or value of the thing demised, nor the mode of occupying it, is a collateral covenant, which will not bind the assignee of the term, though named ; and this is a question with the assignee, and not with the original lessee who entered into the covenant. In the case of Bally v. Wells [3 Wils. 25] the covenant might affect the thing demised ; for if the lessee of the tithe suffered any of the farmers of the parish to take their own tithes, such union of the land with the tithe might lay a foundation for claiming a modus, which might affect the future value of the tithes, and would immediately affect the occupation. But we cannot say that this covenant does either ; and therefore it does not run with the land so as to bind the assignees.¹

Covenant. Declaration stated, that one H. N. The declaration then alleged breaches of covenant for not repairing that part of the premises, the reversion of which had been conveyed to plaintiff. General demurrer and joinder.

Selwyn, in support of the demurrer.

Moore, contra.

BAYLEY, J. Although it has never been expressly decided that the assignee of the reversion of part of the demised premises can maintain this action against the lessee, yet, when the question comes fairly to be considered, I cannot entertain any doubt that covenant will lie both by and against the assignee of the reversion of part of the premises. The 32 H. 8, c. 34, § 1, enacts, "that the grantees or assignees of any reversion or reversions shall have the like advantages against the lessees by entry for non-payment of the rent, or for doing of waste or other forfeiture, and also shall have all such like and the same advantage, benefit, and remedies, by action only, for not performing of other conditions, covenants, or agreements contained and expressed in their leases, demises, or grants against the lessees, as the lessors or grantors themselves might have had at any time." The words therefore apply to conditions as well as to covenants, and are sufficiently large to include persons who are grantees of the reversion, either of the whole or part of the property which is the subject of the lease. That part, however, which applies to conditions which in their very nature are entire, is necessarily confined to the assignees of the reversion of the whole of the premises. The authorities cited in the course of the argument to show that the assignees of the reversion of part are not within the Act, were cases of conditions, and do not apply to covenants. I do not agree to the distinction taken in the argument between the first and second sections of the Act, for the words used in both sections are substantially the same, and must receive the same construction. The only difference is, that the words in the first section apply to the assignee of the reversion; those in the second section, to the assignee of the term. Then, except in cases where the construction of the Statute is confined by the use of the word "condition," and the nature of the thing, there is no good reason why the word "assignee" in the Statute should not be held to extend to the assignee of the reversion in part, as well as of the whole, of the premises. In Palmer v. Edwards, 1 Doug. 187, it was held that the assignee of part of the premises from the lessee might maintain covenant against the lessor; and there Buller, J., considered the remedies as mutual. In Congham v. King [Cro. Car. 221], it was held that the lessor might maintain covenant against the assignee of part of the premises demised. These authorities seem to show that the severance of the estate demised does not take away the mutual remedies. I have always understood it to be clear law, that covenant was maintainable by the assignee of the reversion in part. In Kitchen v. Buckley

[1 Lev. 109] this objection, if valid, would have succeeded; and it can hardly be supposed that if it had been considered valid, it would have been overlooked. In Pyot v. Lady St. John, Cro. Jac. 329, a person seised in fee of one messuage, and possessed of a term of years in other premises, demised both for ten years to Lady St. John, by one lease, and then, by separate deeds, conveyed the reversion in fee, and the reversion for years to Pyot. On an action of covenant being brought, it was objected that Pyot ought to have brought several actions, but no objection was taken that he was possessed, by each separate deed, only of the reversion of part of the premises. The court held, that though he might have brought several actions, still the bringing only one action was well enough. But if this objection had been valid, that decision could not have taken place; because it would have been an obvious answer to say that several actions would not lie, inasmuch as in each it must have appeared that Pyot was only assignee of the reversion in part. Upon authority, therefore, as well as principle, I am of opinion that this action is maintainable; and, therefore, that there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

ABBOTT, J. I am of the same opinion. The Statute makes no material distinction between the assignee of the reversion and the assignee of the term. It has been decided that the assignee of part of the premises for the term may maintain this action, and it therefore appears to me to follow that the assignee of the reversion of part may do the same.

HOLROYD, J. I am also of opinion that this action is maintainable. The cases cited in argument apply only to conditions, with respect to which the Statute expressly enacts "that assignees shall have the like advantages against the lessees by entry for non-payment of rent, or for doing of waste or other forfeiture, as the lessors would have had." Now if the lessor assigned the reversion of part of the premises to another, his right of entry would be gone, for in Knight's Case, 5 Coke, 55 b, it was expressly held that the severance of any part of the reversion destroyed the whole condition (which was entire, and the breach of which gave one entire right of entry into the whole premises on non-payment of rent); that being so, the lessor at common law would have no right, in such a case, to vacate the lease by entry, and consequently his assignee would not have that right under the Statute. But that does not apply to the case of covenants, for there, although the lessor has granted away part of the demised premises, still at common law he might maintain covenant against the lessee; and therefore it seems to me that his assignee of part of the demised premises is entitled under the Statute to maintain that action.

Judgment for plaintiff.¹

¹ In Shepherd's Touchstone, 176, the following is stated, among the covenants of which grantees shall take advantage by the Stat. VERNON v. SMITH.

KING'S BENCH. 1821.

[Reported 5 B. & Ald. 1.]

Covenant by the assignee of the lessor against the lessee. The declaration stated that one J. Hance, the lessor, before the time of making the lease, was lawfully possessed of the tenements and premises for the residue and remainder of a certain term of years, whereof seven years were then unexpired; which tenements and premises, with the appurtenances, then were and thence hitherto have been and still are situate within the weekly bills of mortality mentioned in the 14 G. 3, c. 78; and being so possessed thereof, he, the said J. Hance, by indenture, demised and leased to the defendant the tenements and premises, with the appurtenances, habendum, for seven years, at a certain rent therein mentioned; covenant by the defendant that he should and would forthwith, at his own expense, and from time to time during the term, insure in some of the public offices in London or Westminster, for the purpose of insuring houses from casualties by fire, the messuage, dwelling-house, coach-house, stable, and premises thereby demised or thereafter to be erected and built thereon, to the amount of £800, in the joint names of the defendant, his executors, administrators, or assigns, and of Robert Stone, the ground landlord of the premises, his heirs or assigns; and should and would, at the request of Hance, or of the ground landlord, their heirs or assigns, produce the policy and receipts for such insurance. The declaration set out the proviso in the lease for re-entry, on breach of any of the covenants. It then stated the defendant's entry into the premises, and that, after the making of the indenture, the term was assigned by Hance to the plaintiff. The breach assigned was, that the defendant did not insure. The second count stated, that, before the making of the demise to the defendant, in the first count mentioned, and also before and at the time of the making of the demise thereafter mentioned, Robert Stone was seised in fee of and in the said demised tenements, and by a certain indenture demised the same to J. Hance, habendum, for 85 years and six months. And that J. Hance, by that indenture, covenanted to insure the premises from fire, to the amount of three fourths of the value thereof, in the joint names of himself and Stone, with a proviso for re-entry, in case of non-performance of the covenants. It then stated, that three fourths of the value of the premises amounted to £800, and that, by reason of to J. S., in this case J. S. shall take advantage for any breach of the covenant in his time, but not for any breach before the time the reversion was granted." And Pime's Case, Mich. 8 Jac., is cited.—R.F.P.

the said demised premises remaining uninsured, Stone brought an action of ejectment for the forfeiture, and the plaintiff was forced to pay the costs to him, amounting to £500, and also to sustain his own costs, amounting to £1000. Breach, that the defendant had not kept the covenant made by him, as stated in the first count. To this declaration, there was a general demurrer and joinder.

Chitty, contra.

ABBOTT, C. J. It is not necessary, on the present occasion, to give any opinion on the effect of a covenant to insure premises situate without the limits mentioned in the 14 Geo. 3, c. 78. These premises lying within those limits, the effect of that Statute is, to enable the landlord, by application to the governors or directors of the insurance office, to have the sum insured laid out in rebuilding the premises. Now a covenant to lay out a given sum of money in rebuilding or repairing the premises, in case of damage by fire, would clearly be a covenant running with the land, that is, such a covenant as would be binding on the assignee of the lessee, and which the assignee of the lessor might enforce. Here the defendant does not covenant expressly in those words, but only that he will provide the means of having £800 ready to be laid out in rebuilding the premises in case of fire. But, connecting that covenant with the Act of Parliament, the landlord has a right to say that the money when recovered, shall be so laid out. It is, therefore, as compulsory on the tenant to have the money laid out in rebuilding, and as beneficial for the landlord as if the tenant had expressly covenanted that he would lay out the money he received in respect of the policy upon the premises. For these reasons I think that this is a covenant running with the land, for the breach of which the assignee of the lessor may sue; and, consequently, there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

BAYLEY, J. I am clearly of opinion that the assignee of the reversion is entitled to sue upon the covenant in question. The rule is, that if the covenant respect the thing demised, and be co-extensive with the estate of the person to whom it is made, and be made with him and his assigns, it passes to his assignee. The only question in this case is, Does this covenant respect the thing demised? It is a covenant to insure the premises against damage by fire. By the operation of the 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, § 83, the effect of that insurance is not merely to put into the pocket of the person effecting it, in case of loss, the amount of the money insured, but to entitle the owner of the estate to have that money laid out on the land; and if such be the effect of the covenant, it does affect the thing demised, as much as a covenant to repair or rebuild, in case of damage by fire. I think, therefore, that there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

HOLROYD, J. I am of the same opinion. If the covenant to insure to the amount of £800, in case of fire, could be considered as a covenant to pay a collateral sum to the lessor, the present action could not be supported ; but, taking that covenant, together with the Stat. 14 G. 3, c. 78, § 83, I think that the sum insured is not to be considered as a collateral sum, but as a sum which, by operation of law, must be laid out upon the premises. It is, therefore, a covenant to do a matter which concerns the land, and falls within the rule laid down in Spencer's Case, and by Lord Chief Justice Wilmot in Bally v. Wells [3 Wils. 25]. He there lays it down thus : “Covenants in leases, extending to a thing in esse, parcel of the demise, run with the land, and bind the assignee, though he be not named, as to repair, &c. And if they relate to a thing not in esse, but yet the thing to be done is upon the land demised, as to build a new house or wall, the assignees, if named, are bound by the covenants ; but if they in no manner touch or concern the thing demised, as to build a house on other land, or to pay a collateral sum to the lessor, the assignee, though named, is not bound by such covenants ; or if the lease is of sheep or other personal goods, the assignee, though named, is not bound by any covenant concerning them. The reasons why the assignees, though named, are not bound in the two last cases, are not the same. In the first case, it is because the thing covenanted to be done has not the least reference to the thing demised ; it is a substantive, independent agreement, not quodam modo, but nullo modo, annexed or appurtenant to the thing leased. In the case of the mere personality, the covenant doth concern and touch the thing demised ; for it is to restore it or the value at the end of the term ; but it doth not bind the assignee, because there is no privity, as there is in the case of a realty between the lessor and lessee and his assigns, in respect of the reversion ; it is merely collateral in one case : in the other it is not collateral, but they are total strangers to one another, without any line or thread to unite and tie them together, and to constitute that privity which must subsist between debtor and creditor to support an action.” And in page 346, after citing several cases, from which he deduces the principle laid down, he says : “All these cases clearly prove that ‘inherent’ covenants, and such as tend to the support and maintenance of the thing demised, where assigns are expressly mentioned, follow the reversion and the lease, let them go where they will.” In the present covenant, assigns are expressly included ; and, inasmuch as the performance of the covenant would, in the event of the premises being destroyed or injured by fire, tend to the support and maintenance of the thing demised, I am of opinion that it falls within the rule laid down by Lord C. J. Wilmot, and, consequently, that there must be judgment for the plaintiff.

BEST, J. It has been argued, from the preamble to the 83d section of the 14 G. 3, c. 78, that this provision of the Statute only applies to cases where fraud is suspected. But the enacting part of the clause goes beyond the mischief mentioned in the preamble, and is large enough to embrace this case. For, under the first branch of it, where the owner of the building requests the insurance company so to apply the money, no suspicion of fraud is necessary to make such request compulsory on the directors. Within the district, therefore, to which the Building Act applies, this covenant provides a fund for the rebuilding of the premises, which the owner has a right to require shall be applied to that purpose; and then it is clear, that the assignee has a direct interest in having the insurance kept up. But I think, also, that if the premises were in any other part of the kingdom, this would be a covenant that would pass to an assignee. A covenant in a lease which the covenantee cannot, after his assignment, take advantage of, and which is beneficial to the assignee as such, will go with the estate assigned. If this were not the law, the tenant would hold the estate discharged from the performance of one of the conditions on which it was granted to him. The original covenantee could not avail himself of this covenant; he sustains no loss by the destruction of the buildings, and therefore has no interest to have them insured. In The Sadler's Company v. Badcock, 2 Atkyns, 557, Lord Hardwicke says that Lord Chancellor King, in the case of Lynch v. Dayrell, held, that a person who had assigned his interest in a house before the fire happened which consumed it, had no right to the money under the policy. I cannot say whether a court of equity would take any steps to secure the application of the money insured for the benefit of the estate. I presume that if a court of equity would assist a covenantee to have the money, recovered under the policy by his tenant, expended on the estate, it would render the same assistance to an assignee. If a court of equity will not interfere, either for the one or the other, still this covenant is as beneficial to an assignee as it was to the covenantee. It secures to the tenant the means of performing his covenant, and to the landlord a solvent instead of a ruined tenant. It is a covenant beneficial to the owner of the estate, and to no one but the owner of the estate; and therefore may be said to be beneficial to the estate, and so directly within the principle on which covenants are made to run with the land. At the time that the 32 Hen. 8, c. 34, was passed, an immense quantity of land passed from the dissolved monasteries to the King, and from the King to the most favored and powerful of his subjects. Much of this land was on lease, and both the King and his Parliament must have been anxious that the assignees of the reversion should be in as good a situation as the lessors were. This Statute expressly enacts, "that grantees of estates shall have and enjoy the like advantages against lessees, their executors, &c., by entry for non-payment of rent, or for doing of waste or other forfeiture, and the same benefit and remedy by action for not performing of other conditions, covenants, or agreements, as the lessors or grantors themselves might have had." Lord Coke (Co. Lit. 215 b) limits the operation of these general words to "such conditions as are incident to the reversion as rent, or for the benefit of the estate." He adds that the Statute does not extend to "covenants for payment of a sum in gross, delivery of corn, wood, or the like." A sum in gross is in the nature of a fine which belongs to the lessor, and can never be intended for an assignee.

By the deliveries of corn and wood were meant deliveries of those articles at the mansion-house of the lessor, and not rents payable in corn or wood, without any stipulation as to the place where the articles were to be delivered. These deliveries at the mansion-house were inconsiderable in value, and would be of no use to the assignee, unless he became the assignee of the mansion as well as the farm. In 5 Coke, 18, it is said "that the 32 H. 8 was resolved to extend to covenants which touch or concern the thing demised, and not to collateral covenants." In Spencer's Case, Moore, 159, the same doctrine is laid down in the same terms, and this case is put by Gawdy, J., and assented to by all the judges and serjeants, "that a covenant that a lessor will, at the end of the term, grant another lease, runs with the land." The covenant here mentioned is not beneficial to the estate granted, in the strict sense of the words, because it has no effect until that estate is at an end, but it is beneficial to the owner, as owner, and to no other person. By the terms, collateral covenants, which do not pass to the assignee, are meant such as are beneficial to the lessor, without regard to his continuing the owner of the estate. This principle will reconcile all the cases. In Webb v. Russell, 3 Term Rep. 402, Lord Kenyon considers grantees or assignees to stand in the same situation, and to have the same remedy against the lessees, as heirs at law of individuals, or successors in the case of corporations, had before the Statute. For these reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment. *Judgment for the plaintiff!*¹

VYVYAN v. ARTHUR.

[Reported 1 B & C. 410.]

COVENANT by the devisee of the lessor against the administratrix of the lessee. The declaration stated that at the time of making the lease Thomas Vyvyan the lessor was seised in fee of the demised tenements with the appurtenances, and also of a certain mill; and being so seised, on the 24th June, 1779, by indenture demised to N. D. Arthur, his executors, administrators, and assigns, a close of land together with certain common of pasture in the indenture described. Habendum for ninety-nine years, if three persons therein mentioned should so long live, yielding and paying to the lessor, his heirs and assigns, certain rents, sums of money, payments, and returns; and also doing certain suits and services in the indenture mentioned; and also doing suit to the mill of the said Thomas, his heirs and assigns, called Tregamere mill, by grinding all such corn there as should grow in or upon the close thereby demised during the term. The declaration then stated the entry of the lessee, and that the lessor being seised in fee of the reversion of the demised premises, by his will devised the same, and also the said mill, unto three persons in the will mentioned, their heirs and assigns, to the use of the plaintiff for his life; that the lessor died; and that by force of the Statute made for transferring uses into possession, the plaintiff became seised of the reversion in the demised premises and of the mill for the term of his life; that the lessee died intestate during the continuance of the term; and that administration was duly granted to the defendant; and that one of the persons for whose life the lease was granted was still living. Breach, that after the plaintiff became seised of the reversion of the demised premises and of the mill, and during the lifetime of the lessee, corn grew upon the demised premises which ought to have been ground at the mill; yet the lessee in his lifetime, and the defendant since his death, did not do suit to the mill of the plaintiff, by grinding there the corn so grown upon the demised premises, but wholly neglected so to do. To this declaration there was a general demurrer.

F. Pollock, in support of the demurrer.

Gaselee, contra.

BAYLEY, J. I am of opinion that this is a covenant which runs with the land, so as to entitle the assignee of the reversion to maintain this action, which is brought against the defendant, not as assignee, but as personal representative of the lessee. An action at the suit of the assignee of the reversion is maintainable in some cases at common law; in others, under the Statute of the 32 Hen. 8. I rather think that this case belongs to the former class. The lease contains a reddendum, and whatever services or suits are thereby reserved partake of the character of rent. Now, one of the services to be rendered to the lessor in this case is, that the lessee shall grind all the corn grown upon the demised premises at the lessor's mill. It is true that rent goes with the reversion of the land in respect of which it is reserved. But in this case, at the time of granting the lease, the lessor was seised in fee of the mill, as well as of the reversion of the premises devised; and, therefore, so long as the property in the mill and the reversion of the demised premises continued to be in the same person, the suit to the mill would continue to be a suit due to the owner of the reversion of the demised premises, and would, therefore, in that respect, be in the nature of a rent. It is by no means unusual for the owner of a mansion and estate to stipulate with his tenants that they should carry coals to his mansion, and perform other similar services, and as long as the ownership of the mansion and the estate continues in the same person, those services are in the nature of rent, to be rendered to the reversioner of the lands demised. Now here, the plaintiff is the reversioner of the thing demised, and also owner of the mill. In the case cited from the 42 Ed. 3, the prior and his successors took no interest in the land, yet the covenant to sing in the chapel was held to run with the land. Here the covenantor is tenant of land to the covenantee, and the suit to be done to the mill is in respect of the land demised. It is not necessary for us to decide what the case would be if the ownership of the land demised and the mill had been severed. Here the lessor continued owner of the reversion of the demised premises and of the mill from the time of granting the lease till the time of his death, and the plaintiff, as his devisee, then became entitled to both, and now continues so. My judgment is founded entirely on the unity of title to the reversion of the land demised and to the mill.

HOLROYD, J. The case cited from the Year-books of the 42 Edw. 3, seems to me to govern the present, and is much stronger. I think this is a covenant running with the land at common law. Here the close was leased to the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, yielding the rents, and doing the suits and services therein mentioned. The suits and services are to be rendered by the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to whom the lands are leased; and this suit is to be rendered to the mill of the lessor, his heirs and assigns; so that it appears to have been the intention that the assignees of the lessor and lessee should be bound, for they are expressly named, and that suit should be done to the mill as long as it continued to be the property of the lessor, his heirs or assigns. It has been said that the thing to be done does not affect the land. But it affects the profits of the land, and, generally speaking, they are considered the same thing as the land itself; for if the lessee in this case had had a mill of his own, he would still have been bound to grind the corn grown upon the demised premises at the lessor's mill, and the price paid for the grinding of such corn would be in the nature of a varying rent to the lessor, and a deduction from the profits of the lessee. But it is said that as the thing required to be done by the covenant is not to be done upon the land demised, but upon other land which might or might not continue to be the land of the lessor, it does not, therefore, respect the land demised, and, consequently, that the assignee cannot take advantage of the covenant. I am of opinion, however, that inasmuch as the thing to be done is to be done at a mill which belonged to the lessor at the time of making the lease, and which has always continued to belong to the owner of the reversion of the land demised, that the covenant to be implied from the reddendum is in the nature of a covenant to render a rent, and, consequently, that it is a covenant that runs with the land. It is said that it is not in the nature of a rent, because it will not follow the reversion, for if the property in the mill and the reversion of the demised premises became severed, the service must be rendered to the owner of the mill, and not to the owner of the reversion of the demised premises. As long, however, as the mill and the reversion of the demised premises belong to the same person, the suit to the mill is a service to be rendered to the reversioner of the demised premises; and so long, therefore, it would follow the reversion, and in that respect partake of the nature of rent. Now here, at the time of granting the lease, the lessor was seised in fee of the land demised, and of the mill, and continued so seised of the latter, and of the reversion in the former, until his death, when his interest in both vested in the plaintiff as devisee. From the time of granting the lease to the present time, the grinding of the corn at the mill was in the nature of a rent to the reversioner, issuing out of and rendered in respect of the demised premises. For these reasons it appears to me that the assignee may, under the circumstances, take advantage of the covenant, and, consequently, that the plaintiff is entitled to the judgment of the court.

BEST, J. I am of the same opinion. Here, the reversion of the land demised, and the property in the mill, belonged to the lessor during his life, and at his death passed to his devisee, and they now continue united in him. At all times, therefore, the grinding of the corn at the mill in question was in the nature of a rent-service to the owner of the reversion of the demised premises. The general principle is, that if the performance of the covenant be beneficial to the reversioner in respect of the lessor's demand, and to no other person, his assignee may sue upon it; but if it be beneficial to the lessor, without regard to his continuing owner of the estate, it is a mere collateral covenant, upon which the assignee cannot sue. I think that the performance of the covenant in this case, in the events that have occurred, would always have been beneficial to the owner of the reversion of the demised premises, and to no other person, and, therefore, that it is a covenant which runs with the land.

MINSHULL v. OAKES.

[Reported 2 H. & N. 793.]

POLLOCK, C. B.¹ Two entirely distinct questions arose in this case. The declaration was on a demise to the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, in consideration of the rents and covenants on the part and behalf of the lessee and his assigns to be paid, done, and performed, of a messuage and lands, with liberty to the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to make any erections or buildings. The lessee covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators (not saying assigns), that he, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, would pay rent; and that he, his executors or administrators, would repair the messuage and farm, outhouses, barns, stable, and all other erections and buildings which should or might be thereafter erected, and all the gates, &c., and the same being so repaired, he, the lessee, his executors, administrators, and assigns, at the end of the term would yield up. There was a breach alleged, in non-repair and not yielding up in repair. The third plea was pleaded to a part of this, viz., to so much as complained in respect of a water corn mill, cottages, and other buildings erected and built during the term, and showed that they were buildings erected during the term, and not erected in place of others previously existing. It was contended that this plea was good on the authority of the first resolution in Spencer's Case, the lessee not having covenanted for his assigns.

The state of the authorities in question seems as follows: The proposition, that a covenant which would run with the land if the assignee were named, does not where he is not named and the thing was not in esse at the time of the making of the covenant, is laid down in Spencer's Case, 5 Rep. 16 a. The same is to be found in Comyns' Digest, Covt. (C.) 3, citing Spencer's Case and Jones, 223, which however does not support the doctrine. It is not found in Rolle. It is in Viner's Abridgment, "Covenant" (L.), where however Moor. 159, is cited as establishing the same, when in truth it established the contrary. It is negatively sanctioned by the silence of the author and editors of Smith's Leading Cases, and it is cited in Doughty v. Bowman, 11 Q. B. 444, where however, with submission, it was inapplicable. There the question was if an assignee of the reversion was bound, which depends on different considerations. 1 Wms. Saunders, 241 d. In Shepherd's Touchstone, 180, it is thus put: "If the lessee covenant for himself, or for himself, his executors, or administrators only, to build a new house upon the land, the assignee is not bound;" the editor adds, because he is not named. In page 179, Spencer's Case is cited, but the case put is of a new house. A similar remark applies to Cockson v. Cock, Cro. Jac. 125, where a covenant to build de novo is called collateral. But it may not be unreasonably said that to build a new house does not "extend to the support of the thing demised." Indeed Lord Coke thought it waste. Co. Lit. 53 a. On the other hand, Moor. p. 159, pl. 300 (which is evidently Spencer's Case, though the date is later), gives the decision the other way. The explanation may be that Lord Coke is reporting a variety of arguments and opinions expressed, while Moore gives the ultimate decision. Smith v. Arnold, 3 Salk. 4, is directly contrary; and in Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 25, the contrary is stated. No reason is given for the alleged difference between where the assignee is and is not named; on the contrary, the reason given for binding in any case an assignee not named, viz., that he takes the benefit and burden, seems equally to apply to every such case.

No doubt, as Mr. Atherton said, if the law were clearly laid down without contradiction (as he contends it is), it ought to be abided by, though no reason could be given for it. It would not be enough to justify a departure from it, that it was without a known reason; it ought to be followed, at least unless contrary and repugnant to other rules and principles. But in deciding which of two conflicting sets of authorities is correct, it is not irrelevant to look at the reason of the thing. No doubt the resolution in Spencer's Case has been repeatedly cited, or the same thing said as is said there; but that resolution is the foundation of the opinion; it never appears to have been acted on; on the contrary, Moor. 159, and Smith v. Arnold are decisions the other way. In the present case we think it sufficient to say, that as the covenant is not a covenant absolutely to do a new thing, but to do something conditionally, viz., if there are new buildings, to repair them; as when built they will be part of the thing demised, and consequently the covenant extends to its support, and as the covenant clearly binds the assignee to repair things in esse at the time of the lease, so does it also those in posse, and consequently the assignee is bound. There is only one covenant to repair; if the assignee is included as to part, why not as to all? On these grounds we think the third plea bad.¹

WILLIAMS v. EARLE.

[Reported L. R. 3 Q. B. 739.]

BLACKBURN, J.³ This is an action by the lessor against the assignee of a lease for breach of covenants in the lease, and the rule has been well established ever since Spencer's Case, 5 Rep. 16 a; 1 Sm. L. C. (6th ed.) ¶5, that, when covenants are contained in a lease (at all events if, as in the present case, the covenants are on behalf of the lessee and his assigns), and the covenants touch or concern the land, although the original covenants are made by the original lessee with the lessor, yet they run with the land, and there being privity of estate between the assignee and the lessor, the lessor may sue the assignee for breach of any of them. But this is only in the case of a covenant which "touches or concerns" the land.

Now the first and chief point to be determined here is, there being a covenant in the original lease by which the lessees, on behalf of themselves and their assigns, covenant with the lessor that neither they nor their assigns will assign the lease without the license of the mortgagor and mortgagee, and the defendant the assignee having assigned without their license, whether that is a covenant which touches or concerns the land, and therefore runs with it and binds the defendant.

I have been unable to perceive, after listening attentively to the argument of the counsel for the defendant, any reason why this covenant should not be considered a covenant touching and concerning the land. It is an express covenant as to who shall have and occupy the land, and it is inserted with a view that the landlord shall not be deprived of a voice as to who shall be substituted for the original lessee in the possession of the landlord's premises. It is certainly very material as touching the interest of the landlord and tenant, and touches and concerns the thing demised quite as directly as the many covenants that have been held to do so,—such as a covenant to renew a lease, which has been held to run with the land in more than one case cited in the judgment of the court in Roe v. Hayley, 12 East, at p. 469; or a covenant to reside in the demised premises, which was held in Tatem v. Chaplin, 2 H. Bl. 133, to bind the assignee though not named. Again, in Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 25, 33, a covenant not to let any of the farmers take the tithes demised without the consent of the lessor was held to run with the tithes and bind the assignee, assigns being mentioned in the covenant. And the expression made use of by the court at the end of the judgment, which Mr. Jones relied upon as showing that a covenant to assign without a license could not run with the land, seems to have no such meaning, but the contrary. The expression is, “a covenant not to assign generally must be personal and collateral, and can only bind the lessor himself, there never can be an assignee,” but the court adds, “whereas the present lease grants to executors, administrators, and assigns;” and what they seem to have meant is, that when the lessee covenants, not that he will not assign without license, but that he will not assign at all, then the covenant of course does not run with the land, because the covenant is gone whether the assignment be with a license or without. But when there is a covenant that the lessee and his assigns will not assign without license, it is different, and the covenant may run with the land toties quoties. It seems to me, therefore, both upon principle and authority, that the present covenant not to assign without license from the landlord from time to time, does run with the land, and consequently the defendant, the assignee, is liable for the breach.

But though there is a covenant binding on the defendant not to assign, the assignment is nevertheless operative, and the estate passed from the defendant to Banks, and the breaches of covenant which have occurred since are not breaches for which the defendant can be liable in the present form of action; anything done by the defendant on the premises since then he may be liable for in an action on the case; but the remedy on the covenants must be against the new tenant Banks. But the plaintiff is entitled to recover indirectly in the present action by way of damages for the breach of the covenant not to assign; for inasmuch as, if the covenant not to assign had not been broken, the assignee would have remained liable to the plaintiff to fulfil all these covenants, the breaches of which are mentioned in the first count, and there would have been, if he remained solvent, a complete and sufficient remedy in his liability, the defendant having assigned over to a person, who no doubt is selected because he has nothing to lose and so loses nothing by incurring the liability under the covenants, there has been damage sustained by the plaintiff by the defendant's breach of covenant not to assign, by reason of the plaintiff only having the liability of this inferior person, instead of the liability of the defendant, for the breaches of the other covenants; and the arbitrator, in assessing the damages on the second count, must put the plaintiff, as far as possible, in the same position, so far as money will do it, as if the covenant had not been broken. The arbitrator will take into consideration how much the worse the plaintiff will be both in respect of breaches of covenant already incurred, as well as in respect of breaches which may in future be incurred. The arbitrator must see what sum of money will put the plaintiff in the same position as he would have been in if the covenant not to assign the lease had not been broken; and the plaintiff had retained the liability of the defendant instead of an inferior liability. I agree with Mr. Jones that this will be a matter of some difficulty, and the parties would do well to agree that the lease shall be surrendered to the plaintiff, and then the measure of damages will be by how much worse off the plaintiff is than he would have been had the defendant continued bound as lessee all the time, as he would have been had he not broken his covenant not to assign.

There are some further questions for our consideration, which will be material for the arbitrator's guidance in assessing the damages, both on the first and second counts. In this form of action the defendant is only liable for a breach of covenant; and, as has been already stated, a covenant to run with the land must touch and concern the land; and it appears from the lease that there were demised, not only fixtures, but movable things, which are mentioned in the schedule, — tools, utensils, and other things. And there is a covenant that the fixtures and other things should be kept in order and restored when worn out, and when restored kept in the same good working order. So far as that covenant relates to anything fixed to the land, the covenant runs with the land, and for any breach committed during the defendant's time he will be liable on the first count; and any breach which may have been committed during Banks's time, after the assignment from the defendant, will be matter to be taken into account in assessing the damages against the defendant on the second count. But as to the movable things, the covenant does not run with the land, as the mode in which they were dealt with could not have affected the land, and for anything connected with them the plaintiff cannot recover in the present form of action. For instance, a boiler, fixed to the land, though the tenant might be able to remove it at the end of the term, yet the keeping it there during the term would relate to the occupation and enjoyment of the land, and the covenant for keeping it there would run with the land. But covenants as to mere chattels cannot run with the land, and, as to such things, if the parties cannot wisely agree to refer all matters to the arbitrator, the mortgagor, who is the real plaintiff, will take advice as to bringing another action.

Ryalls, for the plaintiff, supported the declaration.

BRAMWELL, B. The covenant does not touch or concern the thing demised. It touches the beneficial occupation of the thing, but not the thing itself; and this becomes manifest when it is considered that, supposing the lessee's covenant to carry on the sale of spirits on the premises to be discharged by agreement between the lessor and lessee, or that without such discharge, the lessee, in fact, discontinued the business, the defendant's covenant would obviously in no way concern the land. This shows that the covenant relates only to the mode of occupying the land, not to the land itself. It does not, therefore, run with the land so as to enable the plaintiff to sue upon it.

CHANNELL, B. I am of the same opinion. A covenant runs with the land only when it touches, that is, when its operation directly, and not merely collaterally, affects the thing demised. It cannot be said that this covenant does so.

CLEASBY, B. I am of the same opinion. It has been argued that this covenant falls within the second resolution in Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 16; 1 Sm. L. C. 45, 6th ed.; but the covenant there referred to, is described as relating to something "to be done upon some part of the thing demised," such as a new wall to be built thereon, which when built will form part of it, or to some matter otherwise distinctly and directly connected with it, such as rent issuing out of it. But the present covenant is rather within the latter part of the same resolution, where instances are given of covenants which do not run, as "to build a house upon the land of the lessor which is no parcel of the demise." This covenant concerns, not the condition of the land itself, but only the value of trade carried on there, and is in that sense collateral to the land.

THOMPSON v. ROSE.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT. 1828.

[Reported 8 Cowen, 266.]

COVENANT; tried at the Dutchess Circuit, December 6th, 1826, before Betts, late C. Judge.

The declaration was upon a lease under seal, dated August 19th, 1812, by which the defendant demised a farm to the plaintiff for the term of ten years from the 1st of May, 1813, at a rent of twenty dollars; and he covenanted to pay the plaintiff, at the expiration of the term, for such buildings as he might erect during the term for the accommodation and pursuit of his business, the value to be fixed by men to be chosen by the parties, who mutually bound themselves to performance in the penalty of five hundred dollars. The declaration averred the erection, during the term, of a dwelling house, blacksmith shop, shed and necessary, for the value of which this action was brought. The defendant pleaded an arbitrament and award between him and the plaintiff after the end of the term, and also a release from the plaintiff; who replied, that after the buildings were erected, and before the award or release, he assigned the lease and covenant of the defendant, of which he had notice, to Richard Harcourt, who assigned to Benjamin Harcourt, for whose benefit this suit was brought; on which issue was joined.

The main question at the trial was, whether the assignments passed the covenant of the defendant. The assignment to Richard Harcourt was dated in April, 1815, by which the plaintiff sold and conveyed to Richard Harcourt all the plaintiff's right, title, interest, claim and demand, both in law and equity, and as well in possession as in expectancy, of, in and to all that certain house and lot or piece of land, &c. (the demised premises), with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining. The plaintiff also covenanted to consult R. Harcourt as to the men who were to value the improvements, and not to choose without his approbation. The assignment from Richard to Benjamin Harcourt, in 1818, was substantially like that from the plaintiff, except in wanting the clause relative to the choice of arbitrators.

The defendant having proved the arbitration and release subsequent to these assignments, and notice of them, objected that the covenant did not pass by the assignments; but the objection was overruled.

The defendant then attempted to prove a surrender of the lease by R. Harcourt, but failed; and Harcourt was received as a witness for the plaintiff.

Verdict, for the plaintiff, seven hundred and nine dollars.

S. Stevens, for the defendant. S. Cleveland, contra.

Curia, per Sutherland, J. The issues joined between the parties were, first, whether Benjamin Harcourt was the owner of the lease, and was entitled, by virtue of the assignment to him, to receive compensation for the buildings and improvements erected and made upon the demised premises, &c. 2. Whether the defendant had notice of the assignment of the lease to Richard Harcourt before the release from Thompson.

Upon the first point, it is clear that all the interest of Thompson in the leased premises, not only his right to the unexpired term, but also to compensation for the improvements, passed by his assignment to Richard Harcourt. The assignment contains a special provision upon this point, and also a covenant that Thompson, the assignor, will consult Harcourt in the selection of the individual, to be named by him, according to the provisions of the lease, to ascertain the value of those improvements.

It is equally clear that all the interest which Richard Harcourt thus acquired in the demised premises, and the improvements thereon, passed by his assignment to Benjamin Harcourt, for whose benefit this action is brought.

The terms in which the subject or interest intended to be assigned, is described, are, "all the right, title, interest, claim and demand, both in law and equity, and as well in possession as in expectancy, of the said party of the first part, of, in and to all that certain house and lot or piece of land, situate, &c., with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging, or in any wise appertaining." The improvements or buildings for which compensation was sought by this action under the covenant in the lease, were the dwelling house, shed and blacksmith shop, which had been erected by Thompson. Now all the assignor's interest in the house, not only present, but in expectancy, is expressly assigned, and his interest in the other buildings passed, because they were appurtenant and belonged to the house and lot.

The judge, therefore, ruled correctly, that the assignments sufficiently supported the first issue in behalf of the plaintiff.

Notice to the defendant of the assignments of the lease to Richard and Benjamin Harcourt, before the release from Thompson was given, was clearly proved.

The action was properly brought in the name of Thompson, the original lessee. The covenant on the part of the defendant to pay for the buildings to be erected, &c., is with Thompson only, and not with his assigns. The subject of the covenant was not in esse at the date of the lease. It was to pay for buildings to be erected, not to repair existing houses, sheds, &c. Such a covenant to repair, extends to the support of the thing demised, and is, quodammodo, annexed and appurtenant to it, and shall bind the assignee, though he be not named. But when the covenant relates to a thing which is not in being at the time of the demise, it cannot be appurtenant to the thing which hath no being. Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 17. Of course, it does not run with the land. Suppose the lease had contained a covenant on the part of Thompson to erect the buildings, as well as a covenant on the part of the lessor to pay for such buildings as should be erected. Spencer's Case decides, beyond all doubt, that the assignees of Thompson, not being named in the covenant, would not have been bound by it; and if a covenant to build does not run with the land, and bind the assignees, where they are not named, it would seem to follow that a covenant on the part of the lessor to pay for buildings to be erected, is a personal covenant only, and not one which runs with the land. If so, the action for a breach of it must be brought in the name of the original covenantee. There is no privity, either of estate or contract, between the covenantor and the assignee.

This doctrine is recognized and supported by the case of Lametti and Others, Executors, &c. v. Anderson, 6 Cowen, 302. The action in that case was sustained in the name of the executors of the assignee. But the assignees were expressly named in the covenant.

The plaintiff's damages were not limited to the penal sum mentioned in the lease. That principle applies only to cases of surety, except the bond be conditioned for the payment of money only. Doug. 49; 2 Bl. Rep. 1190; 6 T. R. 303; 2 T. R. 388.

The evidence was not entirely harmonious as to the value of the buildings. The jury have adopted about the medium value as established by the witnesses.

Richard Harcourt was a competent witness. He was not objected to on the ground of interest, but because he had voluntarily, as was alleged, surrendered the lease on which the action was brought, to the defendant; and was, therefore, incompetent to impeach or invalidate his own act, by sustaining the present action.

The evidence does not establish the fact of a surrender of the lease, by Richard Harcourt, with a view to its being cancelled. It was conditional, and in the expectation of receiving a deed for the demised premises upon a new contract; which contract appears never to have been carried into effect.

The lease never was, in fact, cancelled. It was produced by the plaintiff upon the trial, and must have been restored by the defendant after the alleged surrender. Motion for new trial denied.

HANSEN v. MEYER.

SUPREME COURT OF ILLINOIS. 1876.

[Reported 81 Ill. 321.]

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of McLean county; the Hon. Thomas F. Tipton, Judge, presiding.

Messrs. Bloomfield, Pollock, and Campbell, for the appellant.

Messrs. Rowell and Hamilton, for the appellees.

MR. JUSTICE SHELDON delivered the opinion of the court.

This was a suit to recover damages for the breach of a covenant in a lease, brought by the lessee against the assignees of the reversion.

The facts are: On the 15th day of December, 1872, Matthew Hansen, the appellant, leased of one John Hoffman, by written lease, premises described in the lease as follows: "Store-room on first floor in the hotel building on corner of C. and A. R. R. and Chestnut Street, on part of lot one, &c., in Bloomington, Ill." the lease, by its terms, to continue one year, with monthly rental in advance, with the privilege to lessee to extend the lease by giving sixty days' notice each year. The lease was the ordinary blank used for such purpose, and after the leasing part, has the following written in the body of the lease: "Party of the second part is to put in counters and shelving, which said counters and shelving the party of the first part hereby agrees to buy from party of the second part at a reasonable price at the expiration of the first year of this lease. Party of the first part is to put in good fixtures and other things necessary to the said room." Hansen took possession of the room under this lease, and put in counters and shelving for his use in the retail dry goods business, which he engaged in. He remained in possession, using these counters and shelving himself, until the trial of this cause, June 14, 1875. On the 1st day of July, 1873, Hoffman, the lessor, sold the hotel building and premises in which this room was situate, to the appellees, Hansen being then in possession. At the end of the first year, Hansen brought this suit against appellees, on the lease, to recover from them the value of these counters and shelving.

The lease, in terms, states that the covenants therein shall extend to and be binding upon the heirs, executors, and administrators of the parties, and nowhere mentions or includes assigns of either party. The cause was tried by the court below without a jury, and judgment rendered for the defendants. The plaintiff appealed.

The question presented is, Are appellees, as assignees of the reversion, liable, under this lease, to appellant, the lessee, for the value of the counters and shelving?

The covenant in the lease is, that Hansen "is to put in counters and shelving." This was to be done in the future; the covenant related to a thing not in esse at the time of the execution of the lease, and does not bind assigns when, as here, not expressly named in the covenant.

The leading authority on this question is Spencer's Case, 5 Rep. 16. That case was a covenant by the lessee for him, his executors (not assigns), that he, his executors, administrators or assigns, would build a brick wall on the demised premises. His assignee being sued, it was held that he was not bound, because the thing in respect to which the covenant was made was not in esse, and had not yet become a part of the land. Its existence was in contemplation. And yet it was agreed that, because it was a thing that would directly affect the demised premises, if the word assigns had been used, the covenant would have bound the assignee. The assignee is to take the benefit of it and shall be bound by express words. In Grey v. Cuthbertson, 2 Chit. R. 482, the covenant was by the lessor, but not for his assigns, to take and pay for all fruit-trees and bushes growing, at the end of the term, which the lessee should plant. The assignee of the lessor was held not to be liable, for want of the word "assigns;" though it was admitted that this word would have charged him. The decision was on the distinction in Spencer's Case, that the thing did not exist at the time of the covenant.

But it is supposed by appellant's counsel that the following Statute of this State gives this right of action against the assignees of the reversion, viz.:—

"The lessees of any lands, their assigns or personal representatives, shall have the same remedy, by action or otherwise, against the lessor, his grantees, assignees, or his or their representatives, for the breach of any agreement in such lease, as such lessee might have had against his immediate lessor." Rev. Stat. 1874, p. 659, § 15 (in force July 1, 1873).

This lease was executed December 15, 1872. The lessor, Hoffman, sold and conveyed the property to appellees July 1, 1873. This Statute did not go into effect until July 1, 1873. Without regard to the question whether a covenant of such a character as this is within the purview of the Statute, we are of opinion that this Statute does not apply in this case, as it was enacted after the lease was executed. To hold it as applying to this lease would be to give the Statute a retrospective operation. Retrospective laws are viewed with disfavor, and courts do not allow Statutes to have a retroactive effect on past transactions, unless it appears that such was the intention of the legislature manifested by clear and unequivocal expressions. In the Matter of the Will of Tuller, 79 Ill. 99, and the authorities there referred to. The very essence of a new law is a rule for future cases. Per Kent, Ch. J., in Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 502.

There is no reason or justice in the Statute stepping in and conferring upon this lessee security for the payment of a sum of money which he failed to take for himself, — to wit, the security of assigns, — and to give to him an additional right of action, which he did not have by his contract of his own making, or by operation of law. No such a case could have been within the intendment of the Statute. We hold that the Statute does not apply to this covenant, made before its passage.

The judgment will be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

SECTION III.

AT COMMON LAW.

PAKENHAM'S CASE.

COMMON PLEAS. 1368.

[Reported Year Book, 42 Edw. III. 3, pl. 14.]

ONE Laurence Pakenham brings a writ of covenant as heir against a prior, and alleges by his writ, that he does not keep the covenant made between one J., his ancestor, to wit, the grandfather of the plaintiff, whose heir he is, and one his [the prior's] predecessor, that the prior and the convent would sing every week in a chapel in his manor of K., for him and his servants, &c.

Belknap. Neither the plaintiff nor his servants are living in the said manor, wherefore judgment of the writ.

Cavendish. This goes to the action, wherefore if you wish this to be your answer, we wish to imparl.

Belknap. The deed of which you have made profert means that he is to sing for him and his servants, and when he and his servants are not living within the said manor, you cannot maintain this writ.

Cavendish. Then this goes to the action, wherefore if you wish to make this answer, we wish to imparl.

And then Belknap did not dare to demur, but said that the plaintiff had a brother older than himself, who was heir to his ancestor, to whom the action should be given, wherefore judgment, whether you, who are a younger son, and not heir, ought to have an action.

Cavendish. The plaintiff is tenant of the manor where the singing is to be done, wherefore it is reasonable that the action should be maintained by him, wherefore judgment, and we pray damages.

Belknap. And inasmuch as you have brought your writ as heir, and you have an elder brother, judgment if you have an action as heir, &c.

Ad alium diem.

Cavendish says that the said J., great-grandfather of the plaintiff, enfeoffed one G. of M. of the said manor, who enfeoffed the plaintiff and one Alice, his wife, of the said manor, to them and to their heirs of their two bodies begotten, and for default of issue, the remainder to J. and his heirs, so the plaintiff is tenant of the manor, and to no one else does it belong to have an action except to him, wherefore judgment, and we pray our damages, and also we say, that since the feoffment the singing has been done time out of mind.

Belknap. And inasmuch as you have brought this writ as heir, and yet you do not deny, that there is a nearer heir to him who made the covenant, to whom the action should be given rather than to you, therefore we pray that you may be barred.

Cavendish. And we pray judgment, because we are tenants of the manor by purchase, and privy to the ancestor who made the covenant, and also the services have been done time out of mind, wherefore judgment.

Belknap. Although he is privy in blood, and although he has purchased the land, yet inasmuch as he has brought this writ as heir, and he is not heir, and to no one is an action of covenant given except to him who made the covenant or his heir, therefore we do not understand that an action, &c.

FYNCHEDEN, J. I have seen it here in terms adjudged that two parceners made partition of land between them, and the one parcener made a covenant with the other, to acquit her and her heirs of a suit, which was due from the land, and the parcener aliened the land to a stranger, and afterwards the suit was in arrear and the stranger brought a writ to acquit him of the suit against the parcener, and the writ was maintained, notwithstanding he was a stranger to the covenant, so here.

Belknap. I grant it in your case, because the acquittance fell on the land, and not on the person; and here the covenant is to the person.

FYNCHEDEN, J. And if you grant me that that is law, then much more strongly in the other case, for in the case that I have mentioned of the suit, it was maintained because he was tenant of the land from which the suit was due, and so is it here, he is tenant of the manor where the chapel is, and in the chapel it is to be done, wherefore, &c.

WYCHINGHAM, J. If the king grants warren to another who is tenant of a manor, he shall have warren in the whole manor, and if he aliens the manor, yet the warren does not pass by the grant, because it is not appendant to the manor, wherefore no more here does it seem that the services are appendant to the manor.

THORPE, C. J., to Belknap. There are some covenants on which no man shall have an action, except the party to the covenant or his heir, and some covenants have inheritance in the land, so that he who has the land by alienation, or in some other way, shall have an action of covenant, and when you say, that he is not heir, he is privy in blood, and may be heir, and also he is tenant of the land, and it is a thing which is annexed to the chapel which is within the manor, and so annexed to the manor, and so he has said that the services have been done time out of mind, wherefore it is right that this action should be maintained.

Belknap. He has not counted in his count on such a prescription.

THORPE, C. J. Yes, he did, and we remember it.

And it is adjourned, &c. And it was said that if I let land to a man for term of life rendering certain rent, and I grant the reversion of the same land to another, and the tenant attorns, that the grantee shall have the rent, notwithstanding that he had not a specialty, and it was not denied, &c.¹

ANONYMOUS.

COMMON PLEAS. 1582.

[Reported Moore, 179, pl. 318.]

FLEETWOOD, Serjeant, moved in the Common Bench that a man made a feoffment in fee by deed indented, reserving rent, suit of court, and relief; and by the deed the feoffor granted that if the feoffee, his heirs or assigns, should be distrained to do more services than were reserved in the deed, that then it should be lawful for the feoffee, his heirs and assigns, to distrain in his [the feoffor's] manor of D., and hold the distress until he was satisfied of as much as he had sustained in damage by reason of the said distress.

The feoffee made a feoffment over.

And now he moved if the second feoffee could distrain; and the court said Yes, because the covenant ran with the land; and if the word "assigns" had not been in the deed, nevertheless the word "heirs" would have warranted distress to the assignee, by PERYAM, Justice.²

² See Allen v. Culver, 3 Denio, 284, 301.

In Austerberry v. Oldham, 29 Ch. Div. 750 (1885), A. conveyed the fee of a strip of land, running through the middle of his estate, to trustees, to form part of a road, and in the conveyance the trustees covenanted with A., his heirs and assigns, that they, the trustees, their heirs and assigns, would make the road and keep it in repair. The trustees made the road. A. afterwards sold his estate to the plaintiff, and the trustees sold the road to the defendants, both parties taking with notice of the covenant to repair. It was held by the Court of Appeal (COTTON, LINDLEY, and FRY, L. J.J.) that the plaintiff could not enforce the covenant against the defendants.

The opinion of LINDLEY, J., on the question of the covenant running with the land was as follows (pp. 780-783) :—

PLYMOUTH v. CARVER.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1834.

[Reported 16 Pick. 183.]

THIS was a covenant broken for not repairing a highway, and a wall by which the side of the road was supported.

By an agreed statement of facts it appeared that on May 9, 1709, and on August 1, 1709, the plaintiffs granted to Abiel Shurtliff and James

"The first question which I will consider is whether that covenant runs with the land, as it is called, — whether the benefit of it runs with the land held by the plaintiff, and whether the burden of it runs with the land held by the defendants ; because, if the covenant does run at law, then the plaintiff, so far as I can see, would be right as to this portion of his claim. Now, as regards the benefit running with the plaintiff's land, the covenant is, so far as the road goes, a covenant to repair the road ; what I mean by that is, there is nothing in the deed which points particularly to that portion of the road which abuts upon or fronts the plaintiff's land, it is a covenant to repair the whole of the road, no distinction being made between the portion of that road which joins or abuts upon his land and the rest of the road : in other words, it is a covenant simply to make and maintain this road as a public highway ; there is no covenant to do anything whatever on the plaintiff's land, and there is nothing pointing to the plaintiff's land in particular. Now it appears to me to be going a long way to say that the benefit of that covenant runs with the plaintiff's land. I do not overlook the fact that the plaintiff as a frontager has certain rights of getting on to the road ; and if this covenant had been so worded as to show that there had been an intention to grant him some particular benefit in respect of that particular part of his land, possibly we might have said that the benefit of the covenant did run with this land ; but when you look at the covenant, it is a mere covenant with him, as with all adjoining owners, to make this road, a small portion of which only abuts on his land, and there is nothing specially relating to his land at all. I cannot see myself how any benefit of this covenant runs with his land.

"But it strikes me, I confess, that there is a still more formidable objection as regards the burden. Does the burden of this covenant run with the land so as to bind the defendants ? The defendants have acquired the road under the trustees, and they are bound by such covenant as runs with the land. Now we come to face the difficulty: Does a covenant to repair all this road run with the land ; that is, does the burden of it descend upon those to whom the road may be assigned in future ? We are not dealing here with a case of landlord and tenant. The authorities which refer to that class of cases have little, if any, bearing upon the case which we have to consider, and I am not prepared to say that any covenant which imposes a burden upon land does run with the land, unless the covenant does, upon the true construction of the deed containing the covenant, amount to either a grant of an easement, or a rent-charge, or some estate or interest in the land. A mere covenant to repair, or to do something of that kind, does not seem to me, I confess, to run with the land in such a way as to bind those who may acquire it.

"It is remarkable that the authorities upon this point, when they are examined, are very few, and it is also remarkable that in no case that I know of, except one which I shall refer to presently, is there anything like authority to say that a burden of this kind will run with the land. That point has often been discussed, and I rather think the conclusion at which the editors of the last edition of Smith's Leading Cases have come to is right, that no case has been decided which does establish that

Barnaby certain land, on condition that they should become bound by sufficient bonds to make and maintain a portion of the highway which such a burden can run with the land in the sense in which I am now using that expression. The case of Holmes v. Buckley, 1 Eq. C. Ab. 27, looks a little like it at first; but the observation to be made on that case I think is this: In the first place, it is quite plain that there the plaintiff had a cause of action; he was entitled to an injunction of some sort to restrain the defendants from interrupting his watercourse. The right of the plaintiff to enforce specifically the covenant to repair, or rather to cleanse the watercourse, is obscure, and we have not got the decree which was pronounced; and I confess that having only that short note of it which is to be found in 'Equity Cases Abridged,' I fail to understand the exact grounds of that decision, specifically enforcing that covenant to cleanse. I doubt whether it was a decision to that effect; but the case is too loosely reported to be a guide on the point.

"Morland v. Cook, Law Rep. 6 Eq. 252, another case in which it was said that the covenant ran with the land, is intelligible on this ground,—that there was there that which amounted to the creation of a rent-charge for the repair of the sea-wall which was in question. That is intelligible enough; and if the covenant in the present case amounted to anything of the kind, of course the observations I am now making would not be applicable.

"The case before Vice-Chancellor Malins of Cooke v. Chilcott, 3 Ch. D. 694, has been so shaken that I cannot rely upon it as an authority at all. I think the Vice-Chancellor did intimate an opinion that the covenant there would run with the land. I confess I doubt the correctness of that opinion. He decided the case upon another point, and upon that other point only has it been followed. There is no other authority that I am aware of that such a covenant as this runs with the land, unless it is Western v. Macdermott, Law Rep. 1 Eq. 499; 2 Ch. 72, where the Court of Appeal did not sanction the notion that the covenant in that case ran with the land, although the covenant was a purely restrictive covenant. I am not aware of any other case which either shows, or appears to show, that a burden such as this can be annexed to land by a mere covenant, such as we have got here; and in the absence of authority it appears to me that we shall be perfectly warranted in saying that the burden of this covenant does not run with the land. After all, it is a mere personal covenant. If the parties had intended to charge this land forever, into whosesoever hands it came, with the burden of repairing the road, there are ways and means known to conveyancers by which it could be done with comparative ease; all that would have been necessary would have been to create a rent-charge and charge it on the tolls, and the thing would have been done. They have not done anything of the sort, and therefore, it seems to me to show that they did not intend to have a covenant which should run with the land. That disposes of the part of the case which is perhaps the most difficult.

"The last point was this: that even if it did not run with the land at law, still, upon the authority of Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774, the defendants, having bought the land with notice of this covenant, take the land subject to it. Mr. Collins very properly did not press that upon us, because after the two recent decisions in the Court of Appeal in Haywood v. Brunswick Permanent Benefit Building Society, 8 Q. B. D. 403, and London and South Western Railway Company v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562, that argument is untenable. Tulk v. Moxhay cannot be extended to covenants of this description. It appears to me, therefore, that upon all points the plaintiff has failed, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed, with costs."

"Then there was another case, before the late Lord Romilly, of Morland v. Cook, which was relied upon; but that was really a case not turning upon that doctrine, because it was this: There was a deed of partition of land, all of which was below the sea-level, and was protected by a river or sea wall, and a covenant was entered into by the different parties to pay their proportion of the expense of repairing the sea-wall, whoever passed by such land ; that in pursuance of this grant the grantees, by their bond, dated August 6, 1709, and recorded in the registry of deeds, (and upon which this action was founded,) after reciting the grant to them and the condition on which it was made, bound themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, to the agents of the plaintiffs, in the sum of fifty pounds, forever after to make and maintain such portion of the highway ; that on March 21, 1710, an indenture reciting the grant and condition, was entered into between the grantees, and Richard Cooper and Francis Adams, by which the westerly part of the land was granted to Cooper and Adams subject to the same condition ; that in January, 1711, Cooper and Adams, by indenture, made a partition of the land conveyed to them, recognizing in such indenture, the obligation on themselves, their heirs and assigns, to perform the condition ; that by an indenture dated March 12, 1713, between Adams and Eleazer Dunham, Adams granted to Dunham the land assigned to him upon such partition, and Dunham bound himself, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, to maintain that portion of the highway which passed by such land ; that on January 1, 1734, the lot of land so conveyed to Dunham was granted by Samuel Kempton to Thomas Kempton, by a deed in which it was provided that the grantee, his heirs and assigns, should maintain the wall on the bank adjoining on the upper side, the full breadth of the land thereby sold ; that in 1814 this lot of land was conveyed to the defendant ; that between 1734 and the date of the deed to the defendant, there had been several conveyances of it, but in none of them was any notice taken of the obligation should do it ; and that covenant was enforced for and against the successors of those who were parties to the deed. But in that case it appeared that there was, according to the view of the Master of the Rolls, a common law liability, independently of that covenant, to repair the sea-wall, so that it would be very different from the case of creating a new liability : the covenant there was framed in such a way as to create a grant by the different persons who took, on partition, portions of the property, of a rent-charge out of their lands, in order to provide for the expense. The covenant was in this form. The parties covenanted for themselves, &c., ' severally and respectively, in manner following, that is to say, that the charges, damages, and expenses of or attending the keeping and maintaining the walls and gutts of or belonging to the said lands, fresh marsh lands, hereditaments and premises hereby granted and released, or intended so to be, in good order and repair, shall be borne and paid by them (naming them), their respective heirs and assigns, out of the said lands and hereditaments hereby divided in proportion, and by an acre-scot to be from time to time for that purpose made thereon and payable thereout in the same proportions in ready money.' So although in terms it was a covenant, it was a covenant by these parties that the expense should be paid out of their proportions of the land by an acre-scot payable thereout in the same proportions in ready money. That is, therefore, really a grant by each of the parties of a rent-charge of so much money as would be equivalent to his proportion of the total expense of repairing the sea-wall."

In Sharp v. Cheatham, 88 Mo. 498 (1885), where there was an agreement under seal between the owners of adjoining premises, that one should build a party wall, and the other pay half its cost when he used it, it was held that although the covenant to pay did not run with the land at law, yet in equity, a purchaser with notice of the covenant would be compelled to pay.

resting upon Barnaby and Shurtleff and their heirs and assigns, or of any condition upon which the grantees were to hold the land; that the highway and the wall had been suffered to get out of repair, and that the plaintiffs had been obliged to pay considerable sums of money to indemnify individuals for damages sustained in consequence thereof, and to put the highway and wall in repair.

If the court should be of opinion, that proof of notice or demand, or usage as to the repairs, was material, a new trial was to be granted; but if they should be of opinion, that the plaintiffs could maintain the action, independently of such evidence, the defendant was to be defaulted and the damages to be assessed by the court.

Eddy and W. Thomas, for the plaintiffs.

Warren and Beal, for the defendant.

PUTNAM, J., delivered the opinion of the court. The plaintiffs must maintain, that the land which was granted to Barnaby and Shurtleff, was originally charged with the payment or performance of this bond, and that it continued so charged in the hands of their assignees, and so in the hands of the defendant; that the original covenantors made a covenant to this effect with the inhabitants of Plymouth in respect of the land. But it is perfectly clear, that the town of Plymouth had no interest whatsoever in the land granted to Barnaby and Shurtleff, after the conveyance of the same to them. The town might have conveyed the land upon a condition, that the grantees should make or maintain the highway, and might have reserved a right of entry for any breach of that duty. But they did no such thing. The only condition they required in the deed, was, that the grantees should give a bond to maintain the highway.

The plaintiffs claim to recover upon the writing declared upon, as a covenant which runs with the land. But with what land is this covenant running? No right or estate in any land is conveyed by the covenantors to the inhabitants of the town. Nor did the town, in their deed, reserve any right of entry or any interest whatever in the land which they granted to Barnaby and Shurtleff. But on the contrary, the town conveyed the land on a condition, that the grantees would give a bond that they would maintain the highway. The grantees gave a bond to that effect, and thereupon the estate vested in them absolutely.

We think it very clear, that the bond was a personal obligation of the obligors, not subjecting the land which the town had conveyed to them, in any other way than any of the estate of the obligors might be liable to the performance of their personal covenants or obligations. The circumstance, that the obligors bound themselves, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, did not give to the town any particular lien or interest in any real estate of the covenantors. There was no privity in estate between the covenanting parties, which would be necessary to exist in order to the creation of a covenant to run with the land. We are of opinion, therefore, that the defendant is not liable, as he is the assignee of the land so granted by the town to Barnaby and Shurtleff, under whom the defendant claims to hold it.¹

MORSE v. ALDRICH.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1837.

[Reported 19 Pick. 449.]

THIS was an action of covenant. The cause was tried before Putnam, J.

In 1794 Stephen Cook, the defendants' ancestor, conveyed to William Hull, in fee, a tract of land in Watertown, containing about thirteen acres; with the privilege of using and improving the land and mill pond west of the same tract, for the purpose of fish ponds, baths, &c., within certain bounds described, including a portion of the grantor's mill pond; and the "full liberty of ingress, egress, and regress to and from any part of the said described land and water, to dig out and carry away the whole or any part of the soil, &c.; to build such causeways and dams as may be necessary to divide the same into six separate and distinct fish ponds."

Hull conveyed the same premises to the plaintiff.

Afterward, in November, 1809, an agreement under seal was made by and between Cook and the plaintiff, in which, in consideration of the covenants on the part of the plaintiff, Cook covenants with the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, "that he will draw off his said pond when thereto requested by said Morse, in the months of August and September, not exceeding six working days in the whole, in each year, for the purpose of giving said Morse an opportunity of digging and carrying out mud, &c., as long as there may be mud in said pond, and no longer." It was upon this clause that the present action was brought. In the same agreement are other covenants, some concerning Morse's land and Cook's mill pond, and some concerning the discontinuance and costs of certain actions then pending between Cook and Morse. Cook does not covenant, in express terms, for his heirs or assigns.

It was contended by the plaintiff that the covenant above recited was a covenant running with the land, and therefore binding upon the defendants, who derive their title to their estate as heirs of Cook, as to four fifths thereof, and as assignees by quitclaim, of one of his heirs, as to the other fifth. And this construction was supported at the trial, against the objection of the defendant. The plaintiff claimed the right to take the mud, &c., for the purpose of manuring his land.

The plaintiff requested the defendants to draw off the pond in September, 1835, in order that he might get out the mud, but the defendants refused.

The plaintiff claimed a right to dig and carry out the mud in and from every part of the pond; but the defendants contended that he was limited to the line of his own land, which runs through the pond, the plaintiff owning the land on one side, and the defendants owning the land on the other side of this line. The judge ruled the point in favor of the plaintiff.

While Cook was in the occupation of the pond, the plaintiff enjoyed the privilege of taking the mud, and afterwards, whenever he requested to have the pond drawn off, until 1835. Cook died in 1833.

It was proved that the defendants made a lease of their estate, subject to the plaintiff's right to have the pond drawn off and to take the mud, according to the covenant, and that they afterwards permitted the lessee to keep up the pond, contrary to the covenant, in consideration that the lessee would permit them to have the ice which should be made on the pond.

The plaintiff proved that there was a great quantity of mud in the pond; and the jury were directed to inquire particularly whether the damage would have been more or less if the plaintiff had been restrained to dig on his own land under the pond, for the year 1835. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for $25, as the damages sustained in 1835; and they found that there was so great a quantity of mud upon his own land that it would have made no difference that year whether he had been restricted to his own land, or had taken mud from any other part of the pond.

The questions reserved were: 1. Whether the covenant ran with the land, and was binding upon the defendants as the heirs of the covenantor; 2. Whether the privilege extended to the whole pond, or was restricted to the plaintiff's own land under the pond.

Mellen and Choate, for the defendants.

G. T. Bigelow, for the plaintiff.

WILDE, J., afterward drew up the opinion of the court. The defendants are charged, as the heirs of Stephen Cook, their ancestor, with the breach of a covenant made by him with the plaintiff, and the question submitted to the court is, whether this covenant is such as is binding upon the heirs of the covenantor? And the decision of this question depends on another, namely, whether the covenant is a real covenant, running with the land, which the defendants inherit from their ancestor, the covenantor?

It is generally true, as has been argued by the defendants' counsel, that, by the principles of the common law, the heir is not bound by the covenant of his ancestor, unless it be stipulated by the terms of the covenant that it shall be performed by the heir; and unless assets descend to him from his ancestor sufficient to answer the charge. Platt on Cov. 449; Dyer, 14 a, 23 a; Barber v. Fox, 2 Saund. 136. If, therefore, the heir be not named in the covenant, it will be binding only on the covenantor, his executors and administrators, although the heir may take by descent from the covenantor assets sufficient to answer the claim.

But this principle is not to be applied to real covenants running with the land granted or demised, and to which the covenants are attached for the purpose of securing to the one party the full benefit of the grant or demise, or to the other party the consideration on which the grant or demise was made. Such covenants are said to be inherent in the land, and will bind the heir or the assignee though not named. For as he is entitled to all the advantages arising from the grant or demise, it is but reasonable that he should sustain all such burdens as are annexed to the land. Platt on Cov. 65.

When a covenant is said to run with the land, it is obviously implied that he who holds the land, whether by descent from the covenantor, or by his express assignment, shall be bound by the covenant. The heir may be charged as an assignee, for he is an assignee in law, and so an executor may be charged as the assignee of the testator. Derisley v. Custance, 4 T. R. 75; Jac. Law Dict. Assigns. And a devisee may be charged in the like manner, and is entitled to the benefit of any covenant running with the land. Kingdon v. Nottle, 4 Maule & Selw. 53.

If then the covenant in question runs with the land, it is clear that the defendants are liable; and it is immaterial whether the heirs and assigns of the covenantor are named in the covenant, or not, quia transit terra cum onere. Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 29.

To create a covenant which will run with the land, it is necessary that there should be a privity of estate between the covenantor and covenantee. Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 16; Cole's Case, Salk. 196; 3 Wils. 29; Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 402; Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Mylne & Keen, 517; Vyvyan v. Arthur, 1 Barn. & Cressw. 410. In these cases, and in most of the cases on the same subject, the covenants were between lessors and lessees; but the same privity exists between the grantor and grantee, where a grant is made of any subordinate interest in land; the reversion or residue of the estate being reserved by the grantor, all covenants in support of the grant, or in relation to the beneficial enjoyment of it, are real covenants and will bind the assignee.

This principle is decisive of the present action. It appears by the deed of Stephen Cook, the defendants' ancestor, to William Hull, that the former conveyed to the latter a tract of land adjoining the mill pond in question, "with the full and free privilege of using and improving the said mill pond within certain limits, with the full liberty of ingress and egress, to dig out and carry away the whole or any part of the soil in said pond, and to divide the same pond, as described in the deed, into six separate and distinct fish ponds."

William Hull conveyed the premises to the plaintiff; after which, disputes arose between Cook and the plaintiff relative to their respective rights, and for settling the same they entered into sundry covenants in relation to said grant, and qualifying the same; for the breach of one of which this action was brought. At the time these covenants were made, there was a privity of estate between the parties in that part of the mill pond described in the grant to Hull. The covenant in question was made in reference to the plaintiff's right and interest under that grant, and was manifestly intended to confirm it, and to secure the plaintiff in the enjoyment thereof. This covenant, therefore, upon the principles stated, is a real covenant, running with the land, and is binding on the heirs of the covenantor.

Judgment on the verdict.¹

HURD v. CURTIS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1837.

[Reported 19 Pick. 459.]

ACTION of covenant. The declaration recites that in 1816 an indenture of four parts was made between Simon Elliot and Solomon Curtis, of the first part, Moses Grant, of the second, Hurd, the plaintiff, and Charles Bemis, of the third, and John Ware, of the fourth, owners of

¹ In Fitch v. Johnson, 104 Ill. 111 (1882), A., owning a mill and a dam, conveyed to B. the mill and water power from the dam, and covenanted to keep the dam in repair. It was held that the covenant ran in favor of the purchaser of the mill from B. against the purchaser of the dam from A. The court says: "While it is true the cases are not all in harmony on this subject, yet we are of opinion that by the decided weight of authority the doctrine that covenants run with incorporeal as well as corporeal hereditaments is fully established, and where the owner of certain premises conveys a part of them, covenanting that the purchaser, his heirs and assigns, shall enjoy certain permanent rights in and with respect to the premises retained by the grantor, and also covenants in the conveyance to do and perform, from time to time, certain acts which are essential to the use and enjoyment of the purchased premises, as was done in this case, such covenant, although regarded as a burden, will be deemed to run with the servient estate, and to subject the assignee thereof to its performance. The acts embraced within the covenant being essential to the use and enjoyment of the purchased estate, it must be assumed their performance was intended by the parties to be co-extensive with the estate conveyed, which was one of unlimited duration, and we are aware of no means by which such intention can be made certainly effectual except by holding, as we do, the covenant runs with the servient estate, and that the assignee thereof is personally liable thereon. The principle here announced is no new doctrine of this court. It is distinctly recognized in Sterling Hydraulic Co. v. Williams et al., 66 Ill. 393; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio and Mississippi Ry. Co., 94 Id. 83; and also in Batavia Mfg. Co. v. Newton Wagon Co., 91 Id. 230."

the mills and mill privileges on the upper dam of Newton Lower Falls, to wit, two paper-mills and a saw-mill, with their mill privileges, on the Needham side of the river, and four paper-mills, one fulling-mill and one saw-mill with their mill privileges, on the Newton side, for the purpose of fixing the quantity of water which the several parties should have a right to draw at their respective mills and mill privileges, to regulate the use of the same, and for some other purposes therein set forth, did for themselves, their heirs, administrators and assigns, respectively covenant and agree to and with each other and their respective heirs, administrators, and assigns, that the six paper-mills and the fulling-mill should have the first and exclusive right to the use of the water when no more ran to the paper-mills and fulling-mill then erected and used or that might be erected and used on the six paper-mill privileges and fulling-mill privilege than should be necessary to work them to advantage, and that the saw-mill owned by Hurd and Bemis should have the second right of water, or the first right to the overplus water; that all the paper-mills and the fulling-mill, then erected, or that might be erected, should be altered and built with breast-wheels, each for a power equal to carrying two paper engines, in the paper-mills, and for a power equal to carrying a fulling and wool-carding machine in the fulling-mill, that all the gates of all the mills or breast-wheels should be drawn from the same level, and should be on a level with some permanent mark, to be made by consent of the parties; that the respective parties, and their heirs and assigns, should have a right to substitute and erect any other mills, works, or machinery, in the place of those then erected, provided the new mills, works, and machinery should require no greater power than the mills, works, and machinery which the parties had a right to erect and use by virtue of the indenture. The declaration then avers that, at the time of the making of the indenture, the plaintiff was the owner of one undivided half of the saw-mill on the Newton side, and of the first right to the overplus water, and that Bemis was the owner of the other undivided half; that in 1817 Bemis conveyed his half to the plaintiff; that the two paper-mills and paper-mill privileges on the Newton side, which belonged to Elliot and Solomon Curtis, and the fulling-mill, with the privilege of water to work a fulling and wool-carding machine, which belonged to Ware, have, since the making of the indenture, been conveyed to the defendants, and these two paper-mill privileges and the fulling-mill privilege have, for eleven years last past, been used and occupied by the defendants; that the defendants had due notice and full knowledge of the covenants and agreements in the indenture set forth, on the part of Ware, Elliot, and S. Curtis, and their respective heirs, administrators and assigns, to be kept and performed, and that the same are binding upon the defendants; yet that the defendants have erected and used and now use, on their two paper-mill privileges, breast-wheels constructed for a power much more than equal to carrying two paper-engines in each of their paper-mills, to wit, for a power equal to carrying six paper-engines in each of their paper-mills, and have actually carried the same, and on the fulling-mill privilege they have erected and used breast-wheels for a power more than equal to carrying one fulling and wool-carding machine, to wit, for a power equal to carrying four fulling and wool-carding machines, and have actually carried the same; and have also substituted and actually used in the place of the mills, works, and machinery used on the two paper-mill privileges and the fulling-mill privilege, at the time of the making of the indenture, others which require a much greater power to carry the same than those which the defendants have a right to erect and use thereon by virtue of the indenture; whereby the plaintiff has lost the use and benefit of his saw-mill and of his first right to the overplus water, as secured to him by the indenture.

The defendants demurred.

J. Mason and F. Dexter, in support of the demurrer.

Choate and G. T. Bigelow, for the plaintiff.

WILDE, J., afterward drew up the opinion of the court. The plaintiff claims damages of the defendants for a breach by them of certain covenants contained in an indenture made by and between the plaintiff and several other persons, who were owners of mills on Charles River, at Newton Lower Falls, so called, the object and intent of the indenture being to limit and regulate the use of the waters of the river at their respective mills. The defendants were not parties to the indenture, but they have since purchased of two of the covenantors their mills mentioned in the indenture, and the question is, whether they are bound as assignees by any of the covenants between the contracting parties, as is alleged in the declaration.

To make a defendant liable to an action of covenant there must be a privity between him and the plaintiff. Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 29. As there is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, it follows that the defendants are not liable in this action, unless there is a privity of estate between them. Where such a privity exists between the covenantor and the covenantee, and the covenantor assigns his estate, the privity thereby created between the assignee and the other contracting party, renders the former liable on all such covenants as regulate the mode of occupying the estate, and the like covenants concerning the same. And so if the covenantee assigns his estate, his assignee will have the benefit of similar covenants. These covenants are annexed to the land and run with it. But if there is no privity of estate between the contracting parties, the assignee will not be bound by, nor have the benefit of, any covenants between the contracting parties, although they may relate to the land he takes by assignment or purchase from one of the parties to the contract. In such a case, the covenants are personal and are collateral to the land.

Covenants for title may be considered as an exception to the general rule, and the reason for the exception is very strong; for nothing can be more manifestly just, than that the party who loses his land by a defect of title should have the benefit of the covenants which were intended to secure an indemnity for the loss. Such a covenant is dependent on the grant, is annexed to it, as part and parcel of the contract, and runs with the land in favor of the assigns of the grantee or covenantee; but there is no exception to the rule that no covenant will run with the land so as to bind the assignee to perform it, unless there were a privity of estate between the covenantor and covenantee. "It is not sufficient," as Lord Kenyon remarks in Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 402, "that a covenant is concerning the land, but in order to make it run with the land there must be a privity of estate between the covenanting parties." And so the law has been laid down in all the cases turning on this point ever since Spencer's Case.

A covenant to build a house on the land of a third person, is a mere personal covenant; but a covenant to build a house, or a new wall, on the land demised, will run with the land demised and bind the assignee, on account of the privity of estate between the covenanting parties. Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 16.

In Cole's Case, 1 Salk. 196, a house had been leased, excepting two rooms, and free passage to them. The lessee assigned, and the assignee disturbed the lessor in the passage thereto, and for this disturbance the lessor brought covenant. The action was maintained because of the privity of estate in the passage; but it is laid down as clear law, that if the disturbance had been in either of the rooms, no action of covenant would have lain, because the rooms were excepted. As to them there was no privity of estate between the parties.

In Vyvyan v. Arthur, 1 Barn. & Cressw. 410, the owner of a mill and certain lands had leased the latter for a term of years, yielding and paying certain rents, and also doing suit to the mill of the lessor, by grinding all such corn there as should grow upon the demised premises; and in an action of covenant brought by the assignee of the lessor of the mill and the reversion of the lands, against the lessee, it was held that the reservation of the suit to the mill was in nature of a rent service, and that the implied covenant to render it was a real covenant which would run with the land so long as the ownership of the mill and the reversion of the demised premises belonged to the same person. It seems to be difficult to reconcile this decision with the second resolution in Spencer's Case, and with other cases in which it has been decided that a covenant of a lessee to build a house upon the land of the lessor, not being parcel of the demise, is a collateral covenant not binding on the assignee. The distinction may be between covenants of this sort which are in the nature of rent, and those which are not. But however this may be, the decision does not impugn, but confirms the doctrine laid down in all the cases, that the assignee is not bound by, nor is he entitled to the benefit of a covenant, unless there is a privity of estate between the covenanting parties.

Considering this principle as well established by the cases cited, and many others not adverted to, we are of opinion that this action cannot be maintained, as there was no privity of estate between the covenanting parties. Their estates were several, and there was no grant of any interest in the real estate of either party to which the covenants could be annexed. The stipulations in the indenture cannot be construed as grants and covenants at the same time. If they were grants, then an action of covenant is not the proper remedy for the violation of them; and if covenants, the assignee is not bound, for want of privity of estate between the parties.

Nor can one covenant be considered as a grant, and the other as a covenant, for the stipulations are mutual, and if one is to be construed as a grant, the other should be construed in the same manner. If the stipulation that one party is to have the first preference of the use of the water for certain mills, is to be construed as a grant, the like stipulation, that the other party shall have the second preference, cannot consistently be construed as a covenant. And we ought not to give a strained construction to the indenture, for the purpose of extending the obligation of the contract to those who were not parties thereto. All the stipulations are covenants in form, were doubtless considered as such by the contracting parties, and must be so construed. As such they are mere personal covenants, according to all the authorities, and cannot be otherwise construed, without determining that all covenants concerning lands are real covenants, and binding on the assignee, however remote; which certainly cannot be maintained, either upon authority or upon principle. Such an extension of the obligation of covenants might be productive of great mischief and confusion of rights and obligations of the purchasers and owners of real estate.

Declaration adjudged insufficient.

SAVAGE v. MASON.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1849.

[Reported 3 Cush. 500.]

ALL the facts in this case sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court; except that the conveyance, therein mentioned, from the heirs of Benjamin Joy, to John F. Loring and Henry Andrews, of the 5th of January, 1835, was one of the defective conveyances, mentioned in the case of Sohier v. The Massachusetts General Hospital, 3 Cush. 483; so that the plaintiffs, as to a portion of the estate, to which they derived title from Loring and Andrews, were seised only of an estate for the life of one of the female devisees of Benjamin Joy.

The case was argued by J. A. Andrew, for the plaintiffs, and by B. Rand, for the defendant.

FLETCHER, J. This is an action of covenant. The plaintiffs put into the case an indenture, of which the following are extracts:—

“This indenture of four parts, made and concluded the first day of June, 1826, by and between Harrison Gray Otis, Jonathan Mason, Benjamin Joy, and William Sullivan, Esquires, all of Boston, in the county of Suffolk, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, witnesseth: Whereas the above-named parties are before the ensealment of these presents seised in fee as tenants in common of sundry pieces or lots of land, situated at said Boston, in the westerly part thereof, on the slope of what is known by the name of Mount Vernon, and bordering on Pinckney Street, Cedar or George Street, and on Sumner, formerly called Olive Street, which pieces or lots are delineated on the annexed plan, and which are hereinafter particularly described, and which pieces or lots of land they have agreed to divide between them, so that each of the said parties may hold his part thereof in severalty, to him, his heirs and assigns forever, as is hereinafter particularly expressed and declared, It is therefore hereby covenanted and agreed by and between the said parties, and their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, that they will hereafter stand seised of the premises in severalty, in the manner following:” —

The indenture then proceeds to describe particularly the pieces and lots of land set out and conveyed in severalty to each of the said parties, and, after describing the same, contains the following clause:

“ And it is hereby agreed, and each of the said parties, for himself severally, and for his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, covenants and agrees with the other parties, jointly and severally, and with their and each of their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, that the following shall be regarded as perpetual and fundamental covenants, conditions, and articles, in the partition by these presents made, and deemed to run with the land hereby divided, and that all deeds, grants, leases, conveyances, or other instruments, whatsoever, to be made by either of said parties, or their heirs or assigns, of or concerning the land or any part of it, hereby set off and divided to him in severalty, and all buildings thereon to be erected, shall be and forever remain subject to all and singular the said covenants, conditions, and articles, by each of them, their heirs and assigns to be faithfully kept and performed.”

The third of these perpetual, fundamental covenants which were to run with the land, as before expressed, was as follows:—

“ Third, the centre of party walls, of every brick or stone building, may be placed upon the lines dividing said lots from contiguous lots, and the owner of such contiguous lots, whenever he shall make use of the same, in any building, shall pay [for] one half of the wall by him so used.”

In this partition among the parties to the indenture, lot numbered thirty-six on Pinckney Street was set off and conveyed to Benjamin Joy, with the covenants and agreements aforesaid.

It appeared, that this lot numbered thirty-six was conveyed by the heirs of Joy, on the 5th of January, 1835, to John F. Loring and Henry Andrews, and by Loring and Andrews, by a deed dated November 29, 1839, to Ezekiel W. Pike, “ together with all the rights, easements, and privileges thereto belonging, subject to all the conditions and restrictions contained in a certain deed of division made between H. G. Otis and others, dated," &c. Pike entered upon and took possession of the lot, under the deed to him, and built a brick dwelling-house thereupon, and placed the centre of the party wall of the westerly side of the house upon the line dividing lot thirty-six from the contiguous lot thirty-seven, on the plan referred to in the indenture.

Pike, by a deed dated December 1, 1840, conveyed lot numbered thirty-six to Luther S. Cushing and wife, "together with all the rights, easements, and privileges thereto belonging, and the house thereon standing, and subject to all the restrictions and conditions contained in a certain deed of division made between H. G. Otis and others," &c. Cushing and wife, by a deed dated December 1, 1841, conveyed the same estate to the plaintiffs, "together with the said dwelling-house, with all the rights, easements, and privileges thereto belonging, and subject to all the conditions and restrictions" referred to in the said last above-named deed. The plaintiffs thus trace a title to themselves to lot numbered thirty-six from the said Benjamin Joy.

It further appeared, that in the partition made by the indenture above mentioned, lot numbered thirty-seven, which was contiguous to lot numbered thirty-six, was set off and conveyed to Jonathan Mason, named in the indenture, with the covenants and agreements aforesaid, and that the same lot numbered thirty-seven was set off to the defendant, as one of the heirs of the said Jonathan Mason, upon a division of his estate.

It was also in evidence, that while the defendant held and was the owner of lot numbered thirty-seven, set off to him as aforesaid, a brick dwelling-house was erected thereupon, the easterly wall of which was the wall of the plaintiffs' house, the centre of the westerly side of which had been placed upon the party line, as aforesaid, on or before the first day of July, 1844, and the wall of the plaintiff's house thereupon and thereafter used.

On the 23d of December, 1845, a formal demand was made by the plaintiffs upon the defendant, for the value of the wall so used, which not being paid, this suit was brought to recover one half the value of the partition wall belonging to the plaintiffs, according to the covenant and provision in the indenture of partition.

It appeared, further, that by an agreement dated March 11th, 1844, between the defendant and Joseph Lincoln and Eber Taylor, the defendant agreed to convey lot numbered thirty-seven to them, at any time within three years from the 11th of March, 1844, upon the performance of their undertaking to build a brick dwelling-house on the same lot within a time specified, and to pay the defendant for the lot a specified sum at a time stated.

By a deed dated November 8th, 1844, the defendant conveyed lot numbered thirty-seven to Lincoln and Taylor, with the dwelling-house by them erected thereon, subject to all and singular the covenants, conditions, and articles contained in the indenture of partition between H. G. Otis and others.

It appeared, that the sum of $300, the agreed value of one half of said wall, was paid by Lincoln and Taylor, under a bond of indemnity, to Ezekiel W. Pike, above mentioned, after the completion of the house on lot numbered thirty-seven, in September, 1844.

Several points were stated in the argument, but the only one which requires any consideration, and the one on which the decision turns, is, whether the covenant in the indenture of partition, in regard to the wall of buildings to be placed on the lines dividing the lots, and providing for the use of and payment for such wall, and on which covenant this action is founded, is a covenant running with the land.

A mere statement of the covenant would seem sufficient to remove all doubt or question on this point. In the indenture of partition, the several parties agree and bind themselves and their representatives, that certain covenants, conditions, and articles therein contained shall be regarded as perpetual and fundamental, and deemed to run with the land thereby divided, and that all conveyances or other instruments whatsoever, to be made of or concerning the land, or any part of it, and all buildings thereon to be erected, shall be and forever remain subject to all and singular the said covenants, conditions and articles.

The third of these perpetual and fundamental covenants, which the parties expressly declared should run with the land, provides that the centre of party walls of every brick or stone building may be placed upon the lines dividing said lots from contiguous lots, and that the owner of such contiguous lot, whenever he shall make use of the same in any building, shall pay for one half of the wall by him so used.

The intention of the parties to the indenture, that this covenant should run with the land, is express and clear. The provision in question is a most reasonable one, and no doubt was considered by the parties, and in fact is, highly beneficial, and not burdensome, to the land.

A covenant is said to run with the land, when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of the land. The liability to perform, and the right to take advantage of, this covenant, both pass to the heir or assignee of the land, to which the covenant is attached. This covenant can by no means be considered as merely personal, or collateral, and detached from the land. There was a privity of estate between the covenanting parties in the land to which the covenant was annexed. The covenant is in terms between the parties and their respective heirs and assigns; it has direct and immediate reference to the land; it relates to the mode of occupying and enjoying the land; it is beneficial to the owner as owner, and to no other person; it is in truth inherent in and attached to the land, and necessarily goes with the land into the hands of the heir or assignee.

According to the report of the case, the defendant must be defaulted.¹

ACTION of covenant broken. In his writ, which is dated December 1, 1856, the plaintiff declares, in substance, that on the 4th day of April, 1849, the defendant by his deed, for a valuable consideration, received of Abner Coburn and others (named), owners of mills, dams and water power on Skowhegan Falls, bound and obliged himself to, and with each of the before-named persons, and to and with each of the grantees of either and all of them, and therein and thereby covenanted and agreed jointly and severally with each and all of the before-named persons, and with each and all of the grantees of either and all of them, that he would build a dam from &c., and would keep the same in perfect repair for the term of twenty years.

That plaintiff afterwards became part owner, by purchase from Abner Coburn and others, of a paper-mill and of a saw-mill, and of the water power aforesaid; that defendant has failed to perform his covenants, whereby the said plaintiff has been damnedified.

The defendant pleaded the general issue and by brief statement set forth, — (1) that the plaintiff is not a party to the obligation declared upon; (2) that his co-tenants are not joined with him, nor (3) are the obligees in said bond joined in said action; (4) the performance of said writing; (5) a waiver and discharge of his covenants by the obligees in said obligation before the commencement of this suit.

At the trial the plaintiff introduced, without objection, a copy of the obligation declared upon; also deeds, from some of the obligees named in the defendant's writing, conveying to plaintiff an undivided part of certain of the mills, and of the dam and water power. Whereupon the case was withdrawn from the jury to be submitted to the full court, on report of the case by Tenney, C. J. And if, in the opinion of the court, where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist, only such covenants as are beneficial to the estate will run with the land; but we do not regard the doctrine as applicable to cases where adjacent proprietors have, as in the present case, so contracted as to create mutual easements upon each other's estates, and entered into covenants with respect to the same. The new relation thus created, being of an intimate character, involving reciprocal duties with respect to each other's estates, may be regarded as an equivalent for the absence of tenure, so as to give effect to all covenants without regard to whether they are beneficial or onerous. However this may be, it is clear the rule contended for does not seem to be applied in this class of cases." Roche v. Ullman, 104 Ill. 11, 20 (1882).

the action is maintainable, it is to stand for trial; otherwise, the plaintiff to become nonsuit.

Abbott, for plaintiff.

Coburn and Wyman, for the defendant.

The opinion of the court was drawn up by APPLETON, J. It appears that the defendant on April 4, 1849, by his bond of that date, "became bound and obliged jointly and severally" to Abner Coburn and others, "owners of mills, dams and water power on Skowhegan Falls," and also "unto the grantees of either or all of them" (naming the obligees in the bond), "to complete, maintain and keep in good and perfect repair, at all times, for and during twenty years from the first of April, A. D. 1849, said dam," &c., &c.

The plaintiff, as grantee of some of the obligees named in the bond, brings this action to recover damages for the injuries he has sustained by reason of the defendant's failure to perform his covenants.

It is a familiar principle of law, that a bond or contract under seal cannot be assigned so as to enable the assignee to maintain an action in his own name. If the bond had been made to Coburn and others, and their assigns, it would not be pretended that an assignee could maintain an action on it in his own name. It does not strengthen the plaintiff's right of action because his only claim as assignee arises not from an assignment upon the bond, but by deed from some of the assignees.

The defendant is a stranger to the title. He contracts with certain individuals to do work upon a dam belonging to the obligees in the bond. The covenant is personal. There is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, for the plaintiff was no party to the bond when it was executed.

Neither is there any privity of estate. "It is not sufficient," says Lord Kenyon, in Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 402, "that a covenant is concerning the land, but in order to make it run with the land, there must be a privity of estate between the covenanting parties." There being neither privity of contract nor of title, the action is not maintainable. Plymouth v. Carver, 16 Pick. 183; Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. 458.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1867.

[Reported 98 Mass. 317.]

CONTRACT for the cost of half of a division wall. In the Superior Court the following facts were agreed:—

On May 16, 1859, the city of Boston, in consideration of a bond of William E. Blanchard for payment of a certain sum of money, executed a written agreement to convey to him, his heirs or assigns, a lot of land on Worcester Square, numbered 37 on a plan of similar (including the adjoining) lots owned by the city and not built upon, which agreement contained the following condition: “So long as said lot remains unoccupied by a building, the said Blanchard, his heirs and assigns, shall permit, free of charge, the proprietor of each adjoining lot who may build, to erect one half of the thickness of division wall on said lot numbered 37, and the said Blanchard, his heirs and assigns, shall pay to the said proprietor so erecting said wall, a proportional part of the cost thereof for such part of the said wall as he, the said Blanchard, his heirs or assigns, may use or occupy; and the said Blanchard, his heirs and assigns, shall, when he erects or they erect a building on said lot, build one half of the thickness of division wall on each adjoining lot which may be unoccupied.” On September 4, 1860, under a power contained in the agreement, Blanchard, by an instrument indorsed thereon, directed the city “to convey the within described premises, subject to the within terms and conditions, to Samuel T. Ames or his assigns;” and Ames then built a house on the lot, and, in so doing, erected the half of the division wall in question on the adjoining lot numbered 36. The city then conveyed the premises to Ames by deed dated September 5, 1861, containing a repetition of the conditions expressed in the agreement of May 16, 1859, and setting forth that “the building now standing on said lot 37 has been erected in conformity with the requirements of the foregoing conditions;” and Ames, on December 14, 1861, conveyed the premises “with all the privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging,” “subject to the conditions, restrictions and reservations contained in the deed of the same from the city of Boston to said Ames,” to David W. Cunningham, who by a similar deed conveyed them to the plaintiff.

On October 16, 1862, the city executed to the defendant an agreement for the sale of the adjoining lot numbered 36, containing a condition as to that lot similar to the condition above quoted from the agreement of the city with Blanchard; and thereupon the defendant took possession of the lot, and in the spring of 1863, after the conveyance by Cunningham to the plaintiff, built a house thereon, and in so doing used that part of the division wall of the plaintiff's house which had been built thereon. On November 23, 1863, after the defendant had finished his house, the city, at his request, conveyed lot 36 to one Horswell, and the defendant never had a deed thereof. After this, the plaintiff made demand of the defendant for the cost of one half of said division wall. This demand was refused, but subsequently, on like demand by Ames, the defendant paid to Ames said amount.

On these facts, judgment was ordered for the plaintiff; and the defendant appealed.

J. P. Healy, for the plaintiff.

J. P. Converse, for the defendant.

BIGELOW, C. J. We have no doubt of the liability of the defendant for the cost of the partition wall which he made use of in constructing the house on the lot of land adjoining that of the plaintiff. The property in the whole wall passed to the plaintiff by the deed under which he claims title. So far as it was erected on land which belonged to the city and which the defendant agreed to purchase, it was placed there by consent of the city, the owner of the fee, under an agreement that it should there remain, as part of the house now belonging to the plaintiff, until it was used as a partition wall by the owner of the lot on which it stood. Construing the contract of the parties according to their intent and with reference to the subject-matter, it is clear that the rights and obligations of the purchaser of the plaintiff's lot, and of the city, as to a partition wall which might be erected on the premises under the stipulations contained in the bond and deed from the city, were to belong to and be binding on those who should subsequently become owners or entitled to build on the two adjacent lots on which such partition wall might be built.

The plaintiff, under his deed, which contained an express reference to the terms of the original purchase from the city, had a right to maintain the whole wall as part of his house, until the city or some one claiming title under the city built on the adjacent land and made use of the partition wall or some part of it. When that took place, then the plaintiff's property in that part of the wall on the adjacent lot ceased, except so far as he might claim a right or easement of support in it as a partition wall, and he became entitled to recover the cost of its erection. He can recover this cost of the defendant, because the latter accepted a bond and agreement of the city which contained an express stipulation that he should pay it whenever he erected a building on the land on which the wall stood. The doctrine is perfectly well settled, that, when a party accepts a deed-poll or instrument in the nature of a deed-poll, by which he obtains a right or interest in property on condition or with a stipulation that he shall pay a sum of money or perform a certain duty, he becomes thereby bound to pay the money or perform the duty. Not having signed and sealed the deed, he is not liable for breach of covenant; but by accepting the deed he assumes the performance of the condition or stipulation, from which the law will imply a promise on which an action may be maintained. Guild v. Leonard, 18 Pick. 511; Newell v. Hill, 2 Met. 180; Pike v. Brown, 7 Cush. 133. *Judgment for the plaintiff.*¹

STANDISH v. LAWRENCE.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1872.

[Reported 111 Mass. 111.]

CONTRACT against Abbott Lawrence, Charles H. Parker, and Aaron D. Hubbard, executors of the will of T. Bigelow Lawrence. Writ dated December 19, 1870. The case was submitted to the judgment of the Superior Court on an agreed statement of facts substantially as follows:—

The testator and William W. Goddard, being owners of a tract of land on Beacon Street in Boston, entered into an indenture with the plaintiff, dated April 23, 1860, wherein they covenanted, "for themselves, their heirs, executors, and administrators," to convey to him a lot of land, part of the tract, by a warranty deed, upon payment by him of a certain sum; and he covenanted, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay said sum within a year, and within sixty days to begin to build a dwelling-house on the lot. The indenture contained the following clause: "And it is further understood and agreed between the said parties, that each of the side-walls of the house on this lot is to be placed as a partition wall, one half on this and one half on the next adjoining lot, and that when the adjoining lot is built upon and the wall used, the owner of said adjoining lot is to pay one half of the cost of such part of the wall as is used by him, and that the deed of said lot is to be made conformably to this agreement."

The plaintiff, in the course of 1860, built a party wall in accordance with the agreement; one half on said lot, and one half on the land of the testator and Goddard, adjoining said lot on the east; and in 1861

"Cases, therefore, where parties are, by the deed under which they take title, given one half of a wall as a party wall when or upon condition of making payment, and cases in which the owner of one lot has licensed the owner of the adjoining lot to build a wall for himself, resting one half of it on each lot, and reserving the privilege of thereafter purchasing one half the wall as a party wall, are not analogous. In all such cases the title to the whole wall may be regarded as appurtenant to the lot of the builder, and so passing, by every conveyance of it, until a severance of the half by the payment of the purchase money. The sale of the half of the wall does not occur, nor the title to it pass, in those cases, until the payment is made; and so necessarily it is, constructively, a sale by the assignee of so much of the wall. His right to the purchase money is not because he is the assignee of a covenant running with the land, but because he is the vendor of so much of the wall." Gibson v. Holden, 115 Ill. 199, 206 (1885).

the testator and Goddard conveyed the said lot to the plaintiff, in conformity with the agreement.

By quitclaim deed, dated July 29, 1862, the testator conveyed his undivided moiety of so much of said tract as remained unsold, including said land adjoining the lot conveyed to the plaintiff, to Abbott Lawrence. This deed contained no reference to any party wall. By a written declaration of trust, executed simultaneously with the deed, Abbott Lawrence declared that the deed was made to him "in order that he might, during the contemplated absence of said T. Bigelow Lawrence, for his benefit, in conjunction with said William W. Goddard, make sale" of the land, in whole or in part, as opportunity might occur; and that he had no other right, title or interest in the premises. The deed was recorded, but the declaration of trust was not.

In 1864 Abbott Lawrence and Goddard conveyed to John Wooldridge said land adjoining the plaintiff's lot, by a deed containing this clause: "This conveyance is made upon the agreement that the grantee and his heirs and assigns shall pay on demand to the owners thereof, one half the cost of the brick partition wall now standing upon the west side of the granted land and that about to be built on the east side of the granted premises, or such part or parts of both side walls as he or they may use, when and as he or they shall use the same, including therein one half the cost of the stone and pile foundation."

In 1866 Wooldridge conveyed the land thus conveyed to him to Albert H. Kelsey, by a deed setting forth that the conveyance was subject to the stipulations and agreements in the deed to Wooldridge; and Kelsey built a house thereon, using the party wall which the plaintiff had built. The plaintiff demanded payment for the wall from Wooldridge and from Kelsey, but they did not pay him, and he afterwards demanded payment from the defendants, who were appointed executors of the testator's will upon his death in 1869.

The Superior Court gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendants appealed.

T. S. Dame, for the plaintiff.

J. J. Storrow, for the defendants.

WELLS, J. As against Goddard and Lawrence, and their grantees with notice, their indenture with and deed to the plaintiff gave him the right to build a party wall upon the boundary line of his land, and to own the entire wall, with right of support, until the adjoining owner should build and use it. Thereupon such adjoining proprietor would be bound to pay one half the cost of the wall, and be entitled to become owner of the same in common with himself. Maine v. Cumston, 98 Mass. 317.

The subsequent purchaser of the adjoining land, by whom the wall was used for the purposes of building thereon, took his title with full notice of these rights of the plaintiff. By the terms of his deed, the obligation was imposed upon him to "pay on demand to the owners thereof, one half the cost of the brick partition wall now standing upon the west side of the granted land." With such notice of the plaintiff's rights, he could not avail himself of the use of the wall without compliance with the terms under which it had been built. If he should so use it, the law would imply an assumpsit for one half the cost.

There is no stipulation for the payment of this sum by the party to the indenture. The clause relied on defines what are to be the rights of parties who may be or become owners of the adjoining lots; and the liability for the payment arises out of the exercise of those rights. The only covenant of the testator upon which the defendants could be held is that "the deed of said lot is to be made conformably to this agreement." As understood by both parties, this covenant applies to the conveyance of the lot adjoining that of the plaintiff.

There has been a substantial, if not a literal, compliance with this stipulation. The deed by which the adjoining lot passed from the actual control of the plaintiff's grantors, and under which alone its present owner has any title, was "made conformably to this agreement." All rights to which the plaintiff was entitled under his agreement have thus been fully secured to him, and he has no cause of action against these defendants. Judgment for the defendants.

JOY v. BOSTON PENNY SAVINGS BANK.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1874.

[Reported 115 Mass. 60.]

CONTRACT to recover one half the cost of a division wall used by the defendant.

In the Superior Court the following facts were agreed:

"The plaintiff is the owner of the estate on Washington Street, in Boston, described in the deed of Amos A. Lawrence to him, dated April 11, 1866, and recorded with Suffolk deeds, lib. 875, folio 187. Lawrence derived his title to said estate from Gideon Currier, by deed, dated August 13, 1864, and recorded with Suffolk deeds, lib. 847, folio 63. The defendant corporation is the owner of the adjoining estate, which is described in the deed of Job A. Turner and others to it, dated July 8, 1867, and recorded with Suffolk deeds, lib. 904, folio 172. Turner and others acquired their title to the estate under the deed from Hiram Johnson, dated November 21, 1866, and recorded with Suffolk deeds, lib. 889, folio 241.

"It is also agreed, if the evidence is admissible and competent against any objections and exceptions which the defendant could take thereto, that before Currier had acquired by deed his title to the land now owned by the plaintiff, but after he had bargained therefor and taken a bond for the conveyance thereof to him upon the performance by him of the conditions of the bond, Johnson signed and delivered to Currier a paper writing, dated November 7, 1857, whereby Johnson, in consideration of one dollar paid by Currier, covenanted and agreed to and with Currier, his heirs and assigns, 'that the said Currier may erect or cause to be erected one half the stone and brick wall which he is about to build on the dividing line between the estate belonging to said Hiram Johnson, . . . and estate of said Currier, . . . and that I, the said Hiram Johnson, will my heirs and assigns pay or cause to be paid to said Currier, his heirs or assigns, one half the cost of erecting said wall, whenever, and as soon as I, my heirs, or assigns, shall use the same.' This instrument was not under seal, and it was not acknowledged, but it was recorded with Suffolk deeds, lib. 880, folio 58, on June 9, 1866. The deeds under which the plaintiff derived his title made no mention of the division wall. The deeds under which the defendant derived its title, described the estate as bounded by a line running through the middle of the brick partition wall, 'which wall was built by said Currier, one half on the granted land, and one half on his land according to an agreement recorded with Suffolk deeds, lib. 880, folio 58.' Currier erected a building on the land now owned by the plaintiff, placing one wall thereof, one half on this land and one half on the land now owned by the defendant, before he conveyed his estate to Lawrence as aforesaid. The defendant, after its purchase of its estate as aforesaid, erected a building thereon, and made use of the wall built by Currier partly on each of the two estates as aforesaid."

On the foregoing facts the Superior Court rendered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed to this court.

J. P. Healey, for the plaintiff.

A. C. Clark, for the defendant.

WELLS, J. By his contract with Johnson, and subsequent erection of a wall upon the division line, Currier acquired no interest in the adjoining land, and retained no title in that part of the wall which extended beyond his own line. He could not hold it as realty, because he had nothing but a simple contract, which could have no greater force in law than as a license; nor as personalty, because, by the terms of the agreement under which he built the wall, it was not removable, but intended to become permanent and annexed to each lot as real property. The plaintiff, therefore, by acquiring Currier's interest in the land, acquired no interest in that part of the division wall which rested upon the adjoining lot. Even if the defendant, by reason of the clause in the deeds by which its title was derived referring to the contract, and by the use of the wall, might be held chargeable for the cost of the half so used, there is no privity of contract or estate which will enable the plaintiff to recover it in an action at law. The contract was merely a personal one with Currier. The right to enforce it would not pass with the land as an appurtenance, and there is nothing in Currier's deed to show an intent that it should pass; nor is such a contract assignable at law.

The case differs essentially from Maine v. Cumston, 98 Mass. 317, and Standish v. Lawrence, 111 Mass. 111. The plaintiff shows no right to recover, and the judgment for the defendant is Affirmed.

COLE v. HUGHES.

NEW YORK COMMISSION OF APPEALS. 1873.

[Reported 54 N. Y. 444.]

APPEAL from judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court in the Second Judicial District, affirming a judgment of the City Court of Brooklyn in favor of defendant, entered upon the decision of the court upon trial without a jury.

This action was brought to recover the value of a party wall.

In July, 1861, D. S. Voorhees and Thomas Dean owned adjoining premises in the city of Brooklyn. Dean being about to erect a brick house upon his lot, an agreement in writing was entered into between the parties, by which it was agreed that the western wall of said building should be a party wall, to be built one half on each lot, and Voorhees covenanted that whenever he, his heirs or assigns, should use said wall, he or they would pay Dean or assigns the value of the part so used. The building was built, and said agreement was recorded, and was subsequently assigned to plaintiff. Dean sold and conveyed his premises to other parties. The Voorhees lot passed by various mesne conveyances to defendant, who, in 1867, built upon it, using the party wall in question.

Upon these facts the court held the plaintiff not entitled to recover, and directed a dismissal of the complaint.

Judgment was entered accordingly.

D. P. Barnard, for the appellant.

James L. Campbell, for the respondent.

EARL, C. By the agreement of July 1, 1861, the parties agreed that the wall, then being built, should be and remain a party wall. Voorhees assented that Dean might erect the wall for their common benefit, and that whenever he, his heirs or assigns, should use the same, he or they would pay him, his heirs or assigns, for such part of the wall as should thus be used. Subsequently Dean conveyed his lot to one person, and his right to compensation for the use of the party wall under the agreement to another, under whom the plaintiff holds.

The first question to be determined is, whether the right to compensation is in the plaintiff or in the owner of the lot. It is claimed that it passed to the grantee of the lot on the ground that the covenant to pay ran with the land. To this I cannot assent. When Dean conveyed, he conveyed all his interest in the lot, and, as appurtenant thereto, in the party wall. For this interest the grantee paid, and he got all he paid for. There can be no reason in equity why he should also receive payment for some portion of the cost of building the party wall. Voorhees covenanted, in a certain event, to pay this to Dean. It was a chose in action which was due or might be due him. It was in no way attached to the Dean lot. The money to be paid was not for anything done upon the Dean lot, but for something which had been done upon the Voorhees lot, and it no more passed to his grantee than it would if he had built a house upon the Voorhees lot, using the party wall, and Voorhees had agreed to pay him whenever he or his heirs or assigns should use or occupy it. The covenant to pay was in no sense for the benefit of the Dean lot, but solely for the benefit of Dean, and therefore did not pass to the grantee of the lot. It was so held in Pennsylvania in Todd v. Stokes, 10 Penn. State R. 155; Gilbert v. Drew, Id. 219; Davids v. Harris, 9 Id. 503. These cases expressly hold that the right to reimbursement, for the use of a party wall, is personal to the first builder, and does not pass by his grant of the lot, house, and appurtenances. It is claimed, however, that these cases were based upon a special Statute of that State which altered the common law rule. The Statute referred to was passed February 24, 1721, and provided that "the first builder shall be reimbursed for one moiety of the charge of the party wall, or for so much as the next builder shall use, before he breaks into the wall." This Statute imposed upon the second builder the liability to pay in the absence of any agreement to pay, and under this Statute the courts held that the right to compensation was a mere chose in action, and did not pass from the first builder by his mere grant of the land. But I do not think this holding was based upon the wording of the Statute. That gave the right to compensation, and then the courts held that this right was of such a nature as not to pass by the grant of the land. So here the agreement provides for the same thing that the Statute did in those cases, and for precisely the same reason the right to compensation was personal to Dean, a mere chose in action, which did not pass to his grantee of the land. I find no authority in conflict with this conclusion, unless it be the case of Burlock v. Peck, 2 Duer, 90, and with the reasoning of the learned judge who wrote the opinion in that case, I am not entirely satisfied.

The next important question to be considered is, whether the agreement of Voorhees to compensate Dean ran with the Voorhees lot, so as to bind his subsequent grantees. I do not think it did. At the time Voorhees made the covenant he received no interest in land, and granted none. He simply assented that Dean might build one half of the wall upon his land, and then he agreed in a certain contingency, which might or might not happen, that he would compensate him. He did not convey to Dean any land upon which the wall was built. They continued to own the land, as before, in severalty, and, except for the agreement, Voorhees could have used the party wall at any time without making compensation. Sherred v. Cisco, 4 Sand. Sup. C. R. 480;

Partridge v. Gilbert, 15 N. Y. 601; 2 Washburn on Real Property, 334.

Dean's right to compensation was in no way charged upon the Voorhees lot. There was, therefore, no privity of estate between Voorhees and Dean. There was simply privity of contract between them, and upon that relation alone could Dean enforce the covenant. Upon such a state of facts it is too clear, upon authority, to be doubted that the burden of the covenant did not run with the Voorhees lot. It is far from being true, as seems to be claimed by the learned counsel for the appellant, that a covenant always runs with the land when it affects and has distinct relation to it.

There is a wide difference between the transfer of the burden of a covenant running with the land, and of the benefit of the covenant, or, in other words, of the liability to fulfil the covenant, and of the right to exact its fulfilment. The benefit will pass with the land to which it is incident, but the burden or liability will be confined to the original covenantor, unless the relation of privity of estate or tenure exists or is created between the covenantor and covenantee at the time when the covenant is made.

The obligation of all contracts is ordinarily limited to those by whom they are made, and if privity of contract be dispensed with, its absence must be supplied by privity of estate. Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. 459; Harsha v. Reid, 45 N. Y. 415; Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517; 1 Smith's Leading Cases, English and American Notes to Spencer's Case; 2 Washburn on Real Property, 262 and 263. In Hurd v. Curtis, Wilde, J., declared that the rule, that no covenant can run with the land so as to bind the assignee to perform it, unless there was a privity of estate between the covenantor and covenantee, was without exception. Washburn in his learned work says "that when one who makes a covenant with another in respect to land, neither parts with, nor receives any title or interest in the land, at the same time with and as part of making the covenant, it is at best a mere personal one, which does not bind his assignee; and that such covenants, and such only, run with land as concern the land itself, in whosesoever hands it may be, and become united with, and form a part of the consideration for which the land or some interest in it is parted with between the covenantor and covenantee." And he illustrates the rule by saying, "when one of two adjacent owners of land covenanted with the other that, if he would erect a party wall between their estates, the former would pay the latter for one half of it whenever he should use it, it was held to be a personal covenant, and not to run with the land so as to bind the purchaser of the covenantor's land, who should erect a building against the party wall," citing Bloch v. Isham, 16 Am. Law Reg. 8, decided in the Supreme Court of Indiana, and Weld v. Nichols, 17 Pick. 543.

It is clear, therefore, that the plaintiff must fail to recover upon the covenant, unless there is something in the claim that the defendant is liable, because he purchased with constructive notice by the record of Voorhees' covenant. Even if he purchased with such notice, he did not become liable in an action at law upon the covenant. In Keppell v. Bailey, supra, Chancellor Brougham says: "The knowledge by an assignee of an estate that his assignor had assumed to bind others than the law authorizes him to affect by his contracts, had attempted to create a real burden upon property which is inconsistent with the nature of that property, and unknown to the principles of the law, cannot bind such assignee by affecting his conscience." (See also 1 Smith's Leading Cases, note to Spencer's Case, 133.)

I am of opinion, therefore, that neither the benefits nor burdens of this covenant run with the land, and that the judgment should be affirmed with costs.

All concur.

NATIONAL BANK AT DOVER v. SEGUR.

NEW JERSEY SUPREME COURT. 1877.

[Reported 39 N. J. L. 173.]

ON demurrer to the declaration.

The articles of agreement sued on, commenced in these words, viz.: "Agreement made this, &c., between Anson G. P. Segur, of, &c., of the first part, and Hudson Hoagland, of, &c., of the second part, witnesseth."

The substance of the agreement was, that Segur would sell and convey to Hoagland a certain lot and banking-house. After this stipulation, then followed these recitals and covenants, to wit, —

"And whereas, the said Segur is now engaged in the business of banking as a private banker in Dover aforesaid; and whereas, the said Hoagland intends to associate himself with other persons to organize a banking association, to be located and to do business in Dover aforesaid, and expects to convey said lot of land and banking-house to said banking association when organized and ready to commence business, to be occupied and used by said association; and whereas, it is a part of the consideration of this sale of said lot and banking-house, that said Segur shall withdraw from the business of banking, and not engage in the same at any time within ten years in the borough of Dover aforesaid:

"Now it is further agreed between the said parties, and said Segur doth hereby covenant and agree with the said Hoagland, that as soon as said new banking company or association so expected to be organized, or any banking company to whom the said Hoagland, his heirs or assigns, may hereafter lease, convey or assign said premises and banking-house, or any part of the same, shall commence the business of banking therein, then and from thenceforth the said Segur shall withdraw in good faith, as soon as practicable, from the business of banking in said borough of Dover, and shall abstain from receiving or accepting any money on deposit as a banker therein; and shall not, at any time for the space of the ten years thereafter, engage, directly or indirectly, in the business of banking in said borough of Dover, either as a private banker, a capitalist or as a shareholder or director in or as an officer or employé of any banking company or association, or savings bank, located in or doing business in said borough of Dover; provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing said Segur from being a shareholder in or an officer or employé of any banking company or savings bank which may, at any time, be the owner or occupant of the lot of land hereby agreed to be conveyed, or any portion thereof.

"And it is further agreed and understood that this covenant on the part of said Segur to abandon, abstain from, and not engage in the business of banking in said borough of Dover for the period of ten years, is made for the benefit of said Hoagland, as the owner of said lot of land and banking-house, and shall attach to and run with the same in the hands of any heir or heirs, assignee or assignees, grantee or grantees of said Hoagland; and in case of any breach of the same by said Segur, an action may be maintained thereon against him by the person or persons or body corporate who shall, at the time of such breach, be the owner of the fee simple of said lot of land so hereby agreed to be conveyed; and it is further agreed, in order to insure the observance by said Segur of his said covenant, to abandon, abstain from, and not engage in the business of banking, for the period aforesaid, in Dover aforesaid, that in case of any breach thereof by him, the damages to be recovered in any action against him for such breach, shall be and they are hereby fixed and liquidated by the parties hereto at the sum of $10,000.

The declaration also showed a conveyance of the premises in question from Hoagland to the plaintiff, and averred that they were still the owners thereof.

Argued at November Term, 1876, before BEASLEY, C. J., and SCUDER, DIXON, and REED, JJ.

For the plaintiff, H. C. Pitney.

For the defendant, J. Vanatta, Attorney-General.

The opinion of the court was delivered by

BEASLEY, C. J. The contention on the part of the defence, on the argument of this demurrer, was, that the right of action disclosed in the record was not resident in the plaintiff. The deed in suit, in its commencement, purports to be made between Segur, of the first part, and Hoagland, of the second part; and it was insisted that when a sealed instrument is so conditioned, the suit must be by the formal party to it. The plaintiff is the grantee of the premises sold to Hoagland, and claims the right to enforce, in its own name, the agreement, by virtue of the last clause in it, which is to the effect that in case of a breach of the covenant now sued on, the right of action shall be in the owner in fee of the land. Two questions are thus presented to the attention of the court: First, whether, when a deed is in form inter partes, and it contains a covenant to a third person, such third person may sue, in his own name, for a breach of such particular covenant, it appearing in the instrument to have been the intention to confer such right; and, second, whether such covenant exists, and such intention appears in the present instrument.

[The Chief Justice then proceeded to consider these questions, and answered them both in the affirmative. This part of the opinion is omitted. He then continued:]

But again, even if I had yielded to the view so forcibly presented to the consideration of the court, which is directly opposite to that just expressed, and had concluded that the plaintiff was not a party to this agreement, so as to give him an ability, as such, to sue upon it, yet, nevertheless, I should have thought this action maintainable.

This result, in my opinion, would have been justifiable, on the ground that the covenant forming the basis of this suit is, in law, capable of running with the land, and that, if it is to be regarded, technically, as a covenant between the formal parties to the deed, it has passed, with the title, to the present plaintiff.

The doctrine with respect to what agreements will so attach to real estate as to devolve with the title, has been a fruitful subject of discussion in the text-books, as well as in judicial opinions, and, since the various resolutions in Spencer's Case, has given rise to a long line of decisions, which, it must be admitted, it would be difficult entirely to harmonize. But I think this discord will be found, upon a careful examination of the authorities, to prevail chiefly in other branches of the subject than in the one in which the present case is to be classed. There is such an essential difference, in social effect, between permitting a burden to be annexed to the transfer of land, and the giving to a benefit such a quality, that the subject will unavoidably run into obscurity, unless the distinction is kept constantly in view. The conspicuous impolicy of allowing land to be trammelled in its transfer, to the extent that previous owners may choose to affect it by their contracts, was pointed out and condemned in the case of Brewer v. Marshall, 3 C. E. Green, 337; 4 Id. 537. In that case, the owner of real estate sold a portion of it, and covenanted with the purchaser that neither he nor his assigns would sell any marl from off the residue of the tract. The suit was against the alienee of the vendor, and the decision was that such a burden would not follow the land into the hands of such alienee of the covenantor. The reason assigned for this conclusion was the public inconvenience that would result if incidents could be annexed to land "as multiform and as innumerable as human caprice." But when we turn our attention to the consideration of those covenants, which, instead of being burdensome to the land, are beneficial to it, we perceive, at once, that such objection does not apply. Such covenants do not hinder, but rather facilitate the transmission of land from hand to hand, and, therefore, with respect to their transmissibility, the question of public convenience has no place. This being the case, it is not easy to see why any contract, which is of a nature to attach to the land, and which has a beneficial tendency, should not be considered assignable, by act of law, as against the covenantor, with the title. In every instance where the question, in this form, is presented, the suit being between the original covenantor and the alienee of the covenantee, if the making of the covenant be not denied, the sole point for solution would seem to be whether such covenant, in the legal sense, relates to or concerns the land, for, if not, by its quality, it passes as an incident to the property, and is enforceable in the name of the person who is owner at the time of its breach. When the covenantor has been the party sued, and the covenant admittedly related to the land, the alienee of the covenantee being the plaintiff, I think no considered case has held that such action was not maintainable. In the present case, it is conceded that the parties to the suit have these characteristics, but it is denied that the covenants are of a nature to run with the land.

It is insisted that these covenants "relate to future personal acts and omissions of the covenantor; that those acts are not to be done or omitted on the land conveyed, nor on any other land of the grantor or grantee; nor are the covenants with the heirs or assigns of Hoagland;" and, in support of these objections, the first and second resolutions in Spencer's Case are cited.

But none of these positions are sustained, or in any degree sanctioned, by the authority referred to, that authority being merely to the effect that a covenant will not run with the land if it relates to personality, or if it be merely collateral to the land. But I fail to find that Sir Edward Coke says anything which lends the slightest countenance to the idea that the covenant is not transmissible if it stipulates for "the future personal acts and omissions of the covenantor," or if "those acts are not to be done or omitted on the land conveyed, or on any other land of the grantor or grantee." It is true that he does declare that, in certain cases, the burden of a covenant will not fall on the assignee of the covenantor, unless such assignee be expressly referred to in the covenant; but as this suit is against the covenantor himself, and not against his assignee, that doctrine can serve no purpose in this connection.

But Lord Coke, in the case cited, states, as one of the judicial resolutions, that a covenant will not run with the land "if the thing to be done be merely collateral to the land, and doth not touch or concern the thing demised in any sort," and, consequently, the inquiry is presented with regard to the nature of the present covenants in relation to the premises conveyed; and this inquiry has been pressed, with earnestness, on the attention of the court in the brief of the counsel of the defendant. I must say, however, that but for this urgency, it would not have occurred to me that any doubt could be entertained with respect to the question. I understand that a covenant touches and concerns land when its performance confers a direct benefit on the owner of land by reason of his ownership; and, tested by such a definition, the covenant sued on has clearly such a capacity. To be sure of this, we have but to turn to the contract. That agreement is for the sale and conveyance of the premises in question, which are described as a lot upon which is a building, adapted to the business of banking, in the course of erection, and which, it is stated, the defendant is to complete, and which was to include "a counter for the main banking-room," which "had already been ordered" by him. It is then recited that the defendant was then engaged in the business of banking, as a private banker, in Dover; and that Hoagland, the covenantee and grantor of the plaintiff, intended to associate himself with other persons to organize a banking association, to be located and to do business in Dover; and that he expected to convey said lot of land and banking-house to said banking association; and that it was a part of the consideration of the sale of said lot and banking-house, that the said defendant would withdraw from the business of banking, and would not engage in the same, at any time within ten years, in the borough of Dover. After this, follow the covenants, which lay the ground of suit, to the purport that the defendant, "as soon as the new banking company or association, so expected to be organized, or any banking company to whom the said Hoagland, his heirs or assigns, may hereafter lease, convey or assign said premises or banking-house, or any part of the same, shall commence the business of banking therein, then and from thenceforth," the said defendant "shall withdraw, in good faith, as soon as practicable, from the business of banking," &c. To this, there is superadded a stipulation that it is understood and agreed that the foregoing covenant is made for the benefit of said Hoagland, as the owner of the land to be conveyed, and is to attach to and run with the same.

In view of these stipulations and recitals, it is undeniably clear that the parties to this contract thought that the covenant in question was one which would appertain to and benefit, not merely the person of the grantee, but the land itself, which was to become his by a conveyance.

Indeed, it was made such an appurtenance to the property that it was to have no effect until the business of banking was commenced upon these particular premises. Now, while it is plain that a mere personal covenant cannot, by the agreement of parties, have its nature so altered as to make it transmissible with land, nevertheless when the question is whether the given covenant does concern certain premises, the fact that such parties considered it to have such quality, should be potent in a decision of the inquiry. Since these parties most manifestly have thought that the stipulation in question gave additional value to the property, why, and on what ground, should the court declare that such was not the case? Nor is it perceived that there is any force in the suggestion that this covenant would affect, not only the business done upon these particular premises, but any other banking business that might be carried on in the vicinity, for the answer to such objection is, that such incidental effects are common to all agreements that in any wise regulate the dealings of men; and that the rule of law requiring the covenant to touch or concern the land, does not require that it shall touch or concern nothing besides. In the present instance, this covenant will have an immediate, permanent, and beneficial effect upon the use to which the land is to be put, and that is sufficient to annex it to the title. To apprehend how closely this stipulation is related to these premises, we have but to observe that in case of its breach, the party directly, and for aught that the court can know, exclusively injured, will be the owner of the property at the time such breach shall occur. There is nothing in the pleadings to show that, upon such violation of this agreement, the original covenantee, or any other person but the plaintiff, has sustained, or can sustain, the least inconvenience or injury. And, finally, it should be observed that, under the circumstances of this case, it is necessary to hold that the covenant under consideration, has capacity to run with the land, in order to give damages to the only party actually grieved by its non-performance.

This conclusion is, I think, amply sustained by the decisions. It is not necessary to review them. The following seem to me directly to the point: The Prior's Case, reported in the seventh resolution in Spencer's Case, 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. 118; Vyvyan v. Arthur's Adm'rs, 1 Barn. & Cress. 410; Vernon v. Smith, 5 B. & Ald. 1; Mayor of Congleton v. Pattison, 10 East, 130; Norman v. Wells, 17 Wend. 137; 1 Smith's Lead. Cas. 142.

Having carefully examined the cases cited in the brief of the counsel of the defendant, I shall dismiss them with the observation that they seem to me plainly to be covenants relating to personality, or covenants entirely collateral to the land, or cases pertaining to the question when covenants will pass as a burden with the title.

Another objection taken to this suit is, that the agreement in question, and every part of it, was prospective and executory, and at the time it was entered into, no title to the lands existed, or was transferred to Hoagland, the covenantee.

But I find no authority for this proposition. The adjudications appear, on the contrary, to show very plainly that when a covenant beneficial to land is made, it is not essential to its devolution with the title that the covenantee should have title to the land to which it relates, or that the estate should have come from the covenantor, or should have passed from him, eo instanti, with the inception of the covenant. When, therefore, the covenantee in this case became vested with the title, the covenant, as it touched and concerned the land, became an incident to such land, and as such, passed with it, upon conveyance, by act and operation of law.

On the one or other of these grounds, the declaration, in my opinion, must be upheld.

CONDUITT v. ROSS.

SUPREME COURT OF INDIANA. 1885.

[Reported 102 Ind. 166.]

FROM the Marion Superior Court.

T. A. Hendricks, C. Baker, O. B. Hord, A. W. Hendricks, A. Baker, E. Daniels, and W. S. Shirley, for appellant.

J. M. Judah and O. B. Jameson, for appellee.

MICHELL, J. On the 26th day of April, 1875, Julia A. Ross and John Hauck were the owners of adjoining lots in the city of Indianapolis. Pursuant to a written agreement entered into by Mrs. Ross and her husband on the one part, and Mr. Hauck on the other, she placed one half the width of the south wall of a four-story brick and stone building which she erected on her lot, on the north margin of the Hauck lot. After erecting the building, she conveyed the lot, with the improvements thereon, to George P. Bissell, reserving, by a stipulation contained in her deed, the right to receive compensation from adjoining property owners for the building, or use of existing party walls. Subsequently the appellant became the owner of the Hauck lot, and in 1882 commenced the erection of a building thereon, and attached the same to and used the wall erected by Mrs. Ross. Refusing to make payment, this suit was commenced to recover one half the original cost of the wall. Upon issues made a trial was had, which resulted in a finding and judgment for the plaintiff.

Counsel for appellant rest their argument for a reversal of this judgment mainly upon the proposition that the agreement between Hauck and Mrs. Ross was purely personal to them, and that Conduitt, by using the wall erected in pursuance thereof, came under no obligation whatever in consequence of such use. They insist further, that if liable at all, the extent of his liability was the actual value of the wall when used, and not its original cost.

The rights and obligations of the parties must be determined by a construction of the agreement already referred to, which is of the following tenor:—

“ This agreement between John Hauck of the first part, and Julia A. Ross and Norman M. Ross, her husband, of the second part, witnesseth: That in consideration that the parties of the second part shall erect a substantial brick wall, twelve inches in thickness and four stories high, on the line dividing the property of John Hauck and Julia A. Ross, in square 87, in the city of Indianapolis, Marion county, Indiana, which line is 12 feet south of the south line of lot No. 4, in Morris Morris' subdivision of square 87, in the city of Indianapolis, and which wall is to stand six inches in width upon the ground of said Hauck, and six inches upon the ground of said Ross, and is to run back the depth of said Ross's present building, and may at any time be extended further back on the same line the full depth of said lots by either party, the full consent of said Hauck to the erection of said walls being hereby granted: Now, therefore, said John Hauck hereby binds himself, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, that whenever, after the erection of said wall or walls by the party of the second part, said Hauck, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns, shall, in any building he or they may erect on the present ground of said Hauck, use said wall or any part thereof, or attach any part of his or their building thereto, then the said Julia A. Ross shall be paid, without relief from valuation or appraisement laws, the full value of one half the original cost of said wall or walls. And it is further agreed that neither party shall have the right to so use any part of said wall or walls as to weaken or endanger the same; and that said Hauck, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns shall not in any wise whatever use or attach to said wall or walls so to be erected by said Ross, until the said value and cost of one half thereof shall be ascertained, and paid or tendered to said Julia A. Ross.

“ In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals, this 26th day of April, 1875.

(Signed)

JOHN HAUCK. [SEAL.]
JULIA A. ROSS. [SEAL.]
N. M. ROSS. [SEAL.]”

This agreement was duly acknowledged and recorded in the miscellaneous records of Marion county, and it is averred that the appellant had actual notice of it at the time he purchased.

The liability of the appellant depends upon whether the contract set out constituted a continuing covenant, which became annexed to and ran with the Hauck lot. If it did, he is liable according to its terms; if it did not, he is liable in this form of action for nothing.

In considering whether a covenant is one which does, or does not, run with the land, there is always embraced the following inquiries:

1. Is the covenant one which, under any circumstances, may run with land? 2. Was it the intention of the parties, as expressed in the agreement, that it should so run?

Doubtless, a covenant which, from its character, might run with the land, may be so restricted in terms as to make it purely personal, and available to the parties to it, and no other. So, too, a covenant may contain apt words to make it a continuing covenant; yet if its nature or the subject-matter of it is such that it does not concern some interest or estate in land, either existing or created by it, it cannot run with land.

When an instrument conveys or grants an interest or right in land, and at the same time contains a covenant in which a right attached to the estate or interest granted is reserved, or when the grantee covenants that he will do some act on the estate, or interest granted, which will be beneficial to the grantor, either as respects his remaining interest in the lands out of which an interest is granted, or lands adjacent thereto, such covenant is one which may become annexed to and run with the land, and bind its owners successively. When such grant is made, and contains a covenant so expressed as to show that it was reasonably the intent that it should be continuing, it will be construed as a covenant running with the land. A covenant which may run with the land must have relation to the interest or estate granted, and the act to be done must concern the interest created or conveyed.

In Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 25, it was said: "When the thing to be done, or omitted to be done, concerns the lands or estate, that is the medium which creates the privity between the plaintiff and defendant."

By the contract under consideration, Mrs. Ross acquired the right to enter upon the Hauck lot and erect and permanently maintain thereon a party wall. This was a grant to her of an interest in land, and was of such a character that a perpetual covenant might be annexed to it. Snowden v. Wilas, 19 Ind. 10; Hazlett v. Sinclair, 76 Ind. 488 (40 Am. R. 254); 1 Smith Leading Cases, 8th ed., 161, 162.

In consideration of this grant to her she covenanted to do an act beneficial to the remaining interest of Hauck; that act was the erection of a wall so situated as that one half of it should rest on the margin or his lot, and the other half on hers, thus devoting each estate to the mutual support of the party wall. She at the same time covenanted that when she should be reimbursed one half the cost of the wall, he, or his grantees, should acquire a reciprocal interest in her lot, and in legal effect become owner of one half the party wall.

This agreement created what has been aptly termed mutual or cross easements in favor of each in the lot of the other, and was an arrangement mutually beneficial to both properties. Fitch v. Johnson, 104 Ill. 111; Roche v. Ullman, 104 Ill. 11; Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175 (11 Am. R. 335); Thomson v. Curtis, 28 Iowa, 229.

It contained, therefore, all the elements necessary to a covenant capable of running with the land. Hazlett v. Sinclair, supra; Richardson v. Tobey, 121 Mass. 457 (23 Am. R. 283); Standish v. Law- rence, 111 Mass. 111; Maine v. Cumston, 98 Mass. 317; Savage v. Mason, 3 Cush. 500; Brown v. McKee, 57 N. Y. 684; Keteltas v. Penfold, 4 E. D. Smith, 122; Platt v. Eggleston, 20 Ohio St. 414; Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 340; Bertram v. Curtis, 31 Iowa, 46; Norfleet v. Cromwell, 70 N. C. 634, 641 (16 Am. R. 787).

It is apparent, too, that it was the intention of the parties that the covenant to pay should run with the land. The words used in that connection are those usually and aptly employed for the purpose: "John Hauck hereby binds himself, his heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, that whenever, after the erection of said wall or walls by the party of the second part, said Hauck, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, shall, in any building he or they may erect," &c., they will pay, &c. A continuing covenant may exist without the word "assigns," or "grantees," but when these or equivalent words are used, they become persuasive of the intent of the parties. Van Rensselaer v. Hays, 19 N. Y. 68. It was the manifest purpose of the parties that the right to receive payment for the wall should be personal to Mrs. Ross. It was stipulated that payment should be made to Julia A. Ross.

It results that the complaint was sufficient, and that the second paragraph of answer, in which it was alleged that the wall, by reason of injuries sustained from fire, was worth much less than the original cost, was insufficient, and the respective rulings of the court were not erroneous.

The covenant being one which ran with the land, when the appellant availed himself of its benefits he became related to it as the original covenantor, and it became the measure of his obligation. We think it is fairly deducible from the complaint that the appellant derived his title through Hauck.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.¹

SECTION IV.

EQUITABLE EASEMENTS.

HOLMES v. BUCKLEY.

CHANCERY. 1692.

[Reported Prec. in Ch. 39.]

ANTHONY BOTTELY and Katharine, his wife, being seised in right of the said Katharine, of two pieces of ground by indenture, 25 Jan. 1622, did grant a watercourse to one John Howland, and his heirs, through the said two pieces of ground ; and by that deed did covenant for them, their heirs and assigns, from time to time, to cleanse the same ; and that all fines and recoveries levied and suffered, and to be levied and suffered of the said grounds, should be and inure for the strengthening and confirming the said watercourse, according to the said grant, and afterwards, the 30th of the same month, join in a deed, declaring the uses of the recovery to be suffered of the said ground ; and that the same should inure to the strengthening and confirming the watercourse granted by the said indenture of the 25th of January.

¹ A petition for a rehearing was overruled. The opinion of the court refusing this petition is omitted.

The watercourse, by mesne assignments, came to the plaintiff ; and the said two pieces of ground to the defendant, who built upon the same, and much heightened the ground that lay over the watercourse, and made it much more inconvenient and chargeable to repair, and as it was alleged (and in part proved) the building had much obstructed the said watercourse ; so the bill was, to be established in the enjoyment of the said watercourse ; and that the defendants, and all claiming under them, might from time to time cleanse the same, according to the said covenants.

It was objected for the defendants, that the said covenant being a personal covenant, and made by a feme covert, could in no sort bind the defendants ; and that, though the recovery had made good the grant of the watercourse, yet that this personal covenant was not at all strengthened or bettered by it ; and that the plaintiff, and those under whom he claimed, being sensible of it, had for forty years cleansed the same at their own charges.

But the court was of opinion, that this was a covenant that ran with the land, and though made by a feme covert, was strengthened and made good by the recovery, and said, though the plaintiff had cleansed the same at his own charge, whilst it was easy to be done, and of little charge ; yet since the right was plain upon the deed, and the cleansing made chargeable by the building, it was reasonable the defendants should do it, and decreed accordingly and gave the plaintiff his costs.

CHANCERY. 1848.

[Reported 2 Phil. 774.]

IN the year 1808 the plaintiff, being then the owner in fee of the vacant piece of ground in Leicester Square, as well as of several of the houses forming the Square, sold the piece of ground by the description of "Leicester Square Garden or Pleasure Ground, with the equestrian statue then standing in the centre thereof, and the iron railing and stone work round the same," to one Elms in fee : and the deed of conveyance contained a covenant by Elms, for himself, his heirs, and assigns, with the plaintiff, his heirs, executors, and administrators, "that Elms, his heirs, and assigns should, and would from time to time, and at all times thereafter at his and their own costs and charges, keep and maintain the said piece of ground and Square Garden, and the iron railing round the same in its then form, and in sufficient and proper repair as a Square Garden and Pleasure Ground, in an open state, uncovered with any buildings, in neat and ornamental order; and that it should be lawful for the inhabitants of Leicester Square, tenants of the plaintiff, on payment of a reasonable rent for the same, to have keys at their own expense and the privilege of admission therewith at any time or times into the said Square Garden and Pleasure Ground."

The piece of land so conveyed passed by divers mesne conveyances into the hands of the defendant, whose purchase deed contained no similar covenant with his vendor: but he admitted that he had purchased with notice of the covenant in the deed of 1808.

The defendant having manifested an intention to alter the character of the Square Garden, and asserted a right, if he thought fit, to build upon it, the plaintiff, who still remained owner of several houses in the Square, filed this bill for an injunction; and an injunction was granted by the Master of the Rolls to restrain the defendant from converting or using the piece of ground and Square Garden, and the iron railing round the same, to or for any other purpose than as a Square Gaiden and Pleasure Ground in an open state, and uncovered with buildings.

On a motion, now made, to discharge that order,

Mr. R. Palmer was heard for the defendant.

The LORD CHANCELLOR [COTTENHAM] (without calling upon the other side).

That this court has jurisdiction to enforce a contract between the owner of land and his neighbor purchasing a part of it, that the latter shall either use or abstain from using the land purchased in a particular way, is what I never knew disputed: Here there is no question about the contract: the owner of certain houses in the Square sells the land adjoining, with a covenant from the purchaser not to use it for any other purpose than as a Square Garden. And it is now contended, not that the vendee could violate that contract, but that he might sell the piece of land, and that the purchaser from him may violate it without this court having any power to interfere. If that were so, it would be impossible for an owner of land to sell part of it without incurring the risk of rendering what he retains worthless. It is said that, the covenant being one which does not run with the land, this court cannot enforce it; but the question is, not whether the covenant runs with the land, but whether a party shall be permitted to use the land in a manner inconsistent with the contract entered into by his vendor, and with notice of which he purchased. Of course, the price would be affected by the covenant, and nothing could be more inequitable than that the original purchaser should be able to sell the property the next day for a greater price, in consideration of the assignee being allowed to escape from the liability which he had himself undertaken.

That the question does not depend upon whether the covenant runs with the land, is evident from this, that if there was a mere agreement and no covenant, this court would enforce it against a party purchasing with notice of it; for if an equity is attached to the property by the owner, no one purchasing with notice of that equity can stand in a different situation from the party from whom he purchased. There are not only cases before the Vice-Chancellor of England, in which he considered that doctrine as not in dispute; but looking at the ground on which Lord Eldon disposed of the case of the Duke of Bedford v. The Trustees of the British Museum, 2 My. & K. 552, it is impossible to suppose that he entertained any doubt of it. In the case of Mann v. Stephens [15 Sim. 377], before me, I never intended to make the injunction depend upon the result of the action: nor does the order imply it. The motion was, to discharge an order for the commitment of the defendant for an alleged breach of the injunction, and also to dissolve the injunction. I upheld the injunction, but discharged the order of commitment, on the ground that it was not clearly proved that any breach had been committed; but there being a doubt whether part of the premises on which the defendant was proceeding to build, was locally situated within what was called the Dell, on which alone he had under the covenant a right to build at all, and the plaintiff insisting that it was not, I thought the pendency of the suit ought not to prejudice the plaintiff in his right to bring an action if he thought he had such right, and therefore I gave him liberty to do so.

With respect to the observations of Lord Brougham in Keppell v. Bailey [2 M. & K. 517], he never could have meant to lay down that this court would not enforce an equity attached to land by the owner, unless under such circumstances as would maintain an action at law. If that be the result of his observations, I can only say that I cannot coincide with it.

I think the cases cited before the Vice-Chancellor and this decision of the Master of the Rolls perfectly right, and therefore that this [motion to discharge the] injunction must be refused, with costs.

KEATES v. LYON.

CHANCERY. 1869.

THE question in this appeal was, whether the appellant, a purchaser, would be bound in equity by certain restrictive covenants contained in a former conveyance of the property.

By indenture, dated the 27th of August, 1841, Anne Sewell, in consideration of £14,000, conveyed to William Sharp, in fee, a dwelling-house called Brooklands, with the offices and gardens and several closes of land, containing in all about twenty-eight and a half acres, subject to a covenant on the part of Sharp not at any time to erect, set up, or carry on, or permit to be erected, set up, or carried on, upon any part of the lands so conveyed, any nuisance, annoyance, or other offensive matter or thing, except the making of bricks.

By indenture, dated the 2d of November, 1842, Sharp, for a valuable consideration, conveyed to Langton, in fee, two pieces of land, separately described, being portions of the lands comprised in the indenture of the 27th of August, 1841, and containing together 9,952 square yards, with the right of using certain roads recently formed in and over those lands, and the conveyance contained a covenant by Sharp to finish and complete the several roads and ways which led to and adjoined the two pieces of land, and also the several sewers, gutters, and drains which were to run under and through the several roads.

The conveyance also contained covenants by Langton, "for himself, his heirs, and assigns," with Sharp, "his heirs, executors, and administrators," to the effect that the piece of land firstly described in the conveyance should be divided into five lots of not less than 1400 square yards each—that on each lot only a single or double villa, with offices, and of an annual value of not less than £50 for each house, should be built—that the villas should be of a particular construction as to height, and that the offices should only be placed in a certain position—that on the piece of land secondly described only a single or double villa of the same value and of the same construction should be built, with a similar stipulation as to the position of offices—that the enclosing walls or fences of both pieces of land should be of certain dimensions and form—that no nuisance or noisome trade should be permitted on the premises; and, finally, that Langton, his heirs or assigns, would always defray a moiety of the expense of keeping the roads and sewers therein mentioned in repair, so far as they were co-extensive with the pieces of land conveyed.

By another deed, dated the 19th of November, 1842, Sharp conveyed to Langton, in fee, another piece of land, containing 6665 square yards, adjacent to the former pieces, and also forming part of the lands comprised in the deed of the 27th of August, 1841; and the conveyance contained restrictive covenants by Langton similar to, though not identical with, those contained in the deed of the 2d of November, 1842.

Both these conveyances contained covenants by Sharp for the production of certain title-deeds, among which was mentioned the deed of the 27th of August, 1841.

In the interval between the date of the first conveyance to Langton, viz., the 2d of November, 1842, and the date of the re-conveyance by Langton presently referred to, Sharp sold and conveyed to different persons various other portions of the lands comprised in the conveyance of the 27th of August, 1841, and notices of the several conveyances were indorsed on that deed. It did not appear whether they contained any covenant by the purchasers, nor was there any evidence that the purchasers were informed of the restrictive covenants entered into by Langton.

By indenture, dated the 20th of February, 1846, and made between Langton of the first part, Thomas Harvey (who was a dower trustee for Langton) of the second part, Sharp of the third part, and John Lyon and James Ryder of the fourth part, after reciting that Sharp had agreed to re-purchase from Langton, for £5,000, the three pieces of land comprised in the two conveyances to Langton, and that Lyon and Ryder had agreed to advance and pay the purchase-money to Langton, Langton and his trustee, in consideration thereof, and by the direction of Sharp, conveyed the three pieces of land to Lyon and Ryder, in fee, to be held by them upon the trusts of an indenture dated the 19th of February, 1846, and made between Sharp of the one part, and Lyon and Ryder of the other part, being a mortgage to secure various sums of money, including the £5,000 paid to Langton. The trusts of this mortgage deed were the ordinary trusts for sale of the mortgage premises and repayment of the moneys advanced, with powers of leasing and management, and it contained a declaration that the money advanced belonged to Lyon and Ryder on a joint account.

On the 29th of September, 1853, Lyon and Ryder filed a foreclosure claim in the court of the County Palatine against the assignees in bankruptcy of Sharp, and certain puisne incumbancers, and by an order made in that suit, and dated the 23d of October, 1853, the defendants were absolutely foreclosed. By a deed, dated the 22d of April, 1863, Ryder (who survived Lyon) conveyed the premises comprised in the mortgage-deed (except such parts as had been sold by him to Lyon) to the use of himself and Joseph Andrew Keates and Joseph Lyon, their heirs and assigns. Lyon and Ryder, the original mortgagees, were, it appeared, the trustees of the will of Joseph Lyon, and as such trustees advanced the money secured by the mortgage; and the last-mentioned deed was a transfer to two new trustees, together with the continuing trustee of the same will. The present suit was instituted in the Chancery Court of the County of Lancaster by Keates and Joseph Lyon as surviving trustees, for the administration of the estate of the testator, Joseph Lyon; and an order in the suit, dated the 14th of May, 1868, was made, by which a sale of the above three pieces of land was directed. Accordingly the property was put up for sale by auction in lots, under conditions of sale which referred to the restrictive covenant contained in the deed of the 27th of August, 1841, but not to those contained in the deed of the 2d November, 1842. The appellant purchased some of the lots, and took the objections that the land was still subject to the latter covenants, and that a good title therefore could not be made. The District Registrar of the court certified that a good title to the lots in question could be made, and the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, by the order under appeal, confirmed that certificate.

Mr. Little, Q. C., and Mr. Robinson, for the appellant.

Mr. Charles Hall and Mr. North, for the respondent.

SIR C. J. SELWYN, L. J. The judgment which I am about to deliver is the judgment of the court.

In support of the objection it has been contended that the benefit of the restrictive covenants contained in the conveyance to Langton was a benefit reserved by Sharp in respect of the unsold portion of the property comprised in the deed of the 27th of August, 1841, and that it was so attached to the land that it passed by his subsequent conveyances of other portions of the same property to other purchasers, and, consequently, that although (as was admitted) as between Sharp and Langton, those covenants were effectually put an end to by the deed of the 20th of February, 1846, no arrangement between Sharp and Langton could deprive the purchasers between the dates of the conveyances to and reconveyance from Langton of the benefit which they had obtained, or of their right to enforce the covenants, and, consequently, that a title to the lots in question, unfettered by the covenants, could not be made without the concurrence of the intermediate purchasers.

The general principles upon which the court deals with cases relating to the burden and incidence of covenants and stipulations restrictive of the free use of land, may be gathered from the observations of Lord Cottenham in the case of Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774, 777, where he says: "That this court has jurisdiction to enforce a contract between the owner of land and his neighbor purchasing a part of it — that the latter shall either use or abstain from using the land purchased in a particular way — is what I never knew disputed. . . . It is said that the covenant being one which does not run with the land, this court cannot enforce it; but the question is not whether the covenant runs with the land, but whether a party shall be permitted to use the land in a manner inconsistent with the contract entered into by his vendor, and with notice of which he purchased. Of course the price will be affected by the covenant." And again he says: "That the question does not depend upon whether the covenant runs with the land is evident from this, that if there was a mere agreement, and no covenant, this court would enforce it against a party purchasing with notice of it, for if an equity is attached to the property by the owner, no one purchasing with notice of that equity can stand in a different situation from the party from whom he purchased."

The questions which have arisen with respect to the devolution of the benefit of covenants of this kind have been decided upon similar principles, and equally without reference to any technical distinctions depending upon the covenants running or not running with the land. Thus in Whatman v. Gibson, 9 Sim. 196, where the owner of a particular piece of land on which a row of houses was intended to be built, executed a deed reciting that it had been laid out, and was intended to be dealt with in a particular manner, and declared that it should be a general and indispensable condition of the sale of all or any part of that land, that the several proprietors for the time being should observe and abide by the several stipulations and restrictions therein contained, and that he himself would at all times observe the like restrictions and stipulations; and those restrictions and stipulations were also enforced by mutual covenants, although the question afterwards arose between subsequent purchasers of different portions of this piece of land, it was held that the one was bound by, and the other was entitled to enforce, the covenants, for as the Vice-Chancellor of England observed, Ibid. 207: "It is quite clear that all the parties who executed this deed were bound by it, and the only question is, whether, there being an agreement, all persons who come in as devisees or assignees under those who took with notice of the deed, are not bound by it? I see no reason why such an agreement should not be binding in equity on the parties so coming in with notice. Each proprietor is manifestly interested in having all the neighboring houses used in such a way as to preserve the general uniformity and respectability of the row."

And in Coles v. Sims, 56, which was also a case of mutual covenants relating to a particular piece of land laid out in plots for the erection of a row of houses to be built in a particular and uniform manner, the present Lord Chancellor, then Vice-Chancellor, after quoting the passage to which we have just referred in the judgment in Whatman v. Gibson, says, Ibid. 69: "Therefore taking the deed between Jones and Shewell alone, these two parties having clearly agreed with each other that the property should be laid out in a particular way, all those who come in under them are bound in equity by their covenants if they had notice of them." Again, in the case of Western v. MacDermott, Law Rep. 1 Eq. 499; 2 Ch. 72, certain pieces of land in the city of Bath, including the sites of certain houses called Brock Street, were included in a deed of conveyance dated the 20th of December, 1766, by which, in consideration of a perpetual rent-charge reserved to himself, Sir Renet Garrard, the owner of the property, conveyed it to John Wood in fee, and Wood thereby covenanted to pay the rent-charge, and within ten years to build houses upon the piece of land thereby conveyed according to the plan thereto annexed; and Sir Renet Garrard entered into certain restrictive covenants relating to certain portions of land defined in the deed, and it was provided that every conveyance of any house to be so built should contain covenants similar to those contained in that deed; and the conveyances by Wood, under which the plaintiff and defendant derived their title, and to all of which Sir Renet Garrard was a party, did, in fact, contain such covenants, and also covenants by the purchasers with Sir Renet Garrard and Wood, and each of them, and each of their heirs and assigns, against building upon the gardens of the houses beyond a certain height; and the Lord

Chancellor, Lord Chelmsford, considered himself to be relieved from the necessity of considering the question, whether the covenant against building beyond a certain height did or did not run with the land, because it was admitted on the part of the defendant that he having purchased his house with notice of the restrictive obligation attached to it, a court of equity would interfere to prevent his violation of it. "This, indeed," he adds, "could not be disputed after the cases of Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774, and Coles v. Sims, Kay, 56." These cases were (with the exception of Mann v. Stephens, 15 Sim. 377, and Child v. Douglas, Kay, 560, to which we shall presently refer) the only cases cited in support of the appellant's contention, and in all of them the judgment of the court is based upon clear evidence of intention and contract, supported by mutual covenants, and relating to a particular and defined portion of land agreed to be laid out and dealt with according to a prescribed plan.

The case of Mann v. Stephens differs from those we have been discussing, in the particular that there was no general building' scheme or plan affecting the property in respect of which the question to be decided arose; but in that case the owner in fee of three houses, and of an adjoining piece of land, sold one of the houses, and at the same time covenanted with the purchaser that the piece of land should be for ever thereafter used in a particular way, and that no building, except a private house or ornamental cottage, should be erected thereon, and afterwards sold the piece of land to another person, and caused the purchaser to enter into a similar covenant with him as to the user of the land. The house ultimately became vested in the plaintiff, and the piece of land in the defendant, who had actual notice of the covenant entered into by his predecessor in title, but who, notwithstanding, began to build a beershop and brewery on part of the land. The plaintiff applied for an injunction to restrain this breach of the covenant, and though it was argued on behalf of the defendant that there was no privity between the plaintiff and defendant, and that the burden of the covenant did not run with the land, the Vice-Chancellor of England granted the injunction on the ground that the defendant had purchased with notice of the covenant; and on an appeal from an order to commit the defendant for breach of the injunction, the Lord Chancellor held that the injunction was properly granted, though he varied it by omitting some words taken from the covenant as being too indefinite. In Mann v. Stephens the covenant respecting the user of the land was contained in the deed by which the house was conveyed, and was, therefore, plainly intended to benefit the owner of the house for the time being; and the decision was based on the ground that the restriction upon the user of the piece of land in question was known to the defendant at the time of his contract for the purchase.

In the case now before us it is not shown that the vendor Sharp had made any representations, or was bound by any contract or covenant excepting those covenants against nuisances contained in the deed of 1841, and those relating to the roads ; and it is clear that at and immediately after the date of the conveyance to Langton in November, 1842, he was perfectly at liberty to deal with the rest of his estate as he might think fit, subject only to the covenants to which we have just alluded, and that he was also at liberty to enter into any arrangement with Langton by which the restrictive covenants affecting the land conveyed to him might be altered or put an end to ; and the question which we have to decide is, whether he must be taken to have deprived himself of this power merely by reason of his having sold and conveyed to purchasers certain portions of his remaining property. It is true that in such cases the court does not require any particular form of deed or covenant, but, as Lord Cottenham has observed, would enforce a contract if proved by a mere agreement ; but, so far as the question may turn upon the intention of Sharp, the vendor, it is not altogether immaterial to observe, that although in both the conveyances to Langton in November, 1842, Langton is made to covenant for himself, his heirs, and assigns, the covenant in both cases is entered into with Sharp, his heirs, executors, and administrators only.

The case of the appellants is not, in our judgment, strengthened by the circumstance that notices of several of these intermediate conveyances by Sharp are indorsed upon the deed of the 27th of August, 1841 ; for as these conveyances extend only to small portions of the property, and as the title-deeds were retained by the vendor, it was only an ordinary and proper precaution on the part of the purchasers (who appear in several instances to have taken covenants to produce) to stipulate that notice of the fact of part of the property having been sold or conveyed should be indorsed on one of the principal title-deeds so retained. There is no trace of any such contract or arrangement as that which existed in all the cases to which we have been referred ; nor has any attempt been made to explain or define the limits within which the benefit of the restrictive covenants is supposed to have been confined, nor whether it must be taken to be confined to lands held under the same title or of the same tenure, or whether it would extend to lands subsequently acquired by the vendor, and be so attached to them as to pass under a conveyance of any part of such subsequently acquired lands, nor whether, if the covenants had been affirmative, any, and which, of the intermediate purchasers could have enforced the specific performance of such covenants. The only attempt at such a definition was made by the appellants' counsel when relying upon a particular passage of the judgment in Child v. Douglas. They argued (Kay, 568) that the court invariably regards stipulations of this kind with reference to the benefit of the property which is reserved by the vendor, and consequently that they are attached to such reserved property, and therefore pass by every conveyance of any part of that property. But it is obvious that such a definition does not meet all cases ; for cases might be put in which a vendor might lawfully and reasonably insist upon such covenants even when the conveyance comprised the whole of the property to which he was entitled at the date of the covenant, as in the case of the purchase and sale of a strip of land adjoining a large park by a person who had at the time no interest in the park, but who hoped to inherit or purchase it. Assuming the vendor of the strip of land afterwards to purchase or inherit the park, and to sue the purchaser for breach of the covenant, the purchaser of the strip of land would, in a court of equity, be unable to justify a violation of the covenant by reason of the injury sustained by the vendor having arisen only in consequence of his subsequent acquisition of the park.

We think that an owner of land in the position in which Sharp stood in the year 1842 cannot be presumed to have intended to fetter himself in the exercise of the power which he indisputably possessed of dealing with the whole of his estate as he thought fit; and as, notwithstanding the sale of some portions of land, his power of dealing with what he retained remained unaffected, it is, under the circumstances of this case, very difficult to see how any distinction is to be drawn between his power of dealing with the land so retained and with that which he resumed by the repurchase from Langton; and if it were to be held that a mere conveyance of a small portion of the remaining land amounts to evidence of such an intention on the part of the vendor, the rule cannot be confined to conveyances in fee, but must be extended to alienation for lives and years; and the present case affords a remarkable instance of the inconvenience which would result from such a rule, for as there appear to have been some twenty conveyances of small pieces of land between the 2d of November, 1842, and 1846, the concurrence of all these purchasers, and of all persons claiming under them, would be necessary to any such arrangement as that which was effected in 1846; and as it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain the concurrence of all those persons, the practical result would be to render a portion of the property inalienable excepting under very onerous and depreciating conditions.

The appellant has mainly relied upon the case of Child v. Douglas; and it has been said that that case goes further than any of the other decided cases, and has established such a rule as that to which we have alluded; but it must be observed that in Child v. Douglas the land had been laid out for building purposes; and in the contract entered into between the vendors and the defendant Douglas was contained a stipulation that Douglas should not erect any buildings within six feet of certain projected roads. The plaintiff Child was a subsequent purchaser of another and neighboring portion of the land so laid out, and on the occasion of his purchase he had been required to enter into, and had entered into, a covenant not to erect any building within six feet of one of the same roads called "Houghton Place;" and it appeared that upon the negotiation of the plaintiffs' purchase his agent was informed, in reply to inquiries as to the conditions on which the land was to be sold, that the purchasers would not be permitted to build nearer than six feet to Houghton Place, and a plan of the land was shown to him on which a building line was drawn, which indicated that the buildings were to be six feet distant from the causeway of that street. The Vice-Chancellor granted an injunction upon an interlocutory application to restrain the building of a wall fifteen feet high, but his order was discharged by the Lords Justices on appeal; and in delivering judgment, Lord Justice Knight Bruce said his opinion was adverse to the case of the plaintiff upon three of the four questions involved in the cause; and one of these questions was, whether if there was such a covenant or contract not to build (as mentioned in the case), which was binding on the defendant, the plaintiff was a person who was entitled to sue upon it or enforce it. The motion was directed to stand over till the hearing, and the defendant was put under an undertaking not in the meantime to carry the wall higher than fifteen feet six inches, and to abide by any order the court might make as to his removing what he had or should have built. The cause afterwards came on to be heard before the Vice-Chancellor, and it is reported 2 Jur. N. S. 950, 952, when the bill was dismissed; and in delivering judgment His Honor said that he entertained no doubt that there was no intention to vary the original contract, or that there was, in fact, a breach of the contract. But he says that a main question was as to the right of the plaintiff to sue, and this is the question upon which his doubts arose, and he said: "There would be no doubt but that this court would interfere in a proper case without noticing the difficulty whether in point of legal form the party could sue at law or not. In Mann v. Stephens the whole case was brought before the Vice-Chancellor, but it was not put upon the question of the covenant running with the land or not, but on the question whether or not there was a substantial agreement between the parties." And the Vice-Chancellor concluded his judgment by saying: "I have not been able to come to a conclusion perfectly satisfactory to my own mind what are the rights of parties inter se each of whom has covenanted with the landlord, but who have neither covenanted with each other nor taken any covenant from the landlord to themselves; and I have felt additional doubt from the different view taken by the court above, and shown so distinctly by the Lords Justices allowing the defendant to complete the wall, when almost the only question before me is, whether I shall order that wall to be pulled down or dismiss the bill. It does not appear to me that I ought to interfere so far in a case where I still hesitate, and where so much hesitation has been shown in the court above; and I must suffer what has taken place to turn the balance (for that is all that is required) in the defendant's favor, having great doubt both as to the law and as to the application of it."

Having regard to the circumstances to which we have already alluded as existing in the case of Child v. Douglas, and which are not to be found in the present case, to the reversal of the order made upon the motion, and to the final dismissal of the bill by the Vice-Chancellor, notwithstanding the undertaking given by the defendant, and to the judgments delivered on those occasions, we think that that case cannot be considered as having established any such new or general rule as that which has been contended for by the appellant, and we think such a rule is unsupported either by principle or authority, and would greatly interfere with the free alienation of landed estates.

We think, therefore, that the appellant's objection to the title fails, and the appeal motion must be refused, with costs.

RENALS v. COWLISHAW.

CHANCERY DIVISION AND COURT OF APPEALS. 1878, 1879.

[Reported 9 Ch. Div. 125; 11 Ch. Div. 866.]

By an indenture dated the 29th of September, 1845, Messrs. Hoby, Winterbotham, and Russell, as the devisees in trust for sale of a mansion-house and residential property known as the Mill Hill estate, and of certain pieces of land adjoining thereto, sold and conveyed two of these adjoining pieces of land to one Francis Shaw in fee, and Shaw thereby, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenanted with Hoby, Winterbotham, and Russell, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, not to build upon the lands thereby conveyed within a certain distance from a particular road leading "to the Mill Hill House and property belonging to the said trustees;" that the garden walls or palisades to be set up along the side of the said road should stand back a certain distance from the centre of the road; that any house to be built on the land adjoining the road should be of a certain value, and of an elevation at least equal to that of the houses on a particular road; and that no trade or business should be carried on in any of such houses or buildings, but that the same should be used as private dwelling-houses only. The conveyance did not state that this covenant was for the protection of the residential property, or in reference to the other adjoining pieces of land, or make any statement or reference thereto.

The same trustees also sold about this time other pieces of lands adjoining the Mill Hill estate; and the conveyance to the purchaser in each case contained restrictive covenants similar to those above mentioned. It was alleged by the plaintiffs in their statement of claim that the intention of all the restrictive covenants was to protect and maintain the value of the Mill Hill estate, and to secure the continuance of the surrounding neighborhood as purely residential in character.

The trustees, in December, 1854, sold and conveyed the Mill Hill estate to T. P. Bainbrigge, in fee, and Bainbrigge having died, his devisees in trust, in September, 1870, sold and conveyed the same estate to the plaintiffs as tenants in common in fee.

In neither of these two conveyances were there covenants similar to those in the conveyance to Shaw, but there was in the conveyance to the plaintiffs a covenant by them with their vendors not to build a public-house or carry on offensive trades upon a particular portion of the property conveyed to them. Neither of the two conveyances recited or mentioned in any way the conveyance or sale to Shaw, or the existence of any restrictive covenant entered into by Shaw or by Gadsby, nor did either of them recite or mention the sales or conveyances of the other pieces of land sold as above mentioned.

There had also been a devolution title with regard to the lands sold to Shaw, for after his death Mary Shaw, the person entitled under his will, in August, 1867, sold and conveyed part of the lands comprised in the indenture of September, 1845, to John Gadsby in fee, who, in his conveyance, entered into covenants with Mary Shaw, her heirs, executors, and administrators, substantially identical mutatis mutandis with the restrictive covenants contained in the indenture of the 29th of September, 1845. And subsequently the lands so conveyed to Gadsby were sold and conveyed (with certain buildings erected thereon) by Gadsby, or persons deriving title through him, to the defendants as tenants in common in fee.

The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants were carrying on upon their lands, and in contravention of the restrictive covenants first above mentioned, the trade of wheelwrights, smiths, and bent timber manufacturers, and had erected a high chimney which emitted thick black smoke, and that those acts were destructive of the residential character of the neighborhood, and had deteriorated the value and amenity of the Mill Hill estate. By their action they claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from carrying on any trade or business upon their lands, and from permitting the buildings erected thereon to be used otherwise than as private houses, and from contravening in any manner the restrictive covenants contained in the indenture of September, 1845.

The principal question argued, and that on which the decision turned, was as to the right of the plaintiffs to sue upon these covenants.

It appeared that no contract had been entered into or representations made, either upon the occasion of the purchase by Bainbrigge from the trustees, or upon the purchase from Bainbrigge by the plaintiffs, that the purchaser should have the benefit of the covenants entered into by Shaw with the trustees.

Dickinson, Q. C., and Renshaw, for the plaintiffs.

W. Pearson, Q. C., and Bury, for the defendants, were not called upon.

HALL, V. C. I think this case is governed by Keates v. Lyon, by Child v. Douglas, Kay, 560; 5 D. M. & G. 739, as ultimately decided by Vice-Chancellor Wood, 2 Jur. N. S. 950, who, after granting an interlocutory injunction in the first instance, refused to grant the plaintiff an injunction at the hearing, and by the case of Master v. Hansard, 4 Ch. Div. 718.

The law as to the burden of and the persons entitled to the benefit of covenants in conveyances in fee, was certainly not in a satisfactory state; but it is now well settled that the burden of a covenant entered into by a grantee in fee for himself, his heirs and assigns, although not running with the land at law so as to give a legal remedy against the owner thereof for the time being, is binding upon the owner of it for the time being, in equity, having notice thereof. Who, then (other than the original covenantee), is entitled to the benefit of the covenant? From the cases of Mann v. Stephens, 15 Sim. 377; Western v. Macdermott, Law Rep. 2 Ch. 72; and Coles v. Sims, Kay, 56; 5 D. M. & G. 1, it may, I think, be considered as determined that any one who has acquired land, being one of several lots laid out for sale as building plots, where the court is satisfied that it was the intention that each one of the several purchasers should be bound by and should, as against the others, have the benefit of the covenants entered into by each of the purchasers, is entitled to the benefit of the covenant; and that this right, that is, the benefit of the covenant, inures to the assign of the first purchaser, in other words, runs with the land of such purchaser. This right exists not only where the several parties execute a mutual deed of covenant, but wherever a mutual contract can be sufficiently established. A purchaser may also be entitled to the benefit of a restrictive covenant entered into with his vendor by another or others where his vendor has contracted with him that he shall be the assign of it, that is, have the benefit of the covenant. And such covenant need not be express, but may be collected from the transaction of sale and purchase. In considering this, the expressed or otherwise apparent purpose or object of the covenant, in reference to its being intended to be annexed to other property, or to its being only obtained to enable the covenantee more advantageously to deal with his property, is important to be attended to. Whether the purchaser is the purchaser of all the land retained by his vendor when the covenant was entered into, is also important. If he is not, it may be important to take into consideration whether his vendor has sold off part of the land so retained, and if he has done so, whether or not he has so sold subject to a similar covenant: whether the purchaser claiming the benefit of the covenant has entered into a similar covenant may not be so important.

The plaintiffs in this case, in their statement of claim, rest their case upon their being "assigns" of the Mill Hill estate, and they say that as the vendors to Shaw were the owners of that estate when they sold to Shaw a parcel of land adjoining it, the restrictive covenants entered into by the purchaser of that parcel of land must be taken to have been entered into with them for the purpose of protecting the Mill Hill estate, which they retained; and therefore, that the benefit of that restrictive covenant goes to the assign of that estate, irrespective of whether or not any representation that such a covenant had been entered into by a purchaser from the vendors was made to such assigns, and without any contract by the vendors that that purchaser should have the benefit of that covenant. The argument must, it would seem, go to this length, viz., that in such a case a purchaser becomes entitled to the covenant even although he did not know of the existence of the covenant, and that although the purchaser is not (as the purchasers in the present case were not) purchaser of all the property retained by the vendor upon the occasion of the conveyance containing the covenants. It appears to me that the three cases to which I have referred show that this is not the law of this court; and that in order to enable a purchaser as an assign (such purchaser not being an assign of all that the vendor retained when he executed the conveyance containing the covenants, and that conveyance not showing that the benefit of the covenant was intended to inure for the time being of each portion of the estate so retained or of the portion of the estate of which the plaintiff is assign) to claim the benefit of a restrictive covenant, this, at least, must appear, that the assign acquired his property with the benefit of the covenant, that is, it must appear that the benefit of the covenant was part of the subject-matter of the purchase. Lord Justice Bramwell, in Master v. Hansard, 4 Ch. Div. 724, said: "I am satisfied that the restrictive covenant was not put in for the benefit of this particular property, but for the benefit of the lessors, to enable them to make the most of the property which they retained." In the present case I think that the covenants were put in with a like object. If it had appeared in the conveyance to Bainbridge that there were such restrictive covenants in conveyances already executed, and expressly or otherwise that Bainbridge was to have the benefit of them, he and the plaintiffs, as claiming through him, would have been entitled to the benefit of them. But there being in the conveyance to Brainbridge no reference to the existence of such covenants by recital of the conveyances containing them or otherwise, the plaintiffs cannot be treated as entitled to the benefit of them. This action must be dismissed, with costs.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Hastings, Q. C., and Renshaw, for the plaintiffs.

W. Pearson, Q. C., and Bury, for the defendants, were not called upon.

JAMES, L. J. I am of opinion that the decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall is correct. It is impossible, as it seems to me, to distinguish this case from the cases to which he has referred. To enable an assign to take the benefit of restrictive covenants there must be something in the deed to define the property for the benefit of which they were entered into. Supposing I were now framing the deed afresh, I should not have the remotest idea how the covenant ought to be framed, as I cannot tell what the property was which the parties intended to be protected, and within what limits.

I do not think it necessary to add anything more, except that I entirely concur with every word of the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Hall.

BAGGALLAY, L. J. I am of the same opinion with the Lord Justice, and I adopt entirely the language of the Vice-Chancellor in his judgment, as reported 9 Ch. Div. 125.

THESIGER, L. J. I am of the same opinion.

HAYWOOD v. BRUNSWICK BUILDING SOCIETY.

COURT OF APPEAL. 1881.

[Reported 8 Q. B. Div. 403.]

APPEAL from the judgment of Stephen, J., on further consideration.

This was an action against a building society, the mortgagees of certain land, upon a covenant to build and keep in repair houses erected upon the land. The facts were these : —

By an indenture dated the 17th of May, 1866, made between Charles Jackson and Edward Jackson, Charles Jackson granted a plot of land to Edward to the use that Edward should pay Charles an annual chief rent of £11, and Edward for himself, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, covenanted with Charles, his executors and assigns, that he Edward, his heirs and assigns, would pay Charles, his heirs and assigns, this rent half-yearly, and would erect and keep in good repair and, when necessary, rebuild, messuages on the land of the value of double the rent. On the 2d of March, 1867, Charles Jackson conveyed to Haywood to the use of Haywood, his heirs and assigns, the said chief rent and all powers and remedies in respect thereof, together with the benefit of the said covenant. Edward Jackson assigned his interest to MacAndrew. MacAndrew by a deed of the 8th of September, 1871, mortgaged the premises in question to certain persons described as the trustees of the Brunswick Building Society in fee subject to the rent-charge and covenants above mentioned. The building society was afterwards incorporated under the Act of 1874, and under the mortgage deed took possession of the land and the buildings on it. It was conceded on the one hand that buildings of the stipulated value had been erected upon the land, and on the other that they had not been kept in repair ; and the question was whether, under the circumstances stated, the building society was liable upon the covenant to keep them in repair. No question arose as to their liability to pay the chief rent, as the arrears were paid into court in the action.

The case was tried before STEPHEN, J., without a jury, at the Manchester Winter Assizes, 1881, who reserved it for further consideration, and after stating the facts as above, gave judgment as follows : —

The points argued in this case were two. It was affirmed by the plaintiff and denied by the defendants that the covenant in the deed of 1866 ran with the land, and that Haywood, as assignee of Charles Jackson, could therefore sue upon it the Brunswick Building Society, the mortgagees of the assignee of Edward Jackson. It was also affirmed by the plaintiff and denied by the defendants that the defendants being in possession of the property with equitable notice of the covenant, must perform it.

As to the first part of these arguments, I am disposed to think the case of Milnes v. Branch, 5 M. & S. 411, is an authority directly in point in favor of the defendants. It is true that Lord St. Leonards appears to disapprove of this decision (2 Vendors and Purchasers, 14th ed. p. 591, note); but I must regard it as a binding authority till it is overruled.

With regard to the second point, I think that the plaintiff's contention must prevail. The only distinction on which the defendants relied to take the case out of the ordinary rule as to persons in possession of land being bound to perform covenants relating to it of which they have notice, was that, though an equity to use property or to abstain from using it in a particular way may be so attached to land, a liability to repair or do similar acts cannot. I see no reason for this distinction, and it is directly opposed to the case of Cooke v. Chilcott, 3 Ch. Div. 694.

The result is that there must be judgment for the plaintiff, with costs. There will be no damages, the parties having agreed that if it is formally decided that the defendants are to put the buildings in repair, they must be repaired to the satisfaction of a gentleman agreed upon.

The defendants appealed.

Ambrose, Q. C., and Henry (Crompton with them), for the defendants.

Addison, Q. C., and R. H. Collins, for the plaintiff.

BRETT, L. J. This appeal must be allowed. I am clearly of opinion, both on principle and on the authority of Milnes v. Branch, that this action could not be maintained at common law. Milnes v. Branch must be understood as it always has been understood, and as Lord St. Leonards (Sug. V. & P. 14th ed. p. 590) understood it; and it will be seen, on a reference to his book, that he considers the effect of it to be that a covenant to build does not run with the rent in the hands of an assignee.

This being so, the question is reduced to an equitable one. Now the equitable doctrine was brought to a focus in Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Ph. 774, which is the leading case on this subject. It seems to me that that case decided that an assignee taking land subject to a certain class of covenants is bound by such covenants if he has notice of them, and that the class of covenants comprehended within the rule is that covenants restricting the mode of using the land only will be enforced. It may be also, but it is not necessary to decide here, that all covenants also which impose such a burden on the land as can be enforced against the land would be enforced. Be that as it may, a covenant to repair is not restrictive, and could not be enforced against the land; therefore such a covenant is within neither rule. It is admitted that there has been no case in which any court has gone farther than this, and yet if the court would have been prepared to go farther, such a case would have arisen. The strongest argument to the contrary is, that the reason for no court having gone farther is that a mandatory injunction was not in former times grantable, whereas it is now; but I cannot help thinking, in spite of this, that if we enlarged the rule as it is contended, we should be making a new equity, which we cannot do.

I think also that Cox v. Bishop, 8 De G. M. & G. 815; 26 L. J. Ch. 389, shows that a Court of Equity has refused to extend the rule of Tulk v. Moxhay in the direction contended for, and that if we decided for the plaintiff we should have to overrule that case. But it is said that if we decide for the defendants we shall have to overrule Cooke v. Chilcott. If that case was decided on the equitable doctrine of notice, I think we ought to overrule it. But I think there is much to show that the ground of the decision was that Malins, V. C., was of the opinion — wrongly as it now turns out — that the covenant ran with the land, and the decision of the Court of Appeal appears to have proceeded on an admission.

COTTON, L. J. I am of the same opinion on both points. I think that a mere covenant that land shall be improved does not run with the land within the rule in Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 8th ed. at p. 89, so as to give the plaintiff a right to sue at law. I also think that the plaintiff has no remedy in equity. Let us consider the examples in which a Court of Equity has enforced covenants affecting land. We find that they have been invariably enforced if they have been restrictive, and that with the exception of the covenants in Cooke v. Chilcott, only restrictive covenants have been enforced. In Tulk v. Moxhay, the earliest of the cases, Lord Cottenham says: "That this court has jurisdiction to enforce a contract between the owner of land and his neighbor purchasing a part of it, that the latter shall either use or abstain from using it in a particular way, is what I never knew disputed." In that case the covenant was to use in a particular manner, from which was implied a covenant not to use in any other manner; and the plaintiff obtained an injunction restraining the defendant from using in any other manner, although the covenant was in terms affirmative. At p. 778, Lord Cottenham says: "If an equity is attached to property by the owner, no one purchasing with notice of that equity can stand in a different situation from the party from whom he purchased." This lays down the real principle that an equity attaches to the owner of the land. It is possible that the doctrine might be extended to cases where there is an equitable charge which might be enforced against the land, but it is not necessary to decide that now; it is enough to say that with that sole exception the doctrine could not be farther extended. The covenant to repair can only be enforced by making the owner put his hand into his pocket, and there is nothing which would justify us in going that length. We are not bound here by Cooke v. Chilcott, and I do not think that the rule of Tulk v. Moxhay can be extended as Malins, V. C., there extended it. In Morland v. Cook, Law Rep. 6 Eq. 252, there are perhaps some expressions of Romilly, M. R., which favor the opposite contention; but the fact of there being a deed of partition in that case makes it distinguishable. That is the only case besides Cooke v. Chilcott at all in favor of the plaintiff. Cox v.

Bishop, 26 L. J. Ch. 389, is distinctly the other way. There the covenants affected the owner, but not the land; and although the defendant was full equitable owner, the court refused an injunction. Daniel v. Stepney, Law Rep. 9 Ex. 185, where there was merely a grant of a rent to be distrained for on land adjoining the land demised, does not seem to me to be in point, and such observations of Bramwell, B., in Aspden v. Seddon, 1 Ex. Div. 496, as might possibly assist the plaintiff, are extra judicial. There is therefore no ground for extending the equitable doctrine as we are asked to do.

LINDLEY, L. J. I am of the same opinion. The practical question is, whether the defendants, being mortgagees in possession, are bound to repair under the circumstances of the case. It is said that the obligation to repair is imposed upon them because they took a conveyance of the land with notice of the covenant, and Stephen, J., has thought himself bound by Tulk v. Moxhay and Cooke v. Chilcott.

Now I may first say that I do not think that the defendants could be hit by any process of circuity of action. As mortgagees they took the land subject to the rent-charge no doubt, so far as the liability to distress and re-entry were concerned. I do not think that either covenant runs with the land. Neither Milnes v. Branch, 5 M. & S. 411, nor Randall v. Rigby, 4 M. & W. 130, however, applies very closely. In Milnes v. Branch the plaintiff was not assignee in fee of the rent, having only a leasehold interest in that rent. In Randall v. Rigby the question was whether debt or covenant was the proper form of action. There are dicta in the judgments, however, which favor the contention of the defendants in this case, and it is impossible not to see that the burden of the covenant does not run with the land. This is not a case of landlord and tenant; we must never lose sight of that distinction.

With regard to the question of notice, Tulk v. Moxhay shows that a restrictive covenant will be enforced; and so do Cox v. Bishop and Wilson v. Hart, Law Rep. 1 Ch. 463. But I think that the result of these cases is that only such a covenant as can be complied with without expenditure of money will be enforced against the assignee on the ground of notice. Especially does this appear from Wilson v. Hart, Law Rep. 1 Ch. 464, where a covenant not to use a house as a beershop was enforced against a purchaser's tenant from year to year. It is absurd to suppose that such a tenant could have been compelled to perform a covenant to repair.

The principle of Cooke v. Chilcott may or may not be applicable to this case, but the circumstances were wholly different. I should be sorry to overrule that case, and prefer to leave it to be reconsidered on some future occasion. It is enough to say that in the present case we have been asked to extend Tulk v. Moxhay as it has never been extended before, and we decline to do so.

TALLMADGE v. EAST RIVER BANK.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS. 1862.

[Reported 26 N. Y. 105.]

APPEAL from the Superior Court of the city of New York. Action to restrain the defendants, who owned the lot on the northeast corner of Eighth Street and Third Avenue in the city of New York, from erecting a building thereon covering the whole lot, and to require them to leave a space of eight feet between the building and the line of the street, in conformity to the plan on which the dwellings of the plaintiffs and other proprietors of adjacent lots were located. From the pleadings, and the finding of the judge before whom the cause was tried, these facts appeared: In 1829, a strip of land, sixty feet in width from the Second to the Third Avenue, was conveyed to the city of New York for the purposes of a public street. It was accepted by the city, and became a part of Eighth Street, as it was then called. On and prior to February, 1831, and before any of the land had been built upon, one Davis became the owner of all the lots on both the sides of this street. Davis made a map of the street between the Second and Third Avenues, in which the street was shown as seventy-six feet wide, eight feet being added on each side. He called the avenue, thus widened, St. Mark's Place. This was before he sold or built on any of the lots. Soon thereafter, in conformity with this plan, Davis erected sixteen dwelling-houses on the south side of the street, and thirteen on the north side. They were of a superior class, all upon one uniform line, eight feet back from the original line of the street, the eight feet being devoted to doorsteps and areas enclosed in iron fences. When Davis sold any of the houses or lots, he exhibited this plan to the purchasers, and represented to all who had purchased that the street was always to remain as laid out, and that, when he so formed and laid out the street and built thereon, he gave up and dedicated the strip of eight feet of land on each lot to be used as a part of the Place in the manner it has since been used. It would appear that the effect of this plan of building was to save the sidewalk from the encroachment that it would otherwise have suffered from the projection of the doorsteps, and thus, in effect, to widen the available footpath. In October, 1832, after sales to the plaintiffs, Davis sold two lots to one Henriques. The conveyance, though absolute in form, appears to have been in the nature of a mere security, Davis retaining the right to dispose of the property and account for the proceeds. In 1833 he negotiated the sale of these lots to one Wilkes, showing to him the plan, or diagram before mentioned, and declaring his intention that the buildings to be erected thereon should be set back eight feet from the original line of the street.

On one of these lots, which was on a corner, Wilkes erected a building, owned by the defendant at the time of commencement of this suit, and which it was preparing to tear down. This building and two others erected by Wilkes were located in conformity to the line previously adopted and built upon by Davis. The deeds of Davis were absolute and unrestricted, conveying the legal title to the entire lots as bounded by the original line of the street. One of the mesne conveyances under which the defendant derived title refers to a "certain court-yard of eight feet in width," as included in the premises, and at the end of the habendum clause are the words: "Subject to all restrictions and covenants, if any exist, in relation to keeping the court-yard perpetually open as said court-yard." The defendant bought, it was found by the judge, with notice that it was claimed there were restrictions which would prevent it from acquiring a right, as purchaser of the lot, to build upon the eight feet described as court-yard.

The judge found, as a conclusion of law from these facts, that Davis had made a valid dedication of the eight feet of land on each side of the street, and that its validity is not affected by the fact that it was made with the intention and understanding that the proprietors of lots should be at liberty to enclose eight feet as an area or court-yard. He ordered judgment for the relief demanded in the complaint. The judgment was affirmed at General Term, not on the ground of dedication, but on the ground that, the original purchasers having verbally agreed to, and executed a plan for, the improvement of the Place, they were bound to adhere to it, and the defendant, purchasing with notice, took subject to the same equity. The defendant appealed to this court.

William Allen Butler, for the appellant.

Richard Mott, for the respondent.

SUTHERLAND, J. It is very plain that this action could not be maintained on the ground that the strip of ground, eight feet in width, which it was the purpose of the action to restrain the defendant from building on, had been dedicated to the public. The deeds from Davis to Henriques, and from Henriques to Wilkes, which were deeds with full covenants, bound the lots on the original line of the street, sixty feet in width; thus including the strip of land in question. Usually, when land is dedicated to public use, the owner retains the legal title. No doubt there may be an express dedication by deed; but, as the public cannot be a grantee, or the grantees, when there is an express dedication by deed, the deed must be to an individual, or body corporate, capable of being a grantee, and of holding for the use of the public. Neither of the deeds before mentioned declared any such public use or trust; and the covenants in the deeds would seem to be inconsistent with an intention by such deeds to dedicate the strip of land to public use. The deeds from Davis to Maxwell, one of the plaintiffs, convey with full covenants to the street line, and without any restriction, stipulation, or dedication as to the eight feet. The making and exhibition of the map of St. Mark's Place by Davis, showing an open space of seventy-six feet in width, that is, eight feet on both sides wider than the original street, was perfectly consistent with an intention on the part of Davis to appropriate these strips of eight feet in width, on both sides of the original street, to the private use of the occupiers of the lots on both sides of the street; and the case shows that these strips of eight feet on each side have been enclosed in court-yards, with iron railings. The judge who tried the case at Special Term did not find as a fact that these strips of eight feet in width had been used by the public. There is no fact found, or admitted by the pleadings, from which an acceptance by the public of any intended dedication can be inferred. It appears to me plain, then, that the judgment in this case cannot be affirmed on the ground of dedication.

But I think the action could be maintained, and that the judgment below can be affirmed, on another principle.

From the facts found by the judge at Special Term, it appears that when the plaintiff Maxwell and others bought lots in St. Mark's Place of Davis, they were shown the map or plan of St. Mark's Place, showing that the houses on both sides of the Place were to be set back eight feet from the street, and that they bought on the assurance of Davis that that plan should be observed in building on the Place; that the strips of eight feet in width on both sides of the street should not be built upon, but kept open. It is to be presumed that they would not have bought and paid their money except upon this assurance. It is to be presumed that, relying upon this assurance, they paid a larger price for the lots than otherwise they would have paid. Selling and conveying the lots under such circumstances and with such assurances, though verbal, bound Davis in equity and good conscience to use and dispose of all the remaining lots so that the assurances upon which Maxwell and others had bought their lots would be kept or fulfilled. This equity attached to the remaining lots, so that any one subsequently purchasing from Davis any one or more of the remaining lots, with notice of the equity as between Davis and Maxwell and others, the prior purchasers, would not stand in a different situation from Davis, but would be bound by that equity.

In Tulk v. Moxhay, 11 Beav. 571, a covenant by the grantee of a piece of land to use it as a private square was enforced against a purchaser from the grantee with notice. The Lord Chancellor said the question was, not "whether the covenant ran with the land, but whether a party shall be permitted to use the land inconsistently with the contract entered into by his vendor, and with notice of which he purchased." He then states this principle as an answer to the question: "If an equity attached to the property by the owner, no one purchasing with notice of that equity can stand in a different situation from the party from whom he purchased." See also Patching v. Dobbins, Kay, 1; Coles v. Sims, Id. 56; Rankin v. Huskinson, 4 Sim. 13; Whatman v. Gibson, 9 Id. 196; Schreiber v. Creed, 10 Id. 9.

In Hill v. Miller, 3 Paige, 254, where M. had purchased land in a village adjoining a public street, and it was at the same time agreed between him and the vendor that a triangular piece of ground belonging to the vendor on the opposite side of the street should never be built upon, but should be deemed public property ; and the vendor executed to M. a deed of the land sold, and a bond for the performance of the agreement as to the triangular piece of land, both instruments being duly proved and recorded ; and H. afterwards purchased of M. the land opposite the triangular piece, after being informed by him of the privilege secured by the bond, — it was held, that H. was entitled to the benefit of the easement, and that M. could not, without his consent, be permitted to make a new arrangement with the holders of the legal estate in the triangular piece of land, by which buildings should be erected thereon.

In Barrow v. Richard, 8 Paige, 351, where the owner of a block of ground in the city of New York divided it into lots, and sold the lots from time to time to different individuals, and the conveyances of the lots contained mutual covenants between the grantor and grantees respectively against the erection of any livery stable, slaughter house, glue factory, &c., upon any part of the lots conveyed, or the carrying on of any manufactory, trade or business, which might be in any wise offensive to the neighboring inhabitants ; it was held that the covenants in the deeds of the different lots were for the mutual benefit of all the purchasers of lots on the block ; and that, although a previous purchaser from the owner of the block could not sue at law upon the covenant in the deed to a subsequent purchaser, the Court of Chancery might protect him by injunction against the carrying on of any noxious business or trade upon the lot of such subsequent purchaser.

The plaintiff, Maxwell, in the principal case, bought two of the lots on St. Mark's Place, on which first-class dwelling-houses had been erected by Davis, according to the map or plan of St. Mark's Place, made and exhibited by him (the houses being set back eight feet from the street), on the 13th day of January, 1832, that being the date of Maxwell's deed. The facts found by the judge at Special Term, and the facts admitted by the pleadings, show that these lots were bought by Maxwell upon the assurance or agreement of Davis that all the houses on the Place, as shown on the map, were to be set back eight feet from the street, leaving the open space between the houses seventy-six feet in width.

The judge at Special Term found that on the 11th of October, 1832, Davis conveyed to Moses Henriques two lots on Third Avenue, at the northeast corner of Third Avenue and Eighth Street (the strip of land of eight feet in width, which it was the object of this suit to restrain the defendant from building on, being a part of the northeast corner lot), and a lot on Eighth Street, next easterly of the corner lots ; that this deed was in the nature of a mortgage to secure the firm of Josephs & Co., of which Henriques was a member, for money loaned by the firm to Davis, Davis still retaining the right to dispose of the property, accounting to them for the same when sold ; that on the 13th of February, 1833, Davis negotiated a sale of these lots to Edmund Wilkes, who on that day received a deed from Henriques and wife for the lots ; that at the time Davis sold these lots to Wilkes, he showed Wilkes the diagram of the Place, and declared his intention to set the building back eight feet from the original line of the street ; that when Wilkes built the corner building now owned by the defendant, and also two other houses east of it, he erected them all on the line designated by Davis, and in conformity with the line of the other buildings previously erected by Davis on that street, carrying out the plan which Davis had previously formed of making St. Mark's Place a uniform street or Place of seventy-six feet in width.

The defendant holds through several mesne conveyances from Wilkes. The defendant bought with notice that it was claimed that there were restrictions which would prevent the defendant from acquiring a right, as purchaser of the lots, to build upon the eight feet described as a court-yard. The uniformity of the position of all the houses on St. Mark's Place was probably sufficient alone to put the defendant on inquiry.

It is probable that the equity arising from the circumstances and assurances under which the lots were sold and conveyed by Davis, was mutual, as between him and his grantees respectively ; and hence, that it would be easy to show that the equity was mutual as between his grantees, without regard to priority of conveyances, so that the equity would or might exist in favor of a subsequent grantee against a prior grantee, as well as in favor of a prior grantee against a subsequent grantee ; but it is unnecessary in this case to examine or decide that question.

The judgment of the Superior Court should be affirmed, with costs, on the ground of the equity in favor of the plaintiffs, as prior grantees, arising from the circumstances and assurances under which they took their conveyances and paid their money ; which equity attaches to the remaining lots, and can and ought to be enforced against the defendant, taking with notice, or under circumstances equivalent to notice, of the equity in favor of the plaintiffs.

SELDEN, J., did not sit in the case ; all the other judges concurring.
Judgment affirmed.

V

WINFIELD v. HENNING.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF CHANCERY. 1870.

[Reported 6 C. E. Green, 188.]

ON motion to dissolve injunction, upon bill and answer.

Mr. Dixon, in support of the motion.

Mr. Ransom, contra.

THE CHANCELLOR. The complainant owns a house and lot on the south side of South Fifth Street, formerly called also Gilbert Street, in Jersey City. The defendant owns a house and lot adjoining it on the west, and on the corner of South Fifth Street and Coles Street. These lots are part of a tract of one hundred feet square, at the southeast corner of Coles Street and South Fifth Street, which was conveyed by the devisees of John B. Coles to Keeney and Wheeler, on the first of May, 1854. In the deed the premises were designated by numbers, as four lots fronting on South Fifth or Gilbert Street, and the deed contained this provision : "It being expressly understood and agreed that the houses which may be erected on Gilbert Street shall be set back ten feet from the southerly line of said street."

In May, 1857, Keeney conveyed his interest in this tract to Wheeler, who afterwards erected on it five two-story houses of twenty-feet front on South Fifth Street, ten feet from the south line of the street. After they were built, in May, 1858, he conveyed the house and lot of the complainant to a grantee, through whom the complainant derives title ; and one year after this he conveyed the house and lot of the defendant to a grantee, through whom the defendant claims title. The stipulation as to the placing houses ten feet from the street, is not contained in any deed after that to Keeney and Wheeler. The grantors in that deed owned a large number of lots in the vicinity, some of which were on the opposite side of the street, and retained them after the deed to Keeney and Wheeler.

The defendant, in May, 1870, commenced erecting an addition to the dwelling-house on his lot, which would occupy the ten feet between it and the street, by which the westerly view or prospect from the front of the complainant's house is cut off. The injunction restrains the defendant from proceeding with or completing that building.

The two questions in the case are, whether the defendant is bound by the stipulation or covenant in the deed from the Coles family, and if he is, whether the complainant has any right to compel its performance.

The provision or covenant in the deed is not like that in Spencer's Case, 5 Rep. 16, as was urged on the argument. It does not relate to something collateral to the land, but to the land conveyed itself. In that case the covenant was to erect a brick wall on an adjoining lot. Nor does it relate to a thing not in esse, as a wall to be built; but it relates to the ten feet of the tract next to the street, and the negative stipulation not to erect houses on that is, in its legal effect, to keep it free from buildings; this is the only legal effect of the covenant; it does not oblige the grantees or their assigns to erect buildings at that distance, or to erect any houses at all.

The stipulation names no one as bound, neither the grantees, their heirs or assigns, but it is annexed to the land and the grant of it, and must therefore be co-extensive with the estate granted, which is to them, their heirs and assigns. In a suit by the grantors there would be no question but that this stipulation would be enforced against any owner of this tract, or any part of it, who derived his title through this deed.

The question whether the complainant is entitled to enforce this stipulation, is not so clear. If any purchaser of the other lots retained by the Coles family at the giving of this deed, and injured by this erection, was the complainant, the authorities are numerous and decided that he would be entitled to the benefit of this stipulation. Tulk v. Moxhay, 11 Beav. 571; s. c. 2 Phil. 774; Barron v. Richard, 3 Edw. Ch. 96; Hills v. Miller, 3 Paige, 254.

But in this case both parties derive title from the covenantors, and not from the covenantee; and the question is, whether they are bound to each other by the covenants which Wheeler entered into with the Coles family, for the benefit of the property which they retained. An action at law could not be maintained by the complainant against the defendant on such covenant. But in equity their position is different. Both parties are bound to the grantors in the Coles deed to keep this front free from buildings; each is subject to the easement over his lot, in favor of those subsequently deriving title from Coles, and each is equitably and justly entitled to the advantage which the observance of this stipulation by his neighbor may be to him. If all were relieved from the incumbrance, none perhaps could complain. But to be restrained from extending his own building to the street, and to have his neighbor on each side project in front of him, would be a much greater grievance to any of these lot owners than was contained in the stipulation in the deed through which he derived title; and he has no power to compel the grantors to enforce the covenant. It seems equitable that this court should, at his instance, compel the observance of this covenant. This view is supported by the dictum of Lord Romilly in a case heard before him at the Rolls, in 1866, Western v. Macdermott, 1 Eq. Cas. L. R. 507; and by a decision of the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, Greene v. Creighton, 7 R. I. R. 1.

This easement was in existence at the time of the conveyance of the complainant's lot by Wheeler, who still retained the lot of the defendant, which was the dominant tenement; and this space being left open in compliance with a covenant or stipulation binding on both lots, it might be held to be an apparent and continuous easement, to which the part retained was thus made subject.

The motion to dissolve must be denied.

SHARP v. ROPES.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1872.

[Reported 110 Mass. 381.]

BILL in equity, filed July 10, 1872, alleging that Stephen Heath in 1865, being the owner of a parcel of land on a way, now called Gordon Street, in West Roxbury, laid it out in lots; that he conveyed lot 8 and part of lot 7 to George G. Drew, by deeds containing the following provision: "That for the term of fifteen years from the first day of January, 1866, no building shall be erected or placed on said land, the main part of which shall come within twenty feet of said street or way; and the main part of any such building shall not be less than two stories high, exclusive of basement and attic; and that no trade or manufacture injurious or offensive to dwelling-houses, or their occupants in that neighborhood, shall be carried on, and no livery stable or swine shall be kept on said land during said time. A violation of either of said restrictions shall not make a forfeiture of the estate, but in case of any such violation said Heath, his heirs or devisees, may enter upon said land, and abate or remove, forcibly if necessary, anything erected, placed or kept therein, in violation of said restrictions, and at the expense of the guilty party;" that the land has since been conveyed to the plaintiff by deeds containing the same provision; that after the conveyance to Drew, Heath conveyed lot 6 and the rest of lot 7 to the defendant, by deeds containing the same provision; and that the defendant knew that the restrictions were for the benefit of all the lots; but that he was nevertheless proceeding to erect a building on lot 6 within twenty feet of Gordon Street. The prayer was that he might be restrained from so doing. The case was reserved by Gray, J., for the determination of the full court, on the pleadings and an agreed statement of facts, substantially as follows: —

In 1865 Stephen Heath, a house builder, being the owner of a parcel of land in West Roxbury, laid it out in lots for building purposes, according to a plan, dated March 25, 1865, and recorded in the registry of deeds for the county, and the material part of which is copied in the margin (page 505). The way, thirty feet wide, laid down on the plan, is now a public highway, called Gordon Street.

By deed dated December 23, 1865, and recorded March 1, 1866, Heath conveyed to George G. Drew lot 8, and by deed dated June 27, 1866, and recorded July 12, 1866, he conveyed to him a strip of lot 7, adjacent to lot 8. Both these deeds contained the provision set out in the bill. Drew immediately built a house upon the land conveyed to him, and the land has since been conveyed to the plaintiff by deeds containing the same provision. Before the deeds to Drew, Heath erected on lot 10 a dwelling-house, no part of which was within twenty feet of the way, and of this house he remained the owner until his death; but he lived a mile distant.

By deed dated June 27, 1866, and recorded September 7, 1866, Heath conveyed to the defendant the rest of lot 7 and the northern part of lot 6; and by deed dated February 27, 1867, and recorded March 11, 1867, he conveyed to the defendant the southern part of lot 6. Both these deeds contained the same provision as the deeds to Drew.

In all the deeds to Drew and the defendant, the granted premises were described by reference to the plan on record.

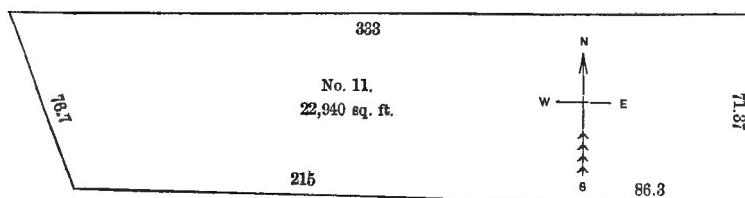

By deed dated March 27, 1865, Heath had conveyed lot 11 by a deed containing no restrictions whatever. He conveyed lots 3 and 4 by deeds dated respectively November 1, 1865, and January 1, 1867, and lots 1 and 2 by deed dated April 1, 1868, all these deeds containing the same provision as the deeds to Drew and the defendant, except that the buildings, instead of being required not to come within twenty feet of Gordon Street, were required not to come within fifteen feet of Green Street; and he conveyed lot 5 by a deed dated May 27, 1867, containing no provision as to the distance from Green Street within which a building might not be erected. In 1868 Heath died, leaving a will, by which he devised lots 9 and 10 to his widow, Susan B. Heath, who was his executrix, and who, with her family, has lived in the house on lot 10 for two years.

The defendant was proceeding to erect a large building on the southern part of lot 6, within four feet of Gordon Street. The plaintiff asked Susan B. Heath to prevent the erection of the building, but she refused, and verbally consented to its erection.

If it is competent evidence, it was agreed to be a fact that when the defendant took his deed of February 27, 1867, he had no knowledge that there was any restriction in any deed from Heath to any one else; and that Heath stated to him "that he would waive the restriction if he insisted upon it, that he did not consider it amounted to much, that the property would have to be used for shops in a short time, and that the defendant would not be troubled if he built a shop next to Gordon Street." The case was submitted on briefs.

R. Olney, for the plaintiff.

T. P. Proctor, W. W. Warren, and H. R. Brigham, for the defendant.

AMES, J. The case finds that Stephen Heath, being the owner of the entire tract of land, caused it to be laid out in eleven separate building lots.¹ A plan, showing the streets that were to be opened, and the different lots, with their respective dimensions, areas and numbers, was duly recorded in the registry of deeds; but this plan furnishes no intimation of an intention on the part of the grantor to impose any restriction whatever upon purchasers, in regard to the manner in which they were to occupy or build upon the lots which they should purchase. Of the five lots upon the northerly side of Gordon Street, lot 10 was built upon by the grantor himself, he having erected a dwelling-house thereon, which has been occupied by his family since his decease. Lot 8 and a portion of lot 7 were sold and conveyed by him to George G. Drew, and have since been conveyed to the plaintiff. The remainder of lot 7 and the whole of lot 6 were conveyed to the defendant. Thus, of the five lots lying on the northerly side of that street, three were conveyed by said Heath to two separate purchasers, subject to the conditions and restrictions recited in the plaintiff's bill. There is no suggestion that the other two lots were subjected to any restriction of the kind.

It is not claimed that, in regard to any of the lots, there was any written covenant by the grantor, and it does not appear that there was any express stipulation or direct assurance on his part, that any person who should purchase a lot on the north side of that street should have the benefit of a restriction binding all the other purchasers to leave an open space between their dwelling-houses and the street. The only ground upon which the plaintiff can rest her claim that the restriction in question was intended to operate for the benefit of all the purchasers, and to establish a general plan of building, by which each one would acquire a right in the nature of an easement in the land purchased by the others, is to be found in the fact, that in his transactions with two separate and independent purchasers, the grantor conveyed a portion of the land in each case, subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the bill of complaint. It is true that, of these conditions, the one prohibiting the prosecution of any offensive trade or manufacture upon the premises, or the using of them for the keeping of swine, or of a livery stable, would in practice be beneficial to the neighborhood generally. But it is to be remembered that the grantor had himself built a dwelling-house in that immediate neighborhood, and the provision which he made for the prevention of nuisances may have been intended for the benefit of that particular house.

It is undoubtedly true, and has often been decided, that where a tract of land is subdivided into lots, and those lots are conveyed to separate purchasers, subject to conditions that are of a nature to operate as inducements to the purchase, and to give to each purchaser the benefit of a general plan of building or occupation, so that each shall have attached to his own lot a right in the nature of an easement or incorporeal hereditament in the lots of the others, a right is thereby acquired by each grantee which he may enforce against any other grantee. Whitney v. Union Railway Co., 11 Gray, 359; Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 341; Linzee v. Mixer, 101 Mass. 512; Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phil. Ch. 774. But in the case at bar there is nothing from which the court can infer that the restriction contained in the deed from Heath to the defendant was intended for the benefit of the estate now owned by the plaintiff. No such purpose can be gathered from the plan, or from the situation of the property with reference to other land of the grantor. It purports to be a condition imposed by the grantor, and the deed points out the mode in which he, his heirs or devisees may enforce it. Neither of the deeds, under which these parties respectively claim, purports to give to the grantee any such right against any other grantee. For ought that appears, the condition may have been intended for the benefit of the grantor or his family, as long as they continue to own the dwelling-house. The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff, if she insists upon giving to that condition any wider application, and this burden we do not find that she has sustained.

The cases cited and relied upon by the plaintiff's counsel do not appear to us to meet this difficulty. In Tallmadge v. East River Bank, 26 N. Y. 105, a landowner in New York city had laid out a street sixty feet in width, and had sold the building lots on each side, making use in the sales of a plan which showed that an open space was to be reserved in front of each lot. The purchasers bought under this plan, and with the express assurance that it should be adhered to, and their right to enjoy the promised advantages was sustained by the court. In Hills v. Miller, 3 Paige, 254, the owner had sold a tract of land, giving at the same time a bond that a smaller triangular lot belonging to him, in front of the lot sold, should not be occupied with buildings. The court held that the deed and the bond constituted one contract, and created an easement which could be enforced against any purchaser of the triangular lot, with notice. In Barrow v. Richard, 8 Paige, 351, an estate had been subdivided into a large number of building lots, which the owner had conveyed by deeds to various purchasers, with express covenants against all trades, &c., offensive to "the neighboring inhabitants." The English cases also cited, Child v. Douglas, Kay, 560, Coles v. Sims, 5 De G. M. & G. 1, and Western v. Macdermott, L. R. 2 Ch. 72, are all of them cases in which a general building plan, or uniform system and mode of occupation, had been distinctly established and made a part of the title conveyed, in express terms, either by the deed itself, or by some covenant or obligation connected with it by reference. But we find nothing in the terms of the conveyance, or in any reference to a plan or covenant, or in the circumstances of the transaction, or the situation of the property, that will justify us in saying that any such general plan or system was intended by the grantor to be established for the benefit of grantees, or to make a part of their respective titles. The case in our judgment is closely analogous to Badger v. Boardman, 16 Gray, 559; Jewell v. Lee, 14 Allen, 145; Hubbell v. Warren, 8 Allen, 173, 178, and is disposed of according to the law decided in these cases, by an order that the Bill be dismissed, with costs.¹

PECK v. CONWAY.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1876.

[Reported 119 Mass. 546.]

BILL in equity, by the owner of lot A., shown on the plan printed in the margin of page 509, to restrain the defendants, the owners of lots B and C, from building on lot B.

¹ In Dana v. Wentworth, 111 Mass. 291 (1873), the owner of a parcel of land bounding on a street conveyed it by a deed with a condition that the grantee, or his heirs or assigns, should not build on the land within eight feet of the street. The grantee conveyed the land in several lots. It was held, that the grantor could not maintain a bill in equity, for the benefit of the owners of some of these lots to restrain the owner of another from violating the condition, in the absence of evidence that the condition was imposed as part of a general plan for the benefit of the land granted, and of other land on the street.

But in the following Massachusetts cases it was held sufficiently to appear that a restriction placed on land was for the benefit of adjoining land conveyed or to be conveyed. Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 341; Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 184; Tobey v. Moore, 130 Mass. 448. See also Barrow v. Richard, 8 Paige, 351. Cf. Jewell v. Lee, 14 Allen, 145.

The case was reserved by Colt, J., upon the pleadings and the report of a master, for the consideration of the full court, and was as follows:—

Richard Ensign, on February 14, 1848, being the owner of lots A and B, and occupying lot A as a homestead, conveyed lot B, in fee simple, with general covenants of warranty, to Joseph B. Huggins, who was then the owner of lot C. The deed described the land by metes and bounds, and following the description was this clause: “With this express reservation, that no building is to be erected by the said Joseph B., his heirs or assigns, upon the land herein conveyed.”

The defendants purchased lots B and C in 1874. Of the deeds in the chain of title from Huggins, which were all duly recorded before the defendants purchased, some mentioned or referred to the reservation in Ensign’s deed, but the deed to the defendants, which contained full covenants of warranty, made no mention of it or reference to former deeds. The defendants made no examination of the records before their purchase, and had no actual knowledge of the reservation.

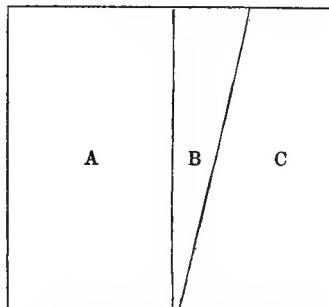

The plaintiff purchased lot A of Richard Ensign by deed dated April 13, and recorded April 14, 1848. This deed made no mention of privileges or appurtenances, or of the reservation in the deed to Huggins. The defendants purchased their land, paying therefor its full market value, free of incumbrances, for the purpose of building thereon. The plaintiff notified them of the restriction before they commenced building, and forbade them so to do, and, upon their proceeding to build upon the land, brought this bill.

The master found that the greater part of the proposed building would stand upon lot B; that it would not obstruct the view from the front rooms in the plaintiff’s house, and only partially obstruct the view from the rooms in the rear part of the house; and that its erection would be no appreciable damage or injury to the plaintiff’s premises.

A. J. Waterman, for the plaintiff.

J. Dewey, Jr., for the defendants.

MORTON, J. Both parties derive title from Richard Ensign. The deed of said Ensign, under which, through various mesne conveyances, the defendants derive their title, conveys to Joseph B. Huggins a triangular piece of land adjoining the lot now owned by the plaintiff, "with this express reservation, that no building is to be erected by the said Joseph B., his heirs or assigns, upon the land herein conveyed." Ensign, being owner of the fee, had the right to sell his land subject to such reservations or restrictions as to its future use and enjoyment as he saw fit to impose, provided they were not contrary to public policy. The restriction in this deed, that no building should be erected upon the land conveyed, was one which he had a right to make, and there is no room for doubt, that, if a building was erected in violation of this restriction, Ensign, as long as he lived and remained the owner of the adjoining land, would be entitled to relief in equity to enforce the restriction. Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 341; Whitney v. Union Railway, 11 Gray, 359; Badger v. Boardman, 16 Gray, 559.

The only question in the case is whether the plaintiff, who is the grantee of said Ensign, is entitled to the same remedy.

The reservation creates an easement, or servitude in the nature of an easement, upon the land conveyed. If this easement was created for the benefit of the adjoining lot, of which the grantor in the deed remained the owner, and not for the personal convenience of the grantor, and was intended to be annexed to such lot, it would be appurtenant thereto, and would pass to a grantee thereof.

The question whether such an easement is a personal right, or is to be construed to be appurtenant to some other estate, must be determined by the fair interpretation of the grant or reservation creating the easement, aided, if necessary, by the situation of the property and the surrounding circumstances.

In this case the triangular piece of land affected by the easement was a part of a large lot owned by Ensign. He retained the remainder of the large lot for his homestead. There is no suggestion that he had other land in the vicinity, which could be benefited by the restriction. It is difficult to see how he would have any interest in restricting the use of the land sold, except as owner of the house lot which he retained. The nature of the restriction also implies that it was intended for the benefit of this lot. A prohibition against building on the land sold would be obviously useful and beneficial to this lot, giving it the benefit of better light and air and prospect; this is its apparent purpose, while it would be of no appreciable advantage for any other purpose. The fair inference is that the parties intended to create this easement or servitude for the benefit of the adjoining estate. We are therefore of opinion that it was not a mere personal right in Ensign, but was an easement appurtenant to the estate which he conveyed to the plaintiff. Dennis v. Wilson, 107 Mass. 591; Stearns v. Mullen, 4 Gray, 151. It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief which she seeks.

The fact that the defendants, when they took their deed, had not actual knowledge of this reservation, is immaterial. They derive their title under the deed which contains it, and have constructive notice of the provisions of the deed. Whitney v. Union Railway, ubi supra.

Nor can the fact found by the master, that the erection of the building contemplated by the defendants "would be no appreciable damage or injury to the plaintiff's premises" affect the rights of the parties. Such an act of the defendants would be against the restriction by which they are bound, and a violation of the rights of the plaintiff, of which she cannot be deprived because in the judgment of others it is of little or no damage.

Decree for the plaintiff.¹

NORCROSS v. JAMES.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1885.

[Reported 140 Mass. 188.]

HOLMES, J. One Kibbe conveyed to one Flynt a valuable quarry in Longmeadow, of six acres, bounded by other land of the grantor, with covenants as follows: "And I do for myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with the said Flynt, his heirs and assigns, that I am lawfully seised in fee of the afore-granted premises, that they are free of all incumbrances, that I will not open or work, or allow any person or persons to open or work, any quarry or quarries on my farm or premises in said Longmeadow." By mesne conveyances the plaintiffs have become possessed of the quarry conveyed to Flynt, and the defendants of the surrounding land referred to in the covenant. The defendants are quarrying stone in their land, like that quarried by the plaintiffs; and the plaintiffs bring this bill in equity for an injunction.

The discussion of the question under what circumstances a landowner is entitled to rights created by way of covenant with a former owner of the land, has been much confused since the time of Lord Coke, by neglecting a distinction, which he stated with perfect clearness, between those rights which run only with the estate in the land, and those which are said to be attached to the land itself: "So note a diversity between a use or warranty, and the like things annexed to the estate of the land in privity, and commons, advowsons, and other hereditaments annexed to the possession of the land." Chudleigh's Case, 1 Rep. 120 a, 122 b; s. c. nom. Dillon v. Fraine, Poph. 70, 71.

Rights of the class represented by the ancient warranty, and now by the usual covenants for title, are pure matters of contract, and from a very early date down to comparatively modern times lawyers have been perplexed with the question how an assignee could sue upon a contract to which he was not a party. West, Symboleog. I. sect. 35. Wingate's Maxims, 44, pl. 20, 55, pl. 10. Co. Lit. 117 a. Finch's Case,

4 Inst. 85. But an heir could sue upon a warranty to his ancestor, because for that purpose he was eadem persona cum antecessore. See Y. B. 20 & 21 Ed. I. 232 (Rolls ed.); Overton v. Sydall, Poph. 120, 121; Oates v. Frith, Hob. 130; Bain v. Cooper, 1 Dowl. Pr. Cas. N. S. 11, 14. And this conception was gradually extended, in a qualified way, to assigns, where they were mentioned in the deed. Bract. fol. 17 b, 67 a, 380 b, 381. Fleta, III. c. 14, § 6. 1 Britton, (Nich. ed.) 255, 256. Y. B. 20 Ed. I. 232-234 (Rolls ed.). Fitz. Abr. Covenant, pl. 28. Vin. Abr. Voucher, N, p. 59. Y. B. 14 Hen. IV. 56; 20 Hen. Goodale*, Cro. Car. 503; s. c. Ib. 505; W. Jones, 406; Philpot v. Hoare, 2 Atk. 219.

But in order that an assignee should be so far identified in law with the original covenantee, he must have the same estate, that is, the same status or inheritance, and thus the same persona, quoad the contract. The privity of estate which is thus required is privity of estate with the original covenantee, not with the original covenantor; and this is the only privity of which there is anything said in the ancient books. See, further, Y. B. 21 & 22 Ed. I. 148 (Rolls ed.); 14 Hen. VIII. 4, pl. 5. Of course we are not now speaking of cases of landlord and tenant, and it will be seen that the doctrine has no necessary connection with tenure. F. N. B. 134, E. We may add, that the burden of an ordinary warranty in fee did not fall upon assigns, although it might upon an heir, as representing the person of his ancestor. Y. B. 32 & 33 Ed. I. 516 (Rolls ed.).

On the other hand, if the rights in question were of the class to which commons belonged, and of which easements are the most conspicuous type, these rights, whether created by prescription, grant, or covenant, when once acquired were attached to the land, and went with it, irrespective of privity, into all hands, even those of a disseisor. "So a disseisor, abator, intruder, or the lord by escheat, &c., shall have them as things annexed to the land." Chudleigh's Case, ubi supra. See 1 Britton, (Nich. ed.) 361; Keilw. 145, 146, pl. 15; F. N. B. 180, N; Nevil's Case, Plowd. 377, 381. In like manner, when, as was usual, although not invariable, the duty was regarded as falling upon land, the burden of the covenant, or grant, went with the servient land into all hands, and of course there was no need to mention assigns. See cases supra et infra. The phrase consecrated to cases where privity was not necessary was transit terra cum onere. Bract. fol. 382 a, b. Fleta, VI. c. 23, § 17. See Y. B. 20 Ed. I. 360 (Rolls ed.); Keilw. 113, pl. 45. And it was said that "a covenant which runs and rests with the land lies for or against the assignee at the common law, quia transit terra cum onere, although the assignee be not named in the covenant." Hyde v. Dean of Windsor, Cro. Eliz. 552; s. c. Ib. 457; 5 Rep. 24 a; Moore, 399.

It is not necessary to consider whether possession of the land alone would have been sufficient to maintain the action of covenant: it is enough for our present purposes that it carried the right of property. Neither is it necessary to consider the difficulties that have sometimes arisen in distinguishing rights of this latter class from pure matters of contract, by reason of their having embraced active duties as well as those purely passive and negative ones which are plainly interests carved out of a servient estate and matters of grant. The most conspicuous example is Pakenham's Case, Y. B. 42 Ed. III. 3, pl. 14, where the plaintiff recovered in covenant as terre-tenant, although not heir, upon a covenant or prescriptive duty, to sing in the chapel of his manor. Spencer's Case, 5 Rep. 16 a, 17 b. Another, which has been recognized in this Commonwealth, is the quasi easement to have fences maintained. Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175, 185; s. c. 118 Mass. 156. Repairs were dealt with on the same footing: they were likened to estovers and other rights of common. 5 Rep. 24 a, b. Hyde v. Dean of Windsor, ubi supra. See F. N. B. 127; Spencer's Case, ubi supra; Evere v. Strickland, Cro. Jac. 240; Brett v. Cumberland, 1 Roll. R. 359, 360; and other examples might be given. See Bract. 382 a, b; Fleta, VI. c. 23, § 17; Y. B. 20 Ed. I. 360; Keilw. 2 a, pl. 2; Y. B. 6 Hen. VII. 14 b, pl. 2; Co. Lit. 384 b, 385 a; Cockson v. Cock, Cro. Jac. 125; Bush v. Cole, 12 Mod. 24; s. c. 1 Salk. 196; 1 Show. 388; Carth. 232; Sale v. Kitchingham, 10 Mod. 158. The cases are generally landlord and tenant cases, but that fact has nothing to do with the principles laid down.

When it is said that in this class of cases there must be a privity of estate between the covenantor and the covenantee, it only means that the covenant must impose such a burden on the land of the covenantor as to be in substance, or to carry with it, a grant of an easement or quasi easement, or must be in aid of such a grant (Bronson v. Coffin, ubi supra); which is generally true, although, as has been shown, not invariably (Pakenham's Case, ubi supra); and although not quite reconcilable with all the old cases except by somewhat hypothetical historical explanation. But the expression "privity of estate" in this sense is of modern use, and has been carried over from the cases of warranty, where it was used with a wholly different meaning.

In the main, the line between the two classes of cases distinguished by Lord Coke is sufficiently clear; and it is enough to say, that the present covenant falls into the second class if either. Notwithstanding its place among the covenants for title, it purports to create a pure negative restriction on the use of land, and, for the moment, we will take it as intended to do so for the benefit of the land conveyed.

The restriction is, in form, within the equitable doctrine of notice. Whitney v. Union Railway, 11 Gray, 359; Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 341; Beals v. Case, 138 Mass. 138. See Austerberry v. Oldham, 29 Ch. D. 750; London & South Western Railway v. Gomm, 20 Ch. D. 562; Haywood v. Brunswick Building Society, 8 Q. B. D. 403; Tulk v. Moxhay, 2 Phillips, 774. But, as the deed was recorded, it does not matter whether the plaintiff's case is discussed on this footing, or on that of easement, if there is any difference so far as the present point is concerned.

The question remains, whether, even if we make the further assumption that the covenant was valid as a contract between the parties, it is of a kind which the law permits to be attached to land in such a sense as to restrict the use of one parcel in all hands for the benefit of whoever may hold the other, whatever the principle invoked. For equity will no more enforce every restriction that can be devised, than the common law will recognize as creating an easement every grant purporting to limit the use of land in favor of other land. The principle of policy applied to affirmative covenants applies also to negative ones. They must "touch or concern," or "extend to the support of the thing" conveyed. 5 Rep. 16 a, 24 b. They must be "for the benefit of the estate." Cockson v. Cock, ubi supra. Or, as it is said more broadly, new and unusual incidents cannot be attached to land, by way either of benefit or of burden. Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517, 535; Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164; Hill v. Tupper, 2 H. & C. 121.

The covenant under consideration, as it stands on the report, falls outside the limits of this rule, even in the narrower form. In what way does it extend to the support of the plaintiff's quarry? It does not make the use or occupation of it more convenient. It does not in any way affect the use or occupation; it simply tends indirectly to increase its value, by excluding a competitor from the market for its products. If it be asked what is the difference in principle between an easement to have land unbuilt upon, such as was recognized in Brooks v. Reynolds, 106 Mass. 31, and an easement to have a quarry left unopened, the answer is, that, whether a difference of degree or of kind, the distinction is plain between a grant or covenant that looks to direct physical advantage in the occupation of the dominant estate, such as light and air, and one which only concerns it in the indirect way which we have mentioned. The scope of the covenant and the circumstances show that it is not directed to the quiet enjoyment of the dominant land.

Again, this covenant illustrates the further meaning of the rule against unusual incidents. If it is of a nature to be attached to land, as the plaintiff contends, it creates an easement of monopoly,—an easement not to be competed with,—and in that interest alone a right to prohibit an owner from exercising the usual incidents of property. It is true that a man could accomplish the same results by buying the whole land, and regulating production. But it does not follow, because you can do a thing in one way, that you can do it in all; and we think that, if this covenant were regarded as one which bound all subsequent owners of the land to keep its products out of commerce, there would be much greater difficulty in sustaining its validity than if it should be treated as merely personal in its burden. Whether the latter is its true construction, as well as its only legal operation, and whether, so construed, it is or is not valid, are matters on which we express no opinion. See further Brewer v. Marshall, 4 C. E. Green, 537; Taylor v. Owen, 2 Blackf. 301; Thomas v. Hayward, L. R. 4 Ex. 311.

PUBLIC RIGHTS.

BAGOTT v. ORR.

COMMON PLEAS. 1801.

[Reported 2 B. & P. 472.]

TRESPASS. The 1st count was for breaking and entering the plaintiff's closes, called the Foot-Muscle-Skear, the Great-Out-Muscle-Skear, and the Sea-Shore, in the parish of Keysham, and plaintiff's shell-fish and shells there finding, catching, taking, and carrying away and converting and disposing thereof to defendant's own use. The 2d count was for breaking and entering the same closes, and with defendant's feet and the feet of his servants in walking, treading up, trampling upon, subverting and spoiling plaintiff's soil, earth and sand, and with the feet of cattle and with the wheels of carriages and the keels of boats treading up, trampling, &c., and plaintiff's shell-fish and shells, breaking, crushing and destroying, and with spades, shovels, mattocks, pick-axes and other instruments, digging and making holes and pits, and turning up, &c. plaintiff's earth, soil, and sand, and digging up, raising up, and getting up divers large quantities of plaintiff's shell-fish and shells, and carrying away the same and converting and disposing thereof to defendant's own use. There were several other counts for breaking and entering plaintiff's several fishery and his free fishery, on which issues in fact were joined.

The defendant pleaded, 1st, the general issue. 2dly, As to the trespasses mentioned in the two first counts that the closes therein severally mentioned were the same, "and that the said closes in which, &c. at the said several times when, &c. were and still are and from time immemorial have been part and parcel of a certain arm of the sea, in which every subject of this realm at the said several times when, &c. of right had, and of right ought to have had and now hath, and of right ought to have the liberty and privilege of fishing and catching, digging for, raising, getting, taking and carrying away shell-fish and shells there, therefore defendant being a subject of this realm at the said several times when, &c. entered into the said closes in which, &c. so being part and parcel of the said arm of the sea to fish therein and to catch, dig for, raise, get, take, and carry away the shell-fish and shells there, and did then and there fish, and caught, took, and carried away the said shell-fish and shells in the first count mentioned, and also dug up, raised up, and got up, took and carried away the said other shell-fish and shells in the second count lastly mentioned, as it was lawful for him to do, and for the digging up and carrying away of the said shell-fish, he entered the said closes in which, &c. by himself and with other persons, and with the said cattle, carts, wagons, and other carriages, and the said boats, lighters, and other vessels, the same being reasonable, proper, and necessary in that behalf, and in so doing he necessarily and unavoidably with his feet and the feet of those other persons in walking a little trod up, trampled upon, subverted and spoiled the soil, earth, and sand in the second count mentioned, and with the feet of the said cattle, and with the wheels of the said carts, wagons, and other carriages, and with the keels of the said boats, lighters, and other vessels a little trod up, trampled upon, tore up, and subverted and spoiled other the soil of plaintiff's last-mentioned closes, and the said shell-fish and shells in the second count first mentioned necessarily and unavoidably a little broke, crushed, and destroyed, and with the said spades, shovels, mattocks, pickaxes, and other instruments, the same being useful, proper, and necessary in that behalf, and in digging up, raising, and getting the said shell-fish and shells in the second count lastly mentioned, necessarily and unavoidably dug and made the said holes and pits in plaintiff's said closes, and necessarily and unavoidably with the spades, shovels, mattocks, pickaxes, and other instruments dug up, turned up, subverted, and spoiled a little of the earth, soil, and sand in the said closes, doing as little damage on that occasion as he could, which are the same, &c. whereof, &c. And this, &c. wherefore, &c."

Upon this the plaintiff new assigned, alleging that defendant on the days in the first count mentioned broke and entered plaintiff's closes in the first count mentioned, "being certain closes lying within the flux and reflux of the tides of the sea in plaintiff's manor of Keysham, and the said shell-fish and shells there then found, caught, took, and carried away and converted and disposed thereof to his own use, when the same closes in which, &c. were left dry and were not covered with water." And also that defendant on the days and in the manner in the second count mentioned broke and entered plaintiff's closes, "being certain closes lying within the flux and reflux of the tides of the sea within plaintiff's said manor of Keysham, and with his feet, &c. trod up, &c. the said earth, soil, and sand, in the second count mentioned, and with the feet of the said cattle in that count mentioned, and with the wheels of the said carts, &c. and with the keels of the said boats, &c. trod up the said other soil in plaintiff's last-mentioned closes in the said second count mentioned, and plaintiff's said other shell-fish and shells in the second count mentioned, broke, crushed, &c. and with spades, &c. dug and made holes, &c. and raised up and got up the said shell-fish and shells, &c. and took and carried away the same, and converted and disposed thereof, &c. when the last-mentioned closes in which, &c. were left dry and were not covered with water, as plaintiff hath in the first and second counts of the said declaration complained against him, which several trespasses so above new assigned are other and different trespasses, &c. Wherefore, &c."

To the new assignment the defendant pleaded, 1st, the general issue ; 2dly, " that the said closes first above newly assigned, and the several closes secondly above newly assigned are, and at the said several times, &c. were the same closes and not other or different closes, and are and at those times when, &c. were certain rocks and sands of the sea, lying within the flux and reflux of the tides of the sea ; and that the said shell-fish and shells in the said closes in which, &c. were certain shell-fish and fish-shells, which at the said several times when, &c. were in and upon the said rocks and sands of the sea, and which but a little before the said times when, &c. were by the ebbing of the tides of the sea left there in and upon the said closes in which, &c. ; and that in the said closes in the said declaration mentioned, every subject of this realm at the said several times when, &c. of right had and of right ought to have had, and now hath and of right ought to have the liberty and privilege of getting, taking, and carrying away the shell-fish and fish-shells left by the said ebbing of the tides of the sea in and upon the said closes, in which, &c. wherefore the defendant being a subject of this realm at the said several times when, &c. entered into the said closes in which, &c. to get, take, and carry away the shell-fish and fish-shells left by the ebbing of the tides of the sea in and upon the said closes in which, &c. and then and there got, took, and carried away the said shell-fish and shells in the said first count mentioned, and also got, and for that purpose with spades, shovels, mattocks, pickaxes, and other instruments necessarily dug up and raised up, and took and carried away the other shell-fish and shells in the second count lastly mentioned ; and for the getting, taking, and carrying away of the said shell-fish and shells, the defendant at the said times when, &c. entered the said closes in which, &c. as it was lawful for him to do by himself and with other persons, and with the said cattle, carts, wagons, and other carriages, and the said boats, lighters, and other vessels, the same being reasonable and proper and necessary in that behalf, and in so doing he necessarily and unavoidably with his feet and the feet of those other persons in walking a little trod up, trampled, subverted, and spoiled the soil, earth, and sand in the said second count mentioned, and with the feet of the cattle and with the wheels of the said carts, wagons, and other carriages, and with the keels of the said boats, lighters, and other vessels, a little trod up, trampled upon, tore up, subverted, and spoiled other the said soil of the said last-mentioned closes of the plaintiff, and the shell-fish and shells in the second count first mentioned, necessarily and unavoidably a little broke, crushed and destroyed, and with the said spades, shovels, mattocks, pickaxes, and other instruments, the same being useful, proper, and necessary in that behalf, in digging up, raising, and getting the said shell-fish and shells in the said second count lastly mentioned, necessarily and unavoidably dug and made the said holes and pits in plaintiff's said closes, and necessarily and unavoidably with the said spades, shovels, mattocks, pickaxes, and other instruments dug up, turned up, subverted, and spoiled a little of the said earth, soil, and sand in the said closes, as it was lawful for him to do for the causes aforesaid, doing as little damage on that occasion as he could, which are the same, &c. whereof, &c. And this, &c. wherefore, &c."

To this plea there was a replication, traversing the right of every subject to take shell-fish and shells, and a special demurrer thereto, because it traversed matter of law; but the court seeming to think that the replication was clearly bad, it was abandoned by the plaintiff's counsel, who relied upon objections to the plea.

Marshall, Serjt., in support of the plea.

Best, Serjt., contra.

The COURT were of opinion that if the plaintiff had it in his power to abridge the common law right of the subject to take sea-fish, he should have replied that matter specially, and that not having done so, the defendant must succeed upon his plea as far as related to the taking of the fish; but observed that as no authority had been cited to support his claim to take shells, they should pause before they established a general right of that kind. They therefore offered to allow the defendant to amend his plea, without costs, by striking out his claim to the fish-shells, and shaping his justification in such way as he should be advised. Which offer was accordingly accepted.¹

BLUNDELL v. CATTERALL.

[Reported 5 B. & Ald. 268.]

TRESPASS, for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, (describing it, first, as a close called the Sea-Shore, within the manor of Great Crosby; secondly, as a close between the high-water mark and the low-water mark of the River Mersey, in Great Crosby, in the county of Lancaster;) and with feet in walking, and with the feet of horses, and with the wheels of bathing-machines, carts, and other carriages, passing over, tearing up, damaging the sand, gravel, and soil of the said close.

¹ It was held, in Mather v. Chapman, 40 Conn. 382 (1873), that sea-weed cast upon the shore below high-water mark belongs to the public, and may be appropriated by the first occupant. Sed quære.

The defendant pleaded, as to the trespasses committed on the close called the Sea-Shore, and on that between the high and low water mark, a public right of way on foot, and with cattle, carts, and carriages; and secondly, as to the same trespasses, that all the liege subjects of our lord the king had been used and accustomed to have and enjoy, and of right ought to have had and enjoyed, and still of right ought to have and enjoy the right and liberty of bathing in the sea from time to time, being over and upon the whole or any part of, or adjoining to, the said close, in which, &c., at all seasonable and convenient times, for their health and recreation, and for that purpose, of going and returning, passing, and repassing into, through, over, and along the said close, in which, &c. on foot, and with their servants, and with carriages and bathing-machines, and horses drawing the same to the sea and back again; and of staying in and upon the close a necessary and convenient time for the purposes of bathing as aforesaid: And thirdly, as to part of those trespasses, a right of bathing and of passing on foot only. The plaintiff took issue on these pleas; and also newly assigned that the defendant committed the trespasses on other occasions, and for other purposes than those in the pleas mentioned, and out of the highway in the first set of pleas mentioned. Issue thereon. At the trial, at the last Lancaster Assizes, before Bayley, J., a verdict was found for the defendant on the first set of pleas; and for the plaintiff on the new assignment, and on all the other pleas, subject to the opinion of the court on a special case. The plaintiff was the lord of the manor of Great Crosby, which is bounded on the west by the River Mersey, an arm of the sea. As lord of the manor, he was the owner of the shore, and had the exclusive right of fishing thereon with stake nets. The defendant was the servant at an hotel, erected in 1815, upon land in Great Crosby, fronting the shore, and bounded by the high-water mark of the River Mersey, the proprietors of which kept bathing-machines for the use of persons resorting thither, who were driven by the defendant, in machines, across the shore into the sea, for the purpose of bathing, and the defendant received a sum of money from the individuals so bathing, for the use of the machines, and for his service and assistance. No bathing-machines were ever used upon the shore in Great Crosby before the establishment of this hotel, but it had been the custom for the public to cross it on foot, for the purpose of bathing. There was a common highway for carriages along the shore, and it was proved, that various articles for market were occasionally carted across the shore, although the more common mode of conveyance for such things was by a canal, made about forty years ago. The defendant contended for a common law right for all the king's subjects to bathe on the sea-shore, and to pass over it for that purpose, on foot, and with horses and carriages. The case was argued in last Easter Term.

Gregson, for the plaintiff.

Joy, contra.

And now, there being a difference of opinion, the court delivered their judgments seriatim.

BEST, J. The question in this case is, whether there be a common law right to pass over the shore for the purpose of bathing in the sea. It will not be disputed that the sea, which has been called the "great highway of the world," is common to all. Bathing in the sea, if done with decency, is not only lawful, but proper, and often necessary for many of the inhabitants of this country. There must be the same right to cross the shore in order to bathe as for any other lawful purpose. We are, therefore, now to decide, whether the public are precluded from passing, except at particular places, over the beach to the sea without the consent of some lord of a manor. That this will be the consequence of our deciding in favor of the plaintiff, has been already admitted at the bar, and must be conceded by every one. I am fearful of the consequences of such a decision; and, much as I dislike differing from the rest of the court, I have thought it my duty to declare that I cannot assent to it. We have been told that lords of manors will find it their interest to indulge the public with the privilege of going on or over the sands of the sea, and that judges and juries will check the vexatious exercise of the right to exclude them. But the free access to the sea is a privilege too important to Englishmen to be left dependent on the interest or caprice of any description of persons.

It is agreed by all, that the sea-shore was at first appropriated to the king, from whom the right to it must be derived. The present state of the shore shows the manner in which the Crown must have used it. Some parts of it were held exclusively by the Crown for the purposes of fisheries, harbors, warehouses, &c. But the greatest part was left open as a common highway between the sea and the land. This is the state in which it continues to this day, and in which, from its general sterility, it must ever continue. From the state of the greatest part has arisen the general rule, or common law right, and the state of the portions exclusively occupied has occasioned the exceptions. The claim of the public to a right of way over the beach stands on the general law, and a person who will dispute this public right in any particular part of it, must establish his right to do so by showing, first, that the king had an exclusive possession of such part, and that a right to such exclusive possession has been conveyed from the Crown to such person. This has been the course in which persons have proceeded who have attempted to show any exclusive right, either in arms of the sea or in the shore. In Lord Fitzwalter's Case, 1 Mod. 105, Lord Hale says: "An arm of the sea is prima facie common to all, and if any will appropriate a privilege to himself, the proof lieth on his side; for in case of an action of trespass brought for fishing there, it is prima facie a good justification to say, that the locus in quo is brachium maris, in quo unusquisque subjectus dom. regis habet et habere debet liberam piscariam." So, in Bagott v. Orr, 2 Bos. & Pull. 479, the Court of Common Pleas held, "that if the plaintiff had it in his power to abridge the common law right of the subject to take sea-fish upon the shore within his manor, he should have replied that matter specially." The same doctrine is laid down in Carter v. Murcot, 4 Burr. 2162. It may be observed, that in the case now under consideration it is expressly found, that the soil of the locus in quo is in the plaintiff; but I say the soil must be in the plaintiff, as it was in the king; for the grantee cannot have a greater interest than the grantor had. The king had the right of soil in the shore in general; but the public had a right of way over it, and the king's grantee can only have it, subject to the same right. In the treatise of De Jure Maris, p. 22, Lord Hale says: "The jus privatum that is acquired to the subject, either by patent or prescription, must not prejudice the jus publicum wherewith public rivers and arms of the sea are affected for public use." If the owners of the soil must claim by prescription, can they establish an exclusive right? Did they ever possess an exclusive right? For, as Lord Hale says, the civilians tell us truly: Nihil præscribitur nisi quod possidetur (De Jure Maris, p. 32). As the king might have granted a right in particular parts of the shore, so, either he or his grantee of the soil of any part of the shore, may take the products of the shore, provided their removal does not impede the public right of way. The owner of the soil of the shore may also erect such buildings or other things as are necessary for the carrying on of commerce and navigation on any parts of the shore that may be conveniently used for such erections, taking care to impede, as little as possible, the public right of way. This is not more inconsistent with a public right of way over it, than the right of digging a mine under a road, or the erecting of a wharf on a river, are inconsistent with the right of way along such road or river. The former does not interfere with the use of the road; and although the latter, in order to be useful, must be carried out beyond the high-water mark, and, whilst the tide is up, must somewhat narrow the passage of the river; yet, such wharfs are necessary for the loading and unloading of vessels, and the right of passage must be accommodated to the right of loading and unloading the craft that pass. The law in these, as in all other cases, limits and balances opposing rights, that they may be so enjoyed as that the exercise of one is not injurious to the other. The civil law, copying, in this respect, from the law of nations, allowed any one to build on the sea-shore (there being, under that law, no lords of manors to claim the soil), but imposed on the builders the condition that the law of England imposes on the owners of the soil, that is, that their buildings should not interrupt the right of way. Digest, l. 43, tit. 8. In littore jure gentium ædificare licet nisi usus publicus impedit.

The universal practice of England shows the right of way over the sea-shore to be a common law right. All sorts of persons who resort to the sea, either for business or pleasure, have always been accustomed to pass over the unoccupied parts of the shore with such carriages as were suitable to their respective purposes, and no lord of a manor has ever attempted to interrupt such persons. Goods could not be landed or loaded except at particular places ; but this restraint was imposed by laws made for the protection of the revenue, and the security of the realm, and is not the consequence of any rights in the owners of the soil of the shore. Men have landed from boats, drawn their boats on the sands during their stay on shore, and embarked again in their boats. Persons have at all times, at their pleasure, walked or ridden on the sands. Men have, from the earliest times, bathed in the sea ; and, unless in places or at seasons when they could not, consistently with decency, be permitted to be naked, no one ever attempted to prevent them. So far from the law allowing lords of manors to restrain persons from bathing, it will give them every facility for this recreation. Bathing promotes health. By bathing, those who live near the sea are taught their first duty, namely, to assist mariners in distress. They acquire, by bathing, confidence amidst the waves, and learn how to seize the proper moment for giving their assistance. It is found as a fact, in this case, that it has been the custom for the public to cross the spot in question on foot for the purpose of bathing. Bathing-machines were used before my time, and I believe before that of the oldest person now alive, and I think the use of them is essential to the practice of bathing. Decency must prevent all females, and infirmity many men, from bathing, except from a machine. Attempts have been made to make those who use machines pay some acknowledgment to the lord of the manor where they were used ; but I cannot find that any of those attempts have yet succeeded. I shall presently show from authority, that the right to fish is only a part of the general right of the subjects of England. Persons have also crossed the beach for the purpose of fishing in the sea, and have brought back their fish over the beach, both on horses and in carriages. These acts of the fishermen are instances in support of the common law right of way.

The practice of a particular place is called a custom. A general immemorial practice through the realm is the common law. Many of our most valuable common law rights have no other support than universal practice. In Ball v. Herbert, 3 T. R. 261, Lord Kenyon says : " Common law rights are either to be found in the opinions of lawyers, delivered as axioms, or to be collected from the universal and immemorial usage throughout the country." The instances put by me sufficiently demonstrate the existence of a universal custom in favor of a public right of way over the sea-shore.

It has been at all times the policy of this country to encourage navigation. The free passage of the sea-shore is essential to the convenience and safety of navigation. Cases of immediate necessity or imminent danger may be said to form exceptions to general rules ; but there are many cases in which there is neither immediate necessity nor imminent danger, in which boats must pass between ships at sea and the shore, letters and provisions must be sent, passengers require to land or to embark, intelligence necessary to the further prosecution of a voyage is desired, or a pilot is wanted. For many leagues of coast, there is no public passage marked out, by which persons may go to or from the sea. But fixed places will not do. Winds or currents make it necessary, that the greatest part of the shore should be left open for persons to land on, and embark from. There is no Statute, or rule of common law, that secures the right of passage over the shore for purposes connected with navigation; those who have passed over the shore for those purposes, have been trespassers, if they were not justified under the general common law right of free passage. Is it to be supposed, that, in a country, the prosperity and independence of which depend on navigation, that which is so necessary to navigation as a road for all lawful purposes to the sea, should not have been secured to the public, particularly when it might be done without injury to the interest of any individual?

There is no clear and express declaration on this point, either in the Statutes or in the common law. But this right is so important to the best interests of the country, that had not the constant exercise of it been considered sufficient to establish it, the legislature would no doubt have declared it to be in the people of England. Bracton, lib. 1, cap. 12, § 6, says: “Publica vero sunt omnia flumina et portus. Ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est in portu et in fluminibus. Riparum etiam usus publicus est de jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. Itaque naves ad eas applicare, funes arboribus ibi natis religare, onus aliquod in iis reponere, cuvis liberum est, sicut per ipsum fluvium navigare: sed proprietas earum illorum est quorum prediis adherent, et eadem de causa arbores in eisdem natæ eorundem sunt: et hæc intelligenda sunt de fluminibus perennibus, quia temporalia possunt, esse privata.” This passage proves all that I am attempting to establish. It shows that all persons have a common right on rivers; that the right of fishing exists only as a part of that common right; and that the banks of rivers are as much open to the use of the public as the rivers themselves. The passage has been supposed to prove too much, and therefore it has been said, that its authority cannot be relied on. Mr. Justice Buller, speaking of it, in Ball v. Herbert, 3 T. R. 263, says, “that it plainly appears to have been taken from Justinian, and is only part of the civil law; and whether or not it has been adopted by the common law, is to be seen by looking into our books; and there it is not to be found.” I admit that Bracton agrees with the civil law, and I must add, with the law of all civilized nations. Selden, who wrote his Mare clausum to prove that an exclusive right might be acquired in parts of the sea, admits that the sea was originally common to all, and in lib. 1, cap. 2, he has collected from the works of the learned of all nations, as well philosophers, divines, and poets, as lawyers, that the sea and its shores were common to all men, as much so as the air that blows over them. This I think proves, that the doctrine is reasonable and ought to be adopted into our law, unless there be something in our particular situation to exclude it; and so far from this being the case, there never was a country, the local situation of which, and the habits and interests of the inhabitants of which, so much required such a law.

But our books show, that this passage has been adopted into our law. Mr. Justice Buller tells us, that Callis quotes it as English law, and I have often heard Lord Kenyon speak with great respect of that writer. Bracton has not stated this as civil law, he has made it part of his book, De legibus et consuetudinibus Angliae. He was Chief Justice of England in the reign of Henry the Third; and Lord Hale (Hist. of the Common Law, ch. 7) says, that in his time the common law was much improved, and the pleadings were more perfect and orderly than in any preceding period of our history. Surely such a man is no mean authority for what the common law was at the time he wrote. In Fortescue, p. 408, Lord Chief Justice Parker says: "As to the authority of Bracton, to be sure many things are now altered, but there is no color to say, that it was not law at that time, for there are many things that have never been altered, and are law now." As law is a just rule fitted to the existing state of things, it must alter as the state of things to which it relates alters. I do not say, that the whole of the passage in Bracton is now good law: it was all good law at the time he wrote, and all of it that is adapted to the present state of things is good law now. It is objected, that Bracton says, "that any one may, in any river, fasten vessels with ropes to the trees on the banks, and unload the cargoes on the banks." Undoubtedly the public cannot now pretend to claim this right in all navigable rivers. Many rivers have been rendered navigable since Bracton wrote, which in his time were private streams. The public have no greater right on the banks of such rivers, than the owners of the adjoining lands granted them when such rivers were made, from private streams, public rivers, and the extent of the grant must be ascertained from usage. This is the case with a new-made road. If one dedicates to the public a right of way over his lands, the public must take the road with gates on such parts of it as the owner thinks proper to erect at the time he makes the dedication. But Bracton speaks not of newly made rivers, but of such as were always navigable, and the banks of which had been as open to the public as their waters. This I take to be the law with all inland navigations in the reign of Henry the Third. These, like the sea and its shores, were then the property of the public, and the right of the public in them was not acquired by any compromise with the interest of any individual. On some rivers that have been navigable from time immemorial, the public using but one of the banks for a towing path, the other has been usefully occupied by the owner of the adjoining land, and so an exclusive right has been established to the part so occupied. But the barrenness of the greatest part of the sea-shore has prevented it from becoming the subject of exclusive property. It is useful only as a boundary and an approach to the sea; and therefore, ever has been, and ever should continue common to all who have occasion to resort to the sea. Thus, the case of Ball v. Herbert is distinguished from the present, and it must be recollect, that, in that case, Lord Kenyon said, "Some of the passages in Lord Hale which seem to favor the common law right, are rather applicable to banks of the sea, and to ports; and it is part of the king's prerogative to create ports, which was lately exercised at Liverpool." In Broke's Abridgment, tit. Customs, pl. 46, all the judges agreed, "that fishermen may justify going on the land adjoining the sea, to fish in the sea; for this is for the good of the commonwealth, affording sustenance to many persons, and is the common law." If the right of fishing is only a part of that more general right for which I am contending, as appears from the passage in Bracton, and will appear from Lord Hale, then this is a decision in support of the general right.

The reason on which my judgment is grounded is public advantage. The right of bathing in the sea, which is essential to the health of so many persons, is as beneficial to the public as that of fishing, and must have been as well secured to the subjects of this country by the common law. That the right of using the shore for the purpose of fishing does not depend on any particular law applicable to fishing only, but is part of the more general right of the subjects to the sea and its shores, is proved by Lord Hale, putting the practice of fishing as evidence of the general right. In part 1, cap. 8, De Jure Maris, p. 11, he says: "The king's right of propriety, or ownership, in the sea, and soil thereof, is evidenced principally in these things that follow: first, the right of fishing in the sea, and the creeks and arms thereof, is originally lodged in the Crown." This makes the judgment in Broke bear directly on the point in dispute. Lord Hale, in his treatise De Portibus Maris, cap. 6, p. 73, says: "Before any port is legally settled, although the propriety of the soil of a creek or harbor may belong to a subject or private person, yet the king hath his jus regium in that creek or harbor; and there is also a common liberty for any to come thither with boats and vessels, as against all but the king. And, upon this account, though A. may have the propriety of a creek or harbor, or navigable river, yet the king may grant there the liberty of a port to B.; and so the interest of propriety and the interest of franchise several and divided. And in this no injury is at all done to A.; for he hath what he had before, viz. the interest of the soil, and consequently the improvement of the shore, and the liberty of fishing; and as the creek was free for any to pass in it, against all but the king (for it was publici juris, as to that matter, before), so now the king takes off that restraint, and by his license and charter makes it free for all to come and unload." Here, we have the distinct authority of Lord Hale, that although a man has the soil under an arm of the sea, and the soil of the shore, yet the public have not only a right to navigate on the waters, but to unload on the shore; and that this right can only be restrained by the king's prerogative. If they have a right to unload, they must have the right to come over the shore; for the right to unload would otherwise be useless. The right on the shore is declared by this passage to be as common to the public as the right on the water: that the water is open to the public for all lawful purposes is not denied. What law, then, has narrowed the right of the public on the shore? Lord Hale then adds: "But if A. hath the ripa, or bank, of the port, the king may not grant a liberty to unlade on that bank or ripa without his consent, unless custom hath made the liberty thereof free to all, as in many places it is; for that would be a prejudice to the private interest of A., which may not be taken from him without such consent. And, therefore, in the creation of a new port, either by proclamation or charter, it hath been the course to secure the interest in the shore beforehand, for the building of wharfs and keys, for the application of the merchandise, and for the building of houses of receipt." Lord Hale makes the distinction between the shore of the sea and the banks of a river, which Lord Kenyon points at in Ball v. Herbert; the former is free for all to come and unload, but the king cannot grant a liberty to unload in the latter, without the consent of the owner. I again repeat, that the shore is not free to unload from any particular law giving this freedom, but from the general right of passage over it, which the usage of the whole coast shows to have been reserved for the benefit of the public out of the grant of the soil by the Crown. This is further proved to be the meaning of Lord Hale by the concluding words of this passage, in which he says it was usual to secure the interest of the shore, not for a way to the sea, but for the building wharfs, quays, and houses for the reception of goods. The right of way the public had, but the right of building was to be purchased. The cases of Young v. ——, Ld. Raym. 725, and The Queen v. The Inhabitants of Chilworth, 6 Mod. 163, are properly overruled by that of Ball v. Herbert; and I do not rely on those cases.

My opinion is founded on these grounds. The shore of the sea is admitted to have been at one time the property of the king. From the general nature of this property, it could never be used for exclusive occupation. It was holden by the king, like the sea and the highways, for all his subjects. The soil could only be transferred, subject to this public trust; and general usage shows that the public right has been excepted out of the grant of the soil. Our law books furnish us with little for our guidance on this subject; what is to be found seems to favor the common law right of way. But unless I felt myself bound by an authority as strong and clear as an Act of Parliament, I would hold, on principles of public policy,—I might say public necessity,—that the interruption of free access to the sea is a public nuisance. In the first ages of all countries, not only the sea and its shores, but all perennial rivers, were left open to public use. In all countries, it has been matter of just complaint, that individuals have encroached on the rights of the people. In England, our ancestors put the public rights in rivers under the safeguard of Magna Charta. The principle of exclusive appropriation must not be carried beyond things capable of improvement by the industry of man. If it be extended so far as to touch the right of walking over these barren sands, it will take from the people what is essential to their welfare, whilst it will give to individuals only the hateful privilege of vexing their neighbors. It has been said, that lords of manors should have a right to prevent bathing, that they might hinder persons from doing it in places of public resort. Magistrates are armed with authority to bring to punishment such as bathe indecently. I would rather rely on disinterested and responsible magistrates, than on an interested and irresponsible lord of a manor. A lord of a manor might remove bathers from a part within view of his own house, but would he be equally active to protect his neighbors from offence? If he is not, I know no mode of forcing him to execute the power he derives from his property. For these reasons, I am of opinion that the defendant is entitled to the judgment of the court.

HOLROYD, J. The question put in this case for our opinion, is the general question, whether there is a common law right for all the king's subjects to bathe in the sea, and to pass over the sea-shore for that purpose, on foot and with horses and carriages. But, coupled with the facts stated in the case, the question really is, whether there is a common law right in all the king's subjects to do so in the locus in quo, though the soil of the sea-shore, and an exclusive right of fishing there in a particular manner (namely, with stake-nets), are private property belonging to a subject, and though the same have been a special peculiar property from time immemorial. The plaintiff being stated to be the owner of the soil of the shore, and to have the exclusive right of fishing thereon, with stake-nets, as lord of the manor, the soil, as parcel of or belonging to the manor, must, according to 2 Bl. Com. 92, have been so from before the time of passing the Statute, Quia Emptores Terrarum, tempore Edw. I., since which time no manor can have been created; and the plaintiff being stated to have the exclusive right of fishing, as lord of the manor, this can only be as appendant or appurtenant to the manor. It must, therefore, be by prescription, and consequently there has been an exclusive right of fishing there from time immemorial. The question, too, is, as to the public right to the extent above stated, independently of usage and custom. The right is claimed on the pleadings, as founded not on usage or custom, but upon the supposed general law only; and the usage, as stated in the special case, is found to have been for the public to cross the sea-shore on foot only, for the purpose of bathing, no bathing-machines having ever been used in Great Crosby, where the locus in quo is situate, before the establishment of the present hotel. My opinion, therefore, on this case will not affect any right that has been or can be gained by prescription or custom, either by individuals or by either the permanent or temporary inhabitants of any vill, parish, or district.

The claim upon the pleadings, respecting the public highway along the shore, and the verdict, and facts found in the special case respecting the same, make no difference, but leave the question, with respect to the right of bathing, and the right incident thereto (if any) of passing over the sea-shore for that purpose, on foot and with horses and carriages, the same as if no such claim of a general public highway existed, or was put upon the record, as the jury have found a verdict for the plaintiff upon the new assignment, that the trespasses complained of were committed in the locus in quo on other occasions, and for other purposes than as a general public highway and out of the highway there.

It was contended in argument at the bar, that, by the common law of England, all the king's subjects had a right, not only to traverse the ocean itself in every direction, as well for commerce, trade, and intercourse, as for every other lawful purpose; but, also, that they had a general public right of way over the sea-shore to and from the sea, and that they had it, as well during the recess as during the flux of the tide, for all lawful purposes; and that the king could not grant the shore so as to supersede or to deprive the public of the exercise of that right over the sea-shore. And it was further contended, that even if the public right was not so extensive, yet that, at all events, the king's subjects had a right of bathing on the sea-shore, so that it be exercised in such a way as is conformable to decency; and that they had also, as incident thereto, a right to pass over the sea-shore, not merely on foot, but with horses and carriages; that is to say, with bathing-machines for that purpose, whether the sea-shore belonged to the king as public property, or to any individual as being now or even immemorially private property; and that such public right could not be superseded by the king's grant of the sea-shore as private property. And the earliest authority cited for this purpose was from Bracton, who copied it from the civil law. But whatever may be found to be the civil law upon this subject, and whatever may have been stated by some of our law writers from the civil law, or may be found to have dropped as dicta from some of our judges; yet it appears, I think, that the civil law, as applicable to this subject, differs from the common law of England; that its principles have not only not been adopted into the common law, but are at variance with it, and are therefore no guide to us; that the public right, to the extent claimed in this case, is not only not found to be established by our law, but that the established principles of our law are inconsistent with it. The question is with regard to the shore; that is to say, the land between the high and the low water-mark, and, according to Lord Hale's definition of the sea-shore, between those marks at ordinary tides, that is to say, between the ordinary flux and reflux of the sea.

In Bracton, l. 1, c. 12, § 6, it is thus laid down: "Publica vero sunt omnia flumina et portus, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est in portu et in fluminibus. Riparum etiam usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. Itaque naves ad eas applicare, funes arboribus ibi natis religare, onus aliquod in iis reponere, cuivis liberum est, sicut per ipsum fluvium navigare; sed proprietas earum, illorum est, quorum prædiis adhærent et eadem de causa arbores in eisdem natæ eorundem sunt. Sed hæc intelligenda sunt, de fluminibus perennibus; quia temporalia possunt esse privata." This passage is quite general, and is not confined to tide or navigable rivers. The doctrine as to the banks of rivers, is contrary to the case of Ball v. Herbert, respecting the right of towing paths, where Lord Kenyon says, "That there is such a custom on most of the navigable rivers, no person doubts, but still the right was founded solely on the custom." And there the court determined against the general common law right claimed. It is, indeed, supported by the dicta of Lord Holt, in Young v. ——, and Rex v. Cluworth, in the former of which cases he ruled, "that every man, of common right, may justify the going of his servants or his horses upon the banks of navigable rivers, for towing barges, to whomsoever the right of the soil belongs;" and in the latter, "that if one has land adjoining on a common river, every one that uses that river has, if occasion be, a right to a way by brink of water over that land, or further in if necessary." But both these authorities were cited and commented on in the case of Ball v. Herbert, and expressly overruled by the court. The passage in Bracton is taken from Justinian, Inst., lib. 2, tit. 1, §§ 2 and 4, and is in his very words, except with the addition of the last sentence. But besides the difference between our law and the civil law, in regard to what is even there laid down by Bracton, the variance between the common law and the civil law in other respects, as to marine properties and rights, shows, that the civil law cannot be any guide, or afford any illustration to us in these matters; and therefore, though Justinian in § 1 of that book and title says, "Nemo igitur ad littus maris accedere prohibetur;" yet his doctrine cannot have any weight or authority in that respect with us, unless it be found to be confirmed or adopted by our own lawyers, and particularly, if it be found not to be consistent with and conformable to the doctrines and principles of the common law. That there is this great difference between the civil and the common law, will appear from stating what is laid down in Justinian, in some of the other sections of that book and title, and comparing it with what is undoubtedly the common law, as to that species of property. In Justinian, the shore is thus defined: "Est autem littus maris quotenus hybernus fluctus maximus excurrat." By the common law, we know it is confined to the flux and reflux of the sea at ordinary tides. In Justinian, this is laid down, De usu et proprietate littorum, § 5. "Littorum quoque usus publicus est et juris gentium, sicut et ipsius maris; et ob id cuiilibet liberum est casam ibi ponere in quam se recipiat, sicut retia siccare, et ex mari deducere: Proprietas autem eorum potest intelligi nullius esse, sed ejusdem juris esse, cuius et mare, et quæ sub-jacet mari terra vel arena." By the common law, no such right exists in the public of erecting on the sea-shore any building for drying their nets; and instead of the property in the shore being in no one, it is prima facie in the king, and may be in a subject; and so may even an arm of the sea, a districtus maris, as Hale, De Jure Maris, page 31, says, "a place in the sea between such points, or a particular part contiguous to the shore, or a port, or creek, or arm of the sea;" though, as he also there lays it down, in the main sea itself, adjacent to his dominions, the king only hath the propriety, but a subject hath not, and indeed cannot have that property in the sea through the whole tract of it, that the king hath, because, without a regular power, he cannot possibly possess it. So by the civil law, § 18 : “Lapilli et gemmæ et cetera quæ in littore maris inveniuntur jure naturali statim inventoris flunt.” By our law, we know that wrecks and things found upon the sea-shore do not belong to the finder, but, where the owner cannot be discovered, to the king or his grantee, or to some person by prescription, which presupposes such grant. So by the civil law, § 22 : “Insula quæ in mari est, quod raro accidit (here he is speaking of an island newly rising from the sea), occupantis fit; nullius enim esse creditur.” Lord Hale, De Jure Maris, p. 36, shows how the common law differs from this : “As touching islands arising in the sea, or in the arms, or creeks, or havens thereof, the same rule holds which is before observed, touching acquests, by the reliction or recess of the sea, or such arms, or creeks thereof. Of common right and prima facie, it is true, they belong to the Crown ; but where the interest of such districtus maris, or arm of the sea, or creek, or haven, doth, in point of propriety, belong to a subject, either by charter or prescription, the islands that happen within the precincts of such private property of a subject, will belong to the subject, according to the limits and extents of such property.”

By the common law, all the king's subjects have in general a right of passage over the sea with their ships, boats, and other vessels, for the purposes of navigation, commerce, trade, and intercourse, and also in navigable rivers ; and they have also, prima facie, a common of fishery there ; but they may be excluded from the latter right, though not now by charter, at least by immemorial custom or prescription. These rights are noticed by Lord Hale ; but whatever further rights, if any, they may have in the sea, or in navigable rivers, it is a very different question whether they have, or how far they have, independently of necessity or usage, public rights upon the shore (that is to say, between the high and low water-mark), when it is not sea, or covered with water, and especially when it has from time immemorial been, or has since become, private property. For the purpose of the king's subjects getting upon the sea, and upon the navigable rivers, to exercise their unquestionable rights of commerce, intercourse, and fishing, there are not only the ports of the kingdom, established from time to time by the king's prerogative, and called by Lord Hale the Ostia Regni, but also public places for embarking and landing themselves and their goods. It was not by the common law, nor is it by Statute, lawful to come with or land or ship customizable goods in creeks or havens, or other places out of the ports, unless in cases of danger or necessity, nor fish or land other goods not customizable, where the shore or the land adjoining is private property, unless upon the person's own soil, or with the leave of the owner thereof, who, Lord Hale says, may, in such case, take amends for the trespass in unloading upon his ground, though he may not take it as a certain common toll; because, for so doing, it appears in Lord Hale's treatise De Portibus Maris, page 51, that one Morgan was fined 100 marks. No such amends could be taken, if there was a public right of coming there for that purpose in particular, or for purposes in general. In a case of necessity (as Lord Hale, in his treatise De Portibus Maris, page 53, says) either of stress of weather, assault, or pirates, or want of provisions, any ship might put into any creek or haven. And he then further says: "In case of necessity, and for the supply of fishermen, all places were to that purpose and end ports;" that is, for the purpose of finding provisions for ships and mariners. This is not consistent with the general right contended for, as being in the public, of coming on the shore for their purposes in general as and when they please. It is said, indeed, in Fitzh. Barre, 93, which cites 8 Ed. 4, 19, "Nota by Danby, That the fishers who fish in the sea may justify their going upon the land adjoining to the sea, because such fishery is for the common wealth, and for the sustenance of all the kingdom; wherefore this is the common law, which was granted, &c." But in Bro. Abr., Customs, 46, the same case is more fully stated, where the doctrine appears to have been laid down on a question which arose upon a custom. That was trespass for digging land; and the defendant pleaded, that it was four acres adjoining to the sea, and that all the men of Kent, from time immemorial, have used, when they have fished in the sea, to dig in the land adjoining and pitch stakes for hanging their nets to dry. "Nele. He ought to show what men. Choke and Littleton. This is not the custom, for it is against common right and reason. Danby. Fishers may justify going upon the land to fish, for this is commonwealth, and for the sustenance of man, and is the common law, which was granted. Fairfax. Digging is destruction of the inheritance, therefore it is not a custom, &c." But this appears more fully still by recurring to the Year Book itself, and Lord Hale, De Portibus Maris, 86, treats it as arising upon a custom: for he there says: "Look at the book of 8 Ed. 4, 18, for the custom of Kent, for fishermen to dry their nets upon the land, though it be the soil of private men." The case, as stated in the Year Books, 8 Ed. 4, 18, 19, after stating the pleadings as in Broke, proceeds as follows: "Nele. He hath said that the men have used, &c., and this is not a good prescription, being, he ought to show who, &c. Choke. This custom cannot be good; for it is against common right to prescribe to dig in my land; but there are other customs, which are used throughout the whole land, and such customs are lawful; as of inn-keepers, &c., and also a neighbor negligently keeping his fire, &c., and such customs are good, &c. Littleton. A custom which runs through the whole land is the common law, as the cases that you have put are, &c.; and, Sir, such custom, which may stand with reason, shall be suffered, as in the case where the younger son ought to inherit; for there is a reason for this, &c. But this custom is against reason; for if he may dig in one place, he may dig in another place ; and so, if a man hath a meadow adjoining the sea, they may, by such custom, destroy all the meadow, which would not be reasonable. Danby. Those who are fishers in the sea may justify their going on the land adjoining to the sea ; for such fishery is for the commonwealth, and for the sustenance of all the realm, &c. ; wherefore this is common law, quod fuit concessum. (This, it may be observed, as far as it extends to the land above high-water mark, is contrary to Ball v. Herbert, unless where it is founded on custom. Such a custom may be good where a right to dig is not claimed, or the doing so may be justified under such circumstances, as I shall afterwards state from Lord Hale.) Choke. If I have land adjoining to the sea, so that the sea ebbs and flows on my land, when it flows, every one may fish in the water which has flowed on my land, for then it is parcel of the sea, and in the sea every one may fish of common right, &c. ; and, Sir, when the sea is ebbed, then in this land, which was flowed before, peradventure he may justify his digging, &c. ; for this land is of no great profit to me, &c." It, therefore, clearly appears that this case proceeded entirely upon a particular custom, and the doctrine laid down by Choke, C. J., may be true, where there is such a custom ; and such custom, confined to the sea-shore, may perhaps be good ; but, if founded solely on the common law, is inconsistent with many passages in Lord Hale. By the common law, though the shore, that is to say the soil betwixt the ordinary flux and reflux of the tide, as well as the sea itself, belongs to the king : yet it is true that the same are also prima facie publici juris, or clothed with a public interest. But this jus publicum appears from Lord Hale to be the public right in all the king's subjects, of navigation for the purposes of commerce, trade, and intercourse ; and also the liberty of fishing in the sea, or the creeks or arms thereof, which Lord Hale, De Jure Maris, page 11, says, the common people of England have regularly, as a public common of piscary, and which, he says, they may not, without injury to their right, be restrained of, unless in such places, creeks, or navigable rivers where either the king or some particular subject has granted a propriety, exclusive of that common liberty. Neither in Lord Hale's treatise, nor elsewhere, does it appear that there is a common law right in the king's subjects in general, or any of them, to appropriate the sea-shore, or the soil even below the low-water mark, for general purposes, though temporary only, to their own use, without the king's grant or license, even where that can be done without nuisance to his subjects. Such an appropriation by any of the king's subjects, without his grant or license, though it were not in law a nuisance, would be (see Lord Hale, De Portibus Maris, 85), where the soil remains the king's, a purpresture, an encroachment, and intrusion upon the king's soil, which he may either demolish or seize, or arent, at his pleasure ; and though it were even by building below the low-water mark, it would not, as Lord Hale there says, be ipso facto a common nuisance, unless it be a damage to the port or navigation ; but where it is a common nuisance, as he also there says, even the king himself cannot license it. This shows that by the common law the king's subjects have not a general right of using or appropriating the soil of the sea-shore, or of the sea itself, as they please, even where the soil remains the king's, clothed with the jus publicum, and where that use or appropriation is effected in such a manner as not to be a nuisance to the public right of others.

But, further, such a general public right in all the king's subjects to use the sea-shore for all such temporary purposes as they please, would be, I think, inconsistent with the nature of permanent private property, or with the sea-shore becoming such permanent private property. If, therefore, the right of bathing, and the right of passing over the sea-shore on foot and with carriages, claimed as incident thereto, be claimed under the supposed general right of the public to use the sea, and the shore, for all such temporary legal purposes as they may please, such a public right of general appropriation is inconsistent with the fact of the locus in quo being private property, and of the fishing therein being also a private exclusive right, as stated in the case. And if the right of bathing, and of the incident foot and carriage way claimed for that purpose, cannot be established under such a general claim of right as I have before stated, it can only be supported under the specific claim of a public right of bathing, and of a carriage way, as incident thereto; for to that extent it must be established, in order to entitle the defendant to the judgment of the court. And then, I ask, where is such a right of bathing on the sea-shore, where it has become private property, and may immemorially have been so, and of a carriage way for that purpose as incident thereto, when sought for, to be found as existing at the common law, independently of usage and custom,—a right too which is here claimed beyond the extent of the usage actually found in the case? Where the soil remains the king's, and where no mischief or injury is likely to arise from the enjoyment or exercise of such a public right, it is not to be supposed that an unnecessary and injurious restraint upon the subjects would, in that respect, be enforced by the king, the parens patriæ. Where there is, and has hitherto been, a necessity, or even urgency, for such a right, it must, or most probably will have, usage and custom in the place to support, regulate, limit, and modify it; for, whenever there has been a necessity for it, there, as far as such necessity has existed, some usage must have prevailed.

In Ball v. Herbert, Lord Kenyon, in speaking of common law rights, says: "Common law rights are either to be found in the opinions of lawyers delivered as axioms, or to be collected from the universal and immemorial usage throughout the country." And Ashurst, J., says: "It seems extraordinary (if there be any such right) that it is not defined with greater certainty in any of our law books; for it is a right that in its nature must, if it existed, be subject to some restrictions, as, that it should be exercised only on one, and that the most convenient, side of the river; for it would, in many instances, be a very oppressive right, if it could be claimed on both sides." And Buller, J., says:

"This being claimed as a common law right, it can only be proved to exist by one of the means mentioned by my Lord, as to general usage throughout the kingdom, of which the court is obliged to take notice. That clearly does not exist. Then the question is, whether in our books, or on records, that right is established for which the defendant contends. The case in Lord Raymond is a very loose and inaccurate note. Another authority cited is a passage in Bracton, and quoted by Callis: that plainly appears to have been taken from Justinian, and is only part of the civil law; and whether or not that has been adopted by the common law, is to be seen by looking into our books, and there it is not to be found." The present claim, to the extent to which it is necessary to establish it on the part of the defendant, is not, therefore, as it appears to me, supported either by necessity, by general usage of the realm, which forms the common law, or by special usage in the particular place; nor is it to be found in our law books; nor, if it were, would it follow that it was such a common law right as might not, by prescription, at least, be otherwise appropriated. That general common law rights are frequently so appropriated, we all know to be the fact; and that this may lawfully be established, by prescription at least, will appear from authority. The public common law rights, too, with respect to the sea, &c., independently of usage, are rights upon the water, not upon the land, of passage and fishing on the sea, and on the sea-shore, when covered with water; and though, as incident thereto, the public must have the means of getting to and upon the water for those purposes, yet it will appear that it is by and from such places only as necessity or usage have appropriated to those purposes, and not a general right of lading, unlading, landing, or embarking where they please upon the sea-shore, or the land adjoining thereto, except in case of peril or necessity. In Carter v. Murcott, 4 Burr. 2162, Yates, J. (speaking of a prescription for a several fishery, claimed in a navigable river), says: "Such a right may be proved. By the law of England, what is otherwise common may, by prescription, be appropriated. Grotius owns that navigable rivers may be appropriated. The case of The Royal Salmon Fishery in the River Banne, in Sir John Davis' Reports, is agreeable to this: and it is a very good case."

Many passages in Lord Hale's treatises are inconsistent with the existence of such a general right of bathing, and of a passage over the shore with carriages, at common law, as is here claimed, and show that whatever the general public rights are, they are only such as are upon and in the water, and not upon the dry land, unless in places sanctioned by usage, whether they be parts of the shore or not; at least, that they exist not upon the land, when not covered with water, where it has become private property, and, more especially, where it has immemorially been private or special property. I shall state a few of those passages. It appears from Lord Hale, that the king may license the erecting of quays, or other buildings, on the sea-coasts, even below the low-water mark, where they are not in fact annoyances or nuisances, Hale, De Portibus Maris, 85 ; so weirs, Hale, 22, De Jure Maris. As to the making of ports, and the threefold right therein, especially the right of an individual subject, by charter or prescription, in a port, and previously in a creek or haven, particularly in bringing in his own goods, where he is owner of the soil, Hale, 72, 73. As to the owner's right to improve the shore, it is laid down that the king cannot grant a right to lade or unlade on the ripa, or bank, without the owner's consent ; there cannot, therefore, be any common law right to lade or unlade on the quay or shore, or land adjacent in the port, Hale, 51, 76. Evidence to prove the shore parcel of a manor, &c., disproves the general right of all the king's subjects on the shore, at least when and where it is not covered with water. So, as to having the right of royal fish and wreck, it is a great presumption that the shore is part of the manor, or otherwise he could not have them, Hale, 26, 27. Now, this would not be the case, if the king's subjects had a prior general right to come when they pleased upon the shore. These passages from Lord Hale appear to me to be inconsistent with the general right contended for, independently of custom, for all the king's subjects to come as and when they please upon the shore, particularly where it has been either from time immemorial, or where it has since become private or special property, especially where it is not covered with the tide or water. Lord Hale notices and establishes the public right of navigating and fishing upon and in the water, and the right of resort to the ports, and of lading and unlading, landing and embarking therein, either at the public places appointed or by usage established for those purposes, or with consent, upon the land, either of the king or of individuals, but no further. This right of bathing, and of a carriage way, as incident thereto, is nowhere noticed ; and it does not, I think, exist by the common law upon the locus in quo, the private property of the plaintiff, unsupported as it is by usage and custom. I am, therefore, of opinion, in this case, that the plaintiff is entitled to the judgment of the court.

BAYLEY, J. The question in this case is, whether there is a common law right for all the king's subjects to bathe upon the sea-shore, and to pass over it for that purpose, upon foot, and with horses and carriages, notwithstanding the part on which the right is claimed, is, as to its soil, vested in a particular individual, and although that individual has an exclusive right of fishing in that place with stake-nets, and of driving these stakes into the soil, that they may support the nets. And I am of opinion, that there is no such common law right. By the sea-shore, I understand the space between the ordinary high and low water mark, and the property in this is, prima facie, in the king. It may, indeed, by grant or prescription belong to a subject ; but until the contrary is shown, the presumption is, that it belongs to the king. Many of the king's rights are, to a certain extent, for the benefit of his subjects ; and that is the case as to the sea, in which all his subjects have the right of navigation, and of fishing ; and it is so in highways, along which all his subjects have the right of passage, and the king can make no modern grants in derogation of those rights. I have mentioned the rights of navigation and of fishing, because I can find no trace of such a right as that now claimed recognized in any of our books. It is material to distinguish between the different descriptions of rights; and the public may have a right of navigation, which is for the general benefit of all the kingdom; and a right of fishing, which tends to the sustenance and beneficial employment of individuals; but it does not thence follow that they have also the right of bathing. The existence or the extent of the subject's right is to be collected in this, as in other instances, from the manner in which the sea-shores throughout the kingdom have from time immemorial been used, and from legal authorities upon the subject. The right, as claimed, is not confined to any particular place, if it exists at all, but it must exist upon every part of the sea-shore. Every private building, then, erected upon the sea-shore, and even wharfs and quays, would be an obstruction to that right, and, of consequence, abatable or indictable. And yet, in how many instances are such buildings, wharfs, and quays erected? Every embankment by which land is redeemed from the sea would obstruct the exercise of this right, and be a nuisance, and so would the erection of stakes for holding nets; and yet, how frequently are such embankments made, and such stakes set up? A distinction has, indeed, been contended for between wharfs and quays, and other erections for public benefit, and for the interests of trade and commerce, and erections for private purposes; but in how many instances are there buildings for private purposes on the sea-shore? Where an erection is made on the sea-shore without authority, the Crown may treat it as a purpresture, and prosecute it accordingly; but it has never yet been held abatable or indictable, because it happens to interfere with a supposed common law right of bathing. Indeed, this is the first time, as far as I can learn, that such a right was ever stated upon any pleadings, or contended for in any court of law; and the inconveniences which would result from such a right afford to my mind a strong argument against its existence. In sea-bathing, as it now prevails, particular regulations are desirable; the restriction of particular machines to particular spots; a separation of those which are for men from those which are for females; and the prevention of contests as to particular situations. Bathers who do not use machines should be in places of greater privacy, and at a distance from those parts which are generally used for the recreation of walking; and yet the existence of this common law right would be a great obstruction to any such regulations. Indeed, if an individual had the grant of the sea-shore from the Crown, and were using it for recreation or bathing, he or his family might be interrupted and deprived of all privacy by the exercise of this common law right. Let it be observed, too, that the whole shore cannot be necessary for the exercise of this supposed right, and that it may be desirable to apply parts of the sea-shore to other purposes. The king, for the public welfare, may suffer such a right to be exercised in those parts of the shore which remain in his hands to any extent which the convenience of the public may require ; but may he not also allow other rights to be exercised on other parts ? If the soil is vested in an individual, is he to be deprived of the right of saying how that soil shall be used, and of the privilege of making any regulations he may think fit ? In those places in which convenience has required the right, and it has continued from the time of legal memory, there will be a right by custom ; and, where that is not the case, the Crown, or its grantees, are not likely to withhold it, upon proper terms, and under proper regulations. The case of Bagott v. Orr, 2 Bos. & Pul. 472, seems to me to conclude nothing on the right in question. The defendant there justified trespassing on the rocks and sands lying within the flowing and reflowing of the tide, on the ground that every subject of the realm had the liberty and privilege of getting and taking away shell-fish and shells which had been left there by the tide. The general right of the public to take fish of the sea was admitted in argument ; but the right to take shells cast on the shore was denied ; and it was insisted, besides, that the general right was excluded where the shore was parcel of a manor. The court thought that the plaintiff should have replied specially to have raised the question as to excluding the general right ; but they thought the claim as to the shells so questionable, that they offered the defendant leave to amend, by confining his claim to the sea-fish, and that offer the defendant accepted. The claim, therefore, in that case, was very different from the present ; it was a claim for something serving to the sustenance of man, not a matter of recreation only, — a claim to take, when left by the water, what every subject had an undoubted right to have taken whilst they remained in the water ; and upon that claim there was no regular judgment. But it would by no means follow because all the king's subjects have a right to pick up fish on the shore, that they have, therefore, a right to pass over the sea-shore for the purpose of bathing. The passages cited from Lord Hale's treatise, De Jure Maris, pages 22 and 36, in which it is laid down, "that the jus privatum that is acquired to the subject, either by patent or prescription, must not prejudice the jus publicum, wherewith public rivers or arms of the sea are affected for public use," leave the question untouched ; because the question in this case is, what the jus publicum is : and that they do not define. Had Lord Hale stated, as part of the jus publicum, that the public might use the shore as they thought fit ; that they might use it as a public highway, or for the purpose of bathing — then those passages would have been authorities applicable to this case. But Lord Hale, in fact, only states that the jus publicum continues to exist, without defining what it is. Bracton, in l. 1, c. 12 § 6, does state what the jus publicum is ; and if that passage be good law, it is a strong authority in favor of the defendant. The passage is as follows : "Publica vero sunt omnia flumina et portus. Ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est in portu et in fluminibus." Now, he does not even say navigable rivers ; but I will assume that by fluminibus is meant navigable rivers, and so far as I have cited the passage, I concur in what is there laid down ; but he goes on : “ Riparum etiam usus publicus est jure gentium sicut ipsius fluminis.” That is, that the public have the same right to use the banks of the river that they have to use the river itself, and that, because the water is common to all mankind, the ripa is also common to all mankind. The passage then goes on : “ Itaque naves ad eas applicare, funes arboribus ibi natis religare, onus aliquod in iis reponere, cuivis liberum est, sicut per ipsum fluviū navigare.” The word ripa here applies to rivers and ports, and probably, also, to the land above the high-water mark ; and, if it do, is this the law of England ; have all persons a right to fasten a ship to the banks of a river, or have they a right to tie ropes to the trees, or to land goods on the banks of every navigable river ? The case of Ball v. Herbert, 3 Term Rep. 262, is not a distinct authority upon this point, inasmuch as in that case, the right of towing was claimed. But the general question as to the right of the public on the ripa of a navigable river was discussed, and the court appear to have been of opinion that the ripa of a navigable river was not publici juris, and they therefore virtually overruled the authority of Bracton. Lord Hale, in his treatise, De Portibus Maris, page 84, after citing this passage, says : “ As touching ports, and the public right of them, Bracton saith true ; with this allay, that hath been before observed, that the law of England doth thus far abridge that common liberty of ports, that no port can be erected without the license or charter of the king, or that which presumes and supplies it, viz., custom and prescription.” But in another passage, page 73, Lord Hale says : “ Though A. may have the propriety of a creek or harbor, or navigable river, yet the king may grant there the liberty of a port to B., and so the interest of propriety, and the interest of franchise several and divided. And in this, no injury is at all done to A., for he hath what he had before, viz., the interest of the soil, and consequently the improvement of the shore, and the liberty of fishing ; and as the creek was free for any one to pass in it against all but the king (for it was publici juris as to that matter before), so now the king takes off that restraint, and by his license and charter makes it free for all to come and unlade. But if A. hath the ripa or bank of the port, the king may not grant a liberty to unlade upon that bank or ripa without his consent, unless custom had made the liberty thereof free to all, as in many places it is ; for that would be a prejudice to the private interest of A., which may not be taken from him without such consent.” There may perhaps be a distinction between the ripa of the river where the soil has been long private property, and that space between the high and low water mark, where the sea ebbs and flows ; but if there be such a distinction, what becomes of the authority of Bracton, where he says, “ Riparum etiam usus publicus, est jure gentium sicut ipsius fluminis.” No man can travel through this kingdom along the banks of rivers, without seeing that private rights, exclusive of public rights, exist there, and every one of those rights is at variance with the doctrine of Bracton, and with the supposed common law right now claimed. The practice of bathing may contribute to health, but it ought to be confined within reasonable limits, and it is by no means necessary that the right should be coextensive with the whole shore of the sea, or that it should extend to places where the right of fishing with stake-nets exists. In the absence of any authority to show that such right exists, and thinking that the authorities cited do not establish it, and that it would be attended with great inconvenience to the public if a general right, free from all regulation by the owner of the soil, was to be exercised throughout the whole of the kingdom, I am of opinion that no such right exists, and, consequently, that there ought to be judgment for the plaintiff.

ABBOTT, C. J. I have considered this case with very great attention, from the respect I entertain on this and all other occasions for the opinion of my learned Brother Best, though I had no doubt upon the question when it was first presented to me; nor did the defendant's counsel raise any doubt in my mind by his learned and ingenious argument. This is an action of trespass, brought against the defendant for passing with carriages from some place above high-water mark across that part of the shore which lies between the high and low water mark, for the conveyance of persons to and from the water for the purpose of bathing. The plaintiff is the undoubted owner of the soil of this part of the shore, and has the exclusive right of fishing thereon with stake-nets. The defendant does not rely upon any special custom or prescription for his justification, but insists on a common law right for all the king's subjects to bathe on the sea-shore, and to pass over it for that purpose on foot, and with horses and carriages; and this right is the only matter which, by the terms of the special case, is submitted to the opinion of the court. Now, if such a common law right existed, there would probably be some mention of it in our books; but none is found in any book, ancient or modern. If the right exist now, it must have existed at all times; but we know that sea-bathing was, until a time comparatively modern, a matter of no frequent occurrence, and that the carriages, by which the practice has been facilitated and extended, are of comparatively modern invention.

There being no authority in favor of the affirmative of the question, in the terms in which it is proposed, it has been placed in argument at the bar on a broader ground; and as the waters of the sea are open to the use of all persons for all lawful purposes, it has been contended, as a general proposition, that there must be an equally universal right of access to them, for all such purposes, over land like the present. If this could be established, the defendant must undoubtedly prevail; because bathing in the waters of the sea is, generally speaking, a lawful purpose. But, in my opinion, there is no sufficient ground, either in authority or in reason, to support this general proposition.

Commerce is a matter greatly favored in our law, by reason of the public and national benefits derived from it; but, even as to this favored matter, I have found no authority in the law of England in support of such a proposition. Bracton, in the passage so often referred to, speaks not of the waters of the sea generally, but of ports and navigable rivers. It may be admitted that whatever is true of navigable rivers and their banks, may be true of the sea and of its shore. But the case of Ball v. Herbert, 3 T. R. 261, shows that the doctrine of Bracton, as to the banks of navigable rivers, however warranted by the civil law, is not conformable to the law of England. "And as touching ports, and the public right to them," says Lord Hale, page 84, "Bracton saith true; but, with this allay, that the law of England doth thus far abridge that common liberty of ports that no port can be erected without the license or charter of the king, or that which presumes and supposes it, viz., custom and prescription." So that even the privilege to be derived from ports cannot be in its nature universal. And as to ports, Lord Hale, ch. 6, p. 73, distinguishes between the interest of property and the interest of franchise, and says that "if A. hath the ripa or bank of the port, the king cannot grant liberty to unlade on the bank or ripa without his consent, unless custom hath made the liberty thereof free to all, as in many places it is." Now, such consent as applied to the natural state of the ripa or bank would be wholly unnecessary, if every man had a right to land his goods on every part of the shore at his pleasure. And if there be no general right to unlade merchandise on the shore, there can be no right to traverse the shore with carriages or otherwise for the purpose of unloading; and, consequently, the general proposition to which I have alluded cannot be maintained as a legitimate conclusion from the general right to navigate the water. I have spoken of merchandise, and not of fish; from the latter I studiously abstain, because no question of that kind is before the court, and it is unnecessary to say anything upon it. It will be remembered, also, that I speak only of the general right, which is a matter perfectly distinct from those cases of necessity that often arise out of the perils of navigation. Having thus shown that the general proposition cannot, in my opinion, be maintained, I return to the particular right or privilege claimed in the present case.

One of the topics urged at the bar in favor of this supposed right was that of public convenience. Public convenience, however, is, in all cases, to be viewed with a due regard to private property, the protection whereof is one of the distinguishing characteristics of the law of England. It is true that property of the description of the present is, in general, of little value to its owner; but I do not know how that little is to be protected, and much less how it is ever to be increased, if such a general right be established. If there be a general right of passage across land of this description in the nature of a highway, by what law are stake-nets, or other implements of fishing, to be placed there, or sand or stones to be taken away, whereby the exercise of the right which, as claimed, will, in its universality, extend itself over every part of the surface, may be obstructed, or rendered less convenient? By what law can any wharf or quay be made? These, in order to be useful, must be below the high-water mark, that vessels or boats may float to them when the tide is in; but when the tide is out, no carriage can pass them. In some parts of the coast, where the ground is nearly level, the tide ebbs to a great distance, and leaves dry very considerable tracts of land. In such situations thousands of acres have, at different times, been gained from the sea and its arms by embankments, and converted to pasture or tillage. But how could such improvements have been made, or how can they be made hereafter, without the destruction or infringement of this supposed right? And it is to be observed that wharfs, quays, and embankments, and intakes from the sea, are matters of public as well as private benefit.

Another topic relied upon by the defendant was usage and practice. The practice of modern times can be considered, at the utmost, in the nature only of evidence, more or less cogent according to its extent and uniformity. I am not aware of any practice, in this matter, sufficiently extensive or uniform to be the foundation of a judicial decision. It was said at the bar that in some places a compensation is made to the owner of the shore; but I do not rely on this assertion as a ground of judgment. In many places, doubtless, nothing is paid. In some parts, the king is the owner of the shore; and it is not probable that any obstruction would be interposed on his behalf to such a practice. Of private owners, some may not have thought it worth while to advance any claim or opposition; others may have had too much discretion to put their title to the soil to the hazard of a trial by an unpopular claim to a matter of little value; others, and probably the greater part, may have derived or expected so much benefit from the increased value given to their own land above by the erection of houses and the resort of company, that their own interest may have induced them to acquiesce in, and even to encourage the practice, as a matter indirectly profitable to themselves. But, further, the practice, as far at least as I am acquainted with it, differs in degree only, and not in kind or quality, from that which prevails as to some inland wastes and commons; and even the difference in degree is, in some instances, not very great. Many of those persons who reside in the vicinity of wastes and commons, walk or ride on horseback, in all directions, over them, for their health and recreation; and sometimes, even in carriages, deviate from the public paths into those parts which may be so traversed with safety. In the neighborhood of some frequented watering-places, this practice prevails to a very great degree; yet no one ever thought that any right existed in favor of this enjoyment, or that any justification could be pleaded to an action at the suit of the owner of the soil.

The only remaining topic adduced for the defendant was, that the right may be considered as confined to those instances only wherein it can be exercised without actual prejudice to the owner of the shore, and subject to all modes of present use, or future improvement, on his part; but no instance of any public right, so limited and qualified, has been found. Every public right to be exercised over the land of an individual is, pro tanto, a diminution of his private rights and enjoyments, both present and future, so far as they may at any time interfere with or obstruct the public right.

But shall the owner of the soil be allowed to bring an action against any person who may drive his carriage along these parts of the sea-shore, whereby not the smallest injury is done to the owner? The law has provided suitable checks to frivolous and vexatious suits; and, in general, experience shows that the owners of the shore do not trouble themselves or others for such matters. But where one man endeavors to make his own special profit by conveying persons over the soil of another, and claims a public right to do so, as in the present case, it does not seem to me that he has any just reason to complain if the owner of the soil shall insist upon participating in the profit, and endeavor to maintain his own private right, and preserve the evidence thereof. For these reasons I am of opinion that there is not any such common law right as the defendant has claimed.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CHAMBERS.

CHANCERY. 1854.

[Reported 4 De G. M. & G. 206.]

INFORMATION by the Attorney-General against the owner of land on the sea-shore, for working mines below the shore. The question involved was what was the limit between the shore and the upland. The case was heard, on June 6th, by LORD CRANWORTH, C., assisted by BARON ALDERSON and MR. JUSTICE MAULE.¹

The Solicitor-General, Mr. James, and Mr. Hansen, for the Crown. Mr. R. Palmer, Mr. Goldsmid, and Mr. Mellish, for the land-owner.

Mr. Roupell and Mr. Dickinson, appeared for the lessees of the owner.

At the conclusion of the argument the learned judges desired time to consider the question which had been submitted to them; and on the 8th July, 1854, MR. BARON ALDERSON, on behalf of MR. JUSTICE MAULE and himself, delivered the following joint opinion: —

My Lord Chancellor,—In this case, on which your Lordship has requested the assistance of my Brother Maule and myself, I am now to deliver our joint opinion on the only question argued before us. That question, as I understand it, is this: What, in the absence of all evidence of particular usage, is the limit of the title of the Crown to the sea-shore? The Crown is clearly in such a case, according to all the authorities, entitled to the littus maris as well as to the soil of the sea itself adjoining the coasts of England. What, then, according to the authorities in our law, is the extent of this littus maris?

This, in the absence of any grant, or usage from which a grant may be presumed, is according to the civil law defined as the part of the shore bounded by the extreme limit to which the highest natural tides extend, “Quatenus hybernum fluctus maximus excurrit;” i. e., the highest natural tide; for according to Lord Stair’s exposition, the definition does not include the highest actual tides, for these may be produced by peculiarities of wind or other temporary or accidental circumstances, concurring with the flow produced by the action of the sun and moon upon the ocean.

But this definition (even thus expounded by the authorities) of the civil law is clearly not the rule of the common law of England.

Mr. Justice Holroyd, no mean authority, in his very elaborate judgment in the case of Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & A. 268; see page 290, mentions this as one of the instances in which the common law differs from the civil law, and says that it is clear that according to our law it is not the limit of the highest tides of the year, but the limit reached by the highest ordinary tides of the sea, which is the limit of the shore belonging prima facie to the Crown. What, then, are these “highest ordinary tides”? Now we know that in fact the tides of each day, nay, even each of the tides of each day, differ in some degree as to the limit which they reach. There are the spring-tides at the equinox, the highest of all. These clearly are excluded in terms by Lord Hale, both in page 12 and in page 26 of his treatise De Jure Maris. For though in one sense these are ordinary, i. e. according to the usual order of nature, and not caused by accidents of the winds and the like, yet they do not ordinarily happen but only at two periods of the year. These, then, are not the tides contemplated by the common law, for they are not “ordinary tides,” not being “of common occurrence.” This may perhaps apply to the spring-tides of each month, exclusive of the equinoctial tides; and indeed, if the case were without distinct authority on this point, that is the conclusion at which we might have arrived. But then we have Lord Hale’s authority, page 26, De Jure Maris, who says, “Ordinary tides, or neap-tides which happen between the full and change of the moon,” are the limit of “that which is properly called littus maris;” and he excludes the spring-tides of the month, assigning as the reason that the “lands covered with these fluxes are for the most part of the year dry and maniorable;” i. e., not reached by the tides. And to the same effect is the case of Lowe v. Govett, 3 B. & Ad. 863, which excludes these monthly spring-tides also.

But we think that Lord Hale’s reason may guide us to the proper limit. What are then the lands which for the most part of the year are reached and covered by the tides? The same reason that excludes the highest tides of the month (which happen at the springs) excludes the lowest high tides (which happen at the neaps), for the highest or spring tides and the lowest high tides (those at the neaps) happen as often as each other. The medium tides, therefore, of each quarter of the tidal period afford a criterion which we think may be best adopted. It is true of the limit of the shore reached by these tides that it is more frequently reached and covered by the tide than left uncovered by it. For about three days it is exceeded, and for about three days it is left short, and on one day it is reached. This point of the shore, therefore, is about four days in every week, i. e., for the most part of the year, reached and covered by the tides. And as some not indeed perfectly accurate construction, but approximate, must be given to the words "highest ordinary tides" used by Mr. Justice Holroyd, we think, after fully considering it, that this best fulfils the rules and the reasons for it given in our books.

We therefore beg to advise your Lordship that, in our opinion, the average of these medium tides in each quarter of a lunar revolution during the year gives the limit, in the absence of all usage, to the rights of the Crown on the sea-shore.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR. The question for decision is, What is the extent of the right of the Crown to the sea-shore? Its right to the littus maris is not disputed. But what is the littus? Is it so much as is covered by ordinary spring-tides, or is it something less?

The rule of the civil law was, "Est autem littus maris quatenus hybernus fluctus maximus excurrit." This is certainly not the doctrine of our law. All the authorities concur in the conclusion that the right is confined to what is covered by "ordinary" tides, whatever be the right interpretation of that word. By "hybernus fluctus maximus" is clearly meant extraordinary high tides, though, speaking with physical accuracy, the winter tide is not in general the highest.

Land covered only by these extraordinary tides is not what is meant by the sea-shore; such tides may be the result of wind, or other causes independent of what ordinarily regulates flux and reflux. Setting aside these accidental tides, the question is, What is the meaning of "ordinary"? It is evidently a word of doubtful import. In one sense, the highest equinoctial spring-tides are "ordinary"; i. e., they occur in the natural order of things. But this is evidently not the sense in which the word "ordinary" is used when designating the extent of the Crown's right to the shore. Treatise De Jure Maris, pages 12, 25.

Disregarding, then, extreme tides, we next come to the ordinary spring-tides, i. e., the spring-tides of each lunar month. No doubt, speaking scientifically, they probably all differ; but practically this may be disregarded. Lord Hale gives no absolutely decided opinion; but he evidently leans very strongly against the right to the land covered only by spring-tides (treatise De Jure Maris, page 26), and refers to decisions which support his views. Then he describes ordinary tides as if synonymous with neap-tides.

This leaves the question very much at large, and there is very little of modern authority. In Blundell v. Catterall, 5 B. & A. 268, Mr. Justice Holroyd says, by the common law, it, i. e., the shore, is confined to the flux and reflux of the sea at ordinary tides, meaning the land covered by such flux and reflux.

Still the question remains, What are ordinary tides? The nearest approach to direct authority is Lowe v. Govett. There certain recesses on the coast, covered by the high water of ordinary spring-tides, but not by the medium tides between spring and neap tides, were held not to pass under an Act vesting in a company an arm of the sea daily overflowed by it. Lord Tenterden held that these recesses were not ordinarily overflowed by the sea, — which shows clearly that he did not consider the overflowing by ordinary spring-tides to be what is meant by ordinarily overflowing; and both Mr. Justice Littledale and Mr. Justice (now Baron) Parke concur in saying that the recesses in question were above ordinary high-water mark, — clearly showing their opinion to be that what is meant by ordinary high-water mark is not so high as the limit of high water at ordinary spring-tides.

There is, in truth, no further authority to guide us; for the question did not arise in either of the cases of Attorney-General v. Burridge, 10 Price, 350, or Attorney-General v. Parmeter, 10 Price, 378, as to the buildings at Portsmouth.

In this state of things, we can only look to the principle of the rule which gives the shore to the Crown. That principle I take to be that it is land not capable of ordinary cultivation or occupation, and so is in the nature of unappropriated soil. Lord Hale gives as his reason for thinking that lands only covered by the high spring-tides do not belong to the Crown, that such lands are for the most part dry and maniorable; and taking this passage as the only authority at all capable of guiding us, the reasonable conclusion is, that the Crown's right is limited to land which is for the most part not dry or maniorable.

The learned judges whose assistance I had in this very obscure question point out that the limit indicating such land is the line of the medium high tide between the springs and the neaps. All land below that line is more often than not covered at high water, and so may justly be said, in the language of Lord Hale, to be covered by the ordinary flux of the sea. This cannot be said of any land above that line; and I therefore concur with the able opinion of the judges, whose valuable assistance I had, in thinking that medium line must be treated as bounding the right of the Crown.

FLEET v. HEGEMAN.

SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK. 1835.

[Reported 14 Wend. 42.]

ERROR from the Queen's Common Pleas. Fleet sued Hegeman and two others in an action of trespass in a justice's court, for taking and carrying away 2000 oysters, the goods and chattels of the plaintiff. The defendants pleaded the general issue. The cause was tried by a jury, and a verdict found for the defendants, on which the justice rendered judgment. The plaintiff sued out a certiorari, returnable in the Common Pleas of Queen's; which court affirmed the judgment of the justice. Whereupon the plaintiff removed the record into this court by writ of error. From the return of the justice, it appeared that the plaintiff had an oyster-bed in Oyster Bay, in Queen's County, of the extent of about 4 or 5 square rods, enclosed with stakes, at the distance of about 15 rods from the shore, opposite land owned by him or by his father. About two years before the trial, which took place in November, 1833, the plaintiff put into this enclosure a quantity of very small oysters, picked up around the shores; and shortly previous to the trial, the defendants went into the bed enclosed by the plaintiff and raked up and took 600 or 700 oysters, worth from ten to eleven dollars. Five or six years previous to the trial, oysters were plenty in the bay; but since then, they were not to be found, except where they were planted.

D. Rogers and C. Bogert, for the plaintiff in error.

S. A. Foot, for the defendants in error.

By the court, NELSON, J. It has before been decided that the right of fishing in this harbor or bay belonged exclusively to the inhabitants of the town of Oyster Bay, derived by grant from the Crown of England. Rogers v. Jones, 1 Wendell, 237. In that case, Rogers was sued for a penalty created by a by-law of the town, declaring that "no person, not being an inhabitant of Oyster Bay, shall be allowed to rake or take any oysters in the creeks or harbors of the town, under the penalty of $12.50 for each offence." He had entered the harbor or bay, and caught and carried away a quantity of oysters, about 100 yards from the beach; was a citizen of New York, but not an inhabitant of the town. The defence was put upon the ground, that the bay, being an arm of the sea where the tide ebbed and flowed, was a common fishery for all the citizens of the State, and that the inhabitants of the town possessed no exclusive right. The court decided that the grant to them by Sir Ed. Andros, under Charles II., invested them with that right, and sustained the by-law under which the penalty was inflicted. See also 6 Cowen, 376.

Both parties in this case probably are inhabitants of the town, and therefore are entitled to the common right of fishing in the bay. At all events, no question of the kind is raised in the case, and we assume such right belonged to the defendants. The plaintiff had gathered the oysters when small, some two years before the trial, and planted them in a bed in the bay, about fifteen rods from the shore; none grew there at the time, nor have any grown since outside of the bed. That a qualified property in the oysters was acquired by the plaintiff is admitted; but it is contended that the planting them in the bay, where a common right of taking them existed, was an abandonment of them to the public use. If so, it must be by force of law; for the case fully discloses that no such intent in point of fact existed. On the contrary, they were deposited there by the owner, to improve or rather give value to them, and with reference to an ulterior use. As to all inanimate things, an absolute property in possession may be acquired in them,—such as goods, plate, money; and if the article in question could be considered as falling within that description, there could be no doubt the defence taken would be untenable, unless there was an abandonment in fact. Oysters have not the power of locomotion any more than inanimate things, and when property has once been acquired in them, no good reason is perceived why it should not be governed by the rules of law applicable to inanimate things. But, it is contended, they fall within the rules of law applicable to animals denominated feræ naturæ, the same as deer in the forest, pigeons in the air, or fish in public waters or the ocean. A qualified property is acquired in these by reclaiming and taming them; or by so confining them, within the immediate power of the owner, as to prevent their escape, and the use of their natural liberty. Deer in a park, hares or rabbits in a warren, or fish in private ponds or trunks, are instances of this description. These, it is said, are the property of a man no longer than while they continue in his keeping or possession. Manucapture is not necessary to acquire, much less to continue possession of this property. 3 Caines, 178. If a deer or any wild animal reclaimed hath a collar or other mark put upon him, and goes and returns at pleasure, it is not lawful for any one else to take him; though if he be long absent, without returning, it is otherwise. In all these cases of wild animals reclaimed, the property is not absolute, but defeasible, by the animals resuming their ancient wildness, and going at large,—as if the deer escape from the park, or the fishes from the pond or trunk, and are found at large in their proper element, they become feræ naturæ again, and are free to the first occupant that may seize them. But while they continue the owner's qualified property, they are under the protection of the law, as much so as if they were absolutely and indefeasibly his; and an action will lie for any injury committed. 2 Black. Comm. 395, 6, 7; 3 Co. Lit. 294, note c; 7 Co. 86, Case of the Swans; 8 Vin. tit. Property, B.

It is clear, from the principles and cases above mentioned, that the right to appropriate property of the description in question does not depend exclusively upon the place where they are found, but upon the fact that they are feræ naturæ unreclaimed; for though the deer should be found browsing in his own forest, and the pigeon flying in the air, or any of the class reclaimable, at large, if they have been in fact domesticated and possess the animus revertendi, they are not common property, and the occupant who takes them gets no title; and if he takes them knowing their condition, he becomes a trespasser. This is clear upon well-settled authority. The right of the plaintiff to the oysters is within the reason of these principles. They have been reclaimed, and are as entirely within his possession and control as his swans, or other water-fowl, that may float habitually in the bay. They were distinctly designated according to usage; and, besides, the defendants had actual information of the ownership, and they can set up no greater right to take them, because found in their native element, than tame pigeons in the air, or a domesticated deer upon the mountain. If the bed interfered with the exercise of the common right of fishing, or if the oysters were undistinguished among others belonging to the public waters, the interest of the owners in them would undoubtedly be subservient to the enjoyment of the public use. But the exercise of that right in this case was a mere pretence. No oysters of the natural growth of the bay, fit for use, had been found there for years. The bed interfered with no other sort of fishing, for either profit or pleasure. The case presents a deliberate and wanton violation of property acquired by the industry and care of another, under the pretext of exercising a right in common which the defendants knew to be fruitless. We certainly would have regretted if the law had given countenance to such depredations, and we are rejoiced to find they are as gross a violation of the law as they are of the first principles of justice.

Judgment reversed.

WESTON v. SAMPSON.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1851.

[Reported 8 Cushing. 347.]

THIS was an action of trespass quare clausum fregit, originally brought before a justice of the peace; and was submitted to the Court of Common Pleas, and, upon appeal, to this court, upon the following statement of facts:—

"It is admitted that the plaintiffs are the proprietors of the tract of upland described in their writ, with the flats adjoining at Powder Point, so called, in Duxbury, bordering upon the bay. The defendants, inhabitants of Duxbury, went in their boat upon said flats, and there, at low water, dug five bushels of clams, and put them into their boat, and carried them away. The place where the defendants dug these clams was between high and low water mark, and within one hundred rods of the shore of the plaintiffs' upland. If the court shall be of opinion that the defendants had a right so to dig and carry away said clams, the plaintiffs are to become nonsuit; otherwise, the case is to be sent to a jury."

The arguments were made at Boston, in January, 1849.

H. A. Scudder and T. P. Beal, for the plaintiffs.

W. Baylies and W. Thomas, for the defendants.

The opinion was delivered at the October Term, 1849.

SHAW, C. J. The question in this case is probably one of very little importance to the parties in point of amount, but it presents a question of considerable interest to the inhabitants of the maritime districts of the State. The statement of facts is so shaped as to present the single question of the right of an inhabitant of Duxbury to enter upon the shore or flats, between high and low water mark, lying in front of land, the acknowledged property of another, and within one hundred rods of high-water mark, for the purpose of taking and carrying away clams therefrom.

The action is trespass quare clausum, and the facts find that the defendants did not pass over, or enter upon the plaintiffs' upland, but that that they passed to the place from tide water in a boat, dug five bushels of clams, and placed them in their boat, and went away and carried the clams in their boat. It follows, of course, that they must have gone to the spot whilst the flats were so much covered with tide water as to float the boat, waited till low water, then dug the clams, and then waited until there was sufficient flood tide again to float their boat. This is the breach of the plaintiffs' close of which they complain.

There is no doubt that by the common law of England all the subjects of the king have a common and general right of fishing in the sea, and in all bays, coves, branches, and arms of the sea, which in general is held to extend to all places where tide ebbs and flows. The general rule is expressed by Lord Hale, De Jure Maris, Hargr. Law Tracts, 11, that all the people of England have a liberty of fishing in the sea, as of common right, and of this they cannot be lawfully deprived, even by the grant of the king. Carter v. Murcot, 4 Bur. 2162; Warren v. Matthews, 1 Salk. 357. This was conceded by all the judges, although divided in opinion in other respects, in the case of Blundell v. Caterall, 5 B. & Ald. 268.

And it is not at all inconsistent with this common and general right that the king is held to be owner of the soil under the sea, which royal right, by the common law of England, extends over the shore where the tide ebbs and flows to ordinary high-water mark. And it has been frequently held, that the king takes this right of soil in trust for the public, so far as the fishing is concerned; and although the king may grant away this right of soil to another, yet his grantee will take it subject to the same trust; and by such grant, however comprehensive in its terms, the public, that is, the king's subjects, cannot be deprived of their common right. This distinction between the jus pri- vatum of the Crown and the jus publicum of the people is strongly stated by Lord Hale, De Portibus Maris, and is confirmed in recent cases of high authority. Attorney-General v. Burridge, 10 Price, 350; Attorney-General v. Parmeter, 10 Price, 378; Parmeter v. Attorney-General, 10 Price, 412.

In some of the cases, it has been held that one may have an exclusive right of fishing in an arm of the sea; but this is not so prima facie, and must be proved by ancient grant. And it has been repeatedly held that such right cannot be founded on the king's grant, made within the time of memory; and that no such right could be conferred by authority of the Crown under Magna Charta. 2 Bl. Com. 39; Warren v. Mathews, 6 Mod. 73; Somerset v. Fogwell, 5 B. & C. 884.

The right of fishing in the sea, and in bays, arms of the sea, and in navigable or tide waters, under the free and masculine genius of the English common law, is a right, public and common to every person. 3 Kent Com. (6th ed.) 413. The same doctrine is stated and enforced by a large citation of authorities in 2 Dane Ab. 690, and in Angell on Tide Waters (2d ed.) 125, et seq.

In stating the principles, that by the common law the right of fishing may be public, although the soil in which it is used is private property, it is proper to add, that this public right may be regulated and abridged by the legislature, who have the control and guardianship of all public rights. In England this is often done by Act of Parliament, regulating ports and harbors, and authorizing wharves, docks, and other erections, which to some extent may abridge the public right of fishing. This is usually done in consideration of greater public good expected from such enclosures. The King v. Montague, 4 B. & C. 598.

This common and general right of fishing in the sea and its shores, at common law, being established, we think it is equally well determined by the authorities, that this right extended to shell-fish, as well those which are embedded in the soil as those which lie on the surface. Bagott v. Orr, 2 Bos. & Pul. 472; Martin v. Waddell, 16 Pet. 414; Peck v. Lockwood, 5 Day, 22.

Assuming that this was a common law right for all English subjects at the time of the emigration of our ancestors, we have no doubt, that by the charters of Charles I. and James I., under which the land of the colony of Massachusetts was granted, for the purpose of founding a colonial government of English subjects, all the rights to the sea and sea-shores, with the incidental rights of fishing, were granted to the colonists. It is unnecessary to inquire, whether the jus publicum, so far as general control and protection were concerned, remained to the Crown or not; all the right, both to the soil under the sea, as far as by the law of nations one government is conceded to hold an exclusive right to the sea-coasts, and to the shores and arms of the sea, where the sea ebbs and flows, did vest in the grantees under those charters. Whatever right or jurisdiction, if any, remained in the Crown after those grants, it is clear that it ceased on the establishment of independence, and has remained absolute in the States. Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212; Gough v. Bell, 1 Zab. 156.

If, then, the right of fishing on the shores of the sea, including the right to take shell-fish from the soil, was a common law right, extending to the English colonies generally, and especially to Massachusetts, the question is, whether anything has been done by the colonial or provincial government, or by the government of the Commonwealth, to impair or abridge that right.

Though the laws of the colony of Plymouth have been published within a few years, we believe that they contain no provision bearing on this subject. But the colony ordinance of 1641 is relied on, and we believe, mainly relied on, as giving to owners of land, bounding on tide waters, "proprietor," or right to the soil, so far as the tide ebbs and flows, where it does not ebb more than one hundred rods. The premises, in which the trespass in this case is assigned, lie in the town of Duxbury, within the limits of the old colony of Plymouth, and were not within the territorial jurisdiction of the colony of Massachusetts, when the ordinance in question was passed; and therefore that ordinance, as positive law, did not, proprio vigore, extend to this territory. But the great principle established by the colony ordinance, extending the right of soil of the upland owner to low-water mark, has been held to extend by long usage to Maine: Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 435; Codman v. Winslow, 10 Mass. 146; Lapish v. Bangor Bank, 8 Greenl. 85; to Plymouth: Barker v. Bates, 13 Pick. 255; and to Martha's Vineyard: Mayhew v. Norton, 17 Pick. 357; though all of these were under other territorial governments at the time the colony ordinance was passed. We have no doubt, therefore, that the plaintiff, as riparian owner, has the same proprietary interest in the soil as if it were within the old territory of Massachusetts.

But although the riparian proprietor has an interest in the soil, it is not an absolute and unqualified ownership; but so long as flats so situated are left open, unoccupied by any wharf, dock, or other enclosure, so long as the tide ebbs and flows over them, they so far retain their original character and remain public. This double rule, to which the territory lying between high and low water mark may be subject, is not a novelty in the law, but an old and recognized principle. In Sir Henry Constable's Case, 5 Co. 107, it was held that when the tide was up, the place, and acts done upon it, were within the jurisdiction of the admiralty; when bare, being within the body of the county, the common law had jurisdiction. It is quite certain, we think, that the mere fact, that the jus privatum, or right of soil, was vested in an individual owner, does not necessarily exclude the existence of a jus publicum, or right to the fishery in the public. The rule, established by usage and judicial decision, has been, that although the ordinance transfers the fee to the riparian owner, yet, until it is so used, built upon, or occupied, by the owner, as to exclude boats and vessels, the right of the public to use it is not taken away; but that whilst open to the natural ebb and flow of the tide, the public may use it, may sail over it, anchor upon it, fish upon it, and by so doing commit no trespass, and do not disseise the owner. Austin v. Carter, 1 Mass. 231.

This court are therefore of opinion that where flats are left wholly open to the natural ebb and flow of the tide, unoccupied and uninclosed by the upland proprietor, the right of fishing on the part of the public is not excluded; and that the law, in this respect, makes no difference between shell-fish, and swimming or floating fish. See Parker v. Cutler Milldam Co., 7 Shepl. 357.

The only remaining question is, whether there is any other Statute provision in force, which may take away or change the right, claimed by the defendants, to take clams in Duxbury. By Rev. Sts. c. 55, §§ 11, 12, all persons are prohibited from taking oysters from their beds, unless by permits there specified, with an exception that every inhabitant may take oysters, without a permit, for the use of his family. The shell-fish taken in this case were not oysters, nor does it appear that they were not taken by the defendants for the use of their families. Section thirteen prohibits the taking of other shell-fish, but it is limited to certain towns, of which Duxbury is not one. It was a revision of former particular Acts. All these also contain a proviso that they shall not prevent any fisherman from taking any quantity of shell-fish he may want for bait, not exceeding seven bushels at one time.

With these views of the law, the court are of opinion, upon the facts stated, that the action cannot be maintained.

PACKARD v. RYDER.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1887.

[Reported 144 Mass. 440.]

TORT, for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, in Bourne, and catching and carrying away from the waters within the plaintiff's premises ten trout. Trial in the Superior Court, without a jury, before Brigham, C. J., who allowed a bill of exceptions, in substance, as follows:—

It was agreed that on April 8, 1886, the defendant landed upon the plaintiff's flats, having come thereto by water, and landing from his boat. Thereupon, the tide being out, the defendant walked along the narrow strip of land or soil between high-water mark and low-water mark, in part consisting of shingle and gravel, and also in part covered with sedge grass, for the purpose of fishing; and he did, while so standing or walking, fish; that he was forbidden by the plaintiff, but continued so to stand, walk, and fish, claiming the right to do so; that the waters facing said shore are the open, navigable, tidal waters of Buzzard's Bay; that the damage done to the plaintiff's close was small; and that the defendant walked at times, in fishing as aforesaid, within one hundred rods of high-water mark, but he at no time went above high-water mark.

On these facts the judge found for the plaintiff; and the defendant alleged exceptions.

C. F. Chamberlayne, for the defendant.

HOLMES, J. It is now well settled that there is a public right to take shell-fish on the shore and flats below high-water mark and within one hundred rods of the upland, until the flats are enclosed by the proprietors. Weston v. Sampson, 8 Cush. 347; Durham v. Lamphere, 3 Gray, 268, 271; Lakeman v. Burnham, 7 Gray, 437; 9 Gray, 526, 527; Commonwealth v. Bailey, 13 Allen, 541, 542; Proctor v. Wells, 103 Mass. 216; Commonwealth v. Manimon, 136 Mass. 456, 458. But the right to take shell-fish is asserted on the single ground that the general right of fishing extends to and includes it. Weston v. Sampson, and Lakeman v. Burnham, ubi supra. The cases cited show too plainly for further discussion, that, if there is a right to go upon flats and to disturb the soil for clams, a fortiori there is a right to pass over them for fishing, in the stricter sense of the word. The defendant did not set nets, or create any permanent obstruction, as in Duncan v. Sylvester, 24 Me. 482.

Exceptions sustained.

NOTE.—In some States the owner of the upland has the fee of the shore,—Maine: Lapish v. Bangor Bank, 8 Greenl. 85; New Hampshire: Clement v. Burns, 43 *N. In other States the owner of the upland has the right to fill up front-lying flats, and the land filled in becomes his fee,—Rhode Island: *Providence Steam Engine Co. v. B. Rivers and Lakes.

NOTE.—In the Case of the Royal Fishery of the Banne (1610), Davies, 149, it was resolved by the Irish judges “that the River Banne, so far as the sea flows and ebbs in it, is a royal river; and the fishery of salmon there is a royal fishery, which belongs to the king, as a several fishery, and not to those who have the soil on each side of the water. But on the other part it was agreed that every inland river not navigable, appertains to the owners of the soil, where it hath its course, 28 Ass. p. 93, and if such river runneth between two manors, and is the mear and boundary between them, the one moiety of the river and fishery belongeth to one lord, and the other moiety to the other.”

YOUNG'S CASE.

NISI PRIUS BEFORE HOLT, C. J. 1698.

[Reported 1 Ld. Raym. 725.]

It was ruled at nisi prius at Westminster, the first sitting after Michaelmas Term, 10 Will. 3, that every man of common right may justify the going of his servants or of his horses upon the banks of navigable rivers, for towing barges, &c., to whomsoever the right of the soil belongs, and if the water of the river impairs and decreases the banks, &c., then they shall have reasonable way for that purpose in the nearest part of the field next adjoining to the river. And he compared it to the case, where there is a way through a great open field, which way becomes foundering, the travellers may justify the going over the outlets of the land not inclosed next adjoining.¹

BALL v. HERBERT.

KING'S BENCH. 1789.

[Reported 3 T. R. 253.]

TRESPASS for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, being part of an artificial bank adjoining to the River Ouse, at Wiggenhall, in Norfolk, and treading down the grass with men and with horses, and fixing lines, &c., to certain barges, and drawing and towing those barges.

Plea, that the port of King's Lynn in the said county hath been immemorially a common and public port for all the king's subjects; and that the River Ouse hath been immemorially a public king's highway and navigable river, where the tide flows and reflows, leading between the port of King's Lynn and the village of Stow in the same county, to wit at Wiggenhall, for boats, barges, and lighters, &c., at all times of the year, &c. That the close in which, &c., hath been immemorially part of the banks of and adjoining the said highway and navigable river. That the defendant at the time when, &c., was possessed of the several boats, barges, and lighters, in the declaration mentioned, which were laden with goods and merchandises, and passing up and down the said highway and navigable river, and going to and from the said port of King's Lynn ; by reason whereof, &c., he entered with his said horses, &c., and drew and towed his said boats, &c., as stated in the declaration.

To this there was a general demurrer and joinder.

Graham, for the plaintiff.

Wilson, for the defendant.

LORD KENYON, CH. J. I remember when the case of Pierse v. Lord Fauconberg [1 Burr. 292] was sent here from the Court of Chancery, it was the current opinion of Westminster Hall that the right of towing depended upon usage, without which it could not exist. It has been said that this right now in question is of great importance to the navigation through several counties ; now if this navigation has been carried on for a series of years, and this right of towing constantly exercised, there would be abundant usage on which it might be supported. But that is abandoned, and the defendant resorts to the common law right. Now common law rights are either to be found in the opinions of lawyers, delivered as axioms, or to be collected from the universal and immemorial usage throughout the country. That the right now in question is not to be collected from the unanimous current of authorities, is manifest. Very little is to be found in the books upon the subject, the whole of which down to his time Lord Hale has collected ; and after commenting upon it, he seems to have formed an opinion against the right ; for he says that, where private interests are involved in the question, they shall not be infringed without a satisfaction being made to the parties injured. But on what ground can a common law right stand, if satisfaction is to be made for the enjoyment of it, and that satisfaction not ascertained ? It must resolve itself into an agreement between the parties, and cannot be considered as a right to use the banks indefinitely. And some of the passages in Lord Hale, which seem to favor the common law right, are rather applicable to banks of the sea, and to ports ; and it is part of the king's prerogative to create ports, which was lately exercised at Liverpool. Then is this bottomed on immemorial usage : the right is not claimed on one side or the other as is most convenient, but on both sides of the river. But that is directly contrary to common experience ; for if we look at any of the great public rivers, we shall find that it is not used, although it would be highly convenient to the persons using the navigations. On the contrary, the navigators are obliged at several places to pass from one side of the Thames to the other, with great inconvenience and delay ; that is the case by the Duke of Montague's gardens between Richmond and Kew, and in various other parts. Such is the right on that river, the quantum of which is ascertained by the usage. That there is such a custom on most of the navigable rivers, no person doubts, but still the right is founded solely on the custom ; but here the claim is set up without any custom at all. The authorities which have been mentioned are very few. The case in Lord Raymond, 1 Ld. Raym. 725, though before an eminent judge, was only a nisi prius decision. It is a short note, vid. 1 Burr. 36, taken by Lord Raymond when he was very young; not even the name of the case is given; and it does not appear what the case was, or how the question arose: I rather think the principal question there was whether, when a right of passage was ascertained, and that was foundering, the party entitled might not go on the adjoining land. However, at most it is only an opinion delivered at nisi prius; opposed to which is that of Lord Ch. J. Willes in the case cited. And Lord Hardwicke's opinion was against the right, as is evident from the manner in which he sent the case of Peirse v. Ld. Fauconberg into this court, which was very fully considered. Therefore, on these authorities, on the silence in the books respecting this common law right, and on account of the extreme inconvenience to which individuals having lands adjoining the public rivers would be subject, I cannot bring my mind to say that the defendant's justification can be supported. Perhaps small evidence of usage before a jury would establish a right by custom on the ground of public convenience; but the right here claimed extends to every bank of every navigable river throughout the kingdom.

ASHHURST, J. I am of opinion, first, that no such general right exists as that claimed; and, secondly, if any qualified right could be supported, the defendant's plea is not adapted to it. As to the first, it seems extraordinary (if there be any such right) that it is not defined with greater certainty in any of our law books. For it is a right that in its nature must, if it existed, be subject to some restrictions; as that it should be exercised only on one, and that the most convenient, side of the river; for it would in many instances be a very oppressive right if it could be claimed on both sides. The state of property on the Thames is strong evidence to show that no such general right exists; for there is no instance in any part of the banks of that river where the right is claimed on both sides; and yet the defendant's claim would go to establish a right on both sides. The instances which have been mentioned where the right of towing has been given by several Acts of Parliament, also negative the idea of general right; for we are not to suppose that rights should from time to time have been given by the Legislature which existed before; and it is no answer to say that such provisions were inserted ex abundanti cautela. And the reason assigned by the defendant's counsel why such a right was given by the 24 Geo. 2, c. 8, namely, because that part of the river was not navigable before, is not satisfactory; for when once a river becomes navigable, or, in other words, when it is made a common highway for all the king's subjects, that right would immediately attach. On the general ground therefore I think no general right of towing exists. But then it was contended that a right might be supported on making a reasonable compensation to the owner of the land. Lord Hale touches this right very tenderly; for he says that it does not exist without making a reasonable satisfaction. But it is not necessary to enter into that question here; because, if it were a right sub modo, it ought to have been so claimed in pleading. And even if such a right existed, the party should either pay or tender a reasonable satisfaction in order to give them that right. For it would be to no purpose to give the owner merely a right of action to recover that compensation, when it is to be enforced against strangers passing by, whom the owner cannot know, and who perhaps may be foreigners.

BULLER, J. The defendant's plea on this record rests wholly on a general common law right; in deciding which it is not necessary to go into the question, which has been made respecting the mode of pleading. This being claimed as a common law right, it can only be proved to exist by one of the ways mentioned by my Lord. As to the general usage throughout the kingdom of which the court is obliged to take notice, that clearly does not exist. Then the question is whether in our books, or on records, that right is established for which the defendant contends. The case in Lord Raymond is a very loose and inaccurate note. Another authority cited is the passage in Bracton, and quoted by Callis; that plainly appears to have been taken from Justinian, and is only part of the civil law; and whether or not that has been adopted by the common law is to be seen by looking into our books; and there it is not to be found. Callis compares a navigable river to an highway; but no two cases can be more distinct. In the latter case, if the way be foundering and out of repair, the public have a right to go on the adjoining land: but if a river should happen to be choked up with mud, that would not give the public a right to cut another passage through the adjoining lands. Therefore I am of opinion that no common law right of towing exists. But I wish not to be precluded by this determination from giving an opinion on the question, which has been made on the pleadings, whenever it shall arise in future. At present I cannot agree with what has been said on that head. This is not like the case of toll thorough. The distinction, which has been made between toll thorough and toll traverse, is not where the question arises on a defence merely, but where the right itself of taking toll has come in question. And the distinction taken is, that the party, who claims toll thorough must show a consideration for it, because it is against common right; but in the case of toll traverse, no consideration need be shown, because that is not against common right. Then if the defendant is right in saying that by the common law he has a right to go on the banks of navigable rivers, he need not show any consideration, and the owner of the land would not be entitled to any satisfaction till after the defendant had used the towing-path. Customs, which are consistent, may be pleaded against each other. And the party pleading a general custom need not show the modification of it, which is not inconsistent with the right claimed by him. The case of Kenchin v. Knight, 1 Wils. 253, is strong to this point: there the defendant pleaded a custom to put swine upon a common; to which the plaintiff replied that he could only put in such swine as were rung, without traversing the custom set up in the plea : and the replication was held good on demurrer, because the customs were not inconsistent. Now here, if every subject has a right to tow on the banks making a reasonable satisfaction, it is not necessary for the party to plead such satisfaction, because that claim arises afterwards. And if it were otherwise, it would be attended with manifest inconvenience ; because, the sum not being ascertained, it would be a perpetual dispute between the owners of the barges and the land-owners how much should be paid, which would be destructive of the right of the public, and the navigation would be stopped till the quantum was ascertained. I have said thus much on the subject lest I should be precluded from considering the question, whenever it should arise ; but in the present case I am of opinion against the common law right. In addition to the observations made on the cases cited, I think that the instances of the three great rivers alluded to are very strong against the right. From what passed in the case of Vernon v. Prior, it seems as if Lord Ch. J. Willes entertained a wish that the public should have this right, and yet he could find no legal ground on which to support it ; for the application to Parliament in 1748 is said to have been made with his approbation. On the River Trent there have been some claims of this sort of a more recent date not unworthy notice. The persons passing there with barges endeavored to set up this right, in consequence of which several actions were brought against the barge-owners, who, on being advised that they could not support the right, suffered judgment to go by default. But they still continued their towing, on which actions were again brought against sixty or seventy persons at the same time, and then they abandoned their claim. The state of the banks of the Thames also affords a strong argument against this common law right ; for if it exist, all the houses built on those banks must be considered as nuisances.

GROSE, J. It is enough for me at present to say that I perfectly agree in the general position, that there is not any general common law right of towing.

ACTION for disturbing plaintiff's fishery in the River Tweed. It was proved that defendant's ship was moored against a rock on the bank of the river, where she delivered her cargo, and that plaintiff was prevented by the situation of the ship from taking so many fish as he would otherwise have done. It further appeared, that ships frequently lay there, waiting for a wind, and that there were mooring rings upon the rock, to one of which the ship in question was fastened.

Wood, B. A navigable river is a public highway ; and all persons have a right to come there in ships, and to unload, moor, and stay there as long as they please. Nevertheless, if they abuse that right so as to work a private injury, they are liable to an action. The question will therefore be, whether the defendant has abused his right? The privilege of the plaintiff must be subservient to the right of the public. It would be of very mischievous consequences if the owner of a fishery could prescribe to the public how and where they are to moor in a navigable river. The only case I remember like this, was where a man obstinately refused to move his ship from opposite a wharf, although it would have been just the same if he had moved a little one way or the other; and therefore he abused his right, and the plaintiff recovered. The defendant had a right to moor and remain where his ship lay, as long as convenience required. Yet if he acted wantonly and maliciously for the purpose of injuring the fishery, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict, but not otherwise.¹

CHANCERY DIVISION. 1877.

[Reported 5 Ch. D. 713.]

THE plaintiffs, who were coal-merchants, were lessees and occupiers of a wharf known as Keepier Wharf, abutting on the River Thames at Ratcliff, having a frontage of 125 feet on the river. On the west side of the said wharf was a wharf and a dock known as Ratcliff Cross Dock, occupied by the defendant, and abutting on the river. On the east side of Keepier Wharf was a public landing-place projecting on the river, and preventing any vessel lying alongside the said wharf from overlapping on the east side of such wharf.

The plaintiffs issued their writ on the 25th of November, 1875.

The statement of claim alleged that the plaintiffs, in the ordinary course of their business, employed a steam collier known as the Ludworth, which was brought alongside their wharf for the purpose of unloading, and that this vessel, being 175 feet in keel, and not being able to overlap on the east side of the wharf, was obliged to overlap the adjoining wharf of the defendant.

It was further alleged that the defendant had lately moored or attached by iron chains to the extremity of his wharf, next to that of the plaintiffs', large wooden obstructions, and that such obstructions floated on the river when the tide was up, and projected for some distance into the river, and prevented the plaintiffs from bringing the Ludworth alongside their wharf and there unloading it; that such obstructions amounted to a public nuisance, as interfering with the navigation of the river, and the plaintiffs had requested the Conservators of the Thames to remove them, but they had declined to interfere; and that such obstructions occasioned special and serious damage to the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs claimed that the defendant might be restrained from allowing the said obstructions to remain so as to prevent the Ludworth from coming and remaining alongside their wharf for the purpose of unloading; and that the damage sustained by the plaintiffs from the acts of the defendant might be assessed and paid to them by the defendant.

An interim injunction was obtained by the plaintiffs.

The defendant, by his statement of defence and counter-claim, delivered the 6th of March, 1876, stated that the entrance to his dock called Ratcliff Cross Dock, was 41 feet wide, and the east side of such entrance was 48 feet distant from the west side of Keepier Wharf; that the Ludworth when moored alongside Keepier Wharf, overlapped the defendant's wharf and dock 52 feet, her stern extending 5 feet in front of the dock gates, and at low water she lay on the foreshore between high and low water, and rested on the campshed and piles in front of the defendant's wharf; that the wooden obstructions referred to in the statement of claim were merely an ordinary raft of timber for the use of the defendant; that it had always been the custom on the River Thames for owners of dry docks to moor such rafts of timber in front of their wharves, and that the defendant's raft was so moored by permission of the Conservators of the Thames. The defendant denied that the raft was a public nuisance, or occasioned any damage or loss to the plaintiffs.

The defendant, by way of counter-claim, stated that the plaintiffs had on several occasions moored the Ludworth so as to overlap the defendant's wharf, and so moored her at unreasonable times, and kept her so moored for an unreasonable time, thus depriving the defendant of all access to, and the use of the frontage to that part of his wharf which lay between his dock-gates and the plaintiff company's wharf, and was a serious and dangerous obstruction to the access to the defendant's dock, and vessels entering and leaving the same were exposed to great risk of collision with the steamer, and that by reason of such obstruction the defendant was obliged to employ more time and labor in docking and undocking ships than would otherwise be necessary. The defendant alleged that on one occasion the Ludworth remained moored for twenty hours, thereby greatly delaying the undocking of a vessel.

The defendant claimed that the plaintiffs might be restrained by injunction from mooring the Ludworth, or any other vessel, so as to obstruct the access to the defendant's dock and wharf; secondly, that if the court should be of opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled so to moor their steamer or other vessel, that they might be restrained from doing so except at reasonable times, and from keeping it so moored, except for a reasonable time; thirdly, that damages might be awarded to the defendant in respect of the wrongful acts of the plaintiffs.

It appeared that there had been for a considerable time an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant, under which the plaintiffs were authorized to berth the Ludworth opposite their wharf at a distance of about twenty-five feet, but not so as to interfere with the access of vessels to and from the defendant's dock. This agreement expired on the 10th of October, 1875.

Witnesses were examined on behalf of the plaintiffs and the defendant. It appeared that the plaintiffs' wharf had been used for the purposes of their trade for twenty-three years ; that the steam-collier, though overlapping the defendant's wharf, did not, in fact, interfere with access thereto, inasmuch as the defendant admitted that he did not use the premises for the purposes of a wharf. The defendant said that the raft complained of by the plaintiffs was a raft of timber logs used for the purpose of his business as a repairer of ships, but admitted that after the said agreement came to an end it was attached to his wharf in such way as to obstruct the access of the collier to the plaintiffs' wharf.

With regard to the alleged interference with the access of vessels to and from the defendant's dock, according to the defendant's evidence, about seventy vessels came in and out of his dock in the course of the year : sometimes two vessels entered or left the dock the same day. The time when free access was required to the dock-gates was two hours and a half or three hours before the flood-tide. Evidence was adduced for the purpose of showing that when the collier was at her moorings there was greater risk to vessels entering or leaving the dock than at other times, and that the employment of additional hands had occasionally been rendered necessary.

What is the law, first of all, as regards obstruction ? The plaintiffs say in effect, "The Thames is a public highway navigable by all her Majesty's subjects in a reasonable manner and for reasonable purposes, and the defendant has no right to obstruct the highway." The first question is, Do the plaintiffs navigate it in a reasonable manner and for a reasonable purpose ? Unquestionably they do. The vessel they use is not a long vessel compared with others in the trade for which it is used. It is not denied that it is a vessel of ordinary length. Some are longer, and some are shorter. It is a reasonable vessel for the purpose. It comes for a reasonable and proper purpose, to bring coal to the Thames, where coal has been delivered now for ages ; and it comes to a wharf which has been used certainly for twenty-three years, and probably for longer, as a coal wharf. Therefore they are using the river for a reasonable purpose with a reasonable vessel and in a reasonable way. They have a right to go to their own wharf, and not the less a right because in mooring the vessel out in the stream, twenty-five feet from the shore, that vessel projects over some other wharf or some other part of the shore. There is no law which says that your vessel shall be the exact length of your wharf and no longer, any more than there is any law that your carriage, or your wagon, shall be the exact length of the breadth of your door, or your frontage to the street. It is not illegal to bring in a coal wagon which is a good deal longer than the frontage of your house, in front of your house to deliver the coal ; otherwise people who have small houses could never have a coal wagon full of coals. Nobody says that anything of the sort is illegal. Consequently, all that they have done was perfectly legal, perfectly right, and perfectly usual, — subject to what I am going to say.

In ascertaining, however, the reasonableness of the acts of the plaintiffs, one consideration must not be overlooked. Besides a reasonable right of access, they have a reasonable right of stopping, as well as of going and returning in the use of the highway. But what is a reasonable right of stopping ? That must depend upon circumstances. You cannot lay down a priori what is reasonable. You must know all the circumstances. It would be clearly reasonable, for instance, if a wheel came off an omnibus in the middle of a highway, for a blacksmith to be sent for to put the wheel on the omnibus if that were the easiest mode of moving it out of the way, and the omnibus might lawfully stop there until the wheel was put on, in order to take it out of the way, if that were the best mode of taking it out of the way and a reasonable and usual mode. Nobody would deny that if the blacksmith chose to carry on his trade of repairing omnibuses immediately opposite his own house, and, for that purpose, not keeping any one omnibus more than a reasonable time for his work, he kept omnibuses opposite his house, or shop, or smithy-door for that purpose, that would be an obstruction of the highway, and would be a nuisance. You must look at the circumstances. So, again, it is perfectly reasonable that A. shall put his carriage before his house door, even although it may overlap his neighbor's door. For instance, take the houses which have been divided, — houses in Portland Place ; that is a familiar instance to me, and I dare say to most of us, — where two doors immediately adjoin. It is impossible to draw up a carriage to the one without overlapping the other. There is no doubt that it is quite a reasonable thing to stop a carriage there for the purpose of taking up and setting down, or even for the purpose of waiting there a reasonable time. But suppose the neighbor's carriage comes up, and wants either to take up or to set down, it would be monstrous to hold that the coachman of the first carriage should not move out of the way. It would then become unreasonable. When he sees the neighbor's carriage coming up, he is then bound to get out of the way, and he commits a private nuisance to his neighbor, in the nature of a public nuisance, by stopping before his door and preventing his coming up, he not requiring to stop there. In that case, therefore, if he persisted in doing this day after day, I have no doubt that his neighbors might bring an action against him and get, no doubt, nominal damages ; but nominal damages would establish the right and carry the costs. That is a simple illustration of what I mean.

In the same way it is not unreasonable that your neighbor should give an evening party occasionally, and that there should be a file of carriages running across your door or opposite your door. But it would be very unreasonable if anybody did not break the file to allow your carriage to come up to your own door, and still more unreasonable if, instead of giving parties occasionally, as people do, your neighbor were to turn his house into an assembly room or for some private purpose, in consequence of which a file of carriages came every day, and obstructed the carriage-way to your house. I only give these as illustrations. The law is quite clear. The question of reasonableness has been said to be a question for a jury. It must be reasonable user, and nothing else.

Let me try this question of reasonable user as regards the collier, as I will afterwards with respect to what is alleged in the counter-claim. Is it reasonable, when there are two wharves on the Thames, and one man has a wharf of a certain length and another of a certain length, and the length of one wharf is less than the length of the steam-collier which comes opposite to it, that that steam-collier should stop opposite the other man's wharf and impede the access thereto? I say that is utterly unreasonable: each man has a property in his wharf, a profitable property, and he has a reasonable right of access, the same as his neighbor; and, therefore, if he were using the wharf for vessels alongside of it, as the other was using the wharf for vessels alongside of it, what right has the one to impede the access of the other? As a general rule he has no such right. Where, however, the one is not using his wharf for that purpose, which is the case here, he cannot object to his neighbor's vessel lying opposite in the river, because it does not injure him. If this defendant had been carrying on the business of a wharfinger and using it for vessels coming up, I should have held it most unreasonable for the collier to stand in the way to prevent his carrying on his trade in the regular way. It would be, in fact, an attempt by the plaintiffs to appropriate, without payment, the use of the defendant's wharf when both were carrying on the trade. But, in the present case, it is not so. The defendant has never used his wharf as a wharf, but has merely made use of his property in a legal way, as he has a right to do, as a kind of dry dock for the repairing of vessels; and the only access he wants is useful and commodious access for his vessels through the gates of the dry dock when he is docking and undocking vessels. It follows from what I have said, that the plaintiffs have no right to come there and stop there so as to impede that access. If they do come there and stop there before his wharf so as to impede his reasonable access to his dock-gates, I should say they were committing a nuisance, and liable to an action.

What does that mean? It means this, that they must not stop opposite to the entrance of the defendant's dock during the hours he wants it. He does not want it every day. This is proved in evidence by himself.

His evidence shows that he uses his dock for about 100 days in the year.

It follows that every other day in the year except those 100 days the plaintiffs have a clear right, which ought not to be interfered with; because the defendant does not use his wharf for any other purpose, and even on these 100 days he does not want it all day. According to his account, he wants it for two hours and a half or three hours before the flood-tide.

Therefore the steamer has a right to be there, as far as he is concerned, for all the other hours of the day. But supposing it is there opposite his dock-gates when he wants to dock and undock, it ought to go out of the way. It has no right to be there, and when it is asked to go out of the way it should go out of the way; and even without asking, when they see that a vessel is coming up to be docked or undocked, it ought to go out of the way. But still it has a right to be there, moving out of the way when it is impeding the access. It is merely lying in the river, a public highway, for a lawful purpose, — for discharging its cargo, — and therefore it has a right to be there. That being so, it follows from what I have said that the defendant had no right to stop the access of the vessel to its berth. The steam-collier had a right to go to her berth, a right to navigate the river, and be in the river, and she had a clear right to do so two thirds of the days in the year, and for nine tenths of every day of the remaining 100 days. Now, what the defendant has done is this: he has stopped her getting there at all. He has put an obstruction in the river which prevents her getting there any day of the year, or at any time, — which clearly is wrong. As to the way the obstruction is fastened, that does not matter. The defendant himself said it was fastened to the wharf in such a way, and purposely so fastened, that the plaintiffs' vessel could not get up at all to her berth. It was intended to be so. That was clearly an illegal obstruction in the public highway.

One need not discuss the exact nature of the obstruction, or how it was fastened, because it was admitted that it was fastened in such a way as to prevent, and did prevent, the collier getting up. Therefore that obstruction was unlawful.

I will notice the two justifications, or attempted justifications, which were made for putting it there. First of all, it was said that it was put there, being in fact a raft of timber logs which were used by the defendant in his business as a repairer of ships, and that he had a right to put his logs there. That, in my opinion, is no defence at all. You have no right to obstruct a public highway; whether it is useful to yourself or not, that is quite immaterial. It is no answer to say that you use it for carrying on your business. The answer is, that the Thames is not a timber pond. You have no right to make that use of the Thames, which is a navigable highway. No doubt it may be done where it does not interfere with the access of the public, — it may happen on other parts of the river, where it does not interfere with the vessels going or returning, passing or repassing, because the Conservators may not interfere, and may allow you to moor timber. But it is quite plain that that is not the proper mode of using the highway. It is not a reasonable use of the highway to keep your timber logs there for a longer time than is necessary to take them to your dock. You must not keep them there as a reserve, to be used in the same manner as a timber dock. It is no answer at all. Then, if you do moor timbers there, you must not fix them in such a way that vessels cannot get up to the adjoining wharf; because the real point in the case and the gravamen of the charge against the defendant is that he prevents the access of the plaintiffs' vessel. Therefore his so fixing the timber would be wrong.

The other ground of defence which struck me as a very odd one was this, that the defendant knew the plaintiffs' vessel would stay there for a long time, and therefore he had a right to obstruct her. The answer is, he could not know it beforehand, because, as I have said before, he might have obstructed her for every day in the year, at least for two thirds of the days, when it would have been no injury to him if she did not stay an unreasonable time, and, even on other days, how could he tell beforehand that she was going to stay an unreasonable time? It seems to me to be no defence whatever as regards the plaintiffs' action, which, in my view of the law, is an undefended action.

Now, I come to the counter-claim. I have already ruled that the counter-claim, as regards damages, is confined to the writ. The counter-claim is founded, as I understand, upon nuisance. I have already said that if even less than is alleged in the counter-claim were proved, the defendant would be entitled to succeed in the action. I do not say that it is necessary to prove a case of danger. Interference with reasonable access to his own property is, in my own opinion, such a nuisance as would maintain an action. But as a good deal of evidence has been gone into upon that point of danger, I must say that in my opinion, although I think there was some slight additional risk, there was really nothing of any importance as regards danger; and I think the defendant's own conduct shows it. He is a reasonable man of business; and if there were any serious danger, he would not have allowed the vessels to be docked and undocked whilst the collier was there. I think more of men's conduct than men's opinions. But, as regards expense, there is clearly additional expense. The plaintiffs have no right to impose even an addition of two men for two or three hours on the defendant; and they have no right, as I said before, to interfere with his reasonable access, and if this had been proved, I should have given, no doubt, very small damages; but I should not have granted an injunction, for this reason, that the plaintiffs do not claim a right to obstruct. They deny the obstruction.

This being the state of the matter, although I think the defendant's contention reasonable to this extent, that he has a right to say that the plaintiffs shall not deprive him of a valuable property which belongs to him, by keeping their collier opposite his wharf for an unreasonable time and for an unreasonable purpose, still, as he has not made out that case at present, there are no grounds upon which I can give him judgment on his counter-claim.

Therefore, all that remains for me is to make the injunction, which I have already granted, perpetual, and to give the plaintiffs the costs of the action.

REECE v. MILLER.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION. 1882.

[Reported 8 Q. B. D. 626.]

CASE stated by justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, the facts of which were in substance as follows.

An information had been laid on behalf of the respondents, in which it was alleged that the appellant, on the 7th day of October, 1881, at Cadorey, in the county of Monmouth, did attempt to take fish in the River Wye, wherein the respondents had a private right of fishery (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43).

The case came on for hearing upon the 19th day of November, 1881, when the appellant appeared and admitted the act of fishing as alleged in the information, but alleged that the Wye was an ancient navigable river, and also tidal at the spot in question, which facts, he alleged, raised a presumption that the public had a right to fish there, that he as one of the public claimed such right, and that this claim ousted the jurisdiction of the justices to hear the case.

On the part of the respondents it was contended, first, that the River Wye, although an ancient navigable river, was not at the spot in question tidal, and therefore the presumption referred to by the appellant did not arise; and secondly, that, even if it was tidal, in the face of the evidence they were ready to produce in support of their claim to a private fishery, the claim of the appellant was unreasonable, and not such a one as ought to oust the jurisdiction of the justices. The justices decided to hear the evidence on both points, and found as follows. With regard to the question whether the river was tidal or not at this spot, it was proved that the water was not salt there, and that in ordinary tides it was unaffected by any tidal influence, but that upon the occasion of very high tides the rising of the salt water in the lower parts of the river dammed back the fresh water and caused it upon those occasions to rise and fall with the flow and ebb of the Severn tide at the place in question, which rise and fall, and not the saltiness of the water, constituted, the appellant contended, a tidal river. With regard to the title to a private fishery, it was shown that the respondents held it under a lease under seal granted by the Duke of Beaufort. It was also proved by evidence, partly documentary and partly oral, that the duke had received rent for the fishery from the year 1777 continuously down to the commencement of the respondents' tenancy. There were also produced a grant from the Crown in the reign of Edward VI., by which the manor of Trelleck, with the fisheries attached, which included the fishery in question, was granted to William Herbert; proceedings on a quo warranto in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by which the title of the then Earl of Pembroke under the grant aforesaid was inquired into and confirmed; a lease of the fishery granted in 1804 by the Duke of Beaufort to Edward Lucas; and two certificates granted by the Fishery Commissioners in 1868, by which the right of the Duke of Beaufort to maintain various fixed engines in the fishery was established. Evidence was given by a witness eighty-one years of age that he had fished the waters nearly all his life without making any payment to any one.

The justices convicted the appellant, and fined him five shillings, with costs.

The question for the court was, whether the claim of right set up by the appellant was sufficient to oust the jurisdiction of the justices.

Cripps, for the appellant.

Reid, for the respondents.

GROVE, J. I am of opinion that there was not in the present case any such reasonable claim of right as to oust the jurisdiction of the magistrates. The appellant claimed to fish as one of the public, and could only so claim on the ground that the water in which he was fishing was a tidal navigable river. The only evidence of any exercise of the right claimed on the part of the public was given by a witness eighty-one years of age, who had fished without making any payment to any one. There is no evidence under what circumstances he fished, and the evidence of the exercise of this right is so slight as to come to nothing. The evidence as to the character of the River Wye at the spot in question was that the water was not salt there, and that in ordinary tides it was unaffected by any tidal influence, but that upon the occasion of very high tides the rising of the salt water in the lower parts of the river dammed back the fresh water, and caused it upon those occasions to rise and fall with the flow and ebb of the tide. The question what constitutes a tidal navigable river has been discussed in various cases, and in my judgment a river is not rendered tidal, for this purpose, at the place in question by the fact that it may be affected by the tide as described in this case on the occasion of unusually high tides, when the action of the tide is reinforced by a strong wind, or some such exceptional circumstance causes the tide to rise unusually high. In order that the river may be tidal at the spot in question it may not be necessary that the water should be salt, but it seems to me that the spot must be one where the tide in the ordinary and regular course of things flows and reflows. There is no case which shows that, because at exceptionally high tides some portion of the river is dammed up and prevented from flowing down, and so rises and falls with the tide, that portion of the river can be called tidal. It is unnecessary to go through all the authorities on the subject. In Hale, De Jure Maris; Hargrave's Law Tracts, 12, the public right of fishing in rivers is treated of in connection with the king's interest in arms of the sea. There seems strong ground, from the whole of the passage, for thinking that the public right of fishing was considered by the author as coextensive with the right of the Crown over the river for public purposes. Lord Hale, C. J., there says: "Herein there will be these things examinable: 1st. What shall be said the shore or littus maris; 2d. What shall be said an arm or creek of the sea. . . . For the first of these, it is certain that that which the sea overflows either at high spring tides or at extraordinary tides comes not as to this purpose under the denomination littus maris, and consequently the king's title is not of that large extent, but to land that is usually overflowed at ordinary tides. . . . For the second, that is called an arm of the sea where the sea flows and reflows; so that the river of Thames above Kingston, and the river of Severn above Tewkesbury, though they are public rivers, are not arms of the sea. But it seems that although the water be fresh at high water, yet the denomination of an arm of the sea continues if it flow and reflow as in Thames above the bridge."

In the present case there is no regular flow and reflow of the tide at the spot in question, but only an occasional damming back of the water. The law on the subject of the right of the public to fish in rivers is laid down in the case of Mussett v. Burch, 35 L. T. N. S. 486, by Cleasby, B. He says: "The case in the Irish Reports, Murphy v. Ryan, Ir. Rep. 2 C. L. 143, is decisive on the point before us. It expressly decides that the public cannot acquire by immemorial usage any right of fishing in a river in which, though it be navigable, the tide does not ebb and flow."

For this purpose, as I have already said, it seems to me that "tidal navigable river" means that part of the river which under ordinary circumstances is tidal and navigable as such, and it is not enough to show that sometimes, under unusual circumstances, the river at the place in question is affected by the tide. For the purposes of the right claimed, the place must be one which may be fairly said to be within the influence of the ebb and flow of the tides in the ordinary course of things. It does not seem to me reasonable that, in every part of a river which may be affected by exceptionally high tides, and in which the water may be occasionally to some extent backed up in consequence, there should be a public right of fishing. For these reasons I do not think that in the present case any reasonable claim to a public right of fishing was made out. That being so, Hargreaves v. Diddams, Law Rep. 10 Q. B. 582, and Hudson v. Macrae, 4 B. & S. 585, are authorities to show that the jurisdiction of the justices was not ousted. It may be observed that the evidence of a private right of fishing was very strong, though, if the appellant had made out a good prima facie title to fish as one of the public, it might not perhaps be competent to us to consider that. It does, however, seem material as negativing any exercise by the public of the supposed right set up by the appellant. For these reasons I am of opinion that the conviction was right.

STEPHEN, J. I am of the same opinion. The whole question comes ultimately into a very narrow compass. The only claim set up is one of a right on the part of the public to fish in a navigable tidal river. The fact that the flow of water is affected as described under peculiar and exceptional circumstances, is not, in my opinion, sufficient to make this a tidal river within the meaning of the authorities on this subject. The case of Horne v. McKenzie, 6 Cl. & F. 628, has been relied on by the appellant; but the question there was quite different from that in the present case. The question there was not what constitutes a tide, but what for the purposes of Salmon Fishery Acts was to be considered river, and what sea. The case of Reg. v. Burrow, 34 J. P. 53, which has been cited, was also quite different from the present, inasmuch as it related to a lake, and the claim was made by the occupier of a certain cottage who claimed in respect of such occupation, and not as one of the public. I think the conviction should be affirmed.

CARSON v. BLAZER.

NISI PRIUS IN PENNSYLVANIA. 1807.

[Reported 2 Binn. 475.]

TRESPASS quare clausum fregit. The declaration stated that the defendants, "on the 10th day of April, 1803, with force and arms, &c., broke and entered the close of the plaintiff in the River Susquehanna, in the township of lower Paxton, in the county of Dauphin, and trod down his grass to the value of ten dollars there growing, and broke and entered into the several fishery of the plaintiff in the said river, in the township and county aforesaid, and then and there took 1000 shad of the value of two hundred dollars, and other wrongs did, &c., to the plaintiff's damage three hundred dollars." Plea, Not guilty, with leave to justify.

On the trial before the Chief Justice at Harrisburg in April, 1807, the plaintiff deduced a title to himself from the late proprietaries, by warrant of 24th September, 1736, for 228 acres of land adjoining the Susquehanna, and immediately opposite to the fishery in question. The patent under which he held, stated the tract to begin at a birch tree by the river, thence by certain courses and distances to a red oak by the same river, and thence by the same the several courses thereof, to the place of beginning; no part of the land in the bed of the Susquehanna being expressly covered by the patent. The brother of the plaintiff, who was the former proprietor of the land, first cleared out a pool for a shad fishery between his own shore and a sand bank in the river about 200 yards distant, in the year 1773; and afterwards fished there.

Blazer, one of the defendants, made some further clearing in the pool near the sand-bank in 1796, and he and his sons fished in it from the sand-bank, at first without any opposition by the plaintiff; but he afterwards told them to desist, and brought the present action for drawing their seine in the pool, in the spring of 1803. There was but one pool or fishing place between the plaintiff's shore and the sand-bank. A net of the usual length would sweep the whole of it; and one of the witnesses swore that the defendants, in drawing their seine, came within fifteen or twenty yards of the plaintiff's shore.

Upon these facts the material question was, whether the plaintiff had an exclusive fishery in the Susquehanna opposite to his land, and on this point the Chief Justice charged the jury in substance as follows :

TILGHMAN, C. J. If the plaintiff has an exclusive right, it must be founded, either 1, on a grant from the late proprietaries ; or 2, on prescription ; or 3, on the principles of the common law adopted in this country.

1. King Charles the Second granted to William Penn the soil of Pennsylvania and the rivers within its limits, together with the fishing of all sorts of fish within the premises, and the fish therein taken. William Penn has not granted the plaintiff any right of fishery, nor has he granted him anything beyond the margin of the river. The proprietary asked no higher price for river lands than others. No doubt he retained the entire right of the river and of everything in the river, in order that he might make such use of it as would be most conducive to the public benefit; and he afterwards, at least as far back as the 9th of May, 1771, gave his assent to an Act of Assembly, declaring the River Susquehanna a highway, and regulating its fisheries in such a manner as to be inconsistent with an exclusive right in any person whatever. The fourth and sixth articles of William Penn's concessions are urged as a grant.¹ But it appears to me that these concessions are confined to the first purchasers; for there are several things therein agreed to be done by those first purchasers, which cannot be said to be binding on any subsequent purchasers. There are also other grants, as, for instance, to servants in the seventh article, which must be confined to the original emigrants; and there are stipulations and agreements in a great number of the articles, as in the 3d, 4th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 14th, 17th, 18th, and 20th, which must be limited in the same way. Now I give no opinion as to the rights of those first purchasers, and persons claiming under them. The plaintiff is not of that description.

Article 6th. That notwithstanding there be no mention made in the several deeds made to the purchasers, yet the said William Penn does accord and declare that all rivers, rivulets, woods, and underwoods, waters, watercourses, quarries, mines, and minerals (except mines royal), shall be freely and fully enjoyed, and wholly, by the purchasers into whose lot they may fall.

2. No proof whatever has been given of anything like prescription, either in the plaintiff in particular, or in general in those persons who hold lands adjoining the Susquehanna. The first time the plaintiff used this fishery was in 1773, when he cleared away the stones which impeded his seine.

3. The plaintiff relies principally on that rule of the common law by which rivers, wherein the tide does not ebb and flow (which are not navigable), belong to the owners of the adjoining lands on each side. This common law right, if even it was properly applicable to the Susquehanna and Delaware, and other large waters, was not deemed proper for this country, nor was it adopted, up to the period of our Revolution; because, the several Acts of Assembly before that time, declaring these rivers to be highways, and regulating the fisheries in them, are incompatible with the common law right; and since the Revolution, no part of the common law has been adopted except that which was proper for our country. But the common law principle concerning rivers, even if extended to America, would not apply to such a river as the Susquehanna, which is a mile wide and runs several hundred miles through a rich country, and which is navigable and is actually navigated by large boats. If such a river had existed in England, no such law would ever have been applied to it. Their streams, in which the tide does not ebb and flow, are small.

But there is another objection to the adoption of this principle. The common law gives to each proprietor one half of the river adjoining his shore; and if this doctrine is applied to the Susquehanna, every owner of the bank must own all the islands nearest to that bank,— a right never contended for.

The common law principle is, in fact, that the owners of the banks have no right to the water of navigable rivers. Now the Susquehanna is a navigable river, and therefore the owners of its banks have no such right. It is said, however, that some of the cases assert that by navigable rivers are meant rivers in which there is no flow or reflow of the tide. This definition may be very proper in England, where there is no river of considerable importance as to navigation which has not a flow of the tide; but it would be highly unreasonable when applied to our large rivers, such as the Ohio, Allegheny, Delaware, Schuylkill, or Susquehanna and its branches.

The inconvenience of common fisheries is urged. The only question is whether the plaintiff has an exclusive right; if he has not, he cannot recover. But in point of inconvenience, we are upon the same footing with the navigable waters of England: the public may make what regulations they please by law.

Upon the whole matter, I am of opinion that the owner of land on the banks of the Susquehanna has no exclusive right to fish in the river immediately in front of his lands, but that the right to fisheries in that river is vested in the State, and open to all; of course, that the plaintiff cannot recover.

The jury found a verdict for the defendants, and a new trial, which was asked for upon the ground of misdirection, being refused, the plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court.

That court (YEATES, J., dissenting) refused a new trial, and ordered judgment for the defendants.

BROWN v. CHADBOURNE.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MAINE. 1849.

[Reported 31 Me. 9.]

WELLS, J.² This is an action on the case for erecting and maintaining a dam across a stream, called Little River, and obstructing the passage of the water, and the plaintiff's logs.

The river is about three miles in length, and runs from Boyden's Lake to the tide waters. It varies in its width from seven or eight feet to three or four rods, and it has been used many years for floating logs and rafts, and sometimes boats. Within twenty years, several dams and mills have been erected upon it.

The plaintiff disclaimed the right to recover upon the ground of prescription or user, but claimed it because the stream was a public one in its natural state.

The jury were instructed that, it being a fresh-water stream, the presumption is, that it is private property, and the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the contrary by satisfactory proof that it is a navigable or floatable river, and in its natural condition capable of being used for running logs.

The rule of the common law, that riparian proprietors own to the thread of fresh-water rivers, has been adopted in this and many other States of the Union. Berry v. Carle, 3 Greenl. 269; Spring v. Russell et al., 7 Greenl. 273.

The first question that arises is, it being conceded that the bed of the river belongs to the owners of the land on either side, Can a right to the use of its waters be obtained, unless that use has been continued twenty years, the ordinary length of time for the acquisition of an easement?

In Berry v. Carle; Shaw v. Crawford, 10 Johns. R. 236; Scott v. Wilson, 3 N. H. 321, the right is considered as dependent on long usage.

Lord Hale, in his celebrated treatise De Jure Maris, chap. 2, says:

² The opinion only is given.

"For, as the common highways upon the land are for the common land passage, so these kind of rivers, whether fresh or salt, that bear boats or barges, are highways by water, and as the highways by land are called altae vice regiae, so these public rivers, for public passage, are called fluvii regales, and haut Streames le Roy; not in reference to the propriety of the river, but to the public use."

Again he says, in chap. 3 : "There be some streams or rivers that are private, not only in propriety or ownership, but in use, as little streams and rivers that are not of common passage for the king's people. Again, there be other rivers, as well fresh as salt, that are of common or public use, for carriage of boats and lighters. And these, whether they are fresh or salt, whether they flow and reflow or not, are prima facie publici juris, common highways for man or goods, or both, from one inland town to another. Thus the rivers of Wey, of Severn, of Thames, and divers others, as well above the bridges and ports as below, as well above the flowings of the sea as below, and as well where they have come to be of private propriety, as in what part they are of the king's propriety, are public rivers, juris publici."

He makes no mention of prescription or length of time, by which the right is obtained, but of the actual use in fact, as indicating public rivers.

In Wadsworth v. Smith, 2 Fairf. 278, the doctrine is stated by Parris, J., that where a stream is naturally of sufficient size to float boats or mill logs, the public have a right to its free use for that purpose. But such little streams or rivers as are not floatable, that cannot, in their natural state, be used for the carriage of boats, rafts, or other property, are wholly and absolutely private; not subject to the servitude of the public interest, nor to be regarded as public highways, by water, because they are not susceptible of use, as a common passage for the public.

The same principle was stated by Mellen, C. J., in Spring v. Russell et al.; and is also recognized in Angell on Tide Waters, 75; Palmer v. Mulligan, 3 Caines, 307.

The distinguishing test between those rivers which are entirely private property, and those which are private property subject to the public use and enjoyment, consists in the fact, whether they are susceptible, or not, of use as a common passage for the public. Per Spencer, C. J., in The People v. Platt, 17 Johns. R. 211; Hooker v. Cummings, 20 Johns. R. 90.

The right of passage and of transportation upon rivers not strictly navigable, belongs to the public, by the principles of the common law. Per Parker, C. J., in Com. v. Chapin, 5 Pick. 199.

This subject was very fully considered, and with great ability, in Ersing v. McMaster, in the Province of New Brunswick, 1 Kerr, 501, deciding the rule of law, as it is stated to be in Wadsworth v. Smith. The case of Rowe v. Titus, 1 Allen, 326, in that Province, was decided upon the same principle.

It is said, in Adams v. Pease, 2 Com. 481, that the public have an easement in Connecticut River, above the flowing of the tides, for passing and repassing with every kind of craft, and that all rivers, above the tides, in reference to the use of them, are public, and of consequence subservient to public accommodation. Hence fisheries, ferries, bridges, and inland navigation are subject to the regulation of the government.

In Pennsylvania it is held, that the large fresh water rivers, in that State, are altogether public; not only their waters, but their beds. This conclusion is drawn from the inapplicability of the rule of common law to large rivers; also from the fact that neither the original proprietors nor the government have ever granted them to individuals. Carson v. Blazer, 2 Binney, 475; Shrunk v. Schuylkill Nav. Com., 14 S. & R. 71.

If a stream could be subject to public servitude, by long use only, many large rivers in newly settled States, and some in the interior of this State, would be altogether under the control and dominion of the owners of their beds, and the community would be deprived of the use of those rivers, which nature has plainly declared to be public highways. The true test, therefore, to be applied in such cases, is, whether a stream is inherently and in its nature capable of being used for the purposes of commerce, for the floating of vessels, boats, rafts, or logs. Where a stream possesses such a character, then the easement exists, leaving to the owners of the bed all other modes of use not inconsistent with it. For in this State, the rights of public use have never been carried so far as to place fresh-water streams on the same ground as those in which the tide ebbs and flows, and which alone are considered strictly navigable at common law, and to exclude the owners of the banks and beds from all property in them. In some of the States of the Union such a rule has been established by judicial decisions, and in others by legislative Acts.

It is contended, that to show Little River is public, it is not enough to prove that logs may be floated down at certain seasons of the year, when it is affected by a freshet, but that it should have that capacity in its natural and ordinary state at all seasons of the year.

In the test, which has been mentioned, to determine whether a stream should be considered public, none of the authorities, from which it is derived, requires the stream to possess the quality of being capable of use, during the whole year. A distinguishing criterion consists in its fitness to answer the wants of those, whose business requires its use. Its perfect adaptation to such use may not exist at all times, although the right to it may continue, and be exercised whenever an opportunity occurs. In many rivers, where the tide ebbs and flows, the public are deprived of their use for navigation during the reflux of their waters. A way, over which one has a right to pass, may be periodically covered with water. In high northern latitudes, most fresh-water rivers are frozen over during several months of the year. Even some tide waters are incapable of any beneficial use for purposes of commerce in the season of winter, owing to the accumulation of ice.

Every creek or river, into which the tide flows, it has been held in England, is not on that account necessarily a public navigable river. If it is navigable only at certain periods of the tide, and then only for a very short time, it is not to be supposed to be a navigable channel. Angell on Tide Waters, 89. Nor, as said by Shaw, C. J., in Rowe v. Granite Bridge Corporation, 21 Pick. 344, is it every small creek, in which a fishing skiff or gunning canoe can be made to float at high water, which is deemed navigable. But in order to have this character, it must be navigable to some purpose, useful to trade or agriculture. It is not a mere possibility of being used under some circumstances, as at extraordinary high tides, which will give it the character of a public stream, but it must be generally and commonly useful to some purpose of trade or agriculture.

But those authorities, upon which reliance is placed, show nothing more than that small creeks or inlets, penetrating into marshes, and which can only be used at certain periods of the tide, and then only for a short time, or in which there is only a possibility of use, under some circumstances, at extraordinary high tides, are not navigable rivers. Such streams are incapable of any practical, general use for the purposes of navigation, and they are dissimilar to the river under consideration.

Most of the great rivers of this State, in some portions of their passage, are so much impeded by rocks, falls, and other obstructions that logs cannot be floated in them, any great distance, at what might be called an ordinary state of water. It is only in the spring and fall, and occasionally at other times, when their channels are filled with water, that they are capable of floating timber to market. They generally remain in this condition a sufficient length of time to answer the purposes of a common highway, and their fitness and character as such cannot be destroyed because they cannot be used in their ordinary state.

A test so rigid and severe, as that required by the instruction requested, would annihilate the public character of all our fresh rivers, for many miles in their course, from their sources towards the ocean. The timber floated upon our waters to market is of great value, and neither the law nor public policy requires the adoption of a rule, which would so greatly limit their use, for that purpose.

The right to the use of the stream in question must prevail whenever it may be exercised at any state of the water.

Another instruction requested to be given was, that "the plaintiff has no right to use the banks of this stream for driving logs, and if such use is necessary for driving logs, the plaintiff has no right to drive this stream."

This request is manifestly too broad, and could not, with propriety, be given. When the stream overflows its banks, it carries some of the timber with it, and when it subsides, the timber is left upon the uplands.

But in such cases, the timber is not lost to its owners, who have a right by our law to enter upon the uplands and remove it. This subject has been regulated by Statute, c. 67, § 11, by which the owners of timber may enter upon the land and remove it, within a certain time, by tendering to the owner or occupier of the land a reasonable compensation for his damages. The banks of the stream may therefore be used for driving logs.

No request was made to instruct the jury, that if the stream was incapable of being used, without travelling upon its banks to propel the logs, there could be no public servitude in it.

The instruction given to the jury was, "that if it was necessary to go on the banks more or less, for the purpose of driving logs in Little River, that fact would not take from the stream its public character, if they found it capable, in other respects, of being used as a public stream." It belonged to the jury to determine whether the river possessed those requisites, which would give it the character of a public stream, and if they found it to be so, it could not be deprived of that character by the acts of those who might use it. In narrow places, it might at times be blocked up, or it might, as has been stated, overflow. The necessity of going upon the banks in such instances to effect a floating of the logs, would not prevent the river from being public. The inquiry related to the capacity of the river, and that could not be altogether decided, by what those using it might find necessary at times to do. Some might find it absolutely necessary, in their mode of driving logs, to commit trespasses on the adjoining lands, but their unlawful acts could not affect the stream, if it was really and intrinsically capable of public use.

If the plaintiff and others were in the habit of going upon the banks of Little River to drive their logs, it does not appear but that they might have confined themselves to its waters, though it might be more inconvenient for them so to have done. Their want of care in the use of the river, creating a necessity to commit trespasses, to relieve their property, would not prevent it from being public, nor justify the defendant in obstructing it. They would be responsible in damages for any trespasses committed.

The public are not entitled to tow on the banks of ancient navigable rivers, at common law. Ball v. Herbert, 3 T. R. 253. And where a river cannot be used without towing, or going upon its banks to propel what is floating, such fact would evince its want of capacity, in itself, for public use.

Sometimes the flow of rivers is broken by cataracts and falls, while in most of their course there is a smooth current, and they are of great utility in the transportation of property. Where such obstructions exist to so great extent, as to require the use of the shores, to carry property by them, though in those places they might not have a public character, yet for many miles above and below them they might be capable of a beneficial use for trade and commerce, and thereby be public. These obstructions may occur at long or short intervals, leaving other portions of the streams clearly public.

It is further contended by the defendant, that if the dam was an unlawful obstruction, the plaintiff had no right to run his logs through the defendant's sluice, built on his land, and recover damages for repairing it, although such course would be less detrimental than the destruction of the dam, but that he should have cut away the defendant's dam.

If a man has a right of way over another's land, unless the owner of the land is bound by prescription or his own grant to repair the way, he cannot justify going over the adjoining land, when the way is impassable by the overflowing of a river, but if public highways are out of repair or impassable, as by a flood, there is a temporary right of way over the adjoining land. 2 Black. Com. 36; 3 Kent's Com. 424.

Those obstructions, which prevent a passage, while they remain, are insurmountable.

It is said by Buller, J., in Ball v. Herbert, "that if a river should happen to be choked up by mud, that would not give the public a right to cut another passage through the adjoining lands." The right of way is in the waters, and the defendant had no authority to prevent its exercise. He could, by law, erect and continue his dam and mills, but was bound to provide a way of passage for the plaintiff's logs. He obstructed the river improperly by his dam and logs. The plaintiff must either have left his property and lost its whole value, carried it by the dam, repaired the sluice and run the logs through it, or have removed such portion of the dam as would have afforded a passage. He adopted that course, which was least injurious to the defendant.

The plaintiff would have had the right to enter upon the defendant's land to remove the obstruction. Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420; Inhabitants of Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70.

The plaintiff might not be bound to repair the sluice, but having done so to obviate the difficulty created by the defendant, there does not appear to be any reason why he should be held to have taken that course, which would have produced a greater injury to the defendant. Miller v. Mariner's Church, 7 Greenl. 51.

The argument, that damages cannot be recovered for removing the logs, because the dam is alleged in the declaration to have caused the obstruction, cannot prevail, even if such construction should be given to it. For the dam stopped the water and retained the defendant's logs in his mill-pond. The removal of it would have allowed a free passage to the logs in the pond, as well as those of the plaintiff. The dam was the cause of the injury; its direct result was the detention of the water above it, and whatever might be in it. The necessity of a removal of the logs was a damage caused by the dam.

The defendant had a concurrent right with others in the use of the stream, but it appears that he transcended that right by filling his pond with logs, and refused to remove them upon request.

It may be difficult, in some cases, to draw the line between public and private streams. The jury have decided that Little River belongs to the former class, upon the exhibition to them of much testimony, by both parties. And there does not appear to be any sufficient reason why the verdict should be disturbed.

Both the motion for a new trial and the exceptions are overruled, and there must be judgment on the verdict.

TRESPASS. The defendant pleads, that there was a highway from such a place to such a place ; that the plaintiff stopped the same so as he could not pass, and therefore he went over the plaintiff's close, doing as little harm as he could.

And held good upon demurrer ; for if the way be so foul as is not passable, I may then justify the going over another man's close next adjoining.

LADE v. SHEPHERD.

KING'S BENCH. 1735.

[Reported 2 Stra. 1004.]

UPON trial of an action of trespass a case was made, that the place where the supposed trespass was committed was formerly the property of the plaintiff, who some years since built a street upon it, which has ever since been used as a highway. That the defendant had land contiguous parted only by a ditch, and that he laid a bridge over the ditch, the end whereof rested on the highway. And it was insisted for the defendant, that by the plaintiff's making it a street, it was a dedication of it to the public; and therefore however he might be liable to an indictment for a nuisance, yet the plaintiff could not sue him as for a trespass on his private property. Sed per CURIAM, It is certainly a dedication to the public, so far as the public has occasion for it, which is only for a right of passage. But it never was understood to be a transfer of the absolute property in the soil. So the plaintiff had judgment.¹

REPLEVIN for taking the cattle of the plaintiff. Avowry, that the defendant was seized in fee of the locus in quo, and took the cattle damage feasant. Plea, that the locus in quo "lay contiguous and next adjoining to a certain common and public king's highway, and that the defendant and all other owners, tenants and occupiers of the said place in which, &c., with the appurtenances, for the time being, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary, have repaired and amended, and have been used and accustomed to repair and amend, and of right ought to have repaired and amended, and the said defendant still of right ought to repair and amend the hedges and fences between the said place in which, &c., and the said highway, when and so often as need or occasion hath been or required, or shall or may be required to prevent cattle being in the said highway from erring and escaping thereout into the said place in which, &c., through the defects and defaults of the said hedges and fences, and doing damage there.

In Goodtitle d. Chester v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133 (1757), it was held that ejectment would lie for land, although there was a highway over it. See Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 431, contra, criticised in 2 Sm. L. C. (8th Am. ed.) 170-172.

And because the said hedges and fences between the said place in which, &c., and the said highway, before and at the time when, &c., were ruinous, broken down, prostrated, and in great decay for want of needful and necessary repairing and amending thereof, the said cattle in the said declaration mentioned just before the said time when, &c., being in the said highway erred and escaped thereout, into the said place in which, &c., through the defects and defaults, &c." To this plea there was a special demurrer, For that it is not shown in or by the said plea, that the said cattle before the said time when, &c., when they escaped out of the said highway into the said place in which, &c., were passing through and along the said highway, nor that they had any right to be there at all &c."

Williams, Serjt., in support of the demurrer.

Heywood, Serjt., contra.

LORD CH. J. EYRE. I agree with my Brother Williams as to the general law, that the party who would take advantage of fences being out of repair, as an excuse for his cattle escaping from a way into the land of another, must show that he was lawfully using the easement when the cattle so escaped. This therefore reduces the case to a single point, namely, Whether it does not appear on the plea, to a common intent, that the cattle were on the highway, using it in such a manner as the owner had a right to do, from the words "being in the said highway?" This is a different case from cattle escaping from a close, where it is necessary to show that the owner had a right to put them there, because a highway being for the use of the public, cattle may be in the highway of common right; I doubt therefore whether it requires a more particular statement. It would certainly have been more formal to have said that the cattle were passing and repassing, and if the evidence had proved that they were grazing on the way, though the issue would have been literally, it would not have been substantially proved. But I doubt whether the being in the highway might not have been traversed, and if the being in the highway can be construed to be certain to a common intent, the plea may be supported, notwithstanding there is a special demurrer, for a special demurrer does not reach a mere literal expression. The precedents indeed seem to make it necessary to state that the cattle were passing and repassing, but they are but few; yet upon the whole, I rather think the objection a good one, because those forms of pleading are as cited by my Brother Williams.

BULLER, J. This is so plain a case that it is difficult to make it a ground of argument. But my Brother Heywood says, there is a difference between trespass and replevin in the rules of pleading. In some cases there is certainly a material difference in the pleading in the two actions, though in others they are the same. One of the cases in which they differ, is that if trespass be brought for taking cattle which were distrained damage feasant, it is sufficient for the defendant to say that he was possessed of the close, and the cattle were doing damage: but in replevin the avowant must deduce a title to the close.

Wherever there is a difference, it is in favor of trespass and against replevin; for in trespass an excuse in a plea is sufficient, but in an avowry a title must be shown. This brings me to the question, Whether the plea on this record be good to a common intent? Now I think that the doctrine of certainty to a common intent will not support it. Certainty in pleading has been stated by Lord Coke, Co. Lit. 303, to be of three sorts, viz., certainty to a common intent, to a certain intent in general, and to a certain intent in every particular. I remember to have heard Mr. Justice Aston treat these distinctions as a jargon of words, without meaning. They have, however, long been made, and ought not altogether to be departed from. Concerning the two last kinds of certainty, it is not necessary to say anything at present. But it should be remembered, that the certain intent in every particular applies only to the case of estoppels, Co. Lit., ibid. By a common intent I understand that when words are used, which will bear a natural sense, and also an artificial one, or one to be made out by argument or inference, the natural sense shall prevail: it is simply a rule of construction and not of addition: common intent cannot add to a sentence words which are omitted. There is also another rule in pleading, which is, that if the meaning of words be equivocal, they shall be taken most strongly against the party pleading them. There can be no doubt that the passing and repassing on the highway was traversable; for the question, Whether the plaintiff was a trespasser or not? depends on the fact whether he was passing and repassing and using the road as a highway, or whether his cattle were in the road as trespassers; and that which is the gift of the defence must necessarily be traversable. A most material point therefore is omitted, and I think the plea would be bad on a general demurrer. But here there is a special demurrer, and as the words are equivocal, they are informal.

HEATH, J. The law is as my Brother Williams stated, that if cattle of one man escape into the land of another, it is no excuse that the fences were out of repair, if they were trespassers in the place from whence they came. If it be a close, the owner of the cattle must show an interest or a right to put them there. If it be a way, he must show that he was lawfully using the way; for the property is in the owner of the soil, subject to an easement for the benefit of the public. On this plea it does not appear whether the cattle were passing and repassing, or whether they were trespassing on the highway; the words used are entirely equivocal.

ROOKE, J., of the same opinion.

¹ "There can be no easement, properly so called, unless there be both a servient and a dominant tenement. There is in this case no dominant tenement whatever. It is true that in the well-known case of Dovaston v. Payne, 2 Sm. L. C. 132, 6th ed.; 2 H. Bl. 527, Mr. Justice Heath is reported to have said, with regard to a public highway, that the freehold continued in the owner of the adjoining land subject to an easement in favor of the public, and that expression has occasionally been repeated since that time.

BATEMAN v. BLUCK.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1852.

[Reported 18 Q. B. 870.]

TRESPASS for breaking and entering the close of plaintiff, in the parish of St. Sepulchre, in the county of Middlesex, and pulling down a wall of plaintiff in the said close.

First plea: Not guilty. Issue thereon.

Second plea: That the said close and the said wall were not, nor was either of them, the close or wall of the plaintiff. Issue thereon.

Third plea: That the said parish of St. Sepulchre, before and at the time of the passing of Stat. 57 G. 3, c. xxix., was a part of the metropolis included within the weekly bills of mortality; and the said close was, before and at the time when &c., a paved public place within the true intent and meaning and subject to the provisions of the said Act, that is to say, a public footway pavement which had been and then was paved, cleansed, and lighted under the authority of the Commissioners acting under Stat. 12 G. 3, c. 68; and that the said close was not at the said time when &c., nor was any part thereof, a turnpike road or any part of any turnpike road; and that, just before the said time when &c., the plaintiff had, contrary to the provisions of the first-mentioned Act, unlawfully laid in and upon the said public footway pavement divers bricks &c., and had therewith formed and constructed in and upon the said pavement the said wall in the declaration mentioned; and, because, at the said time when &c., the said wall remained on and incumbering the said public pavement, and because the plaintiff then, upon the reasonable request of the defendant, refused to remove the same, the defendant, at the said time when &c., entered upon the said close for the purpose of pulling down the said wall, and removed the bricks and other materials to a small and convenient distance, and there left the same for the use of the plaintiff, doing no unnecessary damage: which are the same alleged trespasses &c.

Replication: That the said close was not, at the time when &c., a paved public place within the true intent and meaning and subject to the provisions of the said first-mentioned Act. Issue thereon.

Fourth plea: That, before and at the said time when &c., there was

That, however, is hardly an accurate expression. There can be no such thing, according to our law, or according to the civil law, as what I may term an easement in gross. An easement must be connected with a dominant tenement. In truth, a public road or highway is not an easement, it is a dedication to the public of the occupation of the surface of the land for the purpose of passing and repassing, the public generally taking upon themselves (through the parochial authorities, or otherwise) the obligation of repairing it. It is quite clear that that is a very different thing from an ordinary easement, where the occupation remains in the owner of the servient tenement subject to the easement." Per LORD CAIRNS, L. J., in Rangeley v. Midland R. Co., L. R. 3 Ch. 306, 310.

and of right ought to have been, into, through, over, and along the said close, a public and common highway for all the Queen's subjects to go and return, pass and repass, on foot, at all times, at their own will and pleasure ; that defendant, before and at the said time when &c., was possessed of a dwelling-house abutting on and having a door opening into the said highway ; and, because the plaintiff had wrongfully erected in and upon the said highway the said wall so near to the said door of the defendant as to obstruct the same, so that defendant could not, without prostrating the said wall, pass along the said highway into and from the said house, and because plaintiff, at the time when &c., refused, upon reasonable request of defendant then made to him in that behalf, to remove the said wall, defendant, at the said time when &c., entered upon the said close for the purpose of pulling down, and did pull down, the said wall &c. (justifying as in the third plea).

Replication : That there was not, nor of right ought to have been, into, through, over and along the said close, a public and common highway &c., as in the plea alleged. Issue thereon.

On the trial, before Coleridge, J., at the Middlesex Sittings, after last Easter Term, it appeared that the alleged close was a court opening into a public street in the parish of St. Sepulchre. There was no thoroughfare through the court. It contained fourteen or fifteen houses. The defendant was tenant of one of these houses, which had a door opening into the court, made by a previous tenant. The defendant had been required by the plaintiff to block up the door, which he refused to do ; whereupon the plaintiff erected the wall in question and thereby blocked up the door ; upon which the defendant pulled the wall down. The wall was erected on the pavement of the court ; and the court had been paved, at the request of the plaintiff, by the Commissioners under Stat. 12 Geo. 3, c. 68, and was lighted under the powers of the same Act. It was objected, for the plaintiff, that the third and fourth pleas were not proved, inasmuch as the court was not a public place within the meaning of Stat. 57 G. 3, c. xxix., and, not being a thoroughfare, could have no highway through it. The learned judge directed a verdict for the plaintiff on the first issue and on so much of the second issue as related to the wall, and for the defendant on the residue of the second issue, and on the third and fourth issues, with leave to move to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on the third and fourth issues.

Knowles, in last Easter Term, obtained a rule nisi according to the leave reserved, and also to enter judgment for the plaintiff Non obstante veredicto on the third issue.

Montague Chambers and Lush, now showed cause.

Garth, contra.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J. I am of opinion that the verdict upon the issue on the third plea was properly given for the defendant, inasmuch as the evidence went to show that the locus in quo was a public place within the Statute. But I am also of opinion that, upon this issue, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment Non obstante veredicto, inasmuch as the plea does not allege that the defendant enjoyed any right in the exercise of which it was necessary for him to remove the obstruction. He was bound, according to Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276, and the cases there referred to, to show, not only that he had such a right, but that there was no way in which he could exercise it without the removal. On the issue raised by the fourth plea, I think the defendant is entitled to a verdict. That plea alleges that there was a public highway through the locus in quo, and that it was impossible for the defendant to pass along the highway without removing the wall. The jury found that there was such public highway; and we are bound to assume that finding to be good, unless, as is contended, there cannot, in law, be a highway through a place which is no thoroughfare. It seems to me that such a doctrine is incorrect. There may or may not be a highway under these circumstances. Take the case of a large square with only one entrance, the owner of which has, for many years, permitted all persons to go into and round it; it would be strange if he could afterwards treat all persons entering it, except the inhabitants, as trespassers. In The Trustees of the Rugby Charity v. Merryweather, 11 East, 375 n. (a.), Lord Kenyon laid down that there might be a highway through a place which was not a thoroughfare, and seems to have left it to the jury whether there was such highway or not. In Woodyer v. Hadden, 5 Taunt. 126, the court did not decide that there could not be a highway under such circumstances, but only that in that particular case there was none; and I do not find anything decided there which is necessarily inconsistent with what was laid down by Lord Kenyon. The fourth plea, therefore, being proved, and being unexceptionable on the face of it, the defendant is entitled to our judgment.

COLERIDGE, J. The third plea being given up, the question is, whether there was a highway through the locus in quo, as alleged in the fourth plea. It was proved that the court in question had one opening only into a public street; that it contained some fifteen houses, belonging to one person, but occupied by different tenants; that it was paved by the Commissioners at the request of the plaintiff, and had always been lighted by the parish. The jury found that there was a public highway through it; and I am of opinion, as I was at the trial, that there was evidence for them, both of a dedication to, and of a user by, the public. The finding, therefore, upon the facts, is satisfactory. But it is objected that there cannot, in law, be a highway through a place which is not a thoroughfare, and that, therefore, I was not justified in telling the jury that there might be a highway through the court, and leaving it to them to say, upon the evidence, whether there was or not. I cannot see any such legal impossibility as has been suggested. It is suggested that the way through such a place as this must be assumed to be for the use of the inhabitants only; but surely it is for the jury to say whether there has or has not been a dedication and user. More or less user may be proved according to the size and character of the place; but the principle does not vary.

ERLE, J. We are to say whether, in law, there can be a highway through a place which is not a thoroughfare. It seems to be clear, from the authorities, that there can; and I do not see any reason for holding that there should not. Whether, under the particular circumstances of each case, there is a thoroughfare, is a question for the jury.

CROMPTON, J., concurred.

THE QUEEN v. PRATT.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1855.

[Reported 4 E. & B. 860.]

ON appeal against a conviction under Stat. 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 32, § 30, the Sessions stated a case for the opinion of this court. The case set out the conviction, of which the material part was as follows:

Berkshire, } Be it remembered that, on, &c., at, &c., Thomas Pratt, of,
to wit. } &c., is convicted before the undersigned, two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the said county, for that the said Thomas Pratt did, on 11th October, A. D. 1854, at, &c., unlawfully commit a certain trespass by being in the day time of the same day upon a certain piece of land in the possession and occupation of George Bowyer, there, then and there in search of game, contrary to the Statute in such case made and provided. And we do adjudge that the said Thomas Pratt shall for the said offence forfeit the sum of £1, &c.

The appeal came on for hearing before the justices assembled at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, in and for the county of Berks, on the 2d of January, 1855; when, in support of the said conviction, it was proved by the said respondents that the appellant Thomas Pratt, on the 11th of October, 1854, about four o'clock in the afternoon, was on a public highway in the parish of Radley, carrying a gun, and accompanied by a dog; that the appellant waved his hand to the dog, and the dog entered the cover or plantation on one side of the highway (which cover or plantation is in actual possession and occupation of George Bowyer, Esquire); after which a pheasant rose and flew across the aid highway; and the defendant, then being on the said highway, fired at the said pheasant so crossing the said highway twice, but did not kill it. The said highway is a common public road leading from Radley to Sun-ningwell, in the county of Berks; and George Bowyer, Esquire, is the owner of the land on each side of the highway, and also the lord of the manor. The land on one side of the highway is let by the said George Bowyer to one Stephen Mundy, who occupies it as a yearly tenant; but the said George Bowyer has reserved to himself the right of entering thereon at all times for the purpose of killing game. Upon hearing of the appeal, it was contended, by the appellant's counsel, that the evidence did not support the conviction, inasmuch as the appellant was on the highway at the time of the alleged trespass.

By consent of the parties, and under the order of Mr. Justice Cole-ridge (the further hearing of the appeal having been adjourned by the said justices), this case is now stated; and the question on which the opinion of the court is requested is: Whether the said conviction is supported in law by the evidence adduced on the part of the respondents as above set out.

Carrington, in support of the conviction.

Dowdeswell, contra.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J. I am of opinion that this conviction should be affirmed. Stat. 1 & 2 W. 4, c. 32, § 30, enacts that, if any person "shall commit any trespass by entering or being, in the day time, upon any land, in search or pursuit of game," he may be convicted. And then follows a proviso that "any person charged with any such trespass shall be at liberty to prove, by way of defence, any matter which would have been a defence to an action at law for such trespass." Such being the enactment, the appellant Pratt is convicted of committing a trespass by being in the day time on land in the occupation of Mr. Bowyer; the facts proved in evidence are stated; and the question is asked of us, whether they support the conviction.

After considering the language of the enactment, I think that the Legislature contemplated that the offender must personally be or enter on the land. Had the words been only "commit any trespass on land in pursuit of game," I should have said that sending a dog upon the land was within the meaning of the words; but when I find the words are, "commit any trespass by entering or being, . . . upon any land," I think that the construction of the section is that there must be a personal entering and being on the land. Then comes the question, whether there was evidence to support a conviction for personally being on the land of Mr. Bowyer in search of game; and I think there was. We have the facts stated, that he was upon the highway carrying a gun, and accompanied by a dog; that he waved his hand to the dog, which entered the adjoining cover; that a pheasant rose; and he, being on the highway, fired at it, but missed it; that the highway is a public road; and that Mr. Bowyer is owner of the land on both sides, and in actual occupation of the land on one side of the highway. On these facts I think the magistrates were perfectly justified in concluding that Pratt was trespassing on land in the occupation of Mr. Bowyer, in search of game. He was beyond all controversy on land, the soil and freehold of which were in the owner of the adjoining land, that is, Mr. Bowyer. It is true the public had a right of way there; but, subject to that right, the soil and every right incident to the ownership of the soil was in Mr. Bowyer. The road, therefore, must be considered as Mr. Bowyer's land. Then Pratt, being on that land, was undoubtedly a trespasser if he went there, not in exercise of the right of way, but for the purpose of seeking game, and that only. If he did go there for that purpose only, he committed the offence named in the Act: he trespassed by being on the land in pursuit of game. The evidence of his being there for that purpose is ample. He waved his hand to the dog; the dog entered the cover and drove out a pheasant; and Pratt fired at it. The magistrates are fully justified in drawing the conclusion that he went there, not as a passenger on the road, but in search of game.¹ Conviction affirmed.

PERLEY v. CHANDLER.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1810.

[Reported 6 Mass. 454.]

THIS was an action of trespass for obstructing the plaintiff's water-course in Winthrop, and filling up the same with logs, stones, and earth.

The defendant pleaded that the watercourse mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration was a nuisance in the highway in Winthrop, and that the abatement of that nuisance was the trespass alleged.

To this plea the plaintiff replied in substance, that he was seised of a close of land on each side of the highway, the one close on the north, and the other on the south side; and that he was possessed of a right of conducting water from the close on the north to the close on the south side of the highway, for the purpose of working certain mills belonging to him, and standing on the close last mentioned.

The rejoinder denied the right of the plaintiff to the watercourse, for the purpose mentioned in the replication, and on this right an issue was joined to the country.

Upon the trial of this issue, before Sedgwick, J., at the last October term in this county, it appeared that one John Chandler formerly owned the two closes before mentioned, and that one Sampson Davis purchased the north close, bounded upon the road upon one side, and on the water upon the other side, by deed dated December 5th, 1798, with privileges through Chandler's land to his upper mill-pond or dam, for the purpose of conveying water where Chandler formerly conveyed it, or in any other place where Davis should think most convenient, and the privilege of digging a ditch into Chandler's mill-stream for the conveyance of water. Afterwards, on the 7th day of the same month, Davis purchased of Chandler the south close, which was bounded by the water on one side, and on the opposite side by the highway. On the 21st of January, 1801, Amos Perley duly levied an execution, issued upon a judgment in his favor against Davis, upon the two closes, and on the land between them, over which the highway was located ; and on the 12th of April, 1803, the said Amos Perley, by deed of release, conveyed to the plaintiff in fee, the estate on which his said execution was levied. Upon these conveyances the plaintiff rested his right to the watercourse ; he having also offered evidence to prove that he was in possession of the land described in Amos Perley's deed of release to him, at the time it was given.

It was agreed that the plaintiff, claiming a right to do it, made the watercourse, for the filling up and obstructing whereof he brought this action, to convey therein water from the close on the north side to the close on the south side of the highway, for the purpose of working his mills standing on the last-mentioned close, and that those closes were the same conveyed by Chandler to Davis.

A verdict was taken for the plaintiff by consent, subject to the opinion of the court, upon the facts, which are in substance above stated. And if the court should be of opinion that the plaintiff had the right put in issue, judgment should be rendered on the verdict so taken ; and otherwise, that a verdict should be entered for the defendant, and judgment be rendered accordingly.

The cause was shortly argued at this term by Wilde for the plaintiff, and Todd for the defendant ; after which the opinion of the court was delivered by PARSONS, C. J. [After stating the pleadings and the facts.] There is a defect in the case. It is not alleged that John Chandler was seised of the land covered by the highway, which lies between the two closes ; and although this land is expressly levied upon by Amos Perley's execution, yet it is not stated that the watercourse in question was sunk in this land, nor that the way had been previously laid out.

But taking it for granted, as John Chandler owned the closes adjoining on each side of the way, that he also owned the land over which the way passed ; that it was the land described in Amos Perley's levy as covered by a way ; and that the watercourse was sunk in this land, over which the way passed, we proceed.

By the location of a way over the land of any person, the public have acquired an easement, which the owner of the land cannot lawfully extinguish or unreasonably interrupt. But the soil and freehold remain in the owner, although incumbered with a way. And every use to which the land may be applied, and all the profits which may be derived from it, consistently with the continuance of the easement, the owner can lawfully claim. He may maintain ejectment for the land thus incumbered ; and if the way be discontinued, he shall hold the land free from the incumbrance.

Upon these principles, there can be no doubt but that the owner of the land can sink a drain, or any watercourse, below the surface of his land covered with a way, so as not to deprive the public of their easement. And it is a common practice for the owners of water-mills, or of sites for water-mills, to sink watercourses for the use of their mills in their own land under highways, care being taken to cover the watercourses sufficiently, so that the highways remain safe and convenient for passengers.

These well-known legal principles are now to be applied to the case before us. The point saved is, whether the plaintiff had a right to sink the watercourse in question. And the decision of this point must depend either on the privilege he had in the soil of another, or on his right to make this use of his own soil.

The plaintiff, being an assignee of Sampson Davis, is entitled to the privilege purchased by Davis of John Chandler, by the first conveyance. But Chandler owning at that time the land under the highway, the privilege to dig a watercourse anywhere through his land must include a privilege to dig it under the highway, so that the easement remained to the public. On this ground the plaintiff had a right to dig the watercourse in question. But it further appears, from the extent returned on Amos Perley's execution, that the land under the highway was taken by the execution; and it also appears that Amos Perley conveyed that land to the plaintiff. If, therefore, the levy by Amos Perley was a disseisin of the right owner, yet, he not having since re-entered, the plaintiff has the freehold, subject, however, to be ousted or evicted by one who has the legal right.

But the defendant sets up no title to the land, and cannot therefore dispute the plaintiff's right to the soil. As to the defendant, the plaintiff must be deemed to be the owner; and as owner, he has the right to a watercourse in his own land under the highway; but so as not to deprive the public of the easement. And as the mere right in the plaintiff to the watercourse in question is the only point reserved, the plaintiff, having established this right, must have judgment on the verdict.

If the case presented to us a question, whether the owner of the land, over which is a public highway, might open a watercourse under the way, and leave it open at top, to the annoyance of passengers, some further considerations would be necessary.

If a highway be located over watercourses, either natural or artificial, the public cannot shut up these courses, but may make the road over them by the aid of bridges. But when a way has been located over private land, if the owner should afterwards open a watercourse across the way, it will be his duty, at his own expense, to make and keep in repair a way over the watercourse, for the convenience of the public; and if he should neglect to do it, he may be indicted for the nuisance; and upon the conviction, the nuisance may be prostrated by filling up the watercourse, if he shall not make a convenient way over it. This obligation upon the owner arises from the consideration, that when the way was located, the public were to be considered as purchasers of the easement, by the payment to the owner of all damages which he sustained in consequence of the easement. And among other causes of damage might be estimated the inconvenience of opening a watercourse at his own expense.

MAKEPEACE v. WORDEN.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUDICATURE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE. 1816.

[Reported 1 N. H. 16.]

THIS was an action of trespass. The declaration contained two counts, — 1. For breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, cutting his trees, and subverting the soil. 2. For taking, carrying away, and converting to the defendant's own use six cords of wood belonging to the plaintiff. By the statement of facts upon which the cause was submitted to the decision of court, it appeared that the locus in quo was a public highway in the town of Chesterfield, laid out through the plaintiff's land in 1801, that the defendants were employed by the town to make the highway, and that in making the road they necessarily cut sundry trees, which they afterwards carried away and converted to their own private use.

Henderson, for the plaintiff.

Upham, for the defendant.

PER CURIAM. In highways laid out through the lands of individuals in pursuance of Statutes, the public has only an easement, a right of passage; the soil and freehold remain in the individual, whose lands have been taken for that purpose. Towns whose duty it is to make roads and keep them in repair have a right to cut trees growing in highways so far as is necessary to the performance of that duty. It is therefore clear that the defendants are entitled to judgment on the first count in this case. Whether towns have a right to use trees thus cut, in the construction of the road, is a question not necessary to be settled in this case. The plaintiff complains, not that his trees have been thus used, but that they have been converted to the private use of the defendants. This complaint in our opinion is well founded and the plaintiff is entitled to judgment on his second count for the value of the wood.

THIS was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close in the town of Mount Washington, and was tried in the Court of Common Pleas, before Byington, J. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and specified in defence a right of way of necessity, resulting from the impassable state of the adjoining highway by obstructions with snow.

The defendant introduced evidence that at the time when the trespass was alleged to have been committed he was travelling with his team on a highway running east and west, which led to and intersected a highway running north and south, which latter highway led to and intersected another highway, on which the defendant had occasion to go with his team; and the usual, proper, and only mode of getting on which, by a highway, was by passing over the two highways first named, when they were in a condition fit for travel; but at the time of the alleged trespass they were both obstructed and rendered impassable by snow-drifts; because of which obstructions, the defendant turned out of the first highway with his team, at a place where it was rendered impassable as aforesaid, and passed over the adjoining fields of the plaintiff, doing no unnecessary damage, and returned into the second highway as soon as he had passed the obstructions which rendered both impassable. And he contended, that the highways being thus rendered impassable, he had a way of necessity over the plaintiff's adjoining fields, or that his so passing was excusable, and not a trespass.

But the judge ruled that these facts constituted no defence to the action; and a verdict having been returned accordingly for the plaintiff, the defendant alleged exceptions.

The opinion was delivered at September term, 1852.

BIGELOW, J. It is not controverted by the counsel for the plaintiff that the rule of law is well settled in England that where a highway becomes obstructed and impassable from temporary causes, a traveller has a right to go extra viam upon adjoining lands, without being guilty of trespass. The rule is so laid down in the elementary books. 2 Bl. Com. 36; Woolrych on Ways, 50, 51; 3 Cruise Dig. 89; Wellbeloved on Ways, 38; and it is fully supported by the adjudged cases. Henn's Case, W. Jones, 296; 3 Salk. 182; 1 Saund. 323, note 3; Absor v. French, 2 Show. 28; Young v. _____, 1 Ld. Raym. 725; Taylor v. Whitehead, 2 Doug. 745; Bullard v. Harrison, 4 M. & S. 387, 393.

Such being the admitted rule of law, as settled by the English authorities, it was urged in behalf of the plaintiff in the present case that it had never been recognized or sustained by American authors or cases. But we do not find such to be the fact. On the contrary, Mr. Dane, whose great learning and familiar acquaintance with the principles of the common law, and their practical application at an early period in this commonwealth, entitle his opinion to very great weight, adopts the rule as declared in the leading case of Taylor v. Whitehead, ubi supra, which he says "is the latest on the point, and settles the law." 3 Dane Ab. 258. And so Chancellor Kent states the rule. 3 Kent Com. 424. We are not aware of any case in which the question has been distinctly raised and adjudicated in this country; but there are several decisions in New York, in which the rule has been incidentally recognized and treated as well-settled law. Holmes v. Seely, 19 Wend. 507; Williams v. Safford, 7 Barb. 309; Newkirk v. Sabler, 9 Barb. 652. These authorities would seem to be quite sufficient to justify us in the recognition of the rule. But the rule itself is founded on the established principles of the common law, and is in accordance with the fixed and uniform usage of the community. Indeed, one of the strongest arguments in support of it is, that it has always been practised upon and acquiesced in, without objection, throughout the New England States. This accounts satisfactorily for the absence of any adjudication upon the question, in our courts, and is a sufficient answer to the objection upon this ground, which was urged upon us by the learned counsel for the plaintiff. When a right has been long claimed and exercised, without denial or objection, a strong presumption is raised that the right is well founded.

The plaintiff's counsel is under a misapprehension in supposing that the authorities in support of the rule rest upon any peculiar or exceptional principle of law. They are based upon the familiar and well-settled doctrine, that to justify or excuse an alleged trespass, inevitable necessity or accident must be shown. If a traveller in a highway, by unexpected and unforeseen occurrences, such as a sudden flood, heavy drifts of snow, or the falling of a tree, is shut out from the travelled paths, so that he cannot reach his destination without passing upon adjacent lands, he is certainly under a necessity so to do. It is essential to the act to be done, without which it cannot be accomplished. Serious inconveniences, to say the least, would follow, especially in a climate like our own, if this right were denied to those who have occasion to pass over the public ways. Not only would intercourse and business be sometimes suspended, but life itself would be endangered. In hilly and mountainous regions, as well as in exposed places near the sea-coast, severe and unforeseen storms not unfrequently overtake the traveller, and render highways suddenly impassable, so that to advance or retreat by the ordinary path is alike impossible. In such cases the only escape is, by turning out of the usually travelled way, and seeking an outlet over the fields adjoining the highway. If a necessity is not created, under such circumstances, sufficient to justify or excuse a traveller, it is difficult to imagine a case which would come within the admitted rule of law. To hold a party guilty of a wrongful invasion of another's rights, for passing over land adjacent to the highway, under the pressure of such a necessity, would be pushing individual rights of property to an unreasonable extent, and giving them a protection beyond that which finds a sanction in the rules of law. Such a temporary and unavoidable use of private property must be regarded as one of those incidental burdens to which all property in a civilized community is subject. In fact, the rule is sometimes justified upon the ground of public convenience and necessity. Highways being established for public service, and for the use and benefit of the whole community, a due regard for the welfare of all requires that when temporarily obstructed, the right of travel should not be interrupted. In the words of Lord Mansfield, "it is for the general good that people should be entitled to pass in another line." It is a maxim of the common law, that where public convenience and necessity come in conflict with private right, the latter must yield to the former. A person travelling on a highway, is in the exercise of a public, and not a private right. If he is compelled, by impassable obstructions, to leave the way, and go upon adjoining lands, he is still in the exercise of the same right. The rule does not, therefore, violate the principle that individual convenience must always be held subordinate to private rights, but clearly falls within that maxim, which makes public convenience and necessity paramount.

It was urged in argument that the effect of establishing this rule of law would be to appropriate private property to public use without providing any means of compensation to the owner. If such an accidental, occasional, and temporary use of land can be regarded as an appropriation of private property to a public use, entitling the owner to compensation, which may well be doubted, still the decisive answer to this objection is quite obvious. The right to go extra viam, in case of temporary and impassable obstructions, being one of the legal incidents or consequences which attaches to a highway through private property, it must be assumed that the right to the use of land adjoining the road was taken into consideration and proper allowance made therefor, when the land was originally appropriated for the highway, and that the damages were then estimated and fixed, for the private injury which might thereby be occasioned.

It was also suggested that the Statutes of the commonwealth, imposing the duty on towns to keep public ways in repair, and rendering them liable for damages occasioned by defects therein, furnish ample remedies in cases of obstructions, and do away with the necessity of establishing the rule of the common law in this Commonwealth, which gives the right in such cases to pass over adjacent lands. But this is not so. Towns are not liable for damages in those cases to which this rule of the common law would most frequently be applicable, — of obstructions, occasioned by sudden and recent causes, which have not existed for the space of twenty-four hours, and of which the towns have had no notice. Besides, the Statute liability of towns does not extend to damages such as would ordinarily arise from the total obstruction of a highway, being expressly confined to cases of bodily injuries and damages to property. St. 1850, c. 5; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 451; Harwood v. Lowell, 4 Cush. 310; Brailey v. Southborough, 6 Cush. 141.

From what has already been said, the limitations and restrictions of the right to go upon adjacent lands in case of obstructions in the highway can be readily inferred. Having its origin in necessity, it must be limited by that necessity; cessante ratione, cessat ipsa lex. Such a right is not to be exercised from convenience merely, nor, when, by the exercise of due care, after notice of obstructions, other ways may be selected and the obstructions avoided. But it is to be confined to those cases of inevitable necessity or unavoidable accident, arising from sudden and recent causes which have occasioned temporary and impassable obstructions in the highway. What shall constitute such inevitable necessity or unavoidable accident, must depend upon the various circumstances attending each particular case. The nature of the obstruction in the road, the length of time during which it has existed, the vicinity or distance of other public ways, the exigencies of the traveller, are some of the many considerations which would enter into the inquiry, and upon which it is the exclusive province of the jury to pass, in order to determine whether any necessity really existed, which would justify or excuse the traveller. In the case at bar, this question was wholly withdrawn from the consideration of the jury, by the ruling of the court. It will therefore be necessary to send the case to a new trial in the Court of Common Pleas.

CODMAN v. EVANS.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1862.

[Reported 5 Allen, 308.]

TORT to recover damages for the continuance of bay-windows, projecting from the defendant's dwelling-house so as to overhang the plaintiffs' land.

At the trial in the Superior Court, before Rockwell, J., it appeared that the injury complained of was a continuance of the same injury for which a former action had been brought, between the same parties. 1 Allen, 443. The plaintiffs put in evidence the former judgment, and proved their title to the close described in the declaration; and the defendant proved his title to the adjoining close, and offered evidence to show that the portion of the plaintiffs' land over which the bay-windows extended was part of a passage extending from Tremont to Avery and Mason Streets, open at both ends, and had been used as a common thoroughfare since 1811, and that the bay-windows did not interfere with its use as a highway. He also offered evidence to prove that it was and for nineteen years had been usual and customary in Boston to build bay-windows projecting over highways in a similar manner and to a like extent as that erected by him; and for more than sixty years to build balconies and other similar projections over highways, projecting as far as the bay-windows in question. But the judge rejected the evidence, and a verdict was returned for the plaintiffs. The defendant alleged exceptions.

G. O. Shattuck (G. Putnam, Jr., with him), for the defendant.

C. A. Welch and W. S. Dexter, for the plaintiffs.

CHAPMAN, J. The parties are owners of adjoining lands, and the defendant's house stands on or near the line. The construction of his deed was settled in the former case between the same parties. 1 Allen, 443. He has erected a bay-window which extends beyond the line, over the plaintiffs' land, and maintains it there. The justification which he sets up in this action is, that there is a highway over the plaintiffs' land, extending to the line, and that his structure does not interfere with the use of the way. But this furnishes no legal defence. Nothing is better settled than that a highway leaves the title of the owner unaffected as to everything except the right of the public to make and repair it and use it as a way, and for some other public purposes, such as drainage and the laying of aqueducts; and that an adjoining proprietor has no more right to erect and maintain a permanent structure over the land than if no highway was there. A mere easement has passed to the public, leaving the fee in the owner. An adjoining proprietor may have occasion to use the way in connection with his land, in a different manner from other people. In O'Linda v. Lothrop, 21 Pick. 292, it was held that he might swing his gate or door over the way, suffer his horses or carriages to stand upon it, lay building materials upon it designed to be used on his land, and throw earth upon it as he removed the earth from his cellar. But these are all temporary acts, and are connected with the use of the way. He may spread earth upon it to make it more level and his access to it from his premises more convenient; but this is merely fitting it more perfectly to be used as a way. In Underwood v. Carney, 1 Cush. 285, the uses of the way which were held to be legal were of the same character as those in O'Linda v. Lothrop. They did not constitute permanent occupation; nor do those cases justify any occupation except for a reasonable time, and as connected with its use as a way. Here the occupation has been permanent, and having no connection with the use of the way.

The evidence of the alleged custom was rightly rejected. If there be a custom in Boston to erect bay-windows, balconies, and other structures over the streets, provided they do not interfere with the rights of the public, by proprietors who own the soil of the street, such a custom has no application to the case. If it be a custom to erect them over the land of other people, such a custom is illegal; and the defendant cannot justify himself in occupying his neighbor's property as a part of his dwelling-house on the ground that such trespasses are customary in Boston. Homer v. Dorr, 10 Mass. 26; Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick. 145. In some of our ancient highways the fee has always been in the town. Probably this is the case as to many of the streets of Boston. It does not follow from the decision of this case that the public could maintain an action like the present. There are also many cases where lands adjoining the highway have been so conveyed that, by our established construction of deeds, the fee of the land from the side line to the centre of the highway remains in the grantor, though both parties actually supposed it was conveyed. It is now too late to discuss the question whether it would not have been better to hold that all deeds bounding on the highway conveyed all the rights of the grantor as far as the middle of the way, as deeds bounding on streams extend to the thread. But in such cases, where there are no covenants such as are contained in the deed of Amory to Aphorp respecting the way, and defining the rights of the parties (see 1 Allen, 444), and where the grantor has no other land adjoining the highway to be affected by building a structure over the way, and can have no possible use of his fee so long as the highway exists, it does not follow from the decision in this case that he can maintain an action for the erection of such a structure. For in the present case the plaintiff not only has a right to have the whole space occupied by the street open, from the soil upwards, for the free admission of light and air, and the prospect unobstructed from every point, but it is a right of appreciable value in reference to himself and his grantees, who are proprietors of the other land adjoining the way. If the defendant may obstruct the light and air and prospect by means of a bay-window, he may by a much larger structure, and thereby greatly injure the property bounding on the street.

These views make it unnecessary to decide the questions argued as to the actual existence of the highway; because, if it does exist, that fact does not constitute a defence to the action.

Exceptions overruled.

MILLS v. LEARN.

SUPREME COURT OF OREGON. 1867.

[Reported 2 Oreg. 215.]

THE complaint alleges that a properly established highway runs through plaintiff's premises, and that the Umpqua River crosses said highway on those premises; that defendant properly obtained a license to keep a ferry across that river, and the injuries complained of are that defendant used the banks of the Umpqua River, within the lines of the public road, as places for landing from his ferry-boats, and for tying up the same, without first obtaining permission ; and wrongfully and unlawfully continued and threatened to continue so to use the said banks ; that plaintiff never had received any compensation for such use. Plaintiff prayed for a decree enjoining defendant from committing such trespasses. Defendant demurred to the complaint for insufficiency, and after argument the court below sustained the demurrer and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed, and the cause stands on demurrer to complaint, and the error alleged in sustaining the same.

Kelsay and Watson, counsel for appellant.

W. R. Willis, counsel for respondent.

WILSON, J. At the December Term, 1853, in the case of Grant v. Drew, 1 Oregon R. 35, the Supreme Court of Oregon Territory decided several questions which arise in this case. Under the law then, the proprietor of the land adjoining or embracing any watercourse, over which a ferry might be established, had the preference, if he made application, over others, to keep the ferry. The present law, Code 869, § 42, declares not only a similar preference, but that no license shall issue to another unless, after notice of such application in writing, given to the riparian owner at least ten days prior to the term of court, such owner fail to appear and claim such license. That court declared that Grant, the riparian owner, had not the exclusive right to the ferry, and that he had failed to designate his preference to claim his right at the proper time, and it had been rightly conferred on another. After a full examination of the authorities, we here re-affirm the conclusions then made, that when a public highway crosses a stream of water it is not interrupted, but the water, and the soil beneath it, within the limits of the road, are a continuous part of the road ; that when necessary for the proper use and enjoyment of the highway by the public, the ferries and bridges are also parts and parcels of the road. The present law provides for no terminations of a road, except the places of commencement and ending ; the survey is continuous ; if streams of water intervene, they are not deemed interruptions, for the survey continues over them as though they did not exist, and the distance is no greater or less by reason of their happening. Within the continuous limits, the public are entitled to have the way made safest for travel ; to have hills lessened, forests removed, embankments made, and naturally impassable places made passable by bridge or ferry. From the varied adjudications hitherto on this subject, the general drift tends to the doctrine which we enunciate as the law in Oregon. Our Statute recognizes fully the rule in our Constitution, art. 1, § 18, and makes ample provision to compensate persons for those privileges, in respect to roads, which the public require. Public interests demand a safe and free right of travel through and over the whole length of a highway. The owner of lands, through which it may pass, has been notified that the public requires its location. He is well aware of the place of entrance upon, and exit from his premises, and the general course thereon ; of the necessity of a ferry or bridge he is certainly apprised ; and with a full knowledge of the claim for a practicable road, of the acts needed to make it such, and of all the incidents therewith connected, he makes a claim for damages for the full and perfect location of the highway ; and nowhere does the Statute contemplate a claim for partial damages. He knows the extent of injury ; knows, too, that by Statute he stands secure of the right to keep any ferry on or adjacent to his lands, if he deem it of any sufficient value. It would be strange if, with all this knowledge, with these rights, he could afterwards say to the public that it had not compensated him for the privilege of using the ground at the edge of a stream in the road for the landing of those boats, which the competent authority deems best fitted for the convenience of the public. If his general claim for damages has been adjusted, or if he have failed to make such claim, we deem that he has received constitutional compensation for the laying out of the road, and all its incidents. He had, we affirm, no natural rights, except the right of landing upon the banks of the stream, and the right to a private ferry ; certainly the claim for damages covers the former, and the latter is still his privilege, though a public ferry be established. The land under the water, as well as the land at the edge of the stream, is subject to the incumbrances of a highway, and their uses differ not ; there is no line in a highway, on the different sides of which there are different rights or incumbrances. The franchise of a ferry rests with the State, and the right to locate a road is vested in the same authority, and both powers are jointly used in locating a highway, if necessary, and damages are claimed for the exercise of both, if claimed at all.

A brief reference to authorities sustains this view. In Peters v. Kendall, 6 Barn. & Cress. 703 (1827), the English courts held that the owner of the ferry need not have the property in the soil on either side ; it was sufficient that the landing-place was a public highway ; it was a right incident to the ferry to use such landing-place for the purposes of a ferry. Virginia authorities go very far that way. Somerville v. Wimbish, 7 Grat. 205 ; Patrick v. Ruffner, 2 Rob. 209. So Mills v. Commissioners, 3 Scam. 53 ; and from the collation of authorities, carefully made, Chancellor Kent, in the third volume of his Commentaries, note to page 421, declares this the better doctrine, that "this is the most reasonable conclusion upon the right to the use of a public highway to which a ferry is connected." The cases cited by counsel for appellant go mainly to this point, that a highway being established, and the public and the land-owner having acquired rights and privileges incident thereto, such use and such rights cannot be taken by a private or public corporation for particular purposes, or be diverted to other and inconsistent uses, without compensation for such appropriation or diversion. To that doctrine we cheerfully subscribe ; but those cases do not apply here. We deem the ferry a part of the road ; without it, the road is useless, and the location has failed in its object. The landings are upon the highway and within its lines, and the distinction is a very shadowy one, between stepping from the land upon a boat, and from thence upon the land, and stepping from land to land, especially when all valuable rights are saved in other ways by our laws, perhaps as a part of a compensation to the land-owner. The owner of the land cannot go upon that landing and build abutments, or lay a wharf. Surely no diversion of use has been made, no appropriation different from the first great purpose of having a safe and speedy line for public travel and convenience. While this view decides the case in question, there is another feature which belongs specially to this case.

If the right to land from a ferry boat on a highway upon appellant's land was his own, and not to be taken without compensation, certainly the public has notified him that an appropriation of that right was demanded, and by as strict a course of procedure as in laying out a highway, he was notified that, upon a certain time it would be appropriated, unless he appeared and received that which would be in every view a compensation, viz.: The receiving of that franchise from the State which could only make the landing-place of any value to him; compensation was assessed and tendered then. The law declares that he shall be preferred. He has no right to have a public ferry in any way, without that franchise; the landing is to him of no value otherwise. If, then, conscious of that claim of appropriation to public use of his lands, he fail to appear and obtain, not only the value of landing from the stream, but also an exclusive ferry right, does he not waive any claim to compensation? Does he not declare that it is of no sufficient value to compensate him for the trouble of asking for his rights? Or, does he not consent that what might be of value to him, may be given to another? And no court would hold other than that he had consented to such use. In this case the full compliance with the law had been made, and appellant had suffered such a course when fully conscious of its effect. In either view we have taken, the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.¹

STATE v. DAVIS.

SUPREME COURT OF NORTH CAROLINA. 1879.

[Reported 80 N. C. 351.]

INDICTMENT for an affray tried at November Term, 1878, of Wake Criminal Court, before Strong, J.

The opinion contains the facts. That portion of the charge of the court to which exception was taken is as follows (the defendant and one Lassiter being on trial under the indictment): "Should the jury find that defendant Davis while in a public highway passing over lands of which Mrs. Laws was in possession, or while out of the highway but on such lands, used obscene, vulgar, and profane language, to the annoyance of men and women in the house of Mrs. Laws situated near by, and that defendant Lassiter was her son and lived in said house with his mother, and that he struck Davis for the purpose of suppressing said annoyance, and used no more force than was necessary for that purpose, you will find him not guilty." Verdict of Not guilty as to Lassiter, and Guilty as to Davis. Judgment, appeal by defendant.

Attorney-General, for the State.

Mr. T. M. Argo, for the defendant.

ASHE, J. The defendant and one Evans were quarrelling near the dwelling-house of Mrs. Laws in a public road running over her land. The defendant, armed with a pistol which he had in his hand, was vaporizing, cursing, and using very vulgar language in the hearing of the inmates of the house. Lassiter, who was the son of Mrs. Laws and lived with her, came out with an ordinary walking-stick in his hand and remonstrated with the defendant, who, still holding his pistol, cursed and denounced him, saying he was in the public road, and he would curse as much as he pleased. After the interchange of a few words, the lie was given by defendant, and Lassiter struck him with his stick; when the defendant attempted to use his pistol, but was prevented by those present.

He seems to have rested his defence upon the ground that he was in the public road, and had the right to do there as he pleased. In this he was mistaken. The public have only an easement in a highway; that is, the right of passing and repassing along it. The soil remains in the owner, and where one stops in the road and conducts himself as the defendant is charged to have done, he becomes a trespasser, and the owner has the right to abate the nuisance which he is creating. The principle of molliter manus does not apply to a case like this, where the trespasser, armed with a pistol, is acting in such belligerent defiance. See State v. Buckner, Phil. 558.

The defendant used language which was calculated and intended to bring on a fight, and a fight ensued. He is guilty. State v. Perry, 5 Jones, 9; State v. Robbins, 78 N. C. 431.

We find no error in the charge given by His Honor to the jury. Let this be certified, &c.

PER CURIAM.

*No error.*¹

WILLIAMS v. NEW YORK CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY.¹

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1857.

[Reported 16 N. Y. 97.]

SELDEN, J.² This is a suit in equity, the object of which is to obtain a perpetual injunction, restraining the defendants from continuing to use and occupy with their railway a portion of a certain highway or street, in the village of Syracuse, known as Washington Street, and to recover damages for its past occupation. Washington Street was gratuitously dedicated to the use of the public by the plaintiff and others through whose land it was laid; and the Utica and Syracuse Railroad Company, to the rights and liabilities of which the defendants have succeeded, constructed their railway upon it without making any compensation to the plaintiff, and without his consent. At the time the track was laid the plaintiff was the owner of a large number of lots fronting upon the street, a portion of which he has since sold, with a reservation of his claim against the railroad company for damages, and a portion of which he still owns. The damages which have accrued, both upon the sold and unsold portions of the premises, are claimed in this suit.

The defendants, in justification of their occupation of the street, show that the charter of the Utica and Syracuse Railroad Company (Laws of 1836, 319, § 11) declares that their road might "intersect" and be built upon any highway, and that this right is confirmed by the General Railroad Act of 1850.

They also show the express consent of the municipal authorities of the village, as well as of the city of Syracuse, to such occupation. The principal question, therefore, and the only one which I deem it necessary to consider, is, whether the State and municipal authorities combined could confer upon the railroad company the right to construct their road upon this street, without obtaining the consent of the plaintiff or making him compensation.

If the railway encroaches in any degree upon the plaintiff's proprietary rights, then it is clear that the constitutional inhibition, which forbids the taking of private property for public use "without just compensation," applies to the case.

It is conceded that, by the dedication, the public acquired no more than the ordinary easement or right to use the premises as a highway; and that the plaintiff continues the owner in fee, in respect to the unsold lots, to the centre of the street, subject only to this easement; but it is contended that the taking and use of the street by the railroad company does not encroach upon the reserved rights of the plaintiff, because the use of a street for the purposes of a railroad is only "one of the modes of enjoying the public easement."

² The opinion only is given.

Before examining this position in the light of principle, it will be well, as the question is one of great importance, to ascertain how far it may be regarded as settled by authority. In doing this it is indispensable, to avoid confusion, to separate those cases which bear directly upon the question, from numerous cases which, although they may appear upon a cursory reading to have some bearing upon the subject, will be found upon closer examination to throw no light upon it.

In the first place, then, it should be observed that this case bears no analogy to that class of cases in which the main inquiry is, not as to any violation, either direct or consequential, of the corporeal rights of property of the plaintiff, but rather to those incidental injuries which unavoidably result from the construction of railways through the streets of populous towns and villages, such as noise, smoke, frightening of horses, obstruction to the free and convenient use of the street, &c. I will refer to two or three of the cases belonging to this class, which might be supposed, unless closely examined, to have something to do with the question.

The case of Drake v. The Hudson River Railroad Company, 7 Barb. 508, was a suit brought by a number of persons claiming to be owners of lots fronting on Hudson Street, in the city of New York, to restrain the defendants from laying down their rails in that street. Although it was alleged in the complaint that the plaintiffs were owners in fee of the soil to the centre of the street, and the point was made that the conversion of the street into a railroad track was a violation of their rights of property, yet, as the plaintiffs entirely failed to establish any title in themselves to the soil of the street, the question presented here did not and could not arise. Justice Jones, who delivered the leading opinion, says: "The plaintiff can, consequently, have or claim no right or title to the legal estate of the portions of Hudson and Canal Streets taken by the corporation of the city, by authority of law, for the purpose of laying out and forming or opening the same."

Justice Edwards also denied that the plaintiff had any title to the soil of the street. Indeed, no case is likely to arise in the city of New York which would be entitled to any weight in the decision of this question, for the reason that it is claimed, and apparently with much justice, that, as to a large portion of the streets in that city, the fee of the land, and not a mere easement, is vested in the corporation. Judge Hoffman, in his recent work on the corporate powers of the city, after arguing with much clearness and force in favor of the position, says: "In every street, then, opened under the provision of the Acts of 1807 and 1813, the fee in the soil is vested in the corporation. It is divested from the original owners." (Hoffman's Treatise, 289.)

There are also two cases which have arisen in the city of Brooklyn, which it may be well briefly to notice; viz., Plant v. Long Island Railroad Company, 10 Barb. 26, and Hentz v. The Same, 13 Barb. 646. In neither of these cases did the question here presented arise. In the first, the defendants, under an authority from the common council of the city of Brooklyn, had constructed a tunnel under the street upon which the plaintiff's premises were situated. The opinion of the court was delivered by Justice Edwards, who, while he argued at some length in favor of the power of city corporations to deal with streets in a way not authorized in respect to highways in the country, nevertheless held that the question now under consideration did not arise. After insisting that it did not appear in the case but that the plaintiff might have received compensation, he says: "But again, suppose that no compensation has been made to the owners of the adjoining lands, and no consent has been obtained from them, how can the plaintiff take advantage of it in this suit? He does not claim damages for trespass upon land owned or possessed by him, nor for an injury done to the soil in front of his lot. He claims consequential damages for injury alleged to have been done to his business."

In the second, which was a Special Term case, Judge Strong, before whom it was heard, cautiously reserves his opinion upon the point before us. After showing that the plaintiff had established no title to the soil of the street, he says: "But if the plaintiff had a full title to the land in question when it was first taken, and if he would then have been entitled to any compensation from the defendants for appropriating it to a species of locomotion different from that for which it had been dedicated or acquired (concerning which it is not necessary that I should give an opinion, nor do I), there is still a serious obstacle in the way of obtaining an injunction."

The case of The Ohio and Lexington Railroad Company v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289, having been decided by the highest court in Kentucky, is apparently relied upon; but it clearly belongs to the same class with those already considered. Chief Justice Robertson there discusses the general subject very elaborately and in a variety of aspects; but, upon careful analysis, it will be found that the only points involved in the case were, whether the railroad was a purpresture, or such an interference with the incorporeal rights or easements appurtenant to the plaintiff's lots, situated upon the street, as constituted it a private nuisance. Indeed, the latter may be considered the only point, as there clearly could be no purpresture when the road was constructed by the express authority of both the municipal and State governments. No such question as that presented in this case could have arisen, because the fee of the land over which the street was laid was regarded as being, not in the plaintiffs, but in the corporation of Louisville. This clearly appears from the language of the Chief Justice. In one portion of his opinion he says: "Although, therefore, an ordinary public way may be discontinued, or applied to some other public purpose than that for which it was first established, without any legal liability for pecuniary compensation to the local public, or to any owner of adjoining lands, because neither such public nor proprietor had any right of property in the way, or any other legal interest in it than that which was common to all the people; and though also the mayor and council, holding the legal title to the streets of Louisville in trust, chiefly for public purposes, might regrade and improve those streets," &c.

This extract shows, not only that the plaintiffs had no title to the soil, but that they were seeking redress for being deprived of their easement in the street, and that this was the point under consideration by the court.

These cases and others of the same class may be considered as settling the question that a railroad in a populous town is not a nuisance per se, and that, when the railroad company has acquired the title to the land upon which its road is located, such company, being in the exercise of a lawful right, is not liable, unless guilty of some misconduct or negligence, for any consequential injuries which may result to others from the operation and use of its road; but they decide nothing whatever in regard to the question to be considered in this case; and it would not have been necessary to notice them at all, were it not that in some of them so many points are discussed, which were not before the court, that, without a close examination, what is really decided would not readily be seen.

There is also another class of cases in which, although the injury complained of is to the corporeal rights of the plaintiff, yet, being merely consequential, and no direct trespass or unauthorized intrusion upon the plaintiff's property being alleged, the question under consideration here could not arise. Such are the cases of Fletcher v. The Auburn and Syracuse Railroad Company, 25 Wend. 464; Chapman v. The Albany and Schenectady Railroad Company, 10 Barb. 360. In these and the like cases, the title of the company to the ground on which its road is built is not disputed; it is unnecessary, therefore, to notice them further here.

We come, then, to the consideration of the cases which do bear, with more or less weight, upon the question to be decided, and upon which, so far as authority is concerned, its decision must mainly depend. The first among these cases, in the order of time as well as of importance, is that of The Presbyterian Society of Waterloo v. The Auburn and Rochester Railroad Company, 3 Hill, 567. The declaration was in trespass for entering upon the plaintiffs' premises, digging up the soil, and constructing their railroad track upon it. The defence was, that the locus in quo was a public highway, and that the charter of the company expressly authorized it to construct its road upon and across any highway. The point, therefore, was presented in the most direct manner possible, and the defence was most emphatically overruled. The language of Chief Justice Nelson is most pertinent and forcible. He says: "But the plaintiffs were not divested of the fee of the land by the laying out of a highway; nor did the public thus acquire any greater interest therein than a right of way, with the powers and privileges incident to that right; such as digging the soil, and using the timber and other materials found within the limits of the road, in a reasonable manner, for the purpose of making and repairing the same. Subject to this easement, and this only, the rights and interests of the owner of the fee remained unimpaired. It is quite clear, therefore, even if the true construction of the eleventh section accords with the view taken by the counsel for the defendants, that the legislature had no power to authorize the company to enter upon and appropriate the land in question, for purposes other than those to which it had been originally dedicated, in pursuance of the Highway Act, without first providing a just compensation therefor."

It was urged in that case, as in this, that using the road for a railway was only a different mode of exercising the right which had been acquired by the people; that the use was virtually the same, viz., that of accommodating the travelling public. But the argument met with no favor from the court. Judge Nelson says: "It was said on the argument that the highway is only used by the defendants for the purposes originally designed, the accommodation of the public, and for this compensation has already been made. This argument might have been used with about the same force in the case of Sir John Lade v. Shephard, 2 Strange, 1004."

He adds, on this subject: "The claim set up (by the defendants) is an easement; not a right of passage to the public, but to the company, who have the exclusive privilege of using the track of the road in their own peculiar manner. The public may travel with them over the track, if they choose to ride in their cars."

This case, decided by our late Supreme Court upon full consideration and in so emphatic a manner, ought to be conclusive, unless it appears upon principle to be clearly erroneous. It has never been overruled, nor has its force been materially impaired by any decision in this State. The case of Adams v. The Saratoga and Washington Railroad Company, 11 Barb. S. C. R. 414, might seem, both from the note of the reporter and from some of the remarks of the learned judge who delivered the opinion, to be inconsistent with the case just reviewed; but upon careful examination it will be found that nothing which was necessarily decided in it conflicts in the slightest degree with that case.

The action was ejectment, to recover portions of a street in the village of Whitehall, called Church Street, upon and along which the defendants had constructed their railroad track. Jeremiah Adams, under whom the plaintiff claimed, had originally dedicated the street to the use of the public, laying out lots on each side, all of which he had sold and conveyed to different individuals. The plaintiff's claim rested upon the ground that the title of the purchasers of these lots did not extend to the centre of the street. The court, however, rejected this claim, and held that the plaintiff had no title whatever to the land occupied by the defendants' road. This certainly was sufficient to dispose of the case, and all that was said, therefore, upon the question depending here, was strictly obiter. The same may be said in regard to the case of Milhau v. Sharp, 15 Barb. S. C. R. 193. The question did not arise in that case.

We might, therefore, with propriety, perhaps, consider the case of The Presbyterian Society in Waterloo v. The Auburn and Rochester Railroad Company (supra) as definitively settling the point in this State.

I will, however, refer to the case of The Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad Company, 6 Whart. 25, by way of illustrating the reasoning that must be resorted to in order to sustain the right of a railroad company to occupy a highway, without making any compensation to the individual owners of the fee. The case came before the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, upon exceptions to the report of the jurors or commissioners appointed by the Court of Quarter Sessions of Philadelphia County to designate the route of the road, they having located a part of the road upon and along Front Street, in the district of Kensington, a part of the city of Philadelphia.

Exceptions were taken by the commissioners having charge of the streets in Kensington, and also by the individual proprietors of lots on Front Street: by the former, on the ground that the location of the road upon the street interfered with the public easement vested in the corporation of the city; and by the individual citizens on the ground that private property was taken for public use without compensation, contrary to the provision of the State Constitution.

The exception of the commissioners is answered by Chief Justice Gibson in this wise. He says: "The legal title to the ground, therefore, remains in him who owned it before the street was laid out; but even that is an immaterial consideration, for an adverse right of soil could not impair the public right of way over it, or prevent the Legislature from modifying, abridging, or enlarging its use, whether the title was in a corporation or a stranger." It is unnecessary here to question the soundness of this position, although a doubt might arise whether an easement which is quasi at least a matter of contract can properly be abridged or enlarged by the Legislature. The doctrine may perhaps be true in respect to the streets of a city, so far as the corporation alone is concerned, on the ground that the easement is not for the exclusive benefit of the corporators but of the whole people, and, therefore, that the ultimate trust is in the State Government; but that the Legislature have the power to enlarge a use, as against the donor or vendor of such use, is a doctrine to which I cannot give my assent.

But the Chief Justice gives a different answer to the exception by the individual proprietors. He says: "What, then, is the interest of an individual inhabitant, as a subject of compensation, under the constitutional injunction that private property be not taken by a corporation for public use without it? Even agreeing that his ground extends to the middle of the street, the public have a right of way over it. Neither the part used for the street nor the part occupied by himself is taken away from him ; and as it was dedicated to public use, without restriction, he is not within the benefit of the constitutional prohibition, which extends not to matters of annoyance."

Is this sound doctrine? Is it true that one who dedicates land, for a highway, or street, dedicates it to the public use without restriction? I apprehend it is an assumption wholly unfounded, and contrary to a multitude of cases in which it has been held that the public acquire nothing beyond the mere right of passing and repassing upon the highway, and that in all other respects the rights of the original owner remain unimpaired.

I will not dwell longer upon this case, as it will not be seriously, and cannot be successfully, contended either that the dedication of land for a highway gives to the public an unlimited use, or that the Legislature have the power to encroach upon the reserved rights of the owner by materially enlarging or changing the nature of the public easement.

The only plausible ground which can be taken is that which was assumed in the case of The Presbyterian Society of Waterloo v. The Auburn and Rochester Railroad Company, and which has also been assumed here; viz.: That to convert a highway into a railroad track is no material change in, or enlargement of, the uses to which it was originally dedicated; that the construction of a railroad along a highway is simply one of the modes of accomplishing the object of the original dedication, viz., that of creating a thoroughfare and passage-way for the public; in short, that the railroad is a species of highway, and that the two uses are substantially identical.

But is this assumption just? Are the two uses the same? If the only difference consisted in the introduction of a new motive power, it would not be material. But is there no distinction between the common right of every man to use upon the road a conveyance of his own at will, and the right of a corporation to use its conveyances to the exclusion of all others; between the right of a man to travel in his own carriage without pay, and the right to travel in the car of a railroad company on paying their price?

It may be said that the use of the road as a common highway is not subverted; that a man may still drive his own carriage upon it. Without pausing to notice the fallacy of this argument, and the impracticability of the enjoyment of such a right where railroad trains are passing and repassing every half hour, let us look at the subject in another point of view. The right of the public in a highway is an easement, and one that is vested in the whole public. Is not the right of a railroad company, if it has a right to construct its track upon the road, also an easement? This cannot be denied, nor that the latter easement is enjoyed, not by the public at large, but by a corporation; because it will not be pretended that every man would have a right to go and lay down his timbers, and his iron rails, and make a railroad upon a highway. Here, then, are two easements: one vested in the public, the other in the railroad company. These easements are property, and that of the railroad company is valuable. How was it acquired? It has cost the company nothing. The theory must be that it is carved out and is a part of the public easement, and is therefore the gift of the public. This would do, if it was given solely at the expense of the public. But it is manifest that it is at the joint expense of the public and the owner of the fee. Ought not the latter, then, to have been consulted?

But it is unnecessary to refine upon this case. Any one can see that, to convert a common highway, running over a man's land, into a railroad, is to impose an additional burden upon the land, and greatly to impair its value. As no compensation has, in this case, been made to the owner, his consent must in some way be shown. The argument is, that as he has consented to the laying out of a highway upon his land, ergo he has consented to the building of a railroad upon it; although one of these benefits his land, renders access to it easy, and enhances its price, while the other makes access to it both difficult and dangerous, and renders it comparatively valueless. Were the transaction between two individuals, every one would see at once the injustice of the conclusion attempted to be drawn. It is the public interest supposed to be involved which begets the difficulty, and it is just for this reason that the Constitution interferes for the protection of individual rights, and provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without compensation, — a provision no less necessary than just, and one which it is the duty of the courts to see honestly and fairly enforced.

The case stated by the learned justice who delivered a dissenting opinion in the Supreme Court is a striking illustration of the injustice that would frequently be done under the rule contended for by the defendants. A street was laid out through a man's land, and he was assessed several hundred dollars for benefits, in addition to the land taken; and before the street was opened it was taken by a railroad company and converted into the track of their road. The owner lost his land, had to pay several hundred dollars, and had the annoyance of the railroad besides; while the railroad company got the road for nothing.

The case of Inhabitants of Springfield v. Connecticut River Railroad Company, 4 Cush. 63, shows what the Supreme Court of Massachusetts thought of the argument that the uses are the same. It was insisted there, on the part of the defendants, that the power conferred upon them by the Legislature, to build their road between certain termini, gave them by necessary implication the right to build their track upon any intervening highway. But Chief Justice Shaw, in reply to this argument, says: "The two uses are almost, if not wholly, inconsistent with each other, so that taking the highway for a railroad will nearly supersede the former use to which it had been legally appropriated. The whole course of legislation on the subject of railroads is opposed to such a construction."

I concur with the learned Chief Justice, and have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the dedication of land to the use of the public as a highway is not a dedication of it to the use of a railroad company; that the two uses are essentially different; and that, consequently, a railway cannot be built upon a highway without compensation to the owners of the fee. The legislative provisions on the subject were probably intended, as was intimated in The Presbyterian Society of Waterloo v. Auburn and Rochester Railroad Company, to confer the right so far only as the public easement is concerned, leaving the companies to deal with the private rights of individuals in the ordinary mode. If, however, more was intended, the provisions are clearly in conflict with the Constitution, and cannot be sustained.

It follows that the defendants, in constructing their road upon Washington Street without the consent of the plaintiff, and without any appraisal of his damages or compensation to him in any form, were guilty of an unwarrantable intrusion and trespass upon his property, and that he is entitled to relief. Although he had a remedy at law for the trespass, yet, as the trespass was of a continuous nature, he had a right to come into a court of equity, and to invoke its restraining power to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and can of course recover his damages as incidental to this equitable relief. There may be doubt as to his right to recover in this suit the damages upon the lots which have been sold; because, as to those lots, there was no occasion to ask any equitable relief, and to permit the damages to be assessed in this suit, in effect deprives the defendants of the right to have them assessed by a jury. But as this question has not been raised, it is unnecessary to consider it.

The judgment must be reversed, and there must be a new trial, with costs to abide the event.

SHANKLAND, J., read an opinion concurring in the result of the foregoing, and discussing certain questions of evidence which the disposition of the main point, in accordance with his opinion and that of SELDEN, J., rendered it immaterial to decide, and which were therefore not passed upon by the court. COMSTOCK and PAIGE, JJ., took no part in the decision. All the other judges concurring,

Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

WEST v. BANCROFT.

SUPREME COURT OF VERMONT. 1859.

[Reported 32 Vt. 367.]

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM. Plea, Not guilty, with notice of special justification to the effect that the defendant was one of the trustees of the village of St. Johnsbury; that the close in question was a common highway; that the defendant, with his co-trustees, made an excavation in the highway and constructed therein a reservoir for water to be used in sprinkling the streets, to protect the buildings in the village from fire, and for other public uses; and that this was the alleged trespass. At the trial, before Barrett, J., there was a question whether the reservoir was within the limits of the highway. The judge charged the jury that the putting in of a reservoir or cistern by the public authority of the village for public purposes, within the limits of the public highway within the village, would not constitute a trespass for which the owner of the fee could recover. The part of the charge relating to the location of the highway is omitted. The plaintiff excepted to the charge, and the jury returned a verdict for the defendant.¹

Child and Benton, for the plaintiff.

A. J. Willard and Stoddard and Clark, for the defendant.

PIERPOINT, J. We think that in view of the evidence, and the admissions of the parties, as to the location of the highway in the village of St. Johnsbury, there can be no doubt that if the acts complained of in this case were done within four rods east of the western limit of the highway, as used for the last forty years, they were done within the highway, and that the charge of the court on that question was correct.

The only remaining question is as to the right of the public to put a reservoir, or cistern, into the earth, within the limits of the highway, for the purpose of retaining water to be used in sprinkling the streets and extinguishing fires. There is nothing stated in the bill of exceptions tending to show, either from the place where this cistern was put, or the manner of its construction, that it was likely to interfere with the full and perfect use of the highway by the public, or to produce any special injury to the owner of the adjoining land, and the owner of the reversionary right in the highway; but the case stands upon the bare right of the public to do the act under any circumstances.

The power of the public over highways is not confined to their use for the sole purpose of travel. Many things may be done therein for the promotion of the public convenience and health, such as laying water pipes, constructing drains and sewers, making reservoirs, and many other acts which the public may require ; and when these acts are done by the public authorities in a judicious manner and with proper care, having reference to the rights of adjoining proprietors, and the owners of the fee of the land, if such proprietors are incidentally affected injuriously thereby, or the owner of the fee sustains a technical damage, the law furnishes no remedy therefor.

But in this case it is not necessary to resort to this principle, even to justify the acts of the defendant. It is conceded that this reservoir was built by the defendant as a public officer, having charge of such matters, and in the discharge of his official duty ; that the object was to retain water to be used in sprinkling the streets, and for other public purposes. This, we think, clearly comes within the object and purpose for which the highway was originally laid out.

All those acts which tend to facilitate travel, and add to the ease, comfort, and convenience of the traveller, or his beasts, whether it be by cutting down the hills, filling the ravines, paving the roads, erecting watering troughs, or sprinkling the streets, are acts which it is proper and often necessary for the public to do. And in a village containing so numerous and active a population as St. Johnsbury, no other one of these acts perhaps would add so much to the comfort of the passers on the highway, as well as all the inhabitants of such village, as that of sprinkling the streets ; and such act, instead of infringing on the rights of the reversioner, can hardly be said to approach that uncertain line constituting the true boundary between the rights of the public and the owners of the fee in the highway.

The judgment of the county court is affirmed.

CRAIG v. ROCHESTER RAILROAD COMPANY.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1868.

[Reported 39 N. Y. 404.]

THIS is an appeal from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court of the Seventh District, perpetually enjoining the defendant from laying its track (a horse-railroad track) in East Avenue, a public street of the city of Rochester, opposite the premises of the plaintiff, or doing anything in relation thereto. The facts of the case are as follows : —

The defendant was organized under and by virtue of the General Railroad Act, on the 20th day of May, 1862. On the 24th day of June, 1862, the defendant procured the consent of the Common Council of the city of Rochester to its constructing, maintaining, and operating its road and laying its track through sundry streets of that city, upon certain terms, conditions, and stipulations. By the terms of such consent, such railroad track was to be constructed of the improved Philadelphia broad rail, six inches face, half inch raised edge, the edge to be laid flush with the surface of the street, four feet ten inches apart between the raised edges, so as to accommodate the most common width of carriage wheels. The track was to be so laid as to permit the free passage of vehicles over the same, and the rails laid even with the surface of the street, and to conform to the grades thereof as they were then established, or should thereafter be established or altered. Provision was made for the keeping open of the streets, &c., during the laying of the track. The cars to be used on the railroad were to be drawn by horses or mules only, at a speed not exceeding seven miles per hour, and to be run as the Common Council shall prescribe. Numerous other provisions as to the operation of the road were attached to the consent of the Common Council. Under this consent, which was accepted by the company, the defendant was proceeding to construct its road, when the plaintiff, on the 21st of October, 1862, commenced his action against the defendant, in which he alleged that he was the owner of a lot on East Avenue, extending to the centre of said street, upon which was situated his dwelling-house; that the defendant was a corporation, organized under the Railroad Act, and was about to commence the construction of its road in said East Avenue, running along the centre of said street past his said premises; that the defendant has taken no proceedings to acquire the title of the plaintiff to any part of his premises, or to assess his damages, and that the defendant claimed to construct its road in East Avenue without obtaining his consent, or taking proceedings to acquire title; that the construction of said road, and said road after its completion, would, in his judgment, greatly impair his enjoyment of his said premises, and depreciate the value thereof.

The defendant in its answer admitted the title of the plaintiff to the premises in question, and that it was about to construct its railroad through East Avenue, but denied that it would impair or depreciate the value of the plaintiff's premises. The answer then set forth the consent of the Common Council of the city of Rochester, before referred to, and that its road was to be constructed and operated in accordance with the provisions thereof.

The action came on for trial before Justice J. C. Smith, when the plaintiff read the pleadings and rested his case. The defendant put in evidence its articles of association, the map and profile of its route, the consent of the Common Council, before referred to, its acceptance and adoption thereof, with the approval of the attorney of the city, as required thereby. Upon this testimony the case was submitted to the court. The court, on the 2d of April, 1863, made its decision. The findings of the court contain substantially the facts above stated, that the defendant formally accepted the consent of the said Common Council, subject to the conditions, provisions, and restrictions therein contained, and bound itself to keep and observe the same, under which it claims to construct its road, and not otherwise.

The court decided that the construction by the defendant of the railroad authorized and permitted by the resolution aforesaid (the consent of the Common Council) in the aforesaid street opposite the premises of the plaintiff would be the imposition of an additional burden upon, and the taking of, the property of the plaintiff, within the meaning of the constitutional provision, which forbids such taking without compensation, and that the defendant derived no authority to do the acts aforesaid by the Acts of the Legislature under which it is incorporated, or said resolutions of the Common Council of said city, without the consent of the owners of the fee, or the appraisal and payment of his damages in the mode provided by law, and granted a perpetual injunction.

This judgment was afterward affirmed on appeal by the General Term of the Seventh Judicial District, from which decision this appeal is taken.

W. F. Cogswell, for the appellant.

T. F. Strong, for the respondent.

MILLER, J. The defendant in this action claims the right to construct a horse railroad through the streets of the city of Rochester, by virtue of the consent of the Common Council of said city, without making any compensation for damages to the owners of lots along the street in which the road passes. The claim thus urged is based upon the ground, that the building of such a railroad is not an infringement upon the rights, or any injury to the interests, of the owners of the land adjoining, and that it is only a mode of exercising the public right of passage, with which they have parted; and not such an additional or further appropriation, as entitles them to pecuniary remuneration.

I am inclined to think, that the question involved in this case has been substantially adjudicated by this court in several cases, and that the principle has been definitely settled, that such a use of the land imposes an additional burden upon the owner of the fee of the lands adjoining. Such is, no doubt, the rule as to railroads operated by steam power. In the old Supreme Court in the case of The Trustees of the Presbyterian Society in Watertown v. The Aub. & Roch. R. R. Co., 3 Hill, 567, the doctrine was laid down, that the laying out of a highway gives to the public a mere right of passage, with the powers and privileges incident to such right; that the owner of the soil is not thereby divested of his title to the land, and that a railroad company was bound to make compensation for constructing its road across the highway. See, also, Fletcher v. The Auburn and Syracuse R. R. Co., 25 Wend. 462. The same principle was again more distinctly asserted in Williams v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 16 N. Y. 97, and it was held, that an appropriation of a highway by a railroad company is the imposition of an additional burden upon, and the taking of the property of the owner of the fee, within the meaning of the constitutional provision which forbids such taking without compensation, and that the company can derive no title by an Act of the Legislature, or of any municipal authority, without the consent of the owner of the fee, or without the appraisal and payment of damages in the mode prescribed by law. In the case last cited, an action was brought to recover damages for running cars upon the railroad, and to restrain the defendant from enlarging upon and running over a public street in the city of Syracuse in front of the plaintiff's premises, and it presented the distinct question, whether the dedication of land to the use of the public as a highway precludes the owner of the fee, subject to the easement, from maintaining an action against a railroad company, which without any consent, or the appraisal of damages, enters upon and occupies such highway, with the track of the road; and it was decided that the action was maintainable. The same principle here asserted has also been upheld by other adjudications of this court. In Davis v. The Mayor of New York, 14 N. Y. 506, which preceded the case of Williams v. N. Y. C. R. R. Co., the reasoning of the learned judge who delivered the opinion sustains the same views which were enunciated in the latter case. The same doctrine is also upheld by several reported cases, since decided by this court. See Mahon v. The N. Y. C. R. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 658; Carpenter v. The N. Y. C. R. R. Co., Id. 655; Wager v. The Troy Union R. R. Co., 25 Id. 526. These cases must be considered as settling the question beyond peradventure, and conclusively, that the occupation and use of a street by a railroad company, operated by steam, and in the ordinary manner in which such roads are constructed and carried on, is an appropriation of the highway for a new and distinct purpose, entirely foreign from its original object, and which entitles the owner to compensation. This position cannot be controverted. An attempted distinction is however sought to be made, between railroads operated by steam, and those which are simply used by horses as a motive power, in the streets of populous cities; and it is contended, that the rule laid down is entirely inapplicable to the latter class of railroads, which of late years have come into use, and which are increasing in numbers as the wants and necessities of large and populous communities demand more expeditious and more extended means for the transportation of passengers between the widely separated and distant portions of such communities.

The position thus taken is not entirely without authority to uphold it, and our attention has been called to several cases decided in the Supreme Court of this State, as well as to some decisions of the courts in other States, which sustain the doctrine contended for by the defendant's counsel. In another connection I shall have occasion to refer to the cases relied upon by the defendant's counsel, and without examining them in the present stage of the discussion will proceed to consider how far the cases decided by this court affect the question now presented. The effect of the decisions which I have cited are fully considered in the able opinions of the General Term delivered upon the decision of the case now considered, and the principle enunciated by them was there held to be applicable to street railroads, equally with those where steam is employed as the motive power. Without discussing them at length, I shall deem it sufficient to refer briefly to the case of Wager v. The Troy Union R. R. Co., supra, which had been but recently decided, and was not reported when this case was decided at General Term. In that case the former decisions are indorsed and re-affirmed, and the learned judge who wrote the opinion refers to the distinction claimed to exist between railroads operated by steam and horse power in the following explicit terms: "With a single track, and particularly if the cars used upon it were propelled by horse power, the interruption of the public easement in the street might be very trifling, and of no practical consequence to the public at large. But this consideration cannot affect the question of right of property, or of the increase of burden upon the soil. It would present simply a question of degree in respect to the enlargement of the easement, and would not affect the principle, that the use of a street for the purpose of a railroad, imposed upon it, is a new burden." If these views can be considered as embodying the opinion of the court in the case last cited, then they are entirely decisive of the question presented, and must be considered as controlling, and render any further inquiry entirely needless. But, as the distinct point which we are now considering was not presented, it may be well to look at the question, upon principle, in the light of the decisions applicable to railroads propelled by steam, to which I have adverted.

The ground upon which these cases are decided is, that the use of the land for a railroad imposes an additional burden upon the owner of the fee. I am at a loss to see any apparent distinction in the application of the rule between cases where steam power is employed and those cases where the road is operated by horse power. It is true there is some difference in the manner in which the road is constructed, and in the speed with which its cars are propelled, at times; but there is precisely the same exclusive appropriation of the track for the purposes intended in each case, to the absolute exclusion of all who may interfere with its mode of operation. The power to use the road for the conveyance of passengers is entirely with the company, and no person can interfere with that method of conveyance, or with the right of the company to enjoy its monopoly. As was held in Hogan v. The Eighth Avenue R. R. Co., 15 N. Y. 380, the company has the exclusive right of the track while the cars are passing, and all others must keep out of their way, and if a party is injured while they are proceeding at a reasonable and lawful speed an action cannot be maintained against the company for the injury. This privilege of laying and using the track in such a manner confers upon the company a right to the use and enjoyment of the track which precludes other vehicles while the operations of the company in the use of the track demand their exclusion. Such a right is, I think, inconsistent with the nature of the easement acquired by the public. In Williams v. The N. Y. C. R. R. Co., Selden, J., after stating the distinction between the two uses to which the highway is applied by converting it into a railroad track, proceeds to argue, that by means thereof two easements are created, one vested in the public, which has been paid for, and the other in the company, and remarks: "These easements are property, and that of the railroad company is valuable. How was it acquired? It has cost the company nothing. The theory must be, that it is carried out and is a part of the public easement, and is therefore a gift of the public. This would do, if it was given solely at the expense of the public. But it is manifest that it is at the joint expense of the public and the owner of the fee. Ought not the latter to have been consulted?" There is much force, I think, in these suggestions, and it is difficult to see how they can be answered satisfactorily and according to any well-settled legal principle. If the reasoning of the learned judge is correct, then the same rule is applicable to each class of railroads, the difference in the use being only in the degree. (25 N. Y. 533.)

The use of a railroad, no matter how it is operated, whether by horse or steam power, necessarily includes, to a certain extent, an exclusive occupation of a portion of the highway, for the track of the road, and the running of its cars by the company, and a permanent occupation of the soil. It requires, that all other parties shall stand aside, and make way for its progress. This is clearly inconsistent with the legal object and design of a highway, which is entirely open and free to all, for purposes of locomotive travel and transportation. The enjoyment of the easement in a highway never confers an exclusive right upon any one who may have occasion to use it, while the laying down of rails, and the employment of cars, is to the detriment and exclusion of all others at the time when the cars are running, and a restraint upon a free, undisturbed, and general public use. It is an assertion of a right to the possession of the highway by the corporation, and an appropriation of it to private occupation, which, by lapse of time, might ripen into a right, and vest a title in the company.

Instead of being the exercise of a right of passage and repassage over a highway or a street, it cannot, I think, be denied, that it is sometimes an obstruction to travel, and an infringement upon the rights of the public, and owners of land. In narrow streets, where the rails of the road border close upon the sidewalk, it not only interposes obstacles to the traveller, but inflicts injury upon the lot owner, by blocking up the way, and preventing a free access to the premises. The large and unwieldy vehicles which are used, which can only proceed upon a track laid for that purpose, with no capacity to turn out, so as to avoid or accommodate ordinary carriages, are often a source of annoyance and obstruction to the free passage of horses and carriages, for periods of greater or less duration, and are inconsistent with the use of an open and free passage of the highway.

I have examined the decisions of the Supreme Court of this State which have been cited in support of the defendant's theory. (33 Barb. 420; 35 Id. 304; Id. 373; 37 Id. 35.) In none of them was the distinct question, now considered, presented and adjudicated, although some of the opinions maintain the distinction now asserted as existing between the two classes of railways. The cases referred to are also examined and criticised in the opinion of the General Term in this case, upon the appeal from the order denying the motion to vacate the injunction (39 Barb. 494), and I do not deem it necessary to discuss the points of difference more at length. If, under any circumstances, either of them can be considered as deciding the question now before us, then, I think, they are in conflict with the decisions of this court, as well as sound principles, and must be disregarded. In The People v. Kerr, one of the cases cited, which was subsequently carried to the Court of Appeals, and is reported in 27 N. Y. 188, the decision was put upon the ground, that the fee of the street, as against the plaintiffs, was held by the corporation of New York city, and that the plaintiffs, other than the people, had no property in the land forming the bed of the street in front of their respective premises, to be protected by the constitutional limitation, upon the right of eminent domain.

The decisions of the courts of other States, to which our attention has been directed, even if applicable, can have no weight in overthrowing the adjudications of our own courts, and do not, therefore, require examination.

The principle decided in Benedict v. Goit (13 Barb. 459; and approved in 14 N. Y. 516), that a highway does not cease to be such, for general purposes, by being converted into a turnpike or plank-road, which has been invoked, does not aid the defendant. In the latter case, the general right of the public to use the road remains unimpaired. The change effected is, that the general public, in consideration of the payment of certain tolls, is relieved from the burden of keeping it in repair. Every citizen has the same right to travel over the turnpike or plank-road in his own conveyance, and the material used in making the latter is a mere improvement of the road, for the benefit of the whole public, without a special appropriation of any part or portion to the use of a particular class of carriages owned by the company, to the exclusion of others, who may desire to use that portion at the same time, and, as must be conceded at times, to the obstruction and hindrance of persons who may be travelling, if not to those whose lands are located on the line of the road.

The considerations suggested cover all the points urged, which are material in the disposition of this case, and inevitably lead to the affirmance of the judgment of the Supreme Court.

MASON, J. (dissenting). The defendants, being a legally organized railroad corporation, under the General Railroad Act of 1850, were clothed with legislative sanction and authority to construct the railroad in question, after having procured the assent of the Common Council of the city of Rochester to do so, unless it shall be held that the private rights of the owners of lots adjacent to such streets are invaded by such use of the street.

The plaintiff claims that the construction of such a street railway is the imposition of a new use, and an additional burden upon the land embraced in the street, and so amounts to the taking of the property of the owner of the fee without compensation, and consequently an invasion of his constitutional rights. This is the important question presented by this appeal. The Common Council of the city are invested with full control and complete authority over the streets of the city, and so far as any legal right existed to make such a use of the streets, they have granted it to the defendants with the most careful and prudential regulations calculated to preserve the full rights of the public in the use of the streets. Laws 1861, p. 317, § 55, chap. 320, § 161. There is no dispute in regard to any fact in the case, and the judge at Special Term decided this question of law against the defendants, and granted a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from laying their railroad in this street.

The court below seem to have regarded themselves bound to depart from the decision of the same court in General Term, upon the same question, in the First and Second Judicial Districts, upon the construction which they put upon the decisions of this court in the cases of Davis v. The Mayor, &c., 14 N. Y. 516; Williams v. The N. Y. Central R. R. Co., 16 Id. 97; Carpenter v. Oswego and Syracuse R. R. Co., 24 Id. 655; Mahon v. The N. Y. Central R. R. Co., Id. 638; and Wager v. The Troy Union R. R. Co., 25 Id. 526. These cases decide that the construction of a common railway to be run with steam engines in a public street, without the consent of the owners of the fee of the street, is the imposition of a new use, and an additional burden upon the land embraced in the street, and is the taking of the property of the owner without compensation, and consequently is prohibited by the Constitution. There is certainly a broad distinction between these cases and that of a street railroad, with cars to be drawn by horses, at a speed of not more than six miles per hour. In the leading case of Williams v. The New York Central R. R. Co., the street was literally destroyed for any of the original common uses for which the land was originally taken. With forty engines, and the trains which they draw, passing over the street daily, any use for carriages or common vehicles must be so very extremely dangerous, that the use of the street, for any such purpose, would necessarily be very limited, if not abandoned; and, besides, the railroad corporation, in such a case, takes the exclusive use of the street, and, in all these cases, actual and exclusive possession of the locus of the street is taken by the railroad corporations. In the case at bar, no such thing occurs. The construction of this railroad in the streets of the city of Rochester, and the operating of it, when completed, does not involve the taking of any title to the land. It is true, the iron rails are to be laid down in the street, but they are required to conform to the grade of the street, and as the same may be changed from time to time by the city authorities, and the rails to be six inches wide, and laid even with the surface of the street. The track of the road does not become the property of the railroad. All that the railroad corporation gets is a license to construct and operate the railroad, but to be enjoyed, subject to the rules and regulations of the Common Council; and these regulations, in the case at bar, are well calculated to secure all the original public use of the street as an easement for public travel, and the common use for carriages and other vehicles, and no one is prohibited from passing over and along the track with teams and vehicles, but, on the contrary, these common rights are but little interfered with; all that is granted to the defendants is the right to use, not to take and hold, without at all excluding other persons from their former use of the same. The use which is thus granted is nothing more than the privilege of passing over the streets in question with a species of conveyance somewhat different from that which the public generally use. The inconvenience to the public, in the common use of the street, must be small, and no individual can complain, that a public street is appropriated to a public use somewhat different, unless it is to be regarded a new use, and imposes an additional burden upon the land. This, in my judgment, is not a new use. When land is acquired to the public use of a street or highway, the public may lawfully claim the same for all the varying wants which the public may require, only so that such use is in subordination to its principal use as a street. The principal uses of a street are for the passage and repassage of the public, and this public right of passage is not limited to any particular mode of travel which may be in use at the time the land is taken, but to all such new methods as the progress of civilization and improvement may bring into use, only so that it remains a public street still, and devoted to the public use.

The construction and use of such a street railway, as is provided for in the case under consideration, is but a mode of exercising the public right of passage, and I perceive no objection to the public exercising this right by means of public agents, or through the medium of corporations, where they become public common carriers and do not further encroach upon the general public use, than do those street railways constructed and run in conformity to the regulations prescribed in the case at bar. There is no new appropriation of the property of the plaintiff requiring compensation in damages. Nor is there a burden imposed upon his land, caused by a use not contemplated in its original appropriation.

This question has received great consideration in the Superior Court, and has invariably been decided in conformity with the views above expressed, until we came to the cases at bar. 32 Barb. 420; 35 Id. 364; 37 Id. 357; 32 Id. 410; 10 Id. 26; 35 Id. 373. These cases are well considered, and are referred to as affording satisfactory reasons for the judgments given. This question came before the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio, in the case of The Cincinnati Street Railway v. Cumminsville, 14 Ohio, 524, and the case was decided the same way, and to the same effect, as the decision of the Supreme Court of Connecticut in the case of Elliott v. Fair Haven R. R. Co., 32 Conn.

579, where the question is well considered by Judge Ellsworth, who delivered the opinion of the court in that case. Other cases might be referred to, sustaining the same views. The course of judicial decisions in other States is certainly in accordance with the views above expressed, upon the ground, substantially, that the public easement is not destroyed, but only used according to a new and improved mode. The precise question has never been decided in this court.

In the case of Davis v. The Mayor &c. of N. Y., 14 N. Y. 530, 531, Judge Comstock expressed the opinion that such a use of the streets of a city was lawful, and that this highway and railroad track could co-exist and constitute one public easement. The very able opinion of Judge Emott, delivered in this court, in the case of The People et al. v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188, fully sustains the views above expressed, and the opinion of Judge Wright in that case certainly favors this view, as does the decision of the court, although this question cannot be said to be there decided. I will only say, without further discussion, that this conclusion, which I have attained, after a careful examination of the adjudged cases, and the best reflection which I have been able to bestow upon this matter, is, that this new use of the streets, for the carrying of passengers by horse railway, is consistent with the public use for which the lands of the streets were originally appropriated, and is not so far antagonistic to their common use as streets, as to deprive the adjacent owner of the fee of any property, or interest in the lands for which he can claim compensation. The great object of a highway is to furnish accommodations for the passage and transportation of travellers and freight; and these street railways and these street cars are only one of the legitimate means to accommodate the public travel, and is a lawful use of the street.

It follows that the judgment of the Supreme Court should be reversed, and the plaintiff's complaint dismissed.

BLOOMFIELD NATURAL GAS COMPANY v. CALKINS.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1875.

[Reported 62 N. Y. 386.]

APPEAL from order of the General Term of the Supreme Court in the Fourth Judicial Department, confirming the report of commissioners appointed to ascertain and appraise the compensation to which defendant was entitled for lands taken by the petitioner.

The petitioner was a corporation organized under the general Act providing for the formation of gas-light companies. (Chap. 37, Laws of 1848.) By an Act passed in 1870 (Chap. 757, Laws of 1870), authority was given to it to acquire title to lands necessary for its purposes in the General Railroad Act. (Chap. 140, Laws of 1850.) The line fixed by the company for its main pipes passed along a country highway, in the town of Henrietta, and over lands owned by defendant. The company not being able to agree with him as to his compensation, commenced these proceedings, by petition, in the manner prescribed by said Railroad Act. Commissioners were appointed who made their report awarding defendant $350. Defendant moved for a confirmation of the report at Special Term, where the same was confirmed. The company appealed from the report and from the order confirming it.

Henry R. Selden, for the appellant.

John Norton Pomeroy, for the respondent.

MILLER, J. The appropriation of land for the use of a highway is for a specific purpose, and the public thereby acquire a mere right of passage, with the powers and privileges which are incident to such a right. The fee of the land still remains in the owner, and he does not become divested of the title because the public have a free and unrestrained right to the use of the same for the purposes of travelling, passing and repassing, on foot or with animals and vehicles, with the privilege of doing all necessary acts to keep the same in repair. The owner's right is absolute to maintain ejectment or trespass, to use and enjoy the soil, reap any profits arising therefrom, and to use the highway for his individual purposes in any way consistent with the easement or servitude which its appropriation for a road warrants. These principles are elementary, and have been the settled law of this State from its earliest organization. (3 Kent Com. 432, 433; Cortelyou v. Van Brundt, 2 J. R. 357, 363; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Id. 447, 452, 453; Gidney v. Earl, 12 Wend. 98; Pearsall v. Post, 20 Id. 111, 131.) Nor in the varying changes which time and the progress of events have demanded in the adaptation of the common law to the wants of society have these salutary rules been essentially or really altered. The introduction of railroads in this State presented the question whether a railroad corporation could use a public highway for the purpose of constructing and running its road, and it was held that it imposed an additional burden upon the soil of the highway besides what was included in the public easement; that the Legislature had not the power to make such imposition within the meaning of the constitutional provision, which forbids the taking of property of the owner of the fee without compensation; and that the company can derive no title by any Act of the Legislature, or of any municipal authority, without the consent of the owner of the fee, or without the appraisal and payment of damages in the mode prescribed by law. (Fletcher v. Auburn and S. R. R. Co., 25 Wend. 462; Trustees of Presbyterian Society v. Auburn and Roch. R. R. Co., 3 Hill, 567; Davis v. The Mayor, 14 N. Y. 506; Williams v. N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co., 16 Id. 97; Wager

v. Troy Union R. R. Co., 25 Id. 526.) These cases settled the law, beyond peradventure, as to the right of railroad corporations to appropriate public highways to their benefit without compensation.

At a later day an attempted distinction was sought to be made in favor of horse railroads in cities, and the question as to the right of these corporations to use the streets of cities for their roads and cars, was presented in Craig v. The Rochester City and Brighton Railroad Co., 39 N. Y. 404, and it was there decided, after full consideration by the Court of Appeals, that the running and establishing of such a road, in the public streets of a city, was an imposition of an additional burden on the land of the adjoining proprietor, for which compensation must be made. The authorities are all fully reviewed in the case last cited, and unless this case can be overthrown, it is by no means apparent, how the appellant can claim, that the right exists, to appropriate highways for the purposes claimed. Even if the principle here decided may be disregarded and set aside, the appellant cannot be aided, for the reason that the right now claimed goes far beyond the use of the surface of a highway, the injury to which must be merely nominal and exceedingly slight. The right contended for, is to dig in the soil, cut off drains, and disturb privileges, which had been exercised by the owner for a long period of time. The use of the highway thus sought to be maintained is different, more injurious, and liable to produce far greater damages to the owner of the fee, than mere passing or repassing, and the pecuniary loss occasioned by the exercise of such a power must necessarily be far more extensive, and unlimited in its character. It would be beyond an ordinary trespass on the land, or an appropriation of the surface of the soil. It would interfere materially with the freehold and the enjoyment of the fee, to an extent greatly exceeding anything which was ever contemplated or intended, when the land was appropriated for the ordinary purposes of a highway. The rights to the fee, to the fruits of the soil and to carry water in pipes under the highway, which are laid down as expressly reserved (3 Kent, supra), would be taken away, diverted and appropriated for the purposes of a corporation, without compensation and contrary to the clear and manifest original design contemplated by the laying out of the highway, and the intention of the owner of the fee, when he parted with his interest. Can it be pretended that either the public or the owner intended to be deprived of the rights which the law conferred upon him, and to subject himself to a direct interference in their enjoyment? Surely no such conclusion is warranted by the fact, that a highway was laid out according to law.

We have been referred to the dicta of judges in several cases, holding that the streets of cities may be used for the laying down of ordinary gas and water pipes, and the construction of sewers, without the consent of the owner of the fee. There is no case where the precise point has been distinctly presented and passed upon, but the opinions of judges contain remarks which sustain this doctrine. The views thus taken are not without some reason to support them, where, as in The People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188, the fee of the land had been acquired by the city. In fact, it may be urged with some apparent reason that the appropriation of land for a street in a city carries with it the idea that it is to be used for all necessary purposes, as such street, which the interest of the public, and the comfort, enjoyment, or the health of the locality, may demand. Concede, then, that these improvements were proper for cities, it by no means follows that the appellant had a right to use the highway in question for the same purpose, and that, as a necessary result of the reasoning, the gas-pipes might be properly laid over the land of the respondent. And it may be remarked that most of the cases cited, if not all of them, state or assume that there is a distinction between the street of a city and a highway in the country. Every one of the improvements referred to may, in cities, be considered as a necessary incident to the public right to repair, improve, increase the value of property, and add to its beauty and the wealth of a large local population. Usually constructed without objection, they do not ordinarily interfere with other rights which have been lawfully acquired and enjoyed, and they confer many advantages which counterbalance any supposed detriment or injury. Whether these rights can be strictly maintained as to cities, it is not necessary to determine in this case. It is enough to say that the rule claimed has no application to a country highway, because the circumstances are entirely different. Nor does the rightful use of land appropriated for a street for the purposes before stated in any way disturb the position that a public highway in the country stands entirely upon a different footing. It is unnecessary to review the authorities referred to in the learned argument of the appellant's counsel. The question is entirely settled by the adjudication of this court, as we have seen, and must be regarded as stare decisis. No such additional burden as is claimed can be imposed upon land taken for a public highway, unless we overthrow established principles and cases which have long been regarded as authoritative. The respondent was clearly entitled to compensation, the proceedings were properly instituted, and an award of damages rightfully made.

There is no objection to an application by the respondent to confirm the report. The company had a right to do it, but the respondent was not prohibited from doing so.

No other question in the case demands comment, and the order of the General Term must be affirmed.

All concur.

STOUDINGER v. NEWARK.

COURT OF CHANCERY OF NEW JERSEY. 1877.

[Reported 28 N. J. Eq. 187.]

ON order to show cause why an injunction should not issue. Hearing on bill, answer, and affidavits.

Mr. Joseph Coulter, for motion.

Mr. Henry Young, contra.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR [VAN FLEET]. The government of the city of Newark, by an ordinance duly adopted on the 7th day of July, 1876, ordained that a sewer should be constructed from the westerly line of High Street to the Passaic River, and that the waters of Mill Brook, on First River, should be diverted from their present channel into the sewer and carried by it to the Passaic River. The sewer, for most of the distance between the termini named, is to be laid in Clay Street. The charter gives the municipal government full power to lay out, regulate, and repair streets, to construct sewers and drains in any part of the city, and, in the construction of any sewer or drain, to take and appropriate or divert any stream of water it may deem expedient and necessary. Compensation is, of course, to be made to the persons entitled to the water diverted, or whose lands may be taken for sewerage purposes. Clay Street was dedicated by the complainant many years ago to the public for the purposes of a highway, and has been accepted by the city, graded, flagged, and curbed. The complainant owns and resides on a lot extending along the southerly line of Clay Street, a distance of two hundred and twenty-seven feet. He seeks to have the construction of the sewer in Clay Street enjoined, because such use of the street is not within the rights or powers conferred upon the public by the dedication. He contends that the fee of the street is still in him; that by the dedication the public merely acquired a right of free passage, and as an incident of this right, to make such repairs as were necessary to render travel safe and convenient, and that any other use of it is unauthorized, and cannot be made lawfully without compensation to him. On the argument, the application was put distinctly and exclusively on the ground that the city authorities were seeking to appropriate the street to a use not within the purposes of the dedication, and, therefore, they should be restrained until they acquire, by grant or condemnation, the right they intend to exercise.

The location of sewers, their size and capacity, and the material of which they shall be constructed, are matters which, by the charter, are committed to the judgment of the municipal authorities, and so long as they keep within their power, and do not abuse it, their acts are not subject to judicial revision. When the Legislature grants to a municipal corporation the power to control and regulate the use of its streets, it invests it with a part of its sovereign power, and any regulation adopted by the corporation, in the proper exercise of its powers, is as much beyond the control of the courts as a valid enactment of the Legislature of the State. Milhau v. Sharp, 17 Barb. 435. It is only when it transcends its power that the courts are authorized to interfere. Weil v. Ricord, 9 C. E. Gr. 169.

To entitle the complainant to the aid he asks, the court must hold, as a sound proposition of law, that a city government, having authority to control the use of its streets and construct sewers, cannot lawfully use them, whether acquired by condemnation or dedication, for the construction of sewers, without first having them specially condemned for that purpose. Whether the public right is acquired by condemnation or dedication is quite immaterial. If land is dedicated to the public for the purposes of a street, and there is an acceptance, either by formal act or user, the public right is complete, and the land may be appropriated to any use to which a street, acquired in any other mode, can lawfully be put. The public have the same rights now in Clay Street they would have had, had the public easement been acquired by condemnation. The bill expressly declares Clay Street was dedicated to the public for the purposes of a street; the public right in it is just as extensive as it would have been if it had been acquired by grant. It is a public street for all purposes, and may be so used and appropriated.

The authorities upon this subject seem to stand with entire uniformity against the rule it would be necessary to adopt to give the complainant the aid he asks. Cone v. Hartford, 28 Conn. 362, the only case cited on the argument in support of the complainant's theory, I understand to declare distinctly that a power granted to a municipality to make and repair streets, confers authority to construct sewers in the streets, which may be exercised whenever the condition of the streets, or the protection of the public health, renders it expedient in the judgment of the local government. It is further held, that such use of the highway is clearly within the purposes for which they are established, and that the compensation made to the land-owner for his land includes damages for such use.

Equally decisive are the utterances of Judge Gray (now Chief Justice) of Massachusetts, and Judge Harris of the Supreme Court of New York. The first says, in Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen, 146: "Whenever land is taken for public use as a highway, and due compensation made, the public have a right to make any use of the land, directly or incidentally, conducive to the enjoyment of the public easement, and such uses clearly include the making of culverts, drains, and sewers under the highway, for the cleansing of the streets and the accommodation of the inhabitants on either side." And Judge Harris, in Chapman v. Albany and Schenectady R. R., 10 Barb. 360, says: "A street may be used in any way which shall best promote the interest and business of the city. What will so promote those interests and business is to be determined by the municipal authorities, to whom the control of the streets is committed. Sewers and drains may be constructed, and water and gas pipes laid in them. The only restriction upon the power of the municipal authorities is that they cannot appropriate them to a purpose incompatible with the ends for which they were established." The same doctrine is declared in Milhau v. Sharp, 15 Barb. 210. And Judge Dillon declares it to be his judgment that a municipality may lawfully use its streets for the construction of sewers, and that such use is clearly within the public easement. Dillon's Mun. Cor. § 544. The same view is expressed by Mr. Angell. Angell on Highways, § 216. And this court has twice declared that the building and operation of a horse-railroad in the streets of a city, with the consent of the governing power, is a legitimate use of the highway for the purposes of public travel, and not a taking of private property for public use, within the meaning of the Constitution, so as to entitle the owner of the fee to compensation. Hinchman v. Paterson Horse R. R. Co., 2 C. E. Gr. 75; Paterson and Passaic Horse R. R. Co. v. City of Paterson, 9 C. E. Gr. 158.

Were it necessary for the city authorities to justify their action before the courts, their answer, I think, gives a highly satisfactory reason for the diversion of the waters of Mill Brook, and also shows they proceeded cautiously and prudently in locating the route of the sewer; but their action in these matters, in my judgment, cannot be reviewed here. The question I have to deal with is, Has the city of Newark power to construct this sewer in Clay Street without making further compensation to the complainant? I think it has. The injunction must therefore be denied, and the order to show cause discharged.

BILL in equity against the selectmen of Brookline and the American Rapid Telegraph Company of Massachusetts, to restrain the selectmen from granting to the Telegraph Company a location for its posts and wires in Brookline. The defendants demurred to the bill for want of equity. At the hearing, before Endicott, J., a decree was entered sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the bill; and the plaintiffs appealed to the full court. The allegations of the bill appear in the opinion.

A. D. Chandler, for the plaintiffs.

F. Morison, for the defendants.

DEVENS, J. The facts admitted by the demurrer may be thus stated:

The plaintiffs own land on a certain street or public highway in Brookline; they also own a fee in the half of the street which is next to their abutting land.

The defendants are the selectmen of Brookline, and, on the application of the American Rapid Telegraph Company, a corporation organized under the St. of 1874, c. 165¹ (Pub. Sts. c. 106, § 14), for the transmission of intelligence by electricity, are about to grant to that company, under the Pub. Sts. c. 109, a location along said highway for their posts, wires, &c. The bill seeks to restrain the defendants, upon the ground that the last-named Statute is unconstitutional.

The Pub. Sts. c. 109, may be briefly summarized so far as applicable to the inquiry before us. By § 1, "Every company incorporated for the transmission of intelligence by electricity" possesses the powers and is subject to the duties prescribed in the chapter. By § 2, the lines of telegraphic communication are to be so placed as not to incommodate the public use of the highways or public ways. By § 3, the municipal authorities shall give the company a writing specifying where the posts, &c., may be located, and the location of posts, height of wires, &c., may be altered at any time by their direction. By § 4, the "owner of land near to or adjoining a highway" may recover damages if injured thereby. By § 12, any injury to persons or property by the posts, wires, &c., is to render the company responsible in damages. By § 15, no easement or prescriptive rights are to be acquired by the erection and maintenance of the posts, &c. By §§ 8-11, provisions are also made for the limit of the debts, the liability of the officers, and the duties of the company; and penalties are imposed for neglecting them.

That it was the intent of the Statute to grant to those corporations, formed under the general incorporation laws, for the purpose of transmitting intelligence by electricity, the right to construct lines of telegraph upon and along highways and public roads upon the locations assigned them by the officers of the municipality wherein such ways are situate, cannot be doubted. The use of the words "every company" permit no other interpretation. Nor are we able to conceive why, if this authority might be given to corporations specially chartered, it may not equally be given to those organized under the general law.

If this use of property already appropriated to certain public uses is to be deemed of itself an exercise of the right of eminent domain, the determination of the Legislature that the purpose for which it now directs it to be taken is a public use, is not necessarily conclusive; but, if the use be public, it is conclusive that the necessity exists which requires it to be taken. Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417. While in some cases there may be difficulty in deciding whether an appropriation of property is for a public or private use, such difficulty does not seem to exist in the present case. The transmission of intelligence by electricity is a business of public character, to be exercised under public control, in the same manner as transportation of goods or passengers by railroads. The St. of 1849, c. 93, of which, with additions, the Pub. Sts. c. 109, is a re-enactment, recognized its public nature; and in Young v. Yarmouth, 9 Gray, 386, which was an action for injuries sustained by a traveller on the highway by reason of the telegraph poles erected there under the location granted by the selectmen by authority of the St. of 1849, the town was held not liable, because the poles were lawfully within the limits of the highway, and thus not such an obstruction or defect as to render it responsible. See also Commonwealth v. Boston, 97 Mass. 555; Bay State Brick Co. v. Foster, 115 Mass. 431. The public nature of this business has been recognized by the legislation of Congress, the decisions of the United States courts, and of many of the States of the Union. So far as known to us, it has not been held otherwise anywhere. U. S. Sts. of July 1, 1862; March 3, 1863; July 2, 1864; July 24, 1866. Pensacola Telegraph v. Western Union Telegraph, 96 U. S. 1.

No right is given these companies to use the highways at their own pleasure, or to compel in all cases, as the plaintiff suggests, locations therein to be given them by the municipal authorities. The second section of the Statute is to be construed with the third section, and shows an intention that a legally constituted board shall determine not only where, but whether, there can be a location which shall not incommodate the ordinary public ways, with full power to revise its own doings and to correct any errors which the practical working of the arrangements may reveal. Young v. Yarmouth, ubi supra.

But as, even if the Legislature has the right to authorize the erection of telegraph poles along a highway, as a public use thereof, appropriate safeguards must be provided for any rights of property belonging to individual owners which may be taken or invaded, there remain these inquiries for our consideration: first, whether the Statute does provide any compensation to the owner of the fee for this new use of the highway; second, whether he is entitled to such compensation; third, whether the owner of property near to, or abutting upon, the highway, is entitled to any compensation therefor other than such as the Act provides.

The fourth section provides for damages which may be sustained by owners of "land near to or adjoining a highway or road along which lines are constructed by the company." It is limited to these, and cannot be extended to those who are the owners of the fee in the highway or road itself. Nor does the twelfth section, as the defendants contend, make any provision for them. This simply enacts that "when an injury is done to a person or to property by the posts, wires, or other apparatus of a telegraphic line, the company shall be responsible in damages to the party injured." But the concluding clause of the section, by which it is provided that "the city or town shall not, by reason of anything contained in this chapter or done thereunder, be discharged from its liability, but all damages and costs recovered against a city or town on account of such injury shall be reimbursed by the company owning the posts, wires, or other apparatus," indicates clearly that the liability of the company provided for under this section is for injuries occasioned by defects or obstructions in the way which its structures may cause. This section was not in the St. of 1849, c. 93; its first clause was added to the legislation on this subject by the St. of 1851, c. 247, § 2, and the remaining clause was subsequently added by the St. of 1859, c. 260, §§ 1, 2, it may fairly be presumed in view of the decision in Young v. Yarmouth, ubi supra, made in 1857.

As the chapter does not, in our opinion, provide for damages to the owner of the fee in the highway by reason of the erection of the telegraphic posts and apparatus, it is to be determined whether such a use of the highway creates a separate and additional burden, requiring an independent assessment of damages, for which the owner of the land was not compensated when the highway was laid out, and thus whether the omission of the Act to provide for this compensation renders it unconstitutional.

It is to be observed that, for more than thirty years, the right to appropriate highways to this public use, without any compensation to the owners of the fee therein, has been asserted; that the Statutes in regard to it have more than once been expounded by this court, without any apparent doubt of their validity; and that, up to the present time, no suggestion has ever been made that the rights of such owners were in any way invaded. If the argument that these owners are entitled to compensation be correct, the estates of thousands have been wrongfully used while they were either ignorant of their rights or submissive to injustice; and in the mean time costly telegraphic structures have been erected, and the whole business of the State has accommodated itself to this system of the transmission of intelligence. After so long a practical construction by the Legislature and the courts, and after so widely extended an acquiescence by parties whose estates or interests therein are directly affected, it would require a clear case to justify us in setting aside such a Statute as unconstitutional, even if it be true, as it certainly is, that no usage for any course of years, nor any number of legislative or judicial decisions, will sanction a violation of the fundamental law, clearly expressed or necessarily understood. Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 144; Commonwealth v. Parker, 2 Pick. 549, 557; Holmes v. Hunt, 122 Mass. 505. No right to take the private property of the owner of the fee in the highway is conferred by this Act; all that is given is the right to use land, by permission of the municipal authorities, the whole beneficial use of which had been previously taken from the owner and appropriated to the public. It is a temporary privilege only which is conferred; no right is acquired as against the owner of the fee by its enjoyment, nor is any legal right acquired to the continued enjoyment of the privilege, or any presumption of a grant raised thereby. Pub. Sts. c. 109, § 15. The discontinuance of a highway would annul any permit granted under the Statute, and no incumbrance would remain upon the land.

In Chase v. Sutton Manuf. Co., 4 CUSH. 152, 167, it is said by Chief Justice Shaw, "that where, under the authority of the Legislature, in virtue of the sovereign power of eminent domain, private property has been taken for a public use, and a full compensation for a perpetual easement in land has been paid to the owner therefor, and afterwards the land is appropriated to a public use of a like kind, as where a turnpike has by law been converted into a common highway, no new claim for compensation can be sustained by the owner of the land over which it passes." The case itself goes farther than the illustration used by the Chief Justice. It related to a claim made by an owner in fee of land which had been taken by a canal company by statutory authority, for the purpose of a navigable waterway, which company had been permitted by Statute to sell its property to a railway company; but, although the two modes of transportation were entirely different, the validity of the Act was sustained, and the claim of the landowner for further compensation disallowed.

"It is well settled," says Mr. Justice Gray, in Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen, 146, 160, "that when land, once duly appropriated to a public use which requires the occupation of its whole surface, is applied by authority of the Legislature to another similar public use, no new claim for compensation, unless expressly provided for, can be sustained by the owner of the fee."

When land has been taken or granted for highways, it is so taken or granted for the passing and repassing of travellers thereon, whether on foot or horseback, or with carriages and teams for the transportation and conveyance of passengers and property, and for the transmission of intelligence between the points connected thereby. As every such grant has for its object the procurement of an easement for the public, the incidental powers granted must be so construed as most effectually to secure to the public the full enjoyment of such easement. Commonwealth v. Temple, 14 Gray, 69, 77.

It has never been doubted that, by authority of the Legislature, highways might be used for gas or water pipes, intended for the convenience of the citizens, although the gas or water was conducted thereunder by companies formed for the purpose; or for sewers, whose object was not merely the incidental one of cleansing the streets, but also the drainage of private estates, the rights of which to enter therein were subject to public regulations. Commonwealth v. Lowell Gas Light Co., 12 Allen, 75; Attorney-General v. Metropolitan Railroad, 125 Mass. 515, 517; Boston v. Richardson, ubi supra.

Nor can we perceive that these are to be treated as incidental uses, as suggested by the plaintiff, because the pipes are conducted under the surface of the travelled way, rather than above it. The rights of the owner of the fee must be the same in either case, and the use of the land under the way for gas-pipes or sewers would effectually prevent his own use of it for cellarage or similar purposes.

When the land was taken for a highway, that which was taken was not merely the privilege of travelling over it in the then known vehicles, or of using it in the then known methods, for either the conveyance of property or transmission of intelligence. Although the horse railroad was deemed a new invention, it was held that a portion of the road might be set aside for it, and the rights of other travellers, to some extent, limited by those privileges necessary for its use. Commonwealth v. Temple, ubi supra; Attorney-General v. Metropolitan Railroad, ubi supra. The discovery of the telegraph developed a new and valuable mode of communicating intelligence. Its use is certainly similar to, if not identical with, that public use of transmitting information for which the highway was originally taken, even if the means adopted are quite different from the post-boy or the mail-coach. It is a newly discovered method of exercising the old public easement, and all appropriate methods must have been deemed to have been paid for when the road was laid out. Under the clause to regulate commerce among the States, conferred on Congress by the Constitution of the United States, although telegraphic communication was unknown when it was adopted, it has been held that it is the right of Congress to prevent the obstruction of telegraphic communication by hostile State legislation, as it has become an indispensable means of intercommunication. Pensacola Telegraph v. Western Union Telegraph, ubi supra.

No question arises as to any interference with the old methods of communication, as the Statute we are considering, by § 8, guards carefully against this by providing that the telegraphic structures are not to be permitted to incommode the public use of highways or public roads. We are therefore of opinion that the use of a portion of a highway for the public use of companies organized under the laws of the State for the transmission of intelligence by electricity, and subject to the supervision of the local municipal authorities, which has been permitted by the Legislature, is a public use similar to that for which the highway was originally taken, or to which it was originally devoted, and that the owner of the fee is entitled to no further compensation.

There remains the inquiry, whether there is any objection to the Statute because it does not provide a sufficient remedy for the owners of property near to or adjoining the way, who may be incidentally injured by the structures which the telegraph companies may have been permitted to erect along the line of the highway and within its limits. Such remedy is given by § 4, as the Legislature deemed sufficient. We should not be willing to believe that the landowner thus injured would be without remedy, if the company failed to pay the damages lawfully assessed under this section, while it still endeavored to maintain its structures; but the only compensation to which such owner is entitled is that which the Legislature deems just, when it permits the erection of these structures. The Legislature may provide for compensation to the adjoining owners, but without such provision there can be no legal claim to it, as the use of the highway is a lawful one. Attorney-General v. Metropolitan Railroad, ubi supra.

The clause in the Declaration of Rights which provides that "when-ever the public exigencies require that the property of any individual should be appropriated to public uses, he shall receive a reasonable compensation therefor," is confined in its application to property actu-ally taken and appropriated by the government. No construction can be given to it which can extend the benefit of it to the case of one who suffers an indirect or consequential damage or expense by means of the rightful use of property already belonging to the public. Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. 418, 430.

The majority of the court is therefore satisfied that the demurrer to this bill was properly sustained, and the entry will be,

Decree affirmed.

C. ALLEN, J. A minority of the court, consisting of MR. JUSTICE WILLIAM ALLEN and myself, are unable to agree with the majority of the court upon the principal question in this case, which is this: When the public has acquired an easement in land for a highway, by taking it under the right of eminent domain, by prescription, by dedication, or by grant, is an additional servitude to be deemed as imposed by ap propriating the highway, under legislative authority, for the use of a line of electric telegraph, by the erection of poles and wires above the surface of the ground, so that the owner of an abutting estate and of the soil to the centre of the highway is entitled to further compensation therefor? The corresponding questions are necessarily involved, whether, when land is taken for a highway by the right of eminent do main, it is to be considered as an element of the damages sustained by the owner, and to be paid by the city or town, that the land may be used, not merely for a highway, but also for a telegraph line; and whether, in case of a dedication or grant of land for a highway, with or without the payment of a consideration, the right of establishing a telegraph line along the highway, under the authority of general or special Statutes, is also included by implication.

If such owner is in law entitled to further compensation, it is plain that the Statute fails to meet the constitutional requirement, inasmuch as no adequate provision for such compensation is made. A mere right of action at law is not sufficient. Connecticut River Railroad v. County Commissioners, 127 Mass. 50.

It has been held in this Commonwealth and elsewhere, though with-out entire uniformity of decision, that the establishment of a street railway does not entitle the owner of the land to further compensation. Attorney-General v. Metropolitan Railroad, 125 Mass. 515. Recog-nizing this decision as founded on just principles, the question remains, whether the same rule applies to other uses, and with what limitations, if any.

The great weight of opinion thus far expressed by courts is that street railways, with cars propelled by horse-power, are not to be regarded as imposing a new servitude which will entitle the owner of the fee of the highway to additional compensation, but that steam railroads are to be so regarded. It is considered that the latter use is so far different in its nature, that the law ought to take notice that it could not have been within the contemplation of the parties that the laying out of an ordinary highway should also include such a mode of travelling. While it is always recognized that the proper and contemplated use of the highway is not to be deemed limited to such vehicles as are in use at the time, it is considered to be too great an extension of the easement acquired by the public to hold that it embraces its use for a steam railway. At this point the line has been drawn by a great weight of judicial decision. See Williams v. New York Central Railroad, 16 N. Y. 97; Wager v. Troy Union Railroad, 25 N. Y. 526, 535; Jersey City & Bergen Railroad v. Jersey City & Hoboken Horse Railroad, 5 C. E. Green, 61; Imlay v. Union Branch Railroad, 26 Conn. 249, 255; Grand Rapids & Indiana Railroad v. Heissel, 38 Mich. 62; Sherman v. Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western Railroad, 40 Wis. 645; Kucheman v. Chicago, Clinton & Dubuque Railway, 46 Iowa, 366; Kaiser v. St. Paul, Stillwater & Taylor's Falls Railroad, 22 Minn. 149; Southern Pacific Railroad v. Reed, 41 Cal. 256; Cooley Const. Lim. 546, 550; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 722, 725.

The use of a highway for the purpose of communicating information by electricity, by means of posts and wires erected along its course, may, in a certain sense, be said to be a use for a purpose similar to that for which highways are established; namely, the increase of communication between persons at different points. But this is a somewhat remote analogy, and the more direct purpose of establishing highways is to enable persons and teams to pass more easily from one place to another. The analogy between a steam railway and conveyance by ordinary teams is much more direct.

The multiplication of telegraph and telephone posts and wires in thickly settled places within the past few years makes the question at issue one of great importance. There can be no doubt that in many instances an actual injury is done to the remaining or abutting land along a highway or street by the erection of such posts and wires; and the extent to which this may be carried in the future cannot easily be foreseen. When a telegraph line consisted of only a single row of small posts, with a few wires, the matter was of less importance. But common observation shows that now the posts are large and numerous, fitted with cross-beams adapted for layer after layer of almost countless wires; and the establishment of the different kinds of electrical lines involves to some extent a destruction of trees along the highways or streets, an occupation of the ground, a filling of the air, an interference with access to or escape from buildings, an increased difficulty in putting out fires, an obstruction of the view, a presentation of unsightly objects to the eye, and a creation of unpleasant noises in the wind. The actual injury thus done to adjoining property may certainly be quite serious ; and if, when land is taken or granted for a highway, it is understood that such use may also be made of it, there can be no doubt that in many instances a very substantial increase of compensation would justly be granted to the owner ; because, in assessing damages when land is taken for a highway, it is not merely a question what the land actually taken is worth, or what will be the extent of the injury from the deprivation of its use, but the owner is also entitled to compensation for the incidental injury to his remaining land, which is to be estimated with reference to the use for which the land taken from him is to be appropriated, and such damages are to be allowed to him as will fairly compensate him in view of the purposes of the appropriation. Walker v. Old Colony & Newport Railway, 103 Mass. 10, 14; Johnson v. Boston, 130 Mass. 452, 454.

Heretofore, the consequential injury to the remaining land of the owner, arising from the possibility of a future use of the highway for telegraph and telephone wires, has never, so far as we have been informed, been considered as a proper element of damages. No case is cited or known where it has been held, or even contended by counsel, that damages should be included for such possible use.

If the right exists to establish electrical lines with many wires, without further compensation, the owner is entitled to be paid at the outset for all such rights which are acquired against him, on the assumption that they will be exercised to the full. No one can tell in advance how extensive a use will actually be made ; but if it is an incident to laying out a highway that lines of telegraph or telephone may be authorized, the owner of the land certainly has no control over the number of posts and wires that may be used, and the right is not subject to any limit except the discretion of other persons than himself. In fixing his compensation, it must therefore be borne in mind that he has no right whatever to limit the use which may be made of the highway for these purposes. The result will follow, that when his land is taken for a highway he will be entitled to receive, and the public will be compelled to pay damages, one element of which is uncertain. It may happen that no such use will be made of the highway. It may be the case that the authorities who lay out the way, and the city or town which has to pay the expenses of laying it out and keeping it in repair, do not wish to take or pay for the right to have telegraph lines established on it. They may not think such a line in that place necessary or desirable. Nevertheless, if it is incident to laying out a highway that a telegraph line may thereafter be established upon it, by the sanction of a future board of municipal officers, this right must of necessity be paid for at the outset, unless the owner of the land will have a subsequent claim for additional damages ; otherwise his property is taken from him without compensation.

It is going quite too far to hold that in law it must be deemed to have been within the contemplation of the parties, at the time of the laying out of the highway, that it might be used for such new and additional purposes. They are in their nature essentially distinct from the ordinary use of a highway by travellers. It is not desirable to impose this new burden upon the laying out of highways. If the public convenience and necessity require a new highway, but do not require a line of telegraph over it, the public authorities ought to be able to take such an easement as will subserve the public requirement, without being subjected to the necessity of paying for a right which is not needed nor desired. The use of a highway for telegraphic purposes is not naturally included in the original design, nor naturally incidental to its use for travel. Highways can be and are conveniently used without telegraphs or telephones. The latter can be established without the use of the highway. It may be convenient in many instances to use the highway for electrical lines. Whenever this proves to be the case, there is no hardship in requiring those who wish to establish such lines to pay for the privilege such damages, if any, as may be caused to the owners of property by such use. In many instances, no doubt, there would be no damages. But in cases where actual damage is thus caused, there is no good reason why it should not be paid for by those who will derive the benefit. It is more just and reasonable that such payments should be made, as for an additional use or servitude, than that it should be included at the outset, when it is not known whether such use will be required or not.

There is another reason for holding that the right to establish electrical lines is not included in the laying out of a highway. When land is taken for a highway, the payment of damages is to be made by the city or town within which it lies. But a city or town has no legal right to appropriate money for the establishment of a line of telegraph or telephone for the general public use. A direct vote of a town to subscribe for shares in a company, or to contribute money in aid of such establishment, would clearly be illegal and void, as not falling within the classes of objects for which municipal expenditures may be made. If, therefore, the owner of the land is entitled to be paid for the right to establish lines of telegraph or telephone along the highway, in the future, as an incident to the use of the land for the highway, and if the city or town is to pay for the damages caused by the laying out of the highway, including all incidental damages to the remaining land, it follows that the city or town is thus made to contribute money, possibly against its will, for an illegal purpose. By construction of law, it will also be held to have paid money in the past for expenses which it had no actual intention and no legal right to incur. And the electrical companies will be declared entitled to reap the benefits accruing from such payment, for their own advantage. The Legislature has never intended to require or to allow towns and cities to pay for privileges to be enjoyed by electrical companies, which may be organized under the general laws. It is at least doubtful if it has the constitutional right to do so. It would not be "wholesome and reasonable" legislation, within the meaning of the Constitution, to grant to a commercial corporation, established under general laws for purposes of profit, the right to obtain, without payment, a valuable privilege, for which a city or town has been compelled, against its will, to pay.

An argument has been drawn from the judicial sanction which has been given to the use of streets for drains and sewers, and for gas and water-pipes. But there is a palpable distinction between such uses and that for the establishment of a telegraph line. It may be said, in a general way, that, when a highway is laid out, the whole beneficial use of the soil is temporarily taken from the owner and appropriated to the public use; and ordinarily the laying of underground pipes, in such a manner as to cause no injury to the adjoining land, does not deprive the owner of the fee of any use which he could otherwise have made of the soil. Ordinarily, therefore, he cannot be deemed to suffer any legal injury from the laying of underground pipes. A different question, however, might by possibility arise, if such pipes interfered with underground operations which the owner might carry on, notwithstanding the existence of the highway. Then, again, sewers and drains are built more directly by public officers, and usually are of direct benefit to the abutting estates, as well as to the streets themselves. The advantage to abutting owners is so apparent, that, under our Statutes, they may be assessed for the expenses of construction. Gas-pipes also are likely to be of direct service in furtherance of the purposes for which streets are laid out, aiding public travel, and benefiting the abutting lots. There is a general recognition that all these uses are directly subservient to the purposes for which highways are established; and, by Statute, towns are authorized or required to lay water-pipes, erect watering-troughs and fountains, set out and maintain shade trees, erect guide-posts, and erect and maintain street lamps. Pub. Sts. c. 27, §§ 37, 50; c. 53, §§ 1-4; c. 54, § 9. But the erection of telegraph lines along a highway is of no direct and peculiar benefit to travellers upon the highway, to the highway itself, or to abutting estates; and, as has been seen, such lines do or may interfere materially with the beneficial use and enjoyment which the owner of the soil might otherwise have of his estate.

The fact that the Statute provides that no permanent easement shall be acquired by a telegraph company is not material. While the line exists, the injury to the owner is continuous; and he is deprived, without his consent, of the rightful use of his property for a period which, though indefinite and liable to be determined, may yet be perpetual, and which he himself is powerless to bring to an end.

The authorities which hold that using a highway for a steam railroad imposes an additional servitude, for which the owner of the fee is entitled to additional compensation, go farther than is necessary to support the view above taken. The case of Attorney-General v. Metropolitan Railroad, 125 Mass. 515, related only to horse railroads, and leaves it an open question in this State as to steam railways. The case of Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. 418, 431, as to damage caused by changing the grade of the street, has always been recognized as a hard case, and an intimation was given at the time that the Legislature might well interfere by general or special Statute for the relief of parties so injured. The doctrine of that case should not be extended. In Young v. Yarmouth, 9 Gray, 386, the telegraph line was established, so far as appears, by the landowner's consent, and no question involving his rights arose or was considered.

As to elevated railroads, it was held by a majority of the justices of the New York Court of Appeals that an abutting owner, even if he does not own the fee of any part of the street, has such a property as to be entitled to additional compensation. Story v. New York Elevated Railroad, 90 N. Y. 122. The case would be much stronger if he owned the fee. In the Supreme Court of New York, and in the United States Circuit Court for the Northern District of Illinois, and in the Supreme Court of Illinois, it has been held that the use of a highway for a telegraph line will entitle such owner to additional compensation. Dusenbury v. Mutual Telegraph, 11 Abb. New Cas. 440; Atlantic & Pacific Telegraph v. Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railroad, 6 Biss. 158; Board of Trade Telegraph v. Barnett, 107 Ill. 507.

For these reasons, we are of the opinion that the demurrer should be overruled.¹

¹ Grass cannot be taken from a highway without compensation to the owner of the fee. Woodruff v. Neal, 28 Conn. 165 (1859). Nor can a market be put on a highway. State v. Laverack, 5 Vroom, 201 (1870). A statue however may be placed there. Tompkins v. Hodgson, 2 Hun, 146 (1874).

CHAPTER VI.

FRANCHISES.

2 BL. COM. 37. Franchise and liberty are used as synonymous terms; and their definition is a royal privilege, or branch of the king's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject. Being therefore derived from the Crown, they must arise from the king's grant; or in some cases may be held by prescription, which, as has been frequently said, presupposes a grant. The kinds of them are various, and almost infinite: I will here briefly touch upon some of the principal; premising only, that they may be vested in either natural persons or bodies politic; in one man or in many: but the same identical franchise, that has before been granted to one, cannot be bestowed on another, for that would prejudice the former grant.¹

3 BL. COM. 219. If a ferry is erected on a river, so near another ancient ferry as to draw away its custom, it is a nuisance to the owner of the old one. For where there is a ferry by prescription, the owner is bound to keep it always in repair and readiness, for the ease of all the king's subjects, otherwise he may be grievously amerced; it would be therefore extremely hard, if a new ferry were suffered to share his profits, which does not also share his burden.²

And in every ferry the land on both sides of the water must belong to the owner of the ferry, else he cannot land on the other side.¹

HUZZEY v. FIELD.

EXCHEQUER. 1835.

[Reported 2 C. M. & R. 432.]

LORD ABINGER, C. B.² This was an action on the case for the disturbance of the plaintiff's ferry over Milford Haven, tried before my Brother Parke at Haverfordwest. It was claimed in the declaration in different ways ; but the question reserved for the consideration of the court arises on the count which complains of a disturbance of Nayland Ferry.

The plaintiff was the lessee, under Sir John Owen, of a ferry, called the Pembroke or Burton Ferry, across Milford Haven, which was the ordinary communication between Pembroke and Haverfordwest. He was also lessee, under the same gentleman, of another ferry from the same point, on the Pembroke side, to Nayland and back ; there was no question as to the right of the plaintiff to both these ferries. He claimed also a much more extensive right, that of ferrying all persons backwards and forwards over Milford Haven, within no very narrow limits ; but this right was negatived by the jury on the trial.

It appeared, however, that the defendant had, before the commencement of this suit, set up a boat to carry passengers from Nayland to the opposite side, and, amongst other places, to Hobbes's Point, more than half a mile from the Pembroke Ferry-house. At this place a hard or pier had been built, to improve the communication between England and Ireland, and a road made from thence to Pembroke, which communicated with the turnpike road from Pembroke Ferry to Pembroke, at a distance of more than half a mile from the ferry ; and the way from Nayland to Pembroke, by Hobbes's Point, was shorter than by Pem-

¹ "I think that what is laid down in Saville is not law to the extent to which it is there stated. The owner of the ferry must, as incident to the ferry, have such right to use the land on both sides as to enable him to embark and disembark his passengers ; but he need not for that purpose have any property in the soil. It is sufficient if he has a right to use the land for all the purposes of his ferry. This is a right to use the land of another for a particular purpose, and is an incorporeal hereditament." Per HOLROYD, J., in Peter v. Kendal, 6 B. & C. 703, 711 (1827).

² The opinion only is given.

broke Ferry. There was no town or vill between Hobbes's Point or Pembroke Ferry, and the junction of the new with the old road ; and, I rather believe, none between that point and Pembroke, although that circumstance was not inquired into on the trial.

On one occasion, a boy in the service of the defendant, and in his boat, received a passenger on board at Nayland, who, after the boat had been shoved off the shore, informed him he was going to Pembroke, and desired to be put on shore at Hobbes's Point ; and this was done.

The jury having found for the defendant on the other questions in the cause, these points were reserved for the consideration of the court, — 1st, whether the defendant was responsible for this act of his servant ; and, 2dly, whether, if he was, the facts proved amounted to a disturbance of the plaintiff's right of ferry, the jury having negatived any fraud in fact on the part of the defendant or his servant.

A rule nisi having been granted for a new trial, the case was argued before my Brothers PARKE, BOLLAND, GURNEY, and myself.

Upon the first point there is no difficulty. The servant was acting at the time in the course of his master's service, and for his master's benefit ; and his act was that of the defendant, although no express command or privity of his master was proved. Tuberville v. Stampé, 1 Ld. Raym. 265.

The second point is one of a more doubtful nature, and has called for much consideration. It is quite clear, that a ferry is a franchise which none can set up without a license from the Crown ; and in the case of a ferry by prescription, a grant or license is presumed. As early as in the Year-Book, 22 Hen. 6, 146, it is thus laid down by Paston : “ If I have of ancient time a ferry in a town, and another sets up a ferry upon the same river near to my ferry, so that the profits of my ferry are impaired, I shall have against him an action on the case ; ” and Newton says : “ The case of a ferry differs from that of a mill, for you are bound to sustain the ferry, to serve and repair it, in ease of the common people, and it is inquirable before the sheriff in his tourn, and justices in Eyre.” This proposition is quoted in 2 Roll. 140 G, pl. 4, Com. Dig. Piscarry, B., and Action on the Case for a Nuisance, and in most of the cases in which the rights of ferry have come in question.

In the case of Churchman v. Tunstall, Hardres, 162, in the Exchequer, in the time of the Commonwealth, 1659, the plaintiff, the farmer of a ferry at Brentford, as it would seem, under the Crown, filed a bill for an injunction to restrain the defendant, who had lands on both sides of the Thames, three quarters of a mile off, and who was in the habit of ferrying passengers across, from continuing to do so. The bill was dismissed without costs ; but the reporter adds a query as to the propriety of the decision ; and even if it was right, it is no authority against the maintenance of an action on the case. The decision, however, appears to have been wrong ; for, upon another bill filed in 1663, after the Restoration, a decree was made by Lord Hale, on the 18th of June, 14 Car. 2, in favor of the same plaintiff, that the new ferry should be put down.

In Blissett v. Hart, Willes, 508, the plaintiff recovered in an action on the case, against the defendant, for setting up another ferry over the same river, near the plaintiff's ferry, and ferrying over persons and horses over the same river, near the plaintiff's ferry, by which she was obliged to let it for less rent than before, and had been deprived of great part of the profit of it. On motion in arrest of judgment, the court held the declaration to be good, and they said, that "a ferry is a franchise that no one can erect without a license from the Crown; and when one is erected, another cannot be erected without an ad quod damnum. If a second is erected without a license, the Crown has a remedy by quo warranto, and the former grantee has a remedy by action. The franchise is the ground of the action." Willes, 512 n.

So far the authorities appear to be clear, that, if a new ferry be set up without the king's license, to the prejudice of an old one, an action will lie; and there is no case which has the appearance of being to the contrary, except that of Tripp v. Frank, hereafter mentioned. These old authorities proceed upon the ground, first, that the grant of the franchise is good in law, being for a sufficient consideration to the subject, who, as he receives a benefit, may have, by the grant of the Crown, a corresponding obligation imposed upon him in return for the benefit received; and secondly, that, if another, without legal authority, interrupts the grantee in the exercise of his franchise, by withdrawing the profit of passengers, which he would otherwise have had, and which he has, in a manner, purchased from the public at the price of his corresponding liability, the disturber is subject to an action for the injury; and the case is, in this respect, analogous to the grant of a fair or market, which is also a privilege of the nature of a monopoly.

A public ferry, then, is a public highway, of a special description, and its termini must be in places where the public have rights, as, towns or vills, or highways leading to towns or vills. The right of the grantee is, in the one case, an exclusive right of carrying from town to town, in the other, of carrying from one point to the other, all who are going to use the highway to the nearest town or vill to which the highway leads on the other side. Any new ferry, therefore, which has the effect of taking away such passengers, must be injurious.

For instance, if any one should construct a new landing-place at a short distance from one terminus of the ferry, and make a practice of carrying passengers over from the other terminus, and there landing them at that place, from which they pass to the same public highway upon which the ferry is established, before it reaches any town or vill, and by which the passengers go immediately to the first, and all the vills and towns to which that highway leads; there could not be any doubt that such an act would be an infringement of the right of ferry, whether the person so acting intended to defraud the grantee of the ferry or not.

If such new ferry be nearer, or the boats used more commodious, or the fare less, it is obvious that all the custom must inevitably be withdrawn from the old ferry; and thus the grantee would be deprived of all benefit of the franchise, whilst he continued liable to all the burden imposed upon him.

It does not follow from this doctrine, that, if there be a river passing by several towns or places, the existence of a franchise of a ferry over it, from a certain point on one side to a point on the other, precludes the King's subjects from the use of the river, as a public highway from or to all the towns or places on its banks, and obliges them, upon all occasions, to their own inconvenience, to pass from one terminus of the ferry to the other. The case of Tripp v. Frank, 4 T. R. 666, decided otherwise; and it is not intended to question that decision. It was there held that the plaintiff, who had a right of ferry from Hull to the town of Barton, had no right of action against a person who carried passengers from Hull to Barrow, a place on the banks of the river, at some distance from Barton. But, suppose he had known that the passengers were going by that route to Barton, and that their sole object was to go there; or suppose that Barton, instead of being within a few hundred yards from the Humber, was a mile distant, and was the first town with which either ferry communicated, it would not follow, from that decision, that in such a case passengers might be landed at Barrow, for the sole purpose of going to Barton.

We have thought it right, in consequence of the course taken by the counsel in argument, to enter thus far into the general question, and to lay down these principles, that it may not be supposed that the decision to which we find ourselves obliged to come, can in any manner affect the plaintiff's right to the exclusive privilege of ferrying passengers who leave Nayland with no other object than that of going to Pembroke.

But, fully admitting his right, we are of opinion, after much deliberation, and, I may add, not without some hesitation, that there is no sufficient ground for making the rule absolute.

It is to be observed, that, between Hobbes's Point and the junction of the two roads that lead from that place and from Pembroke Ferry respectively to the town of Pembroke, there are intermediate points, to which the passenger Llewelyn might be going; though Pembroke was his ultimate object, it might not be his only object; and, if he had any particular view of convenience in making Hobbes's Point the place of his landing, which could not have been accomplished as well by landing at Pembroke Ferry, then, according to the principles laid down in the case of Tripp v. Frank, there would have been no evasion of the plaintiff's ferry. It is true that the intentions of Llewelyn are left very uncertain upon the evidence; and it does not appear from the report, that the counsel on either side thought proper to elicit them by any inquiry. And if this had been the real question which the parties intended to try, the Court might have been disposed to direct a new trial. But one cannot fail to observe that the main questions of fact in difference were fully tried and disposed of by the jury, and that the point stated upon Llewelyn's evidence was laid hold of for no other purpose than that of recovering a verdict for the plaintiff at all events, after all the matters really in difference had been decided against him. The court, therefore, is bound to look with strictness to the evidence, and not to allow the plaintiff any advantage from an uncertainty that he ought to have removed. It was incumbent on him to offer satisfactory proof that Llewelyn had no other object than to evade his ferry, and that the defendants were aware, and must have understood, that he had no other object. Now, the communication made by Llewelyn to the defendant's servant, after the boat had commenced her passage, is not inconsistent with his having some legitimate object in going to Hobbes's Point, besides that of going to Pembroke. The uncertainty, therefore, in which this point has been left by the evidence, makes it impossible to say that the facts proved amounted to a disturbance of the plaintiff's ferry; therefore the rule cannot be made absolute, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff. And we think that the plaintiff, in a case of this sort, is not entitled to a new trial, that he may amend his evidence upon an incidental point, upon which he left it too doubtful to be properly submitted to the jury. The rule, therefore, must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

NEWTON v. CUBITT.

COMMON PLEAS. 1862.

[Reported 12 C. B. N. S. 32.]

WILLES, J., delivered the judgment of the court:¹ —

In the first count of the declaration the plaintiffs complain that the defendants had carried passengers in the line of their ferry; in the second, that they had so done near that of the said ferry, for the purpose of evading it.

The defendants carried to Greenwich passengers from Cubitt's Pier, which is on the eastern side of the Isle of Dogs, distant 1280 yards from Potter's Ferry Stairs, on the south side of that isle. The area of the isle is about one square mile. It is bounded by the Thames on three sides out of four. It was an uninhabited marsh down to 1800, with one roadway from Poplar on the north, to Potter's Ferry Stairs on the south; and at that time the passengers going along that road comprised all the passengers from the Isle of Dogs. Since 1800 it has become and now is populous, and covered with manufacturing and commercial establishments. Cubitt's Pier was made for the accommodation of Cubitt Town, built on the bank of the Thames at some distance from the roadway before mentioned, and only connected therewith by ways which the owner of the land has chosen to dedicate to the public.

Upon these facts, the questions are, — first, did the defendants carry within the line of the plaintiffs' ferry; and, if not, secondly, did they carry near to it, for the purpose of evading it?

In order to answer the first question, the extent of the plaintiffs' ferry must be ascertained. The plaintiffs claim the exclusive right of carrying all who pass from any part of the isle to Greenwich. In support of their claim they rely on a deed of 1676, and on usage. A part of the description of the ferry in the deed of 1676, taken by itself, tends to support this claim: "All that ferry extending itself from a place or marsh called the Isle of Dogs, over the Thames, into the town of Greenwich." But, although these words may mean that every person passing from the Isle of Dogs to Greenwich must go by this ferry, there are other parts of the description which refer to usage; so that the extent must be ascertained thereby. It is a ferry commonly called and known as "Potter's Ferry." Usage must prove the application of this description. The concluding words also, viz., "in as ample a manner as the same hath heretofore been used, occupied, or enjoyed," make the limits depend on usage. Furthermore, the nature of the franchise seems to be repugnant to the plaintiffs' claim of a ferry from every part of the isle indiscriminately.

A ferry exists in respect of persons using a right of way, where the line of way is across water. There must be a line of way on land, coming to a landing-place on the water's edge (as in this case, to Potter's Ferry Stairs), or, where the ferry is from or to a vill, from or to one or more landing-places in the vill. The franchise is established to secure convenient passage; and the exclusive right is given because in an unpopulous place there might not be profit sufficient to maintain the boat, if there was no monopoly. The ferry is unconnected with the occupation of land, and exists only in respect of persons using the right of way. The questions, whence they come, and whither they go, are irrelevant to the exercise of that right; and the ferryman has no inchoate right in respect of any of them, unless they come to his passage.

Such being the nature of a ferry, the notion that a large area of land should be subjected to the servitude that the owners and occupiers thereof should be prohibited from using the highway of the Thames as they may choose, and should be under an obligation to get to the highway leading from Potter's Ferry Stairs, and cross to Greenwich only therefrom, is anomalous; and, if Cubitt Town had been built without a way therefrom to the road to Potter's Ferry, the performance of the supposed obligation would necessitate a trespass.

The cases on the nature of a ferry are few; and we cite only Paine v. Partrich, Carth. 191. There, the court decided that case did not lie for an obstruction of a highway, without special damage ; that a passage over the water is of the same nature as a highway for all people ; and that the plaintiff, who claimed as an inhabitant of Littleport, had not the passage as such inhabitant, but as a subject.

If the line of the plaintiffs' ferry be taken to be from Potter's Ferry Stairs only, and not from the whole isle, the defendants have not carried in that line, and the first count fails.

The second count, charging that the defendants carried near the line of ferry, for the purpose of evading it, raises another question. The owner of the ferry has a cause of action for carrying in the line of the ferry, whether it be done directly or indirectly. He has a right to the transport of the passengers using the way ; and, if the alleged wrongdoer makes a landing-place near to the ferry landing-place, so as to be in substance the same, making no material difference to travellers, such a wrongdoer would be guilty of the wrong complained of in the second count : he would indirectly carry in the line of the plaintiffs' ferry.

Then, have the defendants done this wrong ? We think not. Cubitt Town is at such a distance from Potter's Ferry as is substantially important for those who have to pass therefrom to Greenwich ; and it is found that the defendants had not the purpose of evading the plaintiffs' ferry, or of diverting traffic therefrom.

The principle by which to decide whether the proximity of a new passage across the water to an ancient ferry is actionable, has not been clearly laid down. It seems reasonable to infer, that, if the franchise of a ferry is established for facility of passage, and if the monopoly is given to secure convenient accommodation, a change of circumstances creating new highways on land would carry with it a right to continue the line of those ways across a water highway ; and it is obvious that the single landing-place which sufficed for an uninhabited marsh, would be utterly inadequate for several towns thronged with industrial mechanics. If one hundred of such laborers pass now to Greenwich where one traveller passed in 1800, it seems oppressive to fix on such a large number of laborers the perpetually repeated loss of three quarters of a mile of walking, for the sake of the small fraction of the toll which is the profit on each passenger, and unreasonable so to increase that profit. If the public convenience requires a new passage at such a distance from the old ferry as makes it to be a real convenience to the public, the proximity seems to us not actionable.

The authorities do not define, either in respect of ferries or markets, or the like, what proximity is actionable. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 28, § 13, describes the proximity of a new market which is actionable to be seven miles, on the calculation of twenty miles a day for each person's travelling ; and he therefore allows seven miles out and seven back, and time for marketing besides. Such a limit, on such a reason, might be suited to the simple wants of a rude life, where inhabitants are few, but is unfitted for large towns, where daily wants are greatly multiplied.

Under the latter circumstances, it seems that the area within which a new market would become actionable would be diminished from a diameter of fourteen miles by the public need; and, on the same reasoning, the area for the monopoly of a ferry would depend on the need of the public for passage.

We now proceed to the cases. The dictum of Paston, in 11 H. 6, fo. 14, only affirms that case will lie for infringing the right of a ferryman, and does not touch the question of proximity. In Churchman v. Tunstal, Hardres, 162, the complaint, by English bill, was, that the defendant carried over the Thames, in Brentford, three quarters of a mile below the plaintiff's ferry for horses and passengers, and an injunction was prayed to stop it; the defendant contended that the restraint which the plaintiff would lay on others was uncertain, and at too great a distance; and the court decided for him, because it came too near to a monopoly, and restrained trade. The decision by Lord Hale between the same parties is said, in Huzzey v. Field, 2 C. M. & R. 432, to have been different; but neither the point of law, nor the facts on which Lord Hale acted, are stated. In Tripp v. Frank, 4 T. R. 666, the plaintiff's ferry was from Hull to Barton. The defendant carried from Hull to Barrow, two miles below Barton, on the Humber. The judgment is for the defendant. Lord Kenyon says: "If a person wishing to go from Hull to Barton had applied to the defendant, and he had carried them a little above or below the ferry, it would be a fraud on the plaintiff's right, and a cause of action. But here these persons were substantially and not colorably carried to a different place." And Ashhurst, J., adds, in effect, that it is unreasonable to require that a person crossing the Humber must be carried out of his way, on account of the plaintiff's ferry.

In Huzzey v. Field, 2 C. M. & R. 432, the plaintiff had a ferry from Nayland to Pembroke Point. The main highway from Haverford to Pembroke passed by Nayland, and thence over the water to Pembroke Point, and so to Pembroke. Afterwards traffic to Milford Haven increased, and Pater Dock was built, and a landing-place at Hobbes's Point, half a mile from Pembroke Point, was made, — it being required for the accommodation of traffic in lines other than that from Haverford to Pembroke. The defendant took a passenger in his boat from Nayland Point, who, when afloat, ordered him to Hobbes's Point, saying he was going to Pembroke. The question was, whether these facts proved a disturbance of the ferry; and it was answered in the negative. The court describes a disturbance to be either by carrying from point to point, or by constructing a landing-place at a short distance from one terminus of the ferry, and carrying passengers thereto who were in reality passing along the line of way on which the ferry is situate. But, as it appeared in the case there were other places than Pembroke to which the passenger might be going from Hobbes's Point, without or before going to Pembroke, and if there was a convenience to him in landing at Hobbes's Point, which he could not have had by landing at Pembroke Point, he would not evade the plaintiff's ferry by landing at Hobbes's Point.

In the last two cases, the ferry was backwards and forwards, and the question arose in respect of the terminus ad quem. The law would have been precisely the same, as far as the consideration of convenient accommodation operates, if the question arose respecting the terminus a quo, as it necessarily does in this case, where the ferry is only one way. But these general principles, and their specific application to Potter's Ferry, were considered in Matthews, app., Peache, resp., 5 Ellis & B. 546, and the judgment was decisively in point for the defendants. The information was for plying as waterman, without a license. The defence was, that the defendant was exempt as a ferry-man ferrying in Potter's Ferry from Cubitt's Dock, which is 800 yards from Potter's Ferry Stairs, to Greenwich. The court decided that the ferry is from the stairs, and not from the Isle of Dogs to Greenwich, the indefinite words of the conveyance being defined by the exercise of the right; and that therefore the exemption for ferries did not extend to Cubitt's Dock, distant 800 yards. A fortiori it does not extend to Cubitt's Pier, which is 1280 yards distant from the ferry.

Therefore, upon principle and authority, it appears that the plaintiffs have neither the privileges nor the burdens of a ferry from Cubitt's Pier, and that all the Queen's subjects being at Cubitt's Pier, whether from Poplar or elsewhere, have a right to use the highway of the Thames therefrom either to Greenwich or elsewhere at their free will and pleasure, either by wherries or steamer.

It follows that no right of the plaintiffs is shown to have been infringed by the defendants, and that the defendants are entitled to our judgment.

GATES v. M'DANIEL.

SUPREME COURT OF ALABAMA. 1829.

[Reported 2 Stew. 211.]

THIS was a suit in equity, tried on bill and answer in the Circuit Court of Covington County, at October Term, 1827.

Samuel Gates had filed his bill in March, 1827, charging, that before the sale of the public lands at that place by the United States, Thomas

M'Daniel had established a ferry on the Conecuh River, below the falls, in Covington County. That when the land was sold by the government, it was purchased by several persons jointly, among whom were the complainant and defendants. That after the purchase, the owners applied to the County Court of Covington County, and obtained an order for a public ferry, at the same place at which the defendant, M'Daniel, had before kept his ferry. That a part of the land purchased was laid off in lots, for the purpose of making a town; that the whole of the land thus distributed into lots was divided by ballot among the owners; and that in the division, the complainant drew the lots attached to the ferry; that before the drawing, it had been agreed, that no ferry should be kept on any other part of the land. He alleged, that after the division, he had obtained from the County Court an order for a public ferry at the same place, in his own name. He further charged, that notwithstanding this agreement, the defendants had erected a bridge across the river on a part of the land drawn by them, very near to the ferry, on which all persons were permitted to cross, on foot, on horseback, and in carriages, free of charge, by which the profits of the ferry were entirely destroyed; although he the complainant had complied with the law in keeping a good boat and ferryman, and kept the banks in good order, &c. He also alleged, that before building the bridge, M'Daniel had made an application to the County Court, for authority to establish another ferry on said land, which had been refused. According to the prayer of the bill, an injunction had been granted, restraining the defendants from permitting the bridge to be used for any other purpose than the convenience of their own families.

The defendants, by their answer, admitted the allegations of the bill, except the agreement that no ferry should be established other than the one which had been previously authorized, which they denied. They also denied that the banks leading to the complainant's ferry had been put in good order, and insisted that wagons had been compelled to unload before they could get up the banks; and that the complainant himself had, in some instances, used the bridge.

On the hearing in the Circuit Court, the injunction was dissolved, and bill dismissed with costs, on the ground that the Statute prohibiting the establishment of ferries within two miles of a ferry already established, did not embrace bridges; and also that it contained an exception as to ferries at or near a town.

The complainant appealed from this decree, and insisted that it was erroneous.

By JUDGE TAYLOR. The Statute of 1820, section 17, provides "that no public ferry shall be established within less than two miles by water, of any ferry already established, unless on any river at or within two miles of any town." And by the 20th section of that Act, it is declared "that if any person or persons shall establish a public ferry or a public road, toll-bridge, or causeway, contrary to the provisions of this Act, he or they shall forfeit and pay five hundred dollars," &c. The meaning of this last section clearly is, if a toll-bridge, &c., should be established without an order of court, then the forfeiture shall be incurred. But as this is not a toll-bridge, it does not come within the words of the Statute, which is penal, and must be strictly construed.

What is the reason that persons are prohibited from establishing a public ferry within two miles of another? Clearly because the owner of the first has entered into onerous engagements when he obtained the order to establish his ferry. He has become bound to keep good boats, constant attendance, &c. This requires that he should receive compensation, and it is important to the community that he should observe faithfully the engagements he has entered into. Unless he has some such protection, his ferry will become profitless, of course will be neglected, and travellers and others meet with great delays. But will the object of the General Assembly in affording this protection be defeated by the erection of a bridge within the prohibited distance? Certainly, much more effectually than by establishing a ferry. It is said though that in the record, there is some showing that this place came within the exception, as there was a town where this bridge is built. I am far from being satisfied that there was a town within the meaning of the Act; but it is a sufficient reply to this objection, that this bridge was not established by order of the County Court.

Apart from all statutory provisions, except those which relate to the establishment of the ferry, I am decidedly of opinion that the defendants had no right to build a public bridge within the immediate vicinity of the ferry, calculated to destroy the profits of the ferry. The complainant had regularly made his application to the County Court, entered into bond as the law directs, and was liable to be sued on that bond if he failed to comply with its conditions; certainly then he must receive the protection which he had a right to expect when he gave this bond, and without which it will not be in his power to fulfil its conditions. In a case reported in 1 Johnson's Chancery Reports, 611, it is determined that "an injunction will be granted to secure to a party the enjoyment of a privilege conferred by Statute, of which he is in the actual possession, and when his legal title is not put in doubt. As when a turnpike company, incorporated with the exclusive privilege of erecting toll-gates and receiving toll, had duly opened, and established the road with gates, &c., and certain persons, with a view to avoid the payment of toll, opened a by-road near their turnpike, and kept it open, at their own expense, for the use of the public, by which travellers were enabled to avoid passing through the gates, and paying toll to the plaintiff; the court granted a perpetual injunction to prevent the defendants from using or allowing others to use such road, and ordered the same to be shut up." This case is so precisely in point, that it is needless to comment upon it.

The decree of the court below must be reversed; and this court proceeding to render such decree as should have been rendered below, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed, that the injunction be reinstated and perpetuated, and that the defendants pay the costs of the suit.

JUDGE CRENSHAW, not sitting.¹

¹ "Before the passing of the Statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Ed. 1, St. 1, which prohibited the subinfeudation of land, rents might be and were reserved upon a feoffment in fee simple. Such rent was rent service incident to the seigniory, and was distrainable for of common right. Lit. 216. Many rents so created are still in existence, and are variously termed chief rents, rents of assize, quit rents, and fee farm rents. Chief rents, in the original, as distinguished from the modern sense of the word, are such rents as are payable by the freeholders of a manor to the lord under whom they hold. 1 Steph. Com. 675. Rents of assize are similar rents payable by a freeholder or copyholder of a manor, the name being derived from the original reservation having been assized, i. e., reduced to a certainty by the lord of the manor. Scriven on Copyholds, 6th ed., 208. The term quit rent is often applied to both chief rents and rents of assize, but, strictly speaking, is applicable only to a rent reserved in lieu of all services, because then the tenant is quit from other services. Scriven on Copyholds, 6th ed., 208. All these are rents service, and must have been paid immemorially (Scriven on Copyholds, 6th ed., 208), or at least since before the passing of the Statute Quia Emptores.

"Fee farm rents, though very similar, differ somewhat from those last mentioned. They were rents reserved upon feoffments of land in fee rendering yearly the true value, or more or less, for which tenements neither homage, wardship, marriage, nor relief could be demanded without special stipulation. Britton, book iii. ch. ii. Feoffments of this kind appear thus to have been more analogous to a lease at rack rent than to an ordinary feudal grant, in which the services were regarded as of more importance than the rent. With the growth of the commercial and decay of the feudal spirit, this form was no doubt increasingly adopted. We read in Hallam's Middle Ages, ch. viii. part iii., that one of the earliest and most important changes in the condition of the burgesses of towns was the conversion of their individual tributes into a perpetual rent from the whole borough. The town was then said to be affirmed or let in fee farm to the burgesses and their successors forever.

"A fee farm rent is often stated as a rent in fee issuing out of an estate in fee of at least one fourth of the value of the land at the time of its reservation. 2 Blackstone, 43; note to Bradbury v. Wright, 1 Doug. 626; Spelm. Gloss. 221, col. 1. The name, however, is founded on the perpetuity of the rent, not on the quantum. Harg., note to Co. Lit. 143 b; Mad. Firm. Burg. 3. Mr. Hargrave states that the sometimes confining the term of fee farm to rents of a certain value probably arose partly from

Co. Lit. 142 a. And the rent may as well be in delivery of hens, capons, roses, spurs, bows, shafts, horses, hawks, pepper, comin, wheat, or other profit that lieth in render, office, attendance, and such like, as in payment of money. But a man upon his feoffment or conveyance cannot reserve to him parcel of the annual profits themselves, as to reserve the vesture or herbage of the land or the like, for that should be repugnant to the grant: *non debet enim esse reservatio de proficuis ipsis, quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficia.*¹

Lit. § 214. And if a man will give lands or tenements to another in the tail, yielding to him certain rent by the year, he of common right may distrain for the rent behind, though that such gift was made without deed, because that such rent is rent service. In the same manner it is, if a lease be made to a man for life, or the life of another, rendering to the lessor certain rent, or for term of years rendering rent.

Lit. § 215. But in such case, where a man upon such a gift or lease will reserve to him a rent service, it behooveth, that the reversion of the lands and tenements be in the donor or lessor. For if a man will make a feoffment in fee, or will give lands in tail, the remainder over in fee simple, without deed, reserving to him a certain rent, this reservation is void, for that no reversion remains in the donor, and such tenant holds his land immediately of the lord, of whom his donor held, &c.

Lit. § 216. And this is by force of the Statute of Quia Emptores terrarum. For before that Statute, if a man had made a feoffment in fee simple, by deed or without deed, yielding to him and to his heirs a certain rent, this was a rent service, and for this he might have distrained of common right; and if there were no reservation of any rent, nor of any service, yet the feoffee held of the feoffor by the same service, as the feoffor did hold over of his lord next paramount.

Lit. § 217. But if a man, by deed indented, at this day maketh such the Statute of Gloucester, which gave the cessavit only where the rent amounted to one fourth of the value of the land, and partly from its being most usual on grants in fee farm not to reserve less than a third or fourth of such value. It is stated in Britton, book iii. ch. ii., that if the feoffees ceased to pay the rent for two years together, an action thereby accrued to the feoffors or their heirs to demand the tenements in demesne.

"It would appear to be the better opinion that fee farm rents, properly so called, are rents service, and cannot therefore be created since the passing of the Statute Quia Emptores. Harg., note to Co. Lit. 143 b. The term, however, has been freely used, and in very modern Acts of Parliament; e. g., Conveyancing Act, 1881, § 14 (3); Settled Land Act, 1882, §§ 10, 20, with reference to the rent charges which are continually being created as the consideration for conveyances of freehold land." — Harrison, Chief Rents, 2-5.

As to which of the United States have preserved the law of distress, see 2 Tayl. Landl. & Ten. (8th ed.) §§ 558, 559.

¹ "A reservation of a part of the thing demised cannot properly operate as a render, and it may be admitted that it operates as an exception." — Per LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., in The King v. Pomfret, 5 M. & S. 139, 143 (1816). Cf. The King v. St. Austell, 5 B. & Ald. 693. See also Doe d. Edney v. Benham, 7 Q. B. 976.

a gift in fee tail, the remainder over in fee; or a lease for life, the remainder over in fee; or a feoffment in fee; and by the same indenture he reserveth to him and to his heirs a certain rent, and that if the rent be behind, it shall be lawful for him and his heirs to distrain, &c., such a rent is a rent charge; because such lands or tenements are charged with such distress by force of the writing only, and not of common right. And if such a man, upon a deed indented, reserve to him and to his heirs a certain rent, without any such clause put in the deed, that he may distrain, then such rent is rent seek; for that he cannot come to have the rent, if it be denied, by way of distress; and if in this case he were never seised of the rent, he is without remedy, as shall be said hereafter.

Co. LIT. 144 a. Note that upon a reservation of a rent upon a feoffment in fee by deed indented, the feoffor shall not have a writ of annuity, because the words of reservation, as reddendo, solvendo, faciendo, tenendo, reservando, &c., are the words of the feoffor, and not of the feoffee, albeit the feoffee by acceptance of the estate is bound thereby.

LIT. § 218. Also, if a man seised of certain land grant, by a deed poll, or by indenture, a yearly rent to be issuing out of the same land, to another in fee, or in fee tail, or for term of life, &c., with a clause of distress, &c., then this is a rent charge; and if the grant be without clause of distress, then it is a rent seek. And note that rent seek idem est quod redditus siccus; for that no distress is incident unto it.

LIT. § 219. Also, if a man grant by his deed a rent charge to another, and the rent is behind, the grantee may choose whether he will sue a writ of annuity for this against the grantor, or distrain for the rent behind, and the distress detain until he be paid. But he cannot do, or have, both together, &c. For if he recovers by a writ of annuity, then the land is discharged of the distress, &c. And if he doth not sue a writ of annuity, but distrain for the arrearages, and the tenant sueth his replevin, and then the grantee avow the taking of the distress in the land in a court of record, then is the land charged, and the person of the grantor discharged of the action of annuity.

LIT. § 220. Also, if a man would that another should have a rent charge issuing out of his land, but would not that his person be charged in any manner by a writ of annuity, then he may have such a clause in the end of his deed. Provided always that this present writing, nor anything therein specified, shall any way extend to charge my person by a writ or an action of annuity, but only to charge my lands and tenements with the yearly rent aforesaid, &c. Then the land is charged, and the person of the grantor discharged.

LIT. § 225. Also, if there be lord and tenant, and the tenant holds of his lord by fealty and certain rent, and the lord grant the rent by his deed to another, &c., reserving the fealty to himself, and the tenant attorns to the grantee of the rent, now this rent is rent seek to the grantee; because the tenements are not holden of the grantor of the rent, but are holden of the lord who reserved to him the fealty.

LIT. § 226. In the same manner, where a man holds his land by homage, fealty and certain rent, if the lord grant the rent, saving to him the homage, such rent after such grant is rent seck. But there where lands are holden by homage, fealty and certain rent, if the lord will grant by his deed the homage, of his tenant to another, saving to him the remnant of his services, and the tenant attorn to him according to the form of the grant; in this case the tenant shall hold his land of the grantee, and the lord who granted the homage shall have but the rent as a rent seck, and shall never distrain for the rent, because that homage nor fealty nor escuage cannot be said seck, for no such service may be said seck. For he, which hath or ought to have homage, fealty or escuage of his land, may by common right distrain for it, if it be behind; for homage, fealty and escuage are services, by which lands or tenements are holden, &c., and are such services as in no manner can be taken but as services, &c.

LIT. § 227. But otherwise it is of a rent, which was once rent service; because when it is severed by the grant of the lord from the other services, it cannot be said rent service, for that it hath not fealty unto it, which is incident to every manner of rent service; and therefore it is called rent seck. And the lord cannot grant such a rent with a distress, as it is said.

LIT. § 228. Also, if a man let to another lands for term of life, reserving to him certain rent, if he grant the rent to another by his deed, saving to him the reversion of the land so letten, &c., such rent is but a rent seck; because that the grantee had nothing in the reversion of the land, &c. But if he grant the reversion of the land to another for term of life, and the tenant attorn, &c., then hath the grantee the rent as a rent service; for that he hath the reversion for term of life.

LIT. § 233. Also, if a man which hath a rent seck, be once seised of any parcel of the rent, and after the tenant will not pay the rent behind, this is his remedy. He ought to go by himself or by others to the lands or tenements out of which the rent is issuing, and there demand the arrearages of the rent; and if the tenant deny to pay it, this denial is a disseisin of the rent. Also, if the tenant be not then ready to pay it, this is a denial, which is a disseisin of the rent. Also, if the tenant, nor any other man, be remaining upon the lands or tenements to pay the rent when he demandeth the arrearages, this is a denial in law, and a disseisin in deed, and of such disseisins he may have an assize of novel disseisin against the tenant, and shall recover the seisin of the rent, and his arrearages and his damages, and the costs of his writ and of his plea, &c. And if after such recovery [and execution had] the rent be again denied unto him, then he shall have a redisseisin, and shall recover his double damages, &c.

LIT. § 235. Also, if there be lord and tenant, and the lord granteth the rent of his tenant by deed to another, saving to him the other services, and the tenant attorneth, that is a rent seck, as it is aforesaid. But if the rent be denied him at the next day of payment, he hath no remedy; because that he had not thereof any possession. But if the tenant when he attorneth to the grantee, or afterwards, will give a penny or a half-penny to the grantee in name of seisin of rent, then if after at the next day of payment the rent be denied him, he shall have an assise of novel disseisin. And so it is if a man grant by his deed a yearly rent issuing out of his land to another, &c. if the grantor then or after pay to the grantee a penny, or an half-penny, in the name of seisin of the rent, then, if after the next day of payment the rent be denied, the grantee may have an assise, or else not, &c.

LIT. § 236. Also, of rent seck a man may have an assize of mord-auncester, or a writ of ayel or cosinage, and all other manner of actions real, as the case lieth, as he may have of any other rent.

LIT. § 237. Also, there be three causes of disseisin of rent service, that is to say, rescous, replevin, and enclosure. Rescous is, when the lord distraineth in the land holden of him for his rent behind, if the distress be rescued from him, or if the lord come upon the land, and will distrain, and the tenant or another man will not suffer him, &c. Replevin is, when the lord hath distrained, and replevin is made of the distress by writ or by plaint. Enclosure is, if the lands and tenements be so enclosed, that the lord may not come within the lands and tenements for to distrain. And the cause, why such things so done be disseisins made to the lord, is for this, that by such things the lord is disturbed of the mean by which he ought to have come to his rent, scil., of the distress.

LIT. § 238. And there be four causes of disseisin of a rent charge: scil., rescous, replevin, enclosure, and denial; for denial is a disseisin of a rent charge, as is said before of a rent seck.

LIT. § 239. And there be two causes of disseisin of a rent seck; that is to say, denial and enclosure.

LIT. § 240. And it seemeth, that there is another cause of disseisin of all the three services aforesaid; that is, if the lord is going to the land holden of him for to distrain for the rent behind, and the tenant hearing this encountereth with him, and forestalleth him the way with force and arms, or menaceth him in such form that he dare not come to the land to distrain for his rent behind for doubt of death, or bodily hurt, this is a disseisin, for that the lord is disturbed of the mean whereby he ought to come to his rent. And so it is, if, by such forestalling or menacing, he that hath rent charge or rent seck is forestalled, or dare not come to the land to ask the rent behind, &c.

LIT. § 346. And here note two things: one is, that no rent (which is properly said a rent) may be reserved upon any feoffment, gift, or lease, but only to the feoffor, or to the donor, or to the lessor, or to their heirs, and in no manner it may be reserved to any strange person. But if two joint tenants make a lease by deed indented, reserving to one of them a certain yearly rent, this is good enough to him to whom the rent is reserved, for that he is privy to the lease, and not a stranger to the lease, &c.

LIT. § 565. Also, if the lord of a rent service grant the services to another, and the tenant attorn by a penny, and after the grantee distrain for the rent behind, and the tenant make rescous; in this case the grantee shall not have an assize for the rent, but a writ of rescous, because the giving of the penny by the tenant was not but by way of attornment, &c. But if the tenant had given to the grantee the said penny as parcel of the rent, or a half-penny or a farthing by way of seisin of the rent, then this is a good attornment, and also it is a good seisin to the grantee of the rent; and then upon such rescous the grantee shall have an assize, &c.

CASE OF LORINGE'S EXECUTORS.

[Reported Year Book 26 Edw. III. 10, pl. 5.]

THE executors of W. L. brought a writ of debt against one T., and demanded one hundred marks of silver. And they declared that one S., late Earl of Kent, was seised of the moiety of the manor of L., and granted an annual rent of one hundred marks, to be taken from the said manor, to W., a testator, for the term of his life; and that the said W. was seised of the said rent by the hand of the Earl; and afterwards the said moiety of the manor came into the possession of the said T., in whose time, and in the life of their testator, the said annuity was detained, and was in arrear &c. to the amount of the sum which is in demand, wherefore they often, as executors, have come to the said T., tenant of the moiety of the manor charged, and prayed him that he would pay them. And they showed the will and the deed of grant of the annuity.

Birt. In the will their testator is named W. Loringe, Knight, and in the writ they name themselves executors of W. L., without Knight, so there is a variance from the will. Judgment of the writ.

And because the writ agreed with the deed of annuity in this point, and they did not deny that it was all the same person, the writ was adjudged good by WILBY [J.?).

Birt. To this writ brought against T. as against the tenant of the land charged, we say that we have nothing, and never had, save in the right of our wife, A. by name; who is not named in the writ. Judgment of the writ.

Thorpe. Sir, we do not acknowledge what you say, but you see well how this is our writ of debt, and how after the death of our testator that which was an annual rent in his life is turned into the nature of debt, which debt he detains, and inasmuch as he does not deny that he is tenant of the land charged, in which case we understand that although A. was dead, we should recover against her executors; wherefore our writ is good against him; for if I let lands for a term of years to a man and his wife, rendering me a certain rent, yet after the term I shall have a writ of debt against the husband alone. Wherefore &c.

And afterwards it was said by the court that the writ was good.

Birt. Where he has declared that the annuity was in arrear for fourteen years in our time, we say that we have never had anything in this land, save by reason of coverture, as in the right of A. our wife, who as long as she was sole, held for four years of the said fourteen years, so that we have never held the said land but for ten years, and that in the right of our wife not named in the writ. Judgment of the writ.

Thorpe. As to the four years, your plea is to the action, that you ought not to be charged with this debt. Wherefore consider what you shall answer to the remainder.

Momb. Your writ is brought against us alone, and you have demanded an entire rent, and part of the years with which you have charged us, our wife was sole seised of the tenements, wherefore you ought not to charge us; so for that time our wife should be named in the writ, and this writ of debt cannot abate in part, if it does not abate in whole. Wherefore &c. And afterwards the parties took a day over by prayer of parties, and the writ was affirmed by prayer of parties &c.

ST. 32 HEN. VIII. c. 37. — Forasmuch as by the order of the common law, the executors or administrators of tenants in fee-simple, tenants in fee-tail, and tenants for term of lives, of rents services, rent charges, rents secks, and fee-farms, have no remedy to recover such arrearages of the said rents or fee-farms as were due unto their testators in their lives, (2) nor yet the heirs of such testator, nor any person having the reversion of his estate after his decease, may distrain, or have any lawful action to levy any such arrearages of rents or fee-farms, due unto him in his life as is aforesaid; (3) by reason whereof, the tenants of the demeant of such lands, tenements or hereditaments, out of the which such rents were due and payable, who of right ought to pay their rents and farms at such days and terms as they were due, do many times keep, hold and retain such arrearages in their own hands, so that the executors and administrators of the persons to whom such rents or fee-farms were due, cannot have or come by the said arrearages of the same, towards the payment of the debts and performance of the will of the said testators: (4) For remedy whereof, be it enacted by the authority of this present Parliament, That the executors and administrators of every such person or persons, unto whom any such rent or fee-farm is or shall be due, and not paid at the time of his death, shall and may have an action of debt for all such arrearages, against the tenant or tenants that ought to have paid the said rent or fee-farms so being behind in the life of their testator, or against the executors and administrators of the said tenants; (5) and also furthermore, it shall be lawful to every such executor and administrator of any such person or persons unto whom such rent or fee-farm is or shall be due, and not paid at the time of his death as is aforesaid, to distrain for the arrearages of all such rents and fee-farms, upon the lands, tenements and other hereditaments, which were charged with the payment of such rents or fee-farms, and chargeable to the distress of the said testator, (6) so long as the said lands, tenements or hereditaments continue, remain and be in the seisin or possession of the said tenant in demesn, who ought immediately to have paid the said rent or fee-farm so being behind, to the said testator in his life, (7) or in the seisin or possession of any other person or persons claiming the said lands, tenements and hereditaments, only by and from the same tenant by purchase, gift or descent, (8) in like manner and form as their said testator might or ought to have done in his life-time, and the said executors and administrators shall, for the same distress, lawfully make avowry upon their matter aforesaid.

III. And further be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any man which now hath, or hereafter shall have in the right of his wife, any estate in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, of or in any rents or fee-farms, and the same rents or fee-farms now be, or hereafter shall be due, behind and unpaid in the said wife's life; then the said husband, after the death of his said wife, his executors and administrators, shall have an action of debt for the said arrearages against the tenant of the demesn that ought to have paid the same, his executors or administrators; (2) and also the said husband, after the death of his said wife, may distrain for the said arrearages, in like manner and form, as he might have done if his said wife had been then living, and make avowry upon his matter as is aforesaid.

IV. And likewise it is further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons which now have, or hereafter shall have, any rents or fee-farms for term of life or lives, of any other person or persons, and the said rent or fee-farm now be, or hereafter shall be due, behind and unpaid in the life of such person or persons for whose life or lives the estate of the said rent or fee-farm did depend or continue, and after the said person or persons do die, then he unto whom the said rent or fee-farm was due in form aforesaid, his executors or administrators shall and may have an action of debt against the tenant in demesn, that ought to have paid the same when it was first due, his executors and administrators, (2) and also distrain for the same arrearages upon such lands and tenements out of the which the said rents or fee-farms were issuing and payable, (3) in such like manner and form as he ought or might have done, if such person or persons by whose death the aforesaid estate in the said rents and fee-farms was determined and expired, had been in full life and not dead; and the avowry for the taking of the same distress to be made in manner and form aforesaid.

Co. Lit. 162 a. Now hath Littleton spoken of remedies for the recovery of the arrearages of rents. But since Littleton's time a right profitable Statute in the 32 year of H. 8, hath been made for the recovery of arrearages of rents in certain cases where there lay no remedy at the common law, and giveth further remedy in some cases where at the common law there was some remedy; which Statute hath been well and beneficially expounded; and hereupon eight things are to be observed.

1. When Littleton wrote, the heirs, executors, or administrators, of a man seised of a rent service, rent charge, rent seck, or fee farm, in fee-simple or fee-tail, had no remedy for the arrearages incurred in the life of the owner of such rents. But now a double remedy is given to the executors or administrators for payment of debts, &c., viz. either to distrain or to have an action of debt.

2. That the preamble of the Statute concerning executors or administrators of tenant for life is to be intended of tenant per auter vie, so long as cestui que vie liveth, who are also holpen by the said double remedy. But after the estate for life determined, his executors or administrators might have had an action of debt by the common law; but they could not have distrained, which now they may do by force of this Statute; for in that point it addeth another remedy than the common law gave.

3. If a man make a lease for life or lives, or a gift in tail, reserving a rent, this is a rent service within this Statute.

Co. LIT. 47 a. First it appeareth here by Littleton that a rent must be reserved out of the lands or tenements, whereunto the lessor may have resort or recourse to distrain, as Littleton here also saith, and therefore a rent cannot be reserved by a common person out of any incorporeal inheritance, as advowsons, commons, offices, corody, mulcture of a mill, tithes, fairs, markets, liberties, privileges, franchises, and the like. But if the lease be made of them by deed for years, it may be good by way of contract to have an action for debt, but distrain the lessor cannot. Neither shall it pass with the grant of the reversion, for that it is no rent incident to the reversion. But if any rent be reserved in such case upon a lease for life, it is utterly void, for that in that case no action of debt doth lie. But if a man demiseth the vesture or herbage of his land, he may reserve a rent, for that the thing is mainorable, and the lessor may distrain the cattle upon the land: and so a reversion, or a remainder of lands or tenements may be granted reserving a rent, for the apparent possibility that it may come in possession, and they are tenements within the words of Littleton.

Co. LIT. 147 b. If a man seised of lands in fee, and possessed of a term for many years, grant a rent out of both for life in tail or in fee, with clause of distress out of both, this rent being a freehold doth issue only out of the freehold, and the lands in lease are only charged with a distress. But if he had granted the rent only out of the lands in lease for term of the life of the grantee, this had issued out of the term, and the land had been charged during the term, if the grantee lived so long.¹

KNOLLES' CASE.

COMMON PLEAS. 1534.

[Reported Dyer, 5 b.]

Montague moved this case: One Thomas Knolles was seised of lands devisable, and made a lease for years rendering rent, and devised this rent to a stranger, and died, and the stranger is seised of the rent, and dies: Whether his heir or his executors should have this rent, or not? And BALDWIN, Chief Justice, and SHELLEY, said, that no devise lies of a rent, for that it is a new thing, to which the custom runs not. 2. And so said SHELLEY, that he was always of opinion, notwithstanding Fitzj. was contrary, that a rent-charge out of gavelkind is not departible, but if it be reserved on a lease so as it is incidental to the reversion, peradventure it is departible; and that point he would willingly learn. But as to the last point, whether the executors or the heir should have it, it is clear that the executors shall have it, for their testator never had but a chattel in it.

WALKER'S CASE.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1587.

[Reported 3 Co. 22 a.]

THE case was in effect: Walker leased certain lands to Harris for years, the lessee assigned all his interest to another, Walker brought an action of debt against Harris for rent behind, after the assignment, and whether the action were maintainable or not, was the question. And it was objected against the action, that the land was debtor, and not the person but in respect of the land; and a difference was taken between a personal and a real contract, for if a man lets a stock of cattle or other goods for years, rendering rent at several days, he shall not have an action of debt till all the days be incurred. So if a man makes an obligation or other contract to pay several sums at several days, he shall not have an action of debt till all the days are past. But in the case of a lease for years, which is a real contract, the lessor shall have an action of debt after every day, as appears by 45 E. 3, 8; 2 E. 4, 11, which proves that the lessee is not charged in respect of any personal contract, but in respect of the realty. And therefore, when the lessee assigns over all his interest, all the realty, which always follows the land, is gone. Also, if a man sells goods for money to be paid at several days, in such case, although the goods be taken by one who hath right before the day, yet the seller shall have an action of debt in respect of the contract: but if a man makes a lease for years rendering rent, if before the day incurred the lands be evicted by title paramount, the lessor shall not have an action of debt in respect of the contract, because it is a real contract, and follows the estate of the land, and the rent issues out of the land, and the person is not the debtor but in respect of the land; for if the lessee grants over all his interest, the lessor may have an action of debt against the assignee, with whom there was no contract by deed. But forasmuch as the rent issues out of land, the assignee who hath the land, and is privy in estate, is debtor in respect to the land: so if a man leases three acres, rendering rent, and the lessor ousts the lessee of one acre, he shall have an action of debt for no part; but if the lessor recovers part in an action of waste, or enters into part for a forfeiture, or by surrender, or by special condition for entry into part; or if part of the land be evicted by title paramount; in all these cases the rent reserved on the lease for years, which is a rent service, shall be apportioned. Ergo, the contract follows the land, for otherwise the lessor might in all those cases have an action of debt for the whole rent in respect of the contract, as he shall have on a sale of goods; for which matter see 20 H. 6, 23 a; 9 E. 4, 1 a; 21 E. 4, 29 a, b, which book is to be intended of a lawful entry, as for a forfeiture, or by surrender, and not of a tortious entry, 4 H. 7, 6; 7 E. 6, tit. Apportionment, Br. 26; 25 H. 8, 36; 13 H. 8; 30 H. 8, Apportionment, Br. 7; 3 H. 7, 17. And so all the books are well reconciled. So it appears, that although in every lease for years there is a contract between the lessor and lessee, yet that contract is annexed to an estate, and follows the land. So on the other side, if the lessor grants over his reversion now the contract runneth with the estate, and therefore the grantor shall not have any action of debt for rent due after his assignment, but the grantee shall have it, for the privity of the contract follows the estate of the land, and is not annexed to the person but in respect of the estate: as where there be divers parceners of an advowson, the eldest hath prerogative to make the first presentment; but it is not in respect of her person only, but as it is annexed to her estate. For as 5 H. 5, 10 b, it is agreed, her husband, who is tenant by the courtesy, shall have it: so if one coparcener hath a rent granted her for owelty of partition, she may distrain for it of common right, without any words of distress; and so shall her grantee, for it was not annexed to her person only, but to the estate also, as it is held in 21 H. 6, 11. So the grantee of a reversion and the lord by escheat shall have an action of debt for the rent, as it is held in 5 H. 7, 18 b, for the contract is incident to the estate: and it was said, that it was held by Sir Ro. Catlin, late Chief Justice, that the lessee shall not be charged for rent due after the assignment. But on great deliberation and conference with others, it was adjudged by WRAY, L. C. J., SIR THOMAS GAWDY, and the whole Court of King's Bench, that the action would lie (after such assignment).

And first for the apprehending of the true reason of this case, and of all the other cases, which have been urged on the other side (for the law always, and in all cases, is consonant to itself), it is to be known, that as to the matter now in question there are three manner of privities, scil. privity in respect of estate only, privity in respect of contract only, and privity in respect of estate and contract together: privity of estate only; as if the lessor grants over his reversion (or if the reversion escheat) between the grantee (or the lord by escheat) and the lessee is privity in estate only, so between the lessor and the assignee of the lessee, for no contract was made between them. Privity of contract only, is personal privity, and extends only to the person of the lessor and to the person of the lessee, as in the case at bar, when the lessee assigned over his interest, notwithstanding his assignment the privity of contract remained between them, although the privity of estate be removed by the act of the lessee himself; and the reason thereof is, —

First, because the lessee himself shall not prevent by his own act such remedy which the lessor hath against him by his own contract, but when the lessor grants over his reversion, there, against his own grant, he cannot have remedy, because he hath granted the reversion to another, to which the rent is incident.

Secondly, the lessee may grant the term to a poor man, who shall not be able to manure the land, and who will, for need or for malice, suffer the land to lie fresh, and then the lessor will be without remedy either by distress or by action of debt, which would be inconvenient, and in effect concerns every man (for, for the most part, every man is a lessor or a lessee); and for these two reasons, all the cases of entry by wrong eviction, suspension and apportionment of rent are answered: for in such cases either it is the act of the lessor himself, or the act of a stranger; and in none of the said cases the sole act of the lessee himself shall prevent the lessor of his remedy, and introduce such inconveniences, as hath been said.

The third privity is of contract and estate together, as between the lessor and the lessee himself; and WRAY, Chief Justice, and SIR THO. GAWDY said, that as he who is a bastard born hath no cousin, "so every case imports suspicion of its legitimation, unless it has another case which shall be as a cousin-german, to support and prove it." And therefore it was agreed by the whole court, that if there be lord and tenant, and the tenant makes a feoffment in fee, in this case betwixt them for the arrearages due as well before the feoffment as after, till notice, &c., it is only privity as to avowry, and not any privity in estate or in tenure, which privity shall not go with the estate, and yet it is more in the realty than the case at bar; a fortiori in the case at bar, when the lessee assigns his interest, yet privity of contract between the lessor and lessee, as to the action of debt, remains. And at the common law, before the Statute of Quia Emptores terrarum, if the tenant made a feoffment in fee to hold of the chief lord, the feoffee could not by any tender that he could make, compel the lord to avow on him, but the lord always might avow on the feoffor, as appears in 33 E. 3, Avowry, 255. For by his own act he cannot change the avowry of his lord; which is a stronger case than the case at bar: and in the same case, if the lord granted over his seigniory, or if the feoffor died, there the privity, as to avowry, is destroyed; for it is personal, and holds only between the lord himself and the feoffee himself: so, if after the assignment of the lease, the lessor grants over his reversion, the grantee shall not have an action of debt against the lessee, for the privity of contract, as to the action of debt, holds only betwixt the lessor himself and the lessee himself: so in such case, if the lessee dies, the lessor shall not have an action of debt against his executors; for the privity consists only between the lessor and the lessee. See for the case of avowry, Litt. Chap. Releases, 106, 107; 4 E. 3, 22; 2 E. 4, 6; 34 H. 6, 46; 37 H. 6, 33; 7 E. 4, 28; 24 H. 8, Dy. 4; 29 H. 8, tit. Avow. Br. 111.

So if tenant in dower, or tenant by the curtesy, grants over their estate, yet the privity of action remains between the heir and them, and he shall have an action of waste against them for waste committed after the assignment: but if the heir grants over the reversion, then the privity of the action is destroyed, and the grantee cannot have any action of waste, but only against the assignee; for between them is privity in estate, and between the grantee and the tenant in dower, or tenant by the curtesy, is no privity at all. See F. N. B. 56, f. temp. E. 1, Waste, 122; 18 E. 3, 3; 30 E. 3, 16; 36 or 38 E. 3, 23; 11 H. 4, 18. And it was agreed, that if the lessor enters for condition broken, or if the lessee surrenders to the lessor, now the estate and term is determined, and yet the lessor shall have an action of debt for the arrearages due before the condition broken, or the surrender made, as it appears by F. N. B. 120; 30 E. 3, 7; 6 H. 7, 3 b; F. N. B. 122 (against the book of 32 E. 3 Bar. 262, which is not law), and that in respect of the contract between the lessor and the lessee. Note, reader, so great was the authority and consequence of this judgment, that after this time, not only the point adjudged hath been always affirmed, but also all the differences in this case taken by WRAY, C. J., and the court have been adjudged, as you may learn by the cases following Hil. 36 Eliz. in the K's B. Rot. 420, between Ungle and Glover it was adjudged, that if the lessee for years assigns over his interest and the lessor by deed indented and enrolled according to the Statute, bargains and sells the reversion to another, that the bargainee shall not have an action of debt against the lessee, for there is no privity betwixt them. But it was unanimously agreed by POPHAM, Chief Justice, CLENCH, GAWDY, and FENNER, Justices, that after the assignment the lessor himself might have an action of debt against the lessee for rent due after the assignment. Trin. 37 Eliz. in the King's Bench, Rot. 1042, between Overton and Sydhall, two points were resolved by POPHAM, C. J., and the whole court.

1. That if the executor of a lessee for years assigns over his interest, that an action of debt doth not lie against him for rent due after the assignment.

2. If the lessee for years assigns over his interest, and dies, the executor shall not be charged for rent due after his death; for, by the death of the lessee, the personal privity of contract, as to the action of debt in both cases, was determined. And Mich. 40 & 41 Eliz. between George Brome, Esq., plaintiff, and Hore, defendant, the case in effect was such: A. leased to C. 3 acres of land for years rendering rent, the said C. assigned all his estate in one acre to another, A. suffered a common recovery to the use of B. in fee, who brought an action of debt against the first lessee, and it was adjudged by POPHAM, C. J., and the whole court, that the action did lie; for inasmuch as the lessee had assigned his interest but in part, and remained possessed of the residue, that not only the lessor, but also his assignee, or he who claimeth under him shall have an action of debt for the whole rent against the lessee, for there was not privity of contract only, but also privity in estate and contract together; and therefore the action in this case shall go with the estate; as at common law, if before the Statute of Quia Emptores terrarum the tenant had made a feoffment in fee of part of the tenancy, there was not any apportionment, but the lord, or his grantee, should avow on the feoffor for as much as he remained tenant in respect of the residue: but if he had made a feoffment of the whole, then the grantee of the lord should not avow on him, as it hath been said before. See 22 Ass. 52; 24 H. 8, 4 b; 32 H. 8, Br. Accept. for this matter. And POPHAM, C. J., in this case said, that in case when rent reserved on a lease for years shall be apportioned, if in an action of debt the lessor demands more quam oportet; yet on nihil debet the lessor shall recover as much as shall be apportioned and assessed by the jury, and shall be barred for the residue. And Pasch. 41 Eliz. Rot. 2485, in the Common Pleas, Samuel Marrow brought an action of debt against Francis Turpin and W. Turpin, administrators of Geo. Turpin, and declared on a demise made by the plaintiff by deed indented of certain land to the intestate for years rendering rent, and for rent behind after the death of the intestate, the action was brought; the defendants pleaded, that before the rent behind, one of the defendants had assigned all his interest to Thomas Boorde, of which assignment the plaintiff had notice, and accepted the rent by the hands of the assignee, due at a day after the assignment, and before the day on which the rent was due which is now demanded, upon which the plaintiff did demur. And it was adjudged against the plaintiff, because the privity of the contract, as to the action of debt, was determined by the death of the lessee; and therefore, after assignment made by the administrator, debt did not lie against the administrator for rent due after the assignment, according to the judgment given in Overton and Sydhall's Case before.

Also it was said, if the lessee assigns over his term, the lessor may charge the lessee or his assignee at his election; and therefore if the lessor accepts the rent of the assignee, he hath determined his election, and shall not have an action against the lessee afterwards for rent due after the assignment, no more than if the lord once accepts the rent of the feoffee, he shall not avow on the feoffor; and by these judgments and resolutions you will the better understand your books; betwixt which prima facie seems to be some diversity of opinions. Vide 44 E. 3, 5, & 44 Ass. 18; 9 H. 6, 52, by Paston, which agree with the judgment of Sir Christopher Wray. See 8 Eliz. Dyer, 247, and the quære there made is now well resolved.

READE v. JOHNSON.

COMMON PLEAS. 1591.

[Reported Cro. El. 242.]

ASSUMPSIT for twenty-four pounds. And declares upon an indebitatus assumpsit. Defendant pleads non assumpsit. The jury found, that the plaintiff let to the defendant land for seven years, rendering eight pounds per annum, and the rent was arrear for three years; and that the defendant did owe no other debt, nor made any other promise. Et si, &c.—And it was held by the JUSTICES, that the action did not lie, but only an action of debt.

HUMBLE v. GLOVER.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1594.

[Reported Cro. El. 328.]

DEBT upon a lease for years, made by Tho. Play to the defendant. And declares upon an assignment of the reversion by indenture of bargain and sale enrolled. The defendant pleads, that after the grant of the reversion, and before any rent arrear, he assigned over his term to — Scotmead, and doth not name his Christian name; but a blank was left for it. Upon this plea it was demurred.

First Point. If the lessee shall be charged with the rent after the assignment of his term?—And resolved he should not. Vide 3 Co. 23 b, for there is no privity between the bargainer and lessee, but by reason of the privity of estate, which being gone, the lessee is not chargeable: but between the lessor and lessee he shall not discharge himself, by assigning over his term; for the privity is by reason of the contract and reservation, rather than by the occupation of the land; which by his own act he shall not discharge: but in this case the privity is destroyed.¹

ARDS v. WATKIN.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1598, 1599.

[Reported Cro. El. 637, 651.]

UPON demurrer the case was, lessee for thirty years of a parcel of land called Shortwood, lets it for twenty-eight years, rendering £34 rent per annum, and after deviseth £28 parcel of that rent to his three sons, severally to every of them a third part. One of them brings debt for his part of the rent: and, Whether this action lay or not? was the question.—It was argued by Rydgley for the plaintiff, and by Nichols for the defendant. GAWDY and FENNER held, that the action well lay; for there is no doubt but that rent may be devised, and be divided from the reversion; for it is not merely a thing in action, but quasi an inheritance, as Knowles' Case, Dyer, 5 b, is; and in 24 Hen. 8, Rysden's Case, Dyer, 4 b. If lessee grants over all his term in part of the land, yet it is chargeable in an action with the entire rent; for he by his act cannot apportion it. And by the grant of part the lessee is not compellable to attorn; for then he should be liable to two actions, or two distresses. But the devise is quasi an act of law, which shall inure without attornment, and shall make a sufficient privity, and so it may be well apportioned by this means. Wherefore, &c.—POPHAM and CLENCH, e contra. For as the lessee by his own act shall not divide the lessor's contract, nor apportion his action; so likewise the law favors the lessee, that the act of the lessor shall not charge him with divers actions, or double distresses, but upon his voluntary attornment; and the contract being entire cannot be apportioned. But POPHAM agreed, that the rent was well devisable, and by that means severable from the reversion. And although a thing in action cannot be transferred over, nor be devised; yet a contract, which ariseth from an interest in land, or which is an interest, may be well transferred over. Wherefore, &c.—Adjournatur.

The case was now moved again; and GAWDY and FENNER, and CLENCH agreeing with them, held that the devise was good, and well severable; for as to that objection, that a mischief may happen to the tenant, that he shall be subject to two actions and distresses, that is his own fault; for if he pays his rent, he shall avoid it: and the same mischief is, where he deviseth part of the reversion and rent, which is agreed on the other part to be well enough; and although a contract, or a thing in action, cannot be transferred nor divided, yet rent only may be. For it is a thing in possession; for he doth not grant the action, but the law gives it as incident to the rent. And Huntley's Case, 10 Eliz. Dyer, 326, is express, where a devise was of a reversion upon a lease for years, with the rent, to a man and his sister, and the heirs of their bodies ; the sister dies without issue ; the brother dies having issue ; the heir had the moiety of the rent. — POPHAM e contra. For the difference will be, when part of a reversion and rent is granted, that is good ; but when the rent is severed from the reversion, it is otherwise : for then it is but in nature of an annuity, which cannot be granted by parcels, but entirely ; but an annuity or rent only are grantable over, because they are things of continuance, and are not personal. And the reason of Huntley's Case is, because the rent is divided with the reversion. But notwithstanding, in regard three of them agreed, he consented that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff. — NOTE. That in the argument of this case, a case was cited in this court, Easter Term, 28 Eliz. Roll. 344, where a devise was of an entire reversion and rent, which was void for a third part ; because it was holden in capite, and debt was brought for two parts of the rent, and adjudged maintainable.

PINE v. LEICESTER.

COMMON PLEAS. 1613.

[Reported Hob. 37.]

HUGH PINE of Lincoln's Inn brought an action of debt in the county of —— against the Countess of Leicester, and declares that the Earl of Leicester, being seised in fee of the manor of Cleobury in the county of Salop, granted a rent charge of 100 pounds per annum, out of the manor unto one Foster and his wife for their lives, and then lays the death of the Lord of Leicester, and how the manor came to my lady, and then the death of Foster and his wife last. And now he, as executor to Foster and his wife, brought this action for arrearages of rent incurred in their life, while the manor was in the hands of the lady ; and this action being laid in a county, where it was supposed Pine was strong, it was moved to be laid in a more indifferent shire. Whereupon I said, that they were not well advised ; for this kind of action of debt was local, and must needs be laid where the land was, because the lady was not chargeable, but in respect of the possession ; whereupon Serjeant Harris, being not of counsel in this case, confessed it had been so adjudged in another case.

MARSH v. BRACE.

KING'S BENCH. 1614.

[Reported Cro. Jac. 334.]

DEBT upon a lease for years, demanding rent for two years and a half ending at the Annunciation last past.

The defendant pleaded, that before any rent due, he assigned his estate and interest to J. S. who paid the rent to the plaintiff for half a year due after the assignment, which he accepted from his hands.

The plaintiff thereupon demurred, because it is not alleged that he gave notice to him that he was assignee ; and also, because the contract continues betwixt the lessor and lessee during the term, notwithstanding this assignment.

But all the COURT resolved, that this assignment and acceptance of the rent from the hands of the assignee is notice in itself, and an agreement that he is his tenant, and then he may not afterwards resort back to the lessee : and the bar is good to a common intent ; and it shall not be intended but that he knew him to be his tenant, and accepted him as his tenant, unless the contrary be shown. Wherefore it was adjudged for the defendant, if other matters were not shown, &c.

TUTTER v. FRYER.

COMMON PLEAS. 1621.

[Reported Winch, 7.]

A RENT charge was granted for years with a nomine poenæ, and a clause of distress if that was not paid at the day ; and the rent was behind, and the years incurred ; and it was moved by Athowe, that though the years are incurred, that he may distrain for the nomine poenæ, but the COURT was of a contrary opinion, for that depends upon the rent, and the distress is gone as to both of them.

BORD v. CUDMORE.

KING'S BENCH. 1630.

[Reported Cro. Car. 183.]

ERROR of a judgment in debt in the Common Pleas. The error assigned was, because debt was brought in London by Cudmore as assignee of J. S. of a reversion of land in the county of Somerset, upon a lease for years made at London of the said lands, rendering the rent of twenty pounds yearly at the Temple Church, London, supposing the lease to be made at the parish of St. Mary Bow, in the ward of Cheap, London, for two years rent behind after the assignment of the reversion and attornment thereto ; whereas the action ought to have been brought in the county of Somerset, where the land lies, because the privity of contract failing by assignment of the reversion, he is only to maintain the action upon the privity in law for the interest of the reversion, and that ought to have been brought in the county of Somerset, where the land lies.

And this was agreed on the other side, unless the rent had been reserved payable at London, and in that case the action may be laid in London, for payment might have been there pleaded, and upon nil debet those in London might best take cognizance of the payment ; and therefore the judgment was well given, and not error.

But all the COURT conceived, forasmuch as the privity of the contract is gone by the assignment of the reversion and the attornment, and the rent follows the land, the plaintiff being only entitled thereunto by reason of his having the land, therefore the action ought to have been brought only in the county where the land lies, and not elsewhere : whereupon the judgment was reversed.

TURNER v. LEE.

KING'S BENCH. 1637.

[Reported Cro. Car. 471.]

REPLEVIN. The defendant avows as executor for the arrears of a rent charge granted to the testator for divers years, if he lived so long. The plaintiff takes issue, quod non concessit ; and found for the avowant.

And after verdict it was moved in arrest of judgment by Rolle, that this avowry was not good, because the rent granted for years being determined, the executor cannot, by the Statute of 32 Hen. 8, c. 37, distrain ; for that Statute extends to those who have rent for life or inheritance.

But Henden, Serjeant, said, that it is within the equity of the Statute, because the estate is determinable upon a life ; and if it were not good, yet being admitted, and the issue being upon the grant, and found, it is good enough.

But all the COURT resolved, that it is not within the Statute, for that provides remedy where the testator died seised of a rent to him and his heirs, or for life, and by his death there was not any remedy for the executor, as it appears by the preamble of that Statute ; but where he hath remedy by the common law by action of debt, as in this case the executor hath, he cannot distrain ; and although the issue is upon a non concessit, and it is found quod concessit, yet it being an ill avowry in substance, judgment shall be given against him.

THURSBY v. PLANT.

KING'S BENCH. 1669.

[Reported 1 Lev. 259.]

Covenant, and declares, That the Earl of Lincoln was seised of lands in Lincolnshire; and at London made a lease rendering rent, and that the tenant covenanted to pay the rent, and that afterwards the Earl granted the reversion to the plaintiff, and for non-payment of the rent the action was brought and laid in London. The defendant pleads a surrender, on which issue was, and a verdict for the plaintiff; and it was moved in arrest of judgment, That the action being brought by the assignee of the reversion ought to be laid in Lincolnshire, where the land lies (upon the privity of the estate), and not at London (upon the privity of contract), where the lease was made, and cited 1 Cro. Bord against Cudmore; debt for rent ought to be brought by the assignee in the county where the land lies, on the privity of estate: to which it was answered and resolved by the whole COURT, that debt is maintainable only upon the privity of estate, and goes with the reversion at common law, and that an assignee could maintain it before the Statute upon the privity of estate, and perception of the profits; but covenant did not go to the assignee before the Statute, because it lies only on the privity of contract; and though now by the Statute the covenant passes to the assignee, yet the nature thereof is not altered by the Statute, but it is assignable only as a contract, and therefore ought to be brought where the contract was made; and there is a great difference between debt for the rent which arises out of the profits of the land, and covenant which is a collateral thing, on which only damages are to be recovered. 2 Cro. Batchellor against Gage. Covenant lies against the lessee after assignment of the term, and acceptance of the rent from the assignee; but debt does not lie. 2 Cro. Brett against Cumberland and Hill, 15 Car. 2 B. R. Rot. 1258. That covenant lies on the privity of contract after assignment: whereupon judgment was given here for the plaintiff by the whole COURT, on which the defendant brought a writ of error. But as I heard the parties agreed.

Jones, for the plaintiff.

Sanders, for the defendant.

JOHNSON v. MAY.

COMMON PLEAS. 1683.

[Reported 3 Lev. 150.]

ASSUMPSIT, in consideration the defendant having surrendered a copy-hold estate, and a Boone adinde spectan' to the plaintiff, which the plaintiff should permit the defendant to enjoy from the 10th of Aug. Anno 33 Regis nunc till the first of May next following, that he promised to pay the plaintiff 50s. and shows, that he permitted, and the defendant had not paid the 50s. Also he declares upon a quantum meruit for the same. As to the quantum meruit, the defendant pleaded non assumpsit; and as to the other part demurs. The case was argued in Trinity Term, when PEMBERTON was Chief Justice, and now again this term, JONES being Ch. Justice. For the defendant it was urged that here is a term for years, and a rent reserved, for which debt lies and not this action; for which was cited 1 Roll. Abr. 7, divers cases to this purpose; Cro. Cha. 343, Brett and Read; and 1 Lev. 204, Chapman v. Southwicke; 1 Sid. 279, Norton v. Grobhamhow; 1 Roll. Abr. 9, and that Hale, Chief Justice, was always of this opinion. On the other side for the plaintiff were cited Cro. Eliz. 118, Hunt v. Sone; Cro. Ja. 598, Darnall v. Morgan; Cro. Cha. 114, Acton v. Simon; and Mansell's Case cited in Brett and Read's Case; Lit. Rep. 68, Wentworth v. Abraham; Cro. Eliz. 859, Clerk v. Pallady. And because this had been vexata quæstio, the Court took time to deliver their opinions; and accordingly it was so done by all the four Justices, who all agreed that the action lay. For 1. An express promise shall be intended, and not a bare promise in law arising upon the contract, which all agree will not lie; and if non assumpsit had been pleaded, there must have been proof of an express promise. 2. There being an express promise it is collateral, and quasi a special agreement to pay the rent, of the same effect as an express covenant in a lease by deed. And as to the objection, non constat what a boon is, and therefore neither debt, nor assumpsit, nor ejectment will lie upon a lease thereof, it was answered that be it what it will, it is belonging to the land, and that will support an action of debt, as where there is a lease of land and the stock of sheep. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

NEWCOMB v. HARVEY.

KING'S BENCH. 1690.

[Reported Carth. 161.]

THE plaintiff being lessee for years, assigned over his whole term, by indenture, to the defendant, rendering rent, and an action of debt was now brought for the rent in arrear.

The defendant pleaded non concessit et hoc, &c.

And upon a demurrer to this plea, it was objected in behalf of the defendant, that this action would not lie, because the sum reserved was not properly any rent, but a sum in gross, the plaintiff having assigned over his whole term, and by consequence had no reversion, and therefore the action ought to be for a sum in gross upon the contract (and not debt for rent), and that would not lie till the last day expires.

To which it was answered, and so resolved PER CURIAM, that this is a rent, though the plaintiff had no reversion; for if a rent is reserved upon a feoffment in fee, there is no reversion in the feoffor; but yet this is a rent, and recoverable by the name of a rent upon the contract, and so it shall be in the principal case.

Moreover, if the defendant had assigned over the term to another, an action of debt would lie for the plaintiff against the second assignee.

The plaintiff had judgment.

HOOL v. BELL.

COMMON PLEAS. 1697.

[Reported 1 Ld. Raym. 172.]

REPLEVIN for horses taken by the defendant in a place called The Stable in Yorkshire. The defendant made conusance as bailiff to Robert Knowles; and shows, that the Lord Stafford was seised of the manor of Tinsley in Yorkshire, with the appurtenances in fee, whereof the place where, &c., is parcel, and being seised, the sixth of March, 22 Car. 2, granted to Francis Knowles a rent-charge of £60 per annum payable yearly, with clauses of distress, in the manor of Tinsley, for life, &c., that Francis Knowles made his will, and made his brother Robert Knowles his executor, and died; that Robert Knowles proved the will; and that for arrears of this rent-charge, incurred in the life of the testator, the defendant, as bailiff to Robert Knowles, took these horses in the place where, &c. as a distress, as in parcel of the lands and tenements prædicto Roberto Knowles ut executori Francisci Knowles secundum formam statuti oneratorum et obligatorum. The plaintiff demurred. And Pemberton, Serjeant, for the plaintiff argued, that this avowry was ill; for the executor of tenant for life is not within the Statute of 32 Hen. 8, c. 37. For the Statute recites, that, forasmuch as executors had no remedy by the common law for arrears of rent; this Act gives them a double remedy, viz., distress or debt. But the executors of tenant for life had debt at common law for rent incurred in the life of the testator. And therefore Co. Lit. 162 a, says, that tenant for life must be intended tenant pur auer vie, so long as cestui que vie lives in this Act. So Cro. Car. 339, Turner v. Lee, the judges laid down a rule, that where the executor, &c., had remedy by debt at common law, this Statute did not give him distress. Therefore in the principal case the executor having remedy by debt by the common law for the arrearages in the time of the testator, who was tenant for life, he has no remedy by distress given by this Act. Sed non allocatur. For PER CURIAM, this Act of 32 Hen. 8 is a remedial law, and shall extend to the executors of all tenants for life; and the law has been taken so always since the Statute, and has never been questioned. And the words of the Statute are general enough to extend to all. And in Cro. Eliz. 332, Lambert v. Austin, this seems to be admitted, and therefore the rule in Cro. Car. 339, so generally taken, cannot be law.¹

BREWSTER v. KIDGILL.

KING'S BENCH. 1698.

[Reported 12 Mod. 166.]

CASE, upon a wager concerning a rent-charge of forty pounds a year, whereof the plaintiff, as son and heir of Ellen Brewster, is seised in fee by virtue of a grant to her and her heirs, issuing out of a manor, of which Kidgill is terre-tenant; that the defendant affirmed, it was lawful for him to deduct four shillings in the pound for Parliamentary taxes, which the plaintiff denied, &c. And upon issue joined, a special verdict was found, that on the twenty-sixth of November, 1649, Robert Langford was seised in fee of the manor of B., and that in consideration of eight hundred pounds paid by Ellen Brewster, he granted to her and her heirs a rent-charge in fee of forty pounds per annum, with a covenant in the deed for further assurance; and on the back of the deed this indorsement was: "Memorandum, It is the true intent and meaning of these presents, that the grantee and her heirs shall forever hereafter be paid the said rent-charge, without any deduction or abatement of taxes, charge, or payment out of, for or concerning the said rent, or the said manor or lands charged herewith." And afterwards in 1652, for further assurance, granted and confirmed the rent aforesaid to Ellen Brewster, and her heirs, with a nomine poenae; and Robert Langford covenants, that at the sealing thereof he was seised in fee, and that it was free from all incumbrances, and that he had power to charge the same; and that the said yearly rent of forty pounds per annum, freed from all taxes, shall be forever hereafter duly paid at the time and place for the payment thereof, &c.

The question was, Whether the grantor of the rent, and his heirs, shall be obliged to pay the said rent, without any deduction for, or by reason of any tax imposed by Parliament futurely on the said rent?

HOLT, Chief Justice, delivered the opinion of the court, that the covenant doth oblige the grantor and his heirs without deduction. The case is of very great consequence, and has been a question a long time, whether such covenants extend to all future parliamentary taxes whatsoever; which I think would be very hard, and I can by no means agree thereto in this large sense; but as the nature of this case is, we are all of opinion, that it extends to all those sorts of taxes that shall be given by future Acts of Parliament.¹

There is another matter in which I have not consulted my Brothers, and that is, whether the terre-tenant in this case is obliged by the covenant: this is a covenant by the grantor of the rent, who was seised in fee of the manor. Now who this terre-tenant is does not appear, whether he be heir or assignee; for if he be assignee, I do not think him chargeable in law; for this covenant does not run with the land. Hard. 87. I make no doubt, but that the assignee of the rent shall have covenant against the grantor, because it is a covenant annexed to the thing granted; but that covenant should run with the rent against the assignee of the land, I see no reason. If this rent was granted so to be paid, it would be another matter; but here is only a covenant, and no words amounting to a grant; and therefore there can be no relief in this case against the terre-tenant, but in equity; and therefore for this point I do not see how the plaintiff can have his judgment; for if this covenant should charge the land, it would be higher than a warrantia chartæ, which only affects the land from the judgment therein given.

But the other three judges thought that this covenant might charge the land, being in nature of a grant, or at least a declaration going along with the grant, showing in what manner the thing granted should be taken, and reckoned the indorsement as part of the deed.

And so judgment was given for the plaintiff.²

² s. c. sub nom. Brewster v. Kitchen, 1 Ld. Raym. 317, where the discussion on the running of the covenant is thus given: "But he [HOLT, C. J.] then made another question, which was not observed at the bar, nor by any of the other judges, viz., whether the terre-tenant is liable to an action upon this covenant; and he was of opinion, that he was not. For (by him) if tenant in fee grants a rent-charge out of lands, and covenants to pay it without deduction, for himself and his heirs, you may maintain covenant against the grantor and his heirs, but not against the assignee; for it is a mere personal covenant, and cannot run with the land. Warranty, which is a real

ST. 8 ANNE, c. 14, § 4. And whereas no action of debt lies against a tenant for life or lives, for any arrears of rent, during the continuance of such estate for life or lives, be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the said first day of May, it shall and may be lawful for any person or persons, having any rent in arrear or due upon any lease or demise for life or lives, to bring an action or actions of debt for such arrears of rent, in the same manner as they might have done, in case such rent were due and reserved upon a lease for years.

§ 6. And whereas tenants pur autre vie and lessees for years, or at will, frequently hold over the tenements to them demised, after the determination of such leases: and whereas after the determination of such, or any other leases, no distress can by law be made for any arrears of rent that grew due on such respective leases before the determination thereof; it is hereby further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the said first day of May, one thousand seven hundred and ten, it shall and may be lawful, for any person or persons, having any rent in arrear or due upon any lease for life or lives, or for years, or at will, ended or determined, to distrain for such arrears, after the determination of the said respective leases, in the same manner as they might have done, if such lease or leases had not been ended or determined.

§ 7. Provided, That such distress be made within the space of six calendar months after the determination of such lease, and during the continuance of such landlord's title or interest, and during the possession of the tenant from whom such arrears became due.

ST. 4 GEO. II. c. 28, § 5. And whereas the remedy for recovering rents seck, rents of assize, and chief rents, are tedious and difficult, be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the twenty-fourth day of June one thousand seven hundred and thirty-one, all and every person or persons, bodies politic and corporate, shall and covenant, will never bind the land of the warrantor, until judgment had in warrantia chartarum; much less will this personal covenant bind the land. And for a case in point, he cited Hardr. 87, pl. 5, Coke and the Earl of Arundel. In replevin, if the defendant had avowed for arrears of this rent, and the plaintiff had pleaded in bar, riens arrere; the avowant could not have replied this covenant against the terre-tenant; but if the avowry had been upon the grantor, or his heirs, the avowant might have replied this covenant against them, to avoid circuity of action. Therefore, since it does not appear that the defendant is bound by this covenant (for non constat whether he is terre-tenant or not, or what he is) for this reason he was of opinion, that judgment ought to be given for the defendant. But the other three judges seemed to be in a surprise, and not in truth to comprehend this objection, and therefore they persisted in their former opinion, talking of agreements, intent of the party, binding of the land, and I know not what. They gave judgment for the plaintiff, against the opinion of Holt, Chief Justice, for the reason aforesaid."

may have the like remedy by distress, and by impounding and selling the same, in cases of rent seck, rents of assize, and chief rents, which have been duly answered or paid for the space of three years, within the space of twenty years before the first day of this present session of Parliament, or shall be hereafter created, as in case of rent reserved upon lease ; any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

FALHERS v. CORBRET.

KING'S BENCH. 1734.

[Reported 2 Barnard. 386.]

IN a writ of error in a judgment in the Common Pleas, in an indebitatus assumpsit, it appeared that the plaintiff below had declared, that whereas he was possessed of a house in Newgate Market, in consideration that he would permit the defendant, being a butcher, to have the use of the passage in it for hanging up his meat, he would pay him at the rate of 30*s.* per year for the same ; the plaintiff averred that he did let the defendant have the use of this passage for a year and half, by reason of which there was the sum of £2 5*s.* due to him. Issue was joined on non assumpsit, and a verdict found for the plaintiff. Mr. Strange submitted it, that debt for rent ought to have been brought, and that an indebitatus assumpsit would not lie. Mr. Parker, on the other side, said that he conceived that this was not a rent, by reason that no part of the house was let, but merely the use of the passage agreed for ; he conceived, therefore, that debt for rent would not lie. He observed further, that this agreement being to pay after the rate of such a sum, was another reason why such action could not be maintained. And for this purpose he cited 4 Mod. 78. But though such action would have lain, yet upon an express promise an indebitatus assumpsit will lie likewise ; and for this purpose cited Hardress, 366. The COURT was of the same opinion ; accordingly affirmed the judgment.

ST. 11 GEO. II. c. 19, § 14. And to obviate some difficulties that many times occur in the recovery of rents, where the demises are not by deed, be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That from and after the said twenty-fourth day of June, it shall and may be lawful to and for the landlord or landlords, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, held or occupied by the defendant or defendants, in an action on the case, for the use and occupation of what was so held or enjoyed ; and if in evidence on the trial of such action any parol demise or any agreement (not being by deed) whereon a certain rent was reserved shall appear, the plaintiff in such action shall not therefore be nonsuited, but may make use thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages to be recovered.

— v. COOPER.

COMMON PLEAS. 1768.

[Reported 2 Wils. 375.]

IN replevin, the defendant avows under a distress for rent due from the plaintiff to him upon an assignment of a lease of a term for years to the plaintiff, in which assignment there is no clause of distress; the single question is, Whether this is such a rent for which a distress lies, there being no reversion in the defendant. It was said for the defendant, that although rent be incident to the reversion, yet it is not an inseparable incident, and therefore it may be severed from the reversion; and although there is no clause of distress in the assignment of the term, yet the rent reserved thereupon may be considered as a rent-seck, and distrained for by the Statute 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, § 5, and that it appears clearly to be the intent of the parties that the plaintiff should pay rent to the defendant; this case was so clear that the court gave judgment for the plaintiff without hearing his counsel.

CURIA. There are two ways of creating a rent: the owner of the lands either grants a rent out of it, or grants the lands and reserves a rent; there is no such thing as a rent-seck, rent-service, or rent-charge issuing out of a term for years. Bro. Dette, pl. 39, cites 43 Ed. 3, 4, per Fynchden, Ch. Justice C. B. If a man hath a term for years, and grants all his estate of the term rendering certain rent, he cannot distrain if the rent be in arrear; this case is law and in point: therefore if the avowant will recover what is owing to him from the plaintiff, he must bring his action upon the contract.

Judgment for the plaintiff per totam curiam.

STROUD v. ROGERS.

COMMON PLEAS. 1792.

[Reported 6 T. R. 63, note.]

IN that case the third count was precisely similar to the present: ¹ the defendant demurred to it, and assigned for causes that it did not set forth any demise of the premises, nor for what term they were demised, nor what rent was payable, nor for what length of time the defendant held and occupied the premises, nor when the sum of £5 thereby supposed to be due became due, nor for what space of time; but after argument the Court of Common Pleas gave judgment for the plaintiff on that account.

STEVENSON v. LAMBARD.

KING'S BENCH. 1802.

[Reported 2 East, 575.]

THE plaintiff declared in covenant against the defendant as assignee of one Charles Dixon, upon an indenture made on the 1st of May, 1798, whereby the plaintiff, for the considerations therein mentioned, demised to Dixon and his assigns two messuages and a warehouse therein described, to hold from the 25th of March then last past, for the term of thirty-one years, at the yearly rent of £105 by equal quarterly payments, viz. &c. The declaration then set forth the covenant by Dixon for himself and his assigns, &c. to pay to the plaintiff the said yearly rent at the times and in the manner above mentioned; and that Dixon entered and was possessed, &c.; and that afterwards, on the 28th of March, 1801, all the right, title, &c., and term of years then to come and unexpired in the said demised premises, vested by assignment in the defendant, who by virtue thereof entered, and became and was possessed for the residue of the said demised term then unexpired; and then assigned a breach for non-payment of one year's rent, which became due on the 20th September, 1801, since the said assignment. Pleas, 1. Non est factum; 2. That all the interest and title, &c., of Dixon did not vest by assignment in the defendant; 3. No rent in arrear: on all which issues were joined. The defendant then pleaded, 4thly, That as to so much of the said supposed breach of covenant above assigned, as relates to the non-payment of the sum of £52 10s., parcel of the said £105, of the rent supposed to become due on the 29th September, 1801, for one half year of the said term, actio non, &c., because one John Walker, before and at the time of making the said indenture, &c., and from thence until, upon, and after the said 29th September, 1801, was seised in fee of one undivided moiety of the said demised premises, and brought an ejectment in K. B. in Hil. 41 Geo. 3, against the present plaintiff for the recovery of the same; in which ejectment the demise was laid before any of the said £52 10s. parcel of the rent aforesaid became due, &c., and such proceedings were afterwards had, &c., that Walker in Easter Term, 41 Geo. 3, recovered judgment against the present plaintiff in the said ejectment, for the said undivided moiety of the demised premises, and afterwards, viz. on 21st of April, 1801, sued out a writ of habere facias possessionem upon the said judgment, under which the sheriff, before any part of the said £52 10s. parcel, &c., became due, delivered possession, &c., to Walker, who thereupon entered into the said undivided moiety, &c., and ejected the defendant, &c. There was a similar plea, stating generally the paramount title of Walker, and his ejection of the defendant from one moiety of the demised premises. To these there was a general demurrer and joinder.

Marryat, in support of the demurrer.

Lawes, contra.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court: —

This is an action of covenant by the lessor against the assignee of the lessee for non-payment of a year's rent. Plea as to rent for half a year claimed, eviction during that time of a moiety of the premises by title paramount. To this there is a demurrer: and the question is, Whether the rent be apportionable in this action of covenant by the lessor against the assignee of the lessee? It clearly is so upon an action of debt, or upon an avowry in replevin, by all the authorities: and the only question is, Whether it be so in covenant? In covenant, as between lessor and lessee, where the action is personal, and upon a mere privity of contract, and on that account transitory as any other personal contract is, the rent is not apportionable. Bro. Contract. pl. 16; Moor, 116; Finch's Law, lib. 2, c. 18. But an action of covenant against an assignee differs essentially from a mere covenant personal: it is in such case properly a real contract in respect of the land; it is local in its nature, and not transitory. In Barker v. Damer, Carth. 183, it is said to be "adjudged in several of our books¹ that an action of debt for rent against an assignee of a term is local, and will lie nowhere but in that county where the lands are. And the same reason holds in covenant against the assignee; for this action as well as that of debt is maintainable only upon the privity of estate, and the defendant is merely charged thereby, because it is a covenant which runs with the land; for if it had been a collateral covenant, the assignee would not have been bound by it; and that proves that the action is local only with respect to the land." The objection as to the locality of this species of action of covenant, as against an assignee, was only gotten over in the case of the Mayor of London against Cole, 7 Term Rep. 587, by the help of the Stat. 16 and 17 Car. 2, c. 8, as being a mistrial cured by verdict. So covenant will lie against the assignee of part of an estate for not repairing his part; "for it is dividable, and follows the land," with which the defendant as assignee is chargeable by the common law, or by the Stat. 32 H. 8, c. 37. Congham v. King, Cro. Car. 222. Upon the whole, therefore, we think that the condition of this assignee is in point of law different from that of a lessee chargeable on the privity of contract; and being chargeable on the privity of estate, and in respect of the land, his rent is upon principle apportionable as the rent of a lessee is, or as his rent would be in an action of debt or replevin.

Judgment for the plaintiff; with leave to the defendant to amend his plea, and to plead it only to one moiety of the rent.²

NEWMAN v. ANDERTON.

COMMON PLEAS. 1806.

[Reported 2 B. & P. N. S. 224.]

REPLEVIN. The plaintiff in his declaration complained that the defendant took certain goods and chattels of the plaintiff in a bedroom and shop, and unjustly detained them, against sureties and pledges. The defendant avowed the taking in the bedroom, because "the plaintiff, for the space of sixteen weeks and more next before, and ending, &c., enjoyed the said bedroom in which, &c., together with a certain other room and apartment, also being in and part and parcel of the said dwelling-house in the declaration mentioned, with certain furniture and effects with which the said bedroom in which, &c., and the said other room and apartment, with the appurtenants, were furnished under a demise thereof theretofore made by the defendant to the plaintiff, at the weekly rent of 13*s.* of lawful money of Great Britain payable weekly on the Thursday in every week, and during all that time held the same of the defendant by virtue of the said demise, as his tenant thereof." And because £12 were in arrear, avowed the taking and prayed a return.

The plaintiff took judgment for so much as related to the shop; and as to the avowry, pleaded that he did not hold the said bedroom together with the said other room and apartment in the said declaration mentioned, and certain furniture and effects with which the said other room and apartment were furnished under a demise thereof theretofore made by the defendant to the plaintiff, at the weekly rent of 13*s.* payable on the Thursday in every week in manner and form, &c.

On this plea issue was joined.

At the trial before Sir James Mansfield, C. J., at the Westminster Sittings after last Hilary Term, a verdict was found for the defendant.

A rule having been obtained, calling upon the defendant to show cause why this verdict should not be set aside, upon the ground that the defendant could not be entitled to distrain for the rent of ready furnished lodgings, Vaughan, Serjt., now showed cause.

Best, Serjt., contra.

SIR JAMES MANSFIELD, C. J. Cases like this must have very often occurred, and yet it does not appear that the right of distress has ever before been called in question. The difficulty of the case consists in this, that in London and other towns it scarcely ever happens that any house is let without some goods being let with it, and yet one rent is always reserved. In the case of a brewhouse it is common to let the utensils with it, and yet I never heard it doubted that the landlord might distrain for rent. Whether the goods be worth five shillings or five hundred pounds, the case must be the same. We will inquire into the matter, and give our opinion in a few days. Cur. adv. vult.

On this day SIR JAMES MANSFIELD, C. J., said: Upon this question no authorities have been cited either on the one side or the other. But it must occur constantly that the value of demised premises is increased by the goods upon the premises, and yet the rent reserved still continues to issue out of the house or land, and not out of the goods; for rent cannot issue out of goods. In Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 17, it is resolved that if a man lease sheep or other stock of cattle, or any other personal goods, for any time, and the lessee covenants for him and his assigns at the end of the time to deliver the like cattle or goods as good as the things letten were, or such price for them, and the lessee assigns the sheep over, this covenant shall not bind the assignee; for it is but a personal contract; and it is added "the same law, if a man demises a house and land for years with a stock or sum of money, rendering rent, and the lessee covenants for him, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to deliver the stock or sum of money at the end of the term, yet the assignee shall not be charged with this covenant, for although the rent reserved was increased in respect of the stock or sum, yet the rent did not issue out of the stock or sum, but out of the land only." The material words in that resolution are those which declare that where land is leased with stock upon it, the rent still continues to issue out of the land only. In that case, therefore, as well as any other, the person to whom the rent is due may distrain for the same; and consequently the landlord here, who was not paid his rent, has pursued his legal remedy of distress, though the rent issued out of ready furnished lodgings.

Rule discharged.

WEBB v. JIGGS.

KING'S BENCH. 1815.

[Reported 4 M. & S. 113.]

DEBT. The plaintiff declares that one J. Webb was seised in fee of certain lands at Iver, in Buckinghamshire, and being so seised, by his will, duly executed according to the Statute, gave and bequeathed to the plaintiff an annuity or yearly rent of £10 to be issuing and payable yearly and every year during the life of the defendant Martha out of the said lands, and also gave and bequeathed the said lands to the said Martha and her assigns for her life, she paying thereout in manner aforesaid to the plaintiff the said annuity or yearly rent, and afterwards the said J. Webb died, and his will was duly proved, whereupon the said Martha became seised as of freehold for her life of the said lands, and the plaintiff became entitled to the said annuity or yearly rent, and afterwards the said Martha married the other defendant Jiggs, whereby they became seised of the lands as of freehold in right of the said Martha for her life, and so the plaintiff avers that while they were so seised, and were the pernors of the profits thereof, £75 of the said annuity or yearly rent, for seven years and a half, ending on the 25th of March 1814, became due from the defendants as the pernors, and still is in arrear and unpaid, whereby actio accrevit, &c.

Demurrer. Joinder.

Richardson, in support of the demurrer.

Gifford, contra.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., on this day delivered the judgment of the court. After stating the pleadings, His Lordship said: This demurrer was argued at our sittings before Hilary Term in Serjeants' Inn Hall, when it was contended on the part of the defendants, in support of the demurrer, that at the common law an action of debt will not lie for a rent or annuity in fee, in tail, or for life, while it continues a freehold interest. And this position was not denied on the other side, but it was contended that it applied only to legal common law estates, and not to devises by will; and what appears to have been said by Holt, C. J., in Ewer v. Jones, reported in 2 Ld. Ray. 937, Salk. 415, and 6 Mod. 26, 27, was relied on; viz., "That a devisee may maintain an action at common law against the terre-tenant for a legacy devised payable out of land. For where a Statute, as the Statute of Wills, 32 & 34 H. 8, gives a man a right, he shall have an action to recover it of consequence; because his right is created by Act of Parliament." But what Lord Holt is there stated to have said does not reach this objection; it is said only generally of a legacy or sum of money, not of an annuity or rent for life, in tail, or in fee; and it is to be observed, that in the case of a legacy payable out of land, unless the legatee had his remedy by action of debt, founded on the Statute, he would be wholly without remedy in the courts of common law; whereas the annuitant would not be remediless, but would have an assise to recover his annuity. And no authority has been stated where the general rule of law, which excludes the action of debt as a remedy for rent or annuity in fee, in tail, or for life, has been confined to annuities or rents created by common law conveyances, as contradistinguished from annuity or rents created by devise, nor does there seem any reason for making the distinction. It was next contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that this case was within the provisions of the 4th section of Stat. 8 Ann. c. 14, "for the better security of rents, and to prevent frauds by tenants;" but the language both of the title of the Act, and of the enacting clause, shows that the Legislature contemplated only the case of rent due from a tenant, holding by lease or demise under his landlord,—which is not this case; this being the case of two distinct and independent devises, of the land to one person for life, and to another of an annuity issuing out of the same for the life of the devisee of the land, created by the will of one and the same devisor, and without any such original privyty between the devisee of the land charged with the annuity, and the devisee of the annuity charged thereupon, as subsists between a lessor and his lessee. We are therefore of opinion that the action of debt is not maintainable on the ground of this Stat. of Ann. c. 14, any more than it is upon the other ground already considered.

MILNES v. BRANCH.

KING'S BENCH. 1816.

[Reported 5 M. & S. 411.]

Covenant. The plaintiffs declare, that, by indenture of the 20th of June, 1805, between one Joshua Barnsley, of the first part, one J. Robinson, a trustee for J. Barnsley, of the second, the defendant of the third, and one J. Jackson, a trustee for the defendant, of the fourth (reciting indentures of lease and release, whereby a plot of land was conveyed to one P. Hope, and the said J. Barnsley, their heirs and assigns, as to one undivided moiety, to the use of such person and persons, and for such estate, &c., as P. Hope should, by deed in writing, duly executed, &c., limit or appoint, and, in default of such appointment, after the decease of P. Hope, to the use of the right heirs of P. Hope forever; and as to the other undivided moiety, to the like use, with respect to J. Barnsley; subject to the yearly rent of £42, payable to the relessors; and reciting also other indentures of lease and release, whereby the said P. Hope limited and appointed to J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, and the heirs and assigns of J. Barnsley, his undivided moiety in the plot of land, and also in four messuages, then lately built thereon, in trust, as to the estate of J. Robinson, for J. Barnsley, his heirs and assigns forever, subject to the rent covenants, &c., reserved and contained in the former release; and further reciting that the defendant had contracted with J. Barnsley for the purchase of the plot of land and messuages, subject to the yearly chief rent of £86 3s. 3d.), the said J. Barnsley, by virtue of the said power, limited and appointed one undivided moiety in the plot of land and messuages, to remain to the defendant and J. Jackson, their heirs and assigns forever; and for the further assuring the same, and to convey and assure the other undivided moiety, and in consideration of the yearly rent and covenants, &c., on the part of the defendant, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, to be paid and performed, and also of 5s. paid by the defendant to J. Robinson, J. Barnsley, and J. Robinson (according to their several estates) the said J. Barnsley did grant, bargain, sell, alien, enfeoff, and confirm to the defendant and J. Jackson, and the heirs and assigns of the defendant, all that plot of land, &c., and six messuages built thereon, &c., and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, rents, issues, and profits thereof, and all the estate, right, title, &c., of them the said J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, habendum to the defendant and J. Jackson, their heirs and assigns, to the use, intent, and purpose, that J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, their heirs and assigns, might have, receive, and take, to the use and behoof of J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, and the heirs and assigns of J. Barnsley (nevertheless, as to the estate of J. Robinson, in trust only for J. Barnsley, his heirs and assigns forever), the clear yearly rent of £86 3s. 3d. to be issuing out of the premises, by equal half-yearly payments on the 24th of June and 25th of December, with power of distress and entry for recovery thereof, to J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, and subject to the above rent, and powers for recovery thereof, to the use of the defendant and J. Jackson, and the heirs and assigns of the defendant, forever (nevertheless as to the estate of J. Jackson, in trust only for the defendant, and his heirs and assigns), and the defendant did for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant with J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, and the heirs and assigns of J. Barnsley, that he, his heirs or assigns, would pay to J. Barnsley and J. Robinson, and the heirs and assigns of J. Barnsley forever, the said yearly rent, and also that he, his heirs and assigns, would, within one year next ensuing the date of the indenture, erect, build, and finish, in a good and substantial manner, and forever support and maintain, upon the plot of land, one or more messuages or other buildings, of good brick or stone, or both, set in good lime mortar, and covered with slates, which at the time of finishing, and at all times thereafter, should, together with the messuages conveyed, be of the clear yearly value of double the yearly rent thereby reserved, at the least, over and above all reprises, and, in case of fire, tempest, destruction, or decay, should rebuild the same, so that at all times, forever, the buildings then erected and to be erected, should continue of the clear yearly value of double the yearly rent thereby reserved at the least, for the better security of the yearly rent thereby reserved; and J. Barnsley and J. Robinson constituted their attorney, to deliver seisin to the defendant and J. Jackson, according to the indenture, which was accordingly done And J. Barnsley and J. Robinson being so seized of the rent aforesaid, within one year next ensuing the date of the said indenture, viz., on the 24th of June, 1805, by indenture of that date, demised to the plaintiffs, their executors, administrators, and assigns, the said rent of £86 3s. 3d., and all their interest in the same for 1000 years. And the plaintiffs assign for breach a year's rent in arrear on the 24th of June, 1814, and also that the defendant or his assigns, did not, within one year next ensuing the date of the first-mentioned indenture, nor at any other time, erect, build, or finish, in a good and substantial manner, or otherwise howsoever, upon the plot of land or any part thereof, one or more messuages, &c., which at the time of finishing was or were, or at any times thereafter hath or have been with the other messuages conveyed of the clear yearly value of double the yearly rent at the least, &c.

The defendant prayed oyer of the indenture, and demurred to the declaration. Joinder.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C. J. I am inclined to think that the language of Lord Holt, as to the right of the assignee of the rent to have covenant, was extra judicial; and putting aside that dictum, I do not find any authority to warrant the position that this covenant runs with the rent. I do not see how the analogy, as it regards covenants which run with the land, is to be applied, unless it be shown that this is land; it might as well be applied to any covenant respecting a matter merely personal. The Stat. H. 8 recites that, at common law, such only as are parties or privies to any covenant can take advantage of it: here is neither privity of contract nor privity of estate; the rent is reserved out of the original estate.

BAYLEY, J. I am entirely of the same opinion. The argument for the plaintiffs loses sight of the conveyance by which this rent is created. It is incorrect to state it as a rent charge granted by the owner of the fee; it being a conveyance in fee by Barnsley and Robinson to the defendant to certain uses, one of which is that they shall receive the rent; so that the rent arises out of the estate of the feoffors. It is therefore not a grant by the owner of the fee, and the covenant is a covenant in gross.

REPLEVIN for taking the plaintiff's goods and cattle. Avowries: First, for a year's rent due to the defendant from the plaintiff at Lady-day, 1816. Second, for £42 10s., the amount of half a year's rent due on that day. Plea in bar to both, non tenuit; and issue thereon. At the trial before Wood, B., at the last Essex Assizes, a verdict was taken for the defendant on the second avowry for £42 10s., the value of the goods distrained, subject to the opinion of the court upon a case of which the following is the substance.

The defendant being in the occupation of two farms, of one as lessee

¹ The benefit of a covenant to pay a fee-farm rent has often been allowed to run in the United States. Scott v. Lunt, 7 Pet. 596 (1833); *Streaper v. to Lord Petre, and of the other as lessee to the Rev. M. Boskell, on the 20th September, 1814, an agreement in writing, dated on that day and stamped with a £2 stamp, was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which "the plaintiff was to have the two farms during the leases of the same, the plaintiff to remain tenant to the defendant during the leases." The agreement then stated the rents, rates, and taxes, and provided, that should the property tax be taken off, it should be taken off from the plaintiff, he agreeing to pay to the defendant £200 for the fallows, dung, and improvements. The defendant was to pay all rates, rents, and taxes up to Michaelmas, 1814, and the plaintiff agreed to farm according to the tenor of the leases, and for every default, to pay according to the forfeiture of the leases. The rent was to be paid half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas. The plaintiff was to take possession on or before Michaelmas-day then next, or to forfeit £50; and if the defendant refused to comply, he was to forfeit £50. At the leaving of the farms, the plaintiff was to be paid for the fallows and dung. The plaintiff paid the £200 mentioned in the agreement: possession of the farms was given to him by the defendant at Michaelmas, 1814; and one year's rent afterwards growing due, had been paid by the plaintiff to the defendant. It was contended at the trial, that the agreement operated as an absolute assignment by the defendant to the plaintiff of all the defendant's interest in the farms; and that, therefore, the defendant, having no reversion left in him, could not legally distrain.

The question for the opinion of the court was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to recover. If the court should be of that opinion, then a verdict was to be entered for him, with nominal damages; if not, the verdict for the defendant was to stand.

DALLAS, C. J. I am of opinion that the instrument in question amounts to an absolute assignment of the defendant's interest in the two farms; and that, therefore, this distress cannot be supported. In the case in Wilson [—— v. Cooper, 2 Wills. 375], the defendant avowed under a distress for rent due from the plaintiff to him upon an assignment of a lease of a term for years to the plaintiff; and the question was, Whether that was a rent for which a distress would lie? Though there was a rent reserved upon that instrument, the court held that the assignor, having granted all his estate in the term, could not distrain; and in giving their judgment, referred to Brooke's Abridgment, tit. Dette, pl. 39, where the Year Book, 43 Edw. 3, 4, is cited for the following proposition: "If a man hath a term for years, and grants all his estate of the term, rendering certain rent, he cannot distrain if the rent be in arrear." I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

FAREWELL v. DICKENSON.

KING'S BENCH. 1827.

[Reported 6 B. & C. 251.]

THIS was an action of debt for rent, tried before Bayley, J., at the last sittings in this term for Westminster. The declaration alleged a demise of "a messuage land and premises with the appurtenances." The plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the amount of rent due, put in evidence an agreement dated the 20th of September, 1825, between J. M. Farewell, the late husband of the plaintiff, and the defendant, which described the property demised as being "a messuage or tenement, stable, and outbuildings, with the cottage, garden land, and appurtenances belonging thereto, together with the furniture, utensils, and implements." The learned judge considering the agreement as an entire contract for the rent of the house, &c., with the furniture, &c., held the variance fatal, and nonsuited the plaintiff, but gave him leave to apply to the court to set aside the nonsuit, and enter a verdict for £120. A rule nisi for that purpose was obtained by Rowe, who relied on Spencer's Case, 5 Co. 17; Emott v. Cole, Cro. Eliz. 255; Newman v. Anderton, 2 New Rep. 224; Walsh v. Pemberton, Selw. N. P. 6th edit. 616, to show that no portion of the rent issued out of the furniture, but that the whole issued out of the land, and therefore the demise was well laid as a demise of the house, &c.

Chitty showed cause on the last day of the term.

Rowe was stopped by the court.

PER CURIAM. It appeared that the furniture was one of the things demised. But in point of law the rent issued out of the real property, and not out of the furniture. It was sufficient, therefore, for the plaintiff to allege and prove a demise of the real property out of which the rent claimed issued, and the rule for entering a verdict for the plaintiff must be made absolute.

Trinity Term, 1827, the jury found a verdict of Not guilty on the first count; and on the second a special verdict, stating, as to the grievances in that count mentioned, that, at the time of making the distress thereinafter mentioned, W. R. Jones and G. Jones had become bankrupts, and the plaintiffs had been chosen and appointed their assignees; that the plaintiffs, as such assignees, before and at the time of the making of the distress thereinafter mentioned, were lawfully possessed, as of their property as such assignees, of the barges thereinafter mentioned to have been taken and distrained by the defendants; and that by an indenture dated the 9th of March, 1816, and made before W. R. Jones and G. Jones, or either of them, became bankrupts, between one T. Brown of the one part, and the bankrupts of the other part, Brown demised, leased, &c. to the bankrupts all that wharf, ground, and premises next the River Thames, and also all that capital brick built warehouse of three floors erected and built thereon, abutting north on the River Thames, east on premises in the occupation of T. Flockton, south on the street cartway and common highway leading from Pickle Herring Stairs to Horsley Down Stairs, and west on the Five Footway or Little Wharf for landing goods, and certain other premises in the indenture more particularly mentioned, together with free liberty for them the bankrupts, their executors, &c. during that demise, to land and load goods, &c. in common with the rest of the tenants of Brown, at the said Five Footway or Little Wharf fronting the River Thames, together with all cellars, ways, paths, passages, lights, easements, profits, commodities, and appurtenances whatsoever to the said wharf, ground, warehouse, and premises, or any of them, belonging or appertaining; habendum, the same premises, with their and every of their appurtenances, unto the bankrupts, their executors, &c., from the 23d March then past for the term of thirteen years, at the yearly rent of £555, by equal quarterly payments, payable to Brown, and after his death to the person who should be entitled to the freehold of the premises. The special verdict then stated, that by the indenture the exclusive use of the land of the River Thames opposite to and in front of the said wharf ground between high and low water mark, as well when covered with water as dry, for the accommodation of the tenants of the wharf, was demised as appurtenant to the said wharf ground and premises, but that the land itself between high and low water mark was not demised; that on the 12th of November, 1826, the sum of £565 of the rent was in arrear and unpaid; and that on that day, and at the time of making the distress thereinafter mentioned, the two barges, the property of the plaintiffs as such assignees, were attached by ropes head and stern to the wharf ground aforesaid, and were lying and being on that part of the River Thames opposite to and in front of the said wharf ground and premises, and between high and low water mark, the exclusive use of which was demised as aforesaid; that the defendants on the said 12th November as the bailiffs of the person who was then entitled to the freehold of the wharf and premises, and was duly authorized by law to distrain for the arrears, seized and took the two barges as a distress for the arrears of rent, and shortly afterwards sold and disposed thereof to satisfy such arrears. This case was argued on a former day in this term by Richards, for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD TENTERDEN, C. J. It is difficult to understand what is really meant by that part of the finding of the jury, “that the exclusive use of the land of the River Thames opposite to and in front of the said wharf ground between high and low water mark, as well when covered with water as dry, for the accommodation of the tenants of the wharf, was demised as appurtenant to the said wharf ground and premises; but that the land itself between high and low water mark was not demised.” And it is difficult to understand how the exclusive use could be demised and the land not; but in either case the distress cannot be supported. If the meaning of this finding be that the land itself was demised as appurtenant to the wharf, that would be a finding that one piece of land was appurtenant to another, which, in point of law, cannot be. If, on the other hand, the meaning be that the use and enjoyment of this land passed as appurtenant, that would be a mere privilege or easement, and the rent would not issue out of that; the landlord, therefore, could not distrain there for rent issuing out of the land in respect of which the easement or privilege had its existence. That is understood to be the law of the land, and an Act of Parliament was passed to remedy this inconvenience as far as rights of common were concerned. Taking the finding of the jury in either sense, the defendant had no right to distrain on the premises in question, and the judgment of the court must be for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD TENTERDEN, C. J., in the course of this [Trinity] term delivered the judgment of the court.

The question raised upon this record is this, Whether the executor of a person who was seised in fee of land and demised it for a term of years, reserving a rent, can distrain for the arrears of such rent, accrued in the lifetime of the testator? At common law it is clear that he could not so distrain, and his power to do so, if he has any, must be derived from the provisions of the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 37, § 1.

The preamble of that Statute is material because the enacting part of the first section has no words distinctly describing the persons whose executors are empowered to distrain; but refers to the preamble by the word "such."

The preamble and first section of the Act are as follows: "Forasmuch as by the order of the common law, the executors, or administrators of tenants in fee simple, tenants in fee tail, and tenants for term of lives, of rents services, rent charges, rents seats, and fee farms, have no remedy to recover such arrearages of the said rents or fee farms, as were due unto the testators in their lives, nor yet the heirs of such testator, nor any person having the reversion of his estate after his decease, may distrain, or have any lawful action to levy any such arrearages of rents or fee farms, due unto him in his life as is aforesaid; by reason whereof, the tenants of the demesne of such lands, tenements or hereditaments, out of the which such rents were due and payable, who of right ought to pay their rents and farms at such days and terms as they were due, do many times keep, hold, and retain such arrearages in their own hands, so that the executors and administrators of the persons to whom such rents or fee farms were due, cannot have or come by the said arrearages of the same, towards the payment of the debts and performance of the will of the said testators: for remedy whereof be it enacted, &c., that the executors and administrators of every such person or persons, unto whom any such rent or fee farm is or shall be due, and not paid at the time of his death, shall and may have an action of debt for all such arrearages, against the tenant or tenants that ought to have paid the said rent or fee farms so being behind in the life of their testator, or against the executors and administrators of the said tenants ; and also furthermore, it shall be lawful to every such executor and administrator of any such person or persons unto whom such rent or fee farm is or shall be due, and not paid at the time of his death as is aforesaid, to distrain for the arrearages of all such rents and fee farms, upon the lands, tenements, and other hereditaments, which were charged with the payment of such rents or fee farms, and chargeable to the distress of the said testator, so long as the said lands, tenements, or hereditaments continue, remain and be in the seisin, or possession of the said tenant in demesne who ought immediately to have paid the said rent or fee farm so being behind, to the said testator in his life, or in the seisin or possession of any other person or persons claiming the said lands, tenements, and hereditaments, only by and from the same tenant by purchase, gift, or descent, in like manner and form, as their said testator might or ought to have done in his lifetime, and the said executors and administrators shall, for the same distress, lawfully make avowry upon their matter aforesaid."

Looking at these words independently of decided cases, it should seem that the Legislature meant to provide remedy for those only who were previously without any remedy, by action or otherwise ; and the Statute provides a double remedy, namely, by action of debt, and by distress. What persons had a remedy by action of debt, and the reasons why they had it, will be found laid down in Bacon's Abridgment, tit. Rent (K) 6, referring to Gilbert on Rents, 93, Co. Lit. 162, and Ognel's Case, 4 Co. 49. The passage is as follows : " The remedy by action of debt extended only to rents reserved on leases for years, but did not affect freehold rents ; the reason whereof is this : Actions of debt were given for rent reserved upon leases for years, for that such terms being of short continuance, it was necessary that the lessor should follow the chattels of his tenant, wherever they were, or wheresoever he should remove them : but when the rents were reserved on the durable estate of the feud, the feud itself, and the chattels thereupon were pledged for the rent ; and if the land were unstocked for two years, the lord had his cessavit per biennium to recover the land itself ; and hence it is that if the durable estate of the feud determined, as if the lessee for life died, the lessor might have an action of debt for the arrears : because the land was no longer a security for the rent, and therefore the chattels of the tenant were liable to satisfy the arrears in an action of debt wherever the tenant removed them. So it was in the case of a rent charge ; for if a man were seized of it in fee, and it was arrear, he could have no action of debt for the arrears ; and if he died, his heir could not have any real action for the arrears, for that is proper for the recovery of the possession, which was still in him, nor could he have a personal action, because, besides the former reason, it were absurd to give a real action for the rent running on in his own time, and a personal action for the arrears in the lifetime of the ancestor at the same time ; for it could not be supposed to be both a real and personal thing ; for this reason also, the executor could have no action for the arrears, (who is entitled to the personal estate), and also because he could not entitle himself by virtue of the contract that created the rent, since the heir was constituted representative by the contract, and by consequence that representation excluded all other persons from taking any benefit as representatives that did not come under that character."

The view of the Statute which has been above suggested, was acted upon in the case of Turner v. Lee, Cro. Car. 471, in which it was held, that where a rent charge had been granted for years, if the grantee should so long live, the executor of the grantee could not distrain under the Statute, because he had a remedy by action of debt at the common law. If this construction had always been adhered to, the present case would be clear ; but a different view of the Statute seems to have been taken in a previous case of Lambert v. Austin, Cro. Eliz. 332, in which it was assumed that the executor of the grantee for his own life of a rent charge could distrain under this Statute, although it is plain that such executor had a remedy by action of debt at common law, the estate for life in the rent having been determined. And in Hool v. Bell, 1 Ld. Raym. 172, the point was expressly so held. It was there argued that the expression "tenants for life" in the Statute must be taken to mean tenants pour autre vie, whose executors were certainly without remedy during the life of cestui que vie; but the court said : "The Statute is a remedial law, and shall extend to the executors of all tenants for life, and the law has been taken so always since the Statute, and has never been questioned, and the words of the Statute are general enough to extend to all. And in Lambert v. Austin this seems to be admitted, and therefore the rule in Turner v. Lee, so generally taken, cannot be law." The case of Hool v. Bell appears to have been always treated as good law, and it must be considered that the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 37, is not confined to persons who had no remedy at all previously.

The question then is whether the present case be within the words or meaning of the Statute. The words are "executors or administrators of tenants in fee simple, tenants in fee tail, and tenants for term of lives, of rents services, rent charges, rents secks and fee farms." Nothing is said as to tenants for term of years. If therefore the testator in the present case was tenant for term of years, his executor is not within the words of the Statute. If the testator was tenant of the rent at all, it seems difficult to say that he was tenant for a longer time or for a greater estate, than the rent could have continuance ; it seems absurd to say that a man is seised in fee of a rent, the duration of which is limited to a few years, or to a particular life. In the case of a rent charge granted for years, it is impossible to say that the grantee is within the words "tenant in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of lives," and why should a lessor who reserves a rent to himself and his heirs, by a lease for years, be thought to be within the same words ? The reasons which are pressed in argument are that the rent is incident to the reversion, that the lessor is seised in fee of the reversion, and must therefore be seised in fee of the rent which is incident to it; and that he cannot be tenant for years of the rent, for if he were, it would go to his executors on his death, whereas, by law, it is incident to the reversion and passes with it. This argument may be very forcible to show that the lessor who has demised for years, is not tenant for years of the rent; but it does not follow that he is tenant in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of lives, of the same rent. It is true that in the present case the testator was seised in fee of the land before he made a lease for years; after making that lease, he continued seised in fee of the land, seised of the immediate freehold, but, in respect to the right of possession, having a reversionary estate expectant on the determination of the lease for years: he still continues tenant of the freehold in every legal sense, and is not tenant of the rent at all in the legal sense of the word “tenant,” as used in the Statute in question.

Where indeed the rent is reserved on a lease for life, or a gift in tail, the lessor or donor parts with the immediate freehold in the land; he has only a reversionary estate expectant on the determination of the immediate estate of freehold which is in another; and during that estate of freehold, he is strictly tenant of the rent in a legal sense, though it be a rent service and be incident to the reversion: his remedy for the rent is by writ of assize, and not by a personal action of debt. If the lease be for life, he is tenant for life of the rent; if it be a gift in tail, he is seised of the rent during the continuance of the estate tail. It is true that since the Statute Quia Emptores, no one can reserve a rent service on a conveyance in fee; but the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 37, may allude by the words “tenants in fee simple of a rent service,” to rent services created before the Statute Quia Emptores, of which there are still many which are called quit rents. Or the words of the Statute may be taken reddendo singula singulis, and applying the words “tenants in fee simple, tenants in fee tail,” to rent charges and fee farms.

For these reasons we are of opinion that a person seised in fee of land and demising it for years, reserving a rent, though he be not tenant for years of the rent, is still not within the words of this Statute “tenant in fee simple, fee tail, or for term of lives,” of the rent, and is indeed not tenant at all of the rent.

It remains to be considered whether he is within the meaning of the Statute.

It is matter of history that at the time when this Statute passed, leases for years were but little regarded. It is clear also that an action of debt for rent on such leases was maintainable. Such leases therefore do not appear to have been within the mischief intended to be remedied by the Statute, nor probably within the contemplation of the framers of the Act, and Lord Coke in his observations on this Statute, Co. Lit. 162 b, makes no allusion to leases for years, and evidently considers the Statute as applicable only to freehold rents.

Some authorities upon this subject remain to be noticed. The first is the case of Turner v. Lee, already cited, which arose on a lease for years determinable on a life, and the Statute was held not to apply. The point does not appear to have been raised in any reported case from that time till the case of Renvin v. Watkin, Mich. T. 5 Geo. 2, B. R., which is to be found in the first vol. of Selwyn's Nisi Prius, p. 678 of the 8th edition. It is as follows: "A. seised in fee let to the plaintiff for twenty-one years, and afterwards died seised of the reversion: the defendant administered, and distrained for half a year's rent due to the intestate, for which he avowed. On demurrer to the avowry it was objected that there was not any privity of estate between the administrator and the lessor, and therefore the avowry, which is in the realty, could not be maintained by him. And it was observed that this was a case out of the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 37, for that only gives a remedy by way of distress for rents of freehold, and of this opinion the court seemed. 1 Inst. 162 a, 4 Rep. 50, Cro. Car. 471, Latch. 211 (Wade v. Marsh), were cited." There is a note as follows:—

"But in Powell v. Killick, Middlesex Sittings, M. 25 G. 2, where in trespass for entering plaintiff's house and carrying away his goods, upon not guilty, defendant gave in evidence that he was executor of A. who was plaintiff's landlord of the house and that he distrained for rent due to his testator at the time of his death; it was objected for plaintiff that executor was empowered to distrain only by virtue of the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 37, and that the Statute extended to the executors and administrators of those persons only to whom rent services, rent charges, rents seek, or fee farms were due, and that the present case did not fall within either of those descriptions. But Lee, C. J., overruled the objection, and said this was a rent service, the testator being in his lifetime seised in fee, and the plaintiff holding under a tenure which implied fealty." It is to be observed that this was a nisi prius decision, and the point argued seems to have been only whether the rent was a rent service, which it clearly was. The point now raised does not seem to have been discussed, and it should also be observed, that Mr. Justice Buller in his Nisi Prius, p. 57, cites the case and apparently disapproves of it. His words are: "Lord Coke says, if a man make a lease for life, or a gift in tail, reserving a rent, this is a rent service within the Statute: from whence it may be inferred that he thought a rent reserved upon a lease for years was not within it: and I apprehend that it is not, for the landlord is not tenant in fee, fee tail, or for life, of such a rent; and it is the executors of such tenants only who are mentioned in the Act. However, in trespass, where it appeared that the defendant had distrained the plaintiff's goods for rent due to his testator upon a lease for years, Lord C. J. Lee held it to be within the Statute, and the defendant obtained a verdict."

The next case was Meriton v. Gilbee, 8 Taunt. 159, where the point was attempted to be raised; but the court said, that it did not appear whether the tenancy was for term of years or for life. Then came the case of Martin v. Burton, 1 Brod. & B. 279, which was decided on the ground that it did not appear that the testator was not seised in fee, in tail, or for life. Afterwards the case of Staniford v. Sinclair, 2 Bing. 193, was decided on the same ground, though the court in giving judgment examine into some of the cases, and into the point now raised, which was not necessary to the determination of the case.

Upon the whole, therefore, and for the reasons stated, we are of opinion that this case is neither within the words nor the meaning of the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 37, § 1, and that the judgment of the court must be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

GIBSON v. KIRK.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1841.

[Reported 1 Q. B. 850.]

DEBT for use and occupation of a messuage &c. by the sufferance and permission of plaintiff; and on an account stated. The particulars stated the action to be brought for the sum of £26 for one year's rent due to the plaintiff on 11th December, 1838, for the use and occupation of a dwelling house &c.

Plea. As to all but £13, parcel &c., nunquam indebitatus; as to the £13, a tender. The plaintiff took the £13 out of court, and joined issue on the plea of nunquam indebitatus.

On the trial, before Alderson, B., at the Spring Assizes for Newcastle, 1839, it appeared that the premises had been let by the plaintiff to the defendant by a written demise, not under seal, reserving a rent of £26 per annum payable half-yearly. The defendant's counsel contended that the plaintiff must be nonsuited, for that debt for use and occupation did not lie where there was an actual demise. The learned judge overruled the objection; and the plaintiff had a verdict. In Easter Term, 1839, R. Matthews obtained a rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. In last Hilary Term¹

Alexander and W. H. Watson, showed cause.

R. Matthews, contra. Cur. adv. vult.

LORD DENMAN, C. J., delivered the judgment of the court.

This was an action of debt for use and occupation. Plea, Nunquam indebitatus. On the trial it appeared that the defendant held under a lease, not under seal, dated Oct. 8, 1837, whereby the plaintiff agreed to let, and the defendant to take, the premises at £26 per annum: the tenancy to commence on the 11th November then next. The learned judge was asked to nonsuit, but refused, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff.

We are now asked to set this verdict aside, upon the ground that the action is misconceived; that, although a count in debt for rent would be good under the circumstances, yet that a count in debt for use and occupation is not good, as soon as it appears that there is a demise at a certain rent.

The objection is one of a strictly technical nature; but the defendant is not on that account less at liberty to take it: and, if it be found tenable, the plaintiff is in no way aggrieved; for he might have framed his count without any difficulty, so as to be free from all objection.

The action of debt for use and occupation (as well as that of indebitatus assumpsit for the same) is quite of modern introduction. The learned counsel for the defendant conceded, upon the argument, that such action would lie at common law where there is no demise at a certain rent; and probably, upon principle, it would lie; but no instance of it is to be found in any of the old entries. The first notice of such an action is in Stroud v. Rogers, 6 T. R. 63, note (a), Hil. 32 G. 3, cited and relied on in Wilkins v. Wingate, 6 T. R. 62, and again in King v. Fraser, 6 East. 348. Since those cases, the action has become very common, and has certainly been resorted to wherever the demise has not been by deed, without regard to the distinction now taken between mere occupation by permission for reasonable remuneration, and demises for a certain time at a certain rent. Actions of indebitatus assumpsit for use and occupation have also been constantly brought, whether there has been a certain term and a certain rent or not; but that action is protected, by Stat. 11 G. 2, c. 19, § 14, from being defeated by proof of a certain rent under a parol demise or agreement not under seal, whereas the action of debt is not mentioned in that Statute, but only an action on the case; and, in Egler v. Marsden, 5 Taunt. 25, Gibbs, J., expressly states that the action of debt for use and occupation is not under Stat. 11 G. 2, c. 19, § 14.

Before that Statute, actions of assumpsit for the occupation of land had frequently been held maintainable, notwithstanding the objection that rent sounded in the realty, and could not be the subject of a mere personal action, the courts apparently treating the contracts between the parties as agreements and not leases, and so not concerning the realty, wherever they held the actions maintainable, and holding the action not maintainable wherever they could not shut their eyes to an actual lease, as in the case of Brett v. Read, 1 (W.) Jones, 329; s. c. Cro. Car. 343, which was indebitatus assumpsit for rent arrear, and was held bad on that account. The principal cases are collected in the note to Beverley v. The Lincoln Gas Light and Coke Company, 6 A. & E. 839, note (a). The court in that case observed that the action for use and occupation is established by Stat. 11 G. 2, c. 19, § 14; which expression must not be taken as meaning that it was introduced by that Act, but only that it was established even in cases where there was an express demise at a certain rent if not under seal. Yet no instances of indebitatus assumpsit for use and occupation will be found before that Act, nor any founded upon a quantum meruit: they are all for some fixed sum.

So debt for rent was at all times maintainable, whether the demise was by deed, or by writing not under seal, or by word of mouth, both which latter are of course included in the expression "parol demise," so frequently found in our books. The entries are numerous in Rastall, and Clift, and Thompson, and in Saunders, and other books. But they one and all contain the word "demised," and show the rent in certain: though, where the demise was by deed, no profert is made, and frequently no statement of the existence of a deed, it being considered as mere inducement to the action. No instance is to be found among them of an action of debt for a reasonable remuneration for the occupation of land.

The truth is, that the occupation of land by a person bound to pay some remuneration for it, without the amount or time of payment being fixed, was, and is now, of rare occurrence. When it does occur, the implied contract is raised by law from the fact that land belonging to the plaintiff has been occupied by the defendant by the plaintiff's permission; the obligation is coextensive with, and measured by, the enjoyment: as soon as the occupation ceases, the implied contract ceases; and, as no express time is limited, the remuneration must necessarily accrue from day to day. This state of things is prima facie supposed to exist in all actions for use and occupation, at least so far as regards time of payment; therefore it is held that in debt for use and occupation it is not necessary to state the particulars of the holding. Wilkins v. Wingate, 6 T. R. 62; King v. Fraser, 6 East, 348; Davies v. Edwards, 3 M. & S. 380. And, in such action for the use and occupation of a house which has been burned down, the plaintiff may recover up to the time of the fire, as was held by this court in Easter Term last, in the case of Packer v. Gibbins, 1 Q. B. 421; in which case the defendant could only have prevented the plaintiff from so recovering by setting up that he was tenant for a certain time; and then he would have been liable for rent after the fire until that time had elapsed. The action of debt for use and occupation was wanted only where the occupation was for no certain time at no fixed rent; for in all other cases the action of debt for rent was the known and appropriate remedy. Yet it does not appear to have been introduced to meet such cases; for in Stroud v. Rogers (note b to Wilkins v. Wingate) and Wilkins v. Wingate, there was a demise for a certain time at a certain rent. It is true that both those cases arose on demurrer to the count for use and occupation, in which no such demise was stated; but in both of them there were counts for rent: and it is pretty clear that, if the defendants had pleaded nil debet, the same point would have arisen as is raised in the present case. King v. Fraser, and Davies v. Edwards, were also on demurrer. But upon the argument of the former it was assumed throughout that there was a demise which might have been stated with particularity; and the court in their judgment do not put the case at all upon the ground that possibly there was no demise for a time certain at a certain rent, and so the count might be free from all the objections urged. On the contrary, Lord Ellenborough says : " As to the inconveniences to the tenant, which are pointed out by the causes of demurrer alleged, they may be gotten rid of, by calling for particulars of the plaintiff's demand : or if another action for rent be brought, he may by proper averments in his plea show that the plaintiff had before recovered the same rent in an action for use and occupation, of the same premises." What is this but saying, in direct terms, that debt for use and occupation will lie, where debt for rent will also lie ?

Egler v. Marsden, which was eight years later than King v. Fraser, was after verdict on nil debet; and objection was taken that debt for use and occupation in that general form would not lie; and the objection was overruled; but it was not suggested that there was no demise and, therefore, an action for use and occupation was the only remedy, which would have been a ready answer, if the facts had been so.

Since that, the very recent case of Wilkinson v. Hall, 3 New Ca. 508, has been determined ; in which, after a trial where a written agreement amounting to a lease not under seal was given in evidence, the court directed the verdict to be entered on the third count, which was in debt for use and occupation in the general form. It is true that the objection now raised was not taken : the case therefore goes no further than showing the prevailing notion that debt for use and occupation will lie, notwithstanding the existence of a written lease not under seal.

But it is asked, What is the difference between the actions of debt for use and occupation, and of indebitatus assumpsit for the same ; and if the latter, but for the operation of the Stat. 11 G. 2, c. 19, § 14, would be defeated by proof of a written demise, although not under seal, why should not the former, to which the Statute does not apply, be defeated by similar proof ?

One answer may be, that the action of assumpsit was always looked upon, not only as a personal action, which the action of debt equally is, but as one wholly inapplicable to realty or matters arising out of it, as rent is : whereas the action of debt was always applicable to rent and some other matters connected with realty. The action of debt was always treated as of a higher nature than assumpsit ; it will lie on records and specialties, where assumpsit will not : and, though it be true that, wherever indebitatus assumpsit will lie, debt will lie (with the exception of the present action, if it be one), the converse is not true. It may therefore be proper to apply different rules to an action of debt, even upon simple contract, from those which are applicable to indebitatus assumpsit.

But another answer is, that, although the Statute 11 G. 2, c. 19, § 14, recites that some difficulties many times occur in the recovery of rents where the demises are not by deed, and makes provision only for an action on the case, protecting the plaintiff from being nonsuited in such action if "any parol demise or any agreement (not being by deed) whereon a certain rent was reserved shall appear," it by no means follows that, previous to that Statute, a nonsuit must have taken place under similar circumstances in an action of debt for use and occupation. No instances of such actions before the Statute are recorded; but, as soon as they were brought after the Statute, they received the construction which has already been noticed, and which they might have received, if brought before the Statute, without violating any rules of law.

The objection is, as was at first stated, purely a technical and formal one; and, when the courts once established that debt for use and occupation would lie, no sound reason can be assigned why it should not be applied to all cases of demises not under seal, as it undoubtedly has been for a long series of years.

For these reasons we are of opinion that the direction of the learned judge in this case was correct, and that the rule for a new trial must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

WILLIAMS v. HAYWARD.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1859.

[Reported 1 E. & E. 1040.]

THE declaration set out a deed, dated 10th November, 1846, by which John Williams demised, leased, and to farm let to the defendant, his executors, administrators, and assigns, in consideration of the rents, royalties, and payments thereafter reserved, and of the covenants thereafter contained, certain mines, veins, and seams of ironstone and iron ore, coal, and other mines and minerals, with power to the defendant, his executors, &c., to enter into the said lands and premises, and work the said mines, &c., and to have, take, and carry away all such ironstone, iron ore, &c., together with full liberty, license, and authority to the defendant, his executors, &c., from time to time, during the continuance of the demise, to use, jointly with the said J. Williams, his heirs, executors, administrators, lessees, tenants, and assigns, the railroad then laid down and extending from the said works to the port of Port Madoc, subject to certain covenants, provisos, and conditions thereafter contained: to have, hold, exercise, and enjoy the said mines, &c., and the said powers, privileges, and liberties, and all other the premises thereby granted or demised, unto the defendant, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of twenty-three years; yielding and paying unto the said J. Williams, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, a certain royalty for every ton of ironstone or iron ore; or if, in any year, the said royalties should not amount to £100, then a sum of £100 in lieu thereof; and also a certain royalty on the coal and other minerals: the defendant covenanting to work the mines, &c., properly; and a power being reserved to J. Williams, his executors, &c., to distrain for any of the said rents and reservations if the defendant should make default in payment of them. The deed also contained a covenant by the defendant to repair all roads, ways, railways, and particularly the railway aforesaid; provided that if any other persons during the said term should use and occupy the said railway for any other purpose, the defendant should not be liable to bear, jointly with such other persons, more than a fair proportion of the expense of repair. There was a further proviso that it should be lawful for the defendant to divert the said railway at his own expense. The declaration then stated the execution of the deed and a counterpart by J. Williams and the defendant respectively; and that, afterwards, J. Williams, by deed, dated 4th November, 1846, assigned and set over to the plaintiff the said rents, reservations, and royalties, and all other the estate, right, title, interest, benefit, claim, and demand of him, J. Williams, of, in, or in respect of the said demised premises; and the benefit of the said covenants in the said lease contained. And although the said several royalties did not, nor did they in any one year, amount to the sum of £100 as aforesaid, and although all things existed and duly happened before suit to entitle the plaintiff to payment of the said reserved rent of £100 per annum, accruing due after the said assignment, in lieu of the said royalties, according to the terms of the said first-mentioned deed, and on 25th March, 1857, there became and was due and payable to the plaintiff, under and by virtue of the said deeds, in respect thereof, the sum of £1000, for and in respect of the aforesaid rent of £100 for ten years of the said term respectively expiring after the said assignment, and before suit; yet no part thereof had been paid, contrary to the said covenant of the defendant.

Third plea. That the said J. Williams, at the time of making the said alleged demise, was possessed only of a term and interest in the said demised premises less than that purporting to be granted by the said demise, to wit, of a term therein, theretofore granted to him by one Martin Williams, of thirty years, to be computed from 4th March, 1839; and at no time after the making of the said alleged demise had any reversion expectant on the determination of the said term to the plaintiff.

Demurrer. Joinder in demurrer.

Fifth plea. That, after the said alleged assignment to the plaintiff in the declaration mentioned, and before any part of the said rent in the declaration mentioned became due and payable, the plaintiff forcibly entered into and upon part of the said demised premises, and then ejected and expelled the defendant from the possession of part of the said demised premises, that is to say, from the said railroad, and the use thereof, and the said liberty, license, and authority to use the same so respectively demised as aforesaid, and kept and continued the defendant so ejected and expelled from thence hitherto.

Demurrer. Joinder in demurrer.

Second replication to the third plea. That, admitting that the said

J. Williams, at the time of the making of the alleged demise, was possessed only of the term and interest therein mentioned, yet that the rent claimed in and by the declaration in this action accrued due to the plaintiff before the expiration of that term, which is still unexpired: and that the plaintiff, before and at the time of the accrual of any part of the rent claimed in this action, had, under and by virtue of the alleged assignment, become assignee of the said rent and every part thereof, and entitled to sue as aforesaid for the same.

Demurrer. Joinder in demurrer.

Raymond, for the plaintiff.

T. Jones, for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD CAMPBELL, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court.¹

In this case the declaration stated that one John Williams had, by deed, demised certain mines and minerals, with power of getting the same, and with a right to use a certain railway, to the defendant for twenty-three years, at a rent; that the defendant sealed and executed the lease; that the said John Williams had subsequently, by deed, assigned and set over to the plaintiff the rents, reservations, and royalties, and all other the estate, right, title, interest, benefit, claim, and demand of the said John Williams of, in, or in respect of the said demised premises; and that ten years' rent was in arrear to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded (inter alia) two pleas, on which questions arose which were argued before us.

One of these pleas, the third on the record, stated that the lessor's interest was a leasehold interest only, and for a shorter period than the time granted by the lease; and the fifth plea on the record stated an expulsion from the use of the railway.

The first and principal question was that raised by the first of these pleas. It appeared from the pleadings that the original lessor, being possessed of a chattel interest (a term of years), demised for a longer term, reserving a rent, and then assigned his interest and the rent. It was contended by Mr. Jones, on behalf of the defendant, that no rent was created; and that, if there was, it was not such as was assignable, so as to give the assignee a right to bring an action of debt for the rent against the lessee.

We think that the authorities are conclusive on both questions.

The case of Newcomb v. Harvey, Carth. 161, shows clearly that by such an instrument as the present a rent is created. The question in that case was, whether a lessee for years, who had assigned over the whole of his term to the defendant, rendering rent, could declare for the rent in an action of debt on the demise, or should have brought covenant for the sum as a sum in gross; and it was expressly "resolved per curiam that this is a rent, though the plaintiff had no reversion; for if a rent is reserved upon a feoffment in fee, there is no reversion in the feoffor." Newcomb v. Harvey is referred to by Lord Chief Baron

Comyns in Com. Dig. Dett (C), as an authority for the position that, "if lessee for years assigns all his term to B., rendering rent, debt lies by the lessee for the rent, as such, for it is not a sum in gross; though no reversion remains in the lessee." These authorities are fully recognized by the Court of Common Pleas in Baker v. Gostling, 1 New Ca. 19, 27; and Lord Chief Justice Tindal assigns as a reason for holding that, where the whole of a term is assigned, a sum of money reserved periodically to the assignor is to be treated as rent, that, "if it were held otherwise, great injustice might be occasioned, as the tenant, if evicted, would have no answer to an action on his covenant for the payment of the sum" reserved.

The next point which arose upon the argument was whether the action could be maintained by the plaintiff, who was assignee of the party to whom the rent was reserved. Robins v. Cox, 1 Lev. 22, and Allen v. Bryan, 5 B. & C. 512, were relied on by Mr. Raymond as authorities directly in favor of the plaintiff on this question. But it was contended on the other side that Allen v. Bryan was not argued, and that counsel for the defendant in that case gave it up upon the notion that it was governed by Robins v. Cox, whereas it was distinguishable therefrom, as in the case in Allen v. Bryan there was no attornment, and the judgment in Robins v. Cox proceeded on the ground that, the tenant having attorned, the privity of contract was transferred: and it was further contended that Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, § 9, did not apply, but was limited to assignments of reversions. We are of opinion that the defendant is not well founded in his objection to the authority of Robins v. Cox and Allen v. Bryan as applicable to the present case. In the former case the plaintiff declared that A. was seised of land, and leased it to the defendant for years, rendering £30 yearly rent, and afterwards granted the rent to the plaintiff, to which grant the defendant attorned: and for £30, a year's rent, the action was brought. After verdict for the plaintiff it was moved that the action lay not, for default of privity; for it was contended that the privity of estate remained with the lessor, and no privity of contract passed to the grantees of the rent. But to this it was answered that the attornment of the tenant made a privity, for his attornment is a consent to the grant. Upon argument the judges were divided in opinion, and the case was adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber. The reporter adds: "But after this, the third part of Sir George Croke's Reports were published, and there, folio 637, 651, Ard and Watkins's Case, it was adjudged, that the devisee of a rent reserved on a lease for years, as here, might maintain debt for the rent. Whereupon the parties before any argument in the Exchequer Chamber agreed." In our opinion Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, § 9, renders attornment unnecessary in such a case as the present; and, by force of that Statute, the same privity is created between the plaintiff, as grantees of the rent, and the defendant, the tenant of the land out of which the rent issues, as if the defendant had actually attorned to the plaintiff. Attornment is stated by Lord Coke to be "an agreement of the tenant to the grant of the seignory or of a rent, or of the donee in tail, or tenant for life or years, to a grant of a reversion or remainder made to another." Co. Lit. 309 a. Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, § 9, appears to have been intended to meet both parts of this definition. It enacts that "all grants or conveyances" "of any manors or rents, or of reversion or remainder of any messuages or lands, shall be good and effectual, to all intents and purposes, without any attornment of the tenants," "as if their attornment had been had and made." The Statute, therefore, in terms, creates the same privity, between the grantee of the rent and the tenant of the lands out of which it issues, as an attornment would have done if the tenant had actually attorned to the grantee. The defendant's counsel in Allen v. Bryan was, therefore, well justified in supposing that case to be governed by Robins v. Cox. To these it may be added that in Marle v. Flake, 3 Salk. 118, it is stated to have been adjudged "that where the lessor assigned his rent without the reversion, the assignee (if the tenant agrees) may maintain an action of debt for the rent, because the privity of contract is transferred." There is also the case of Clarke v. Coughlan, 3 Irish Law Rep. 427, which is an authority on all fours with the present case. That was a case of an assignment of the whole interest at a rent: and the very learned persons who decided that case, after a full investigation of the authorities, came to the conclusion that the action was maintainable under circumstances which were not attempted to be distinguished from those in the case now before us. We are satisfied, therefore, upon the authorities, that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment on the question arising on the third plea.

We think also that no defence is shown on the fifth plea. The rent issued out of the things demised, that is, the mines and minerals; and could not have issued out of the easement to use the railway in common with others on the land, not parcel of the demise; and we think that the preventing the defendant from using, or obstructing him in the enjoyment of, the easement is not such an eviction from the thing demised or any part of it, as will amount to an answer to the claim of rent. Our judgment on both the demurrsers is for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

THOMAS v. SYLVESTER.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1873.

[Reported L. R. 8 Q. B. 368.]

DECLARATION: That the plaintiff, being seised in fee of certain messuages and hereditaments situate, &c., by indenture bearing date the 15th of January, 1870, made by and between the plaintiff of the one part, and one David Cotter of the other part, granted and conveyed the messuages and hereditaments (subject to and charged and chargeable with the payment forever to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, of a certain yearly rent-charge of £2 8s. 6d. payable out of each of the said messuages and hereditaments on the 24th of June and the 21st of December in each year), unto and to the use of Cotter, his heirs and assigns; and Cotter in the indenture covenanted for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, that he, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, would pay unto the plaintiff, his heirs or assigns, the yearly rent-charge on the days aforesaid. That afterwards all the estate of Cotter in the premises became vested in the defendants; and while the estate was so vested in the defendants, to wit, on the 24th of June, 1871, the rent-charge accrued due and became and was payable from the defendants to the plaintiff; yet the defendants did not pay the same, and the same remains wholly due and unpaid.

Demurrer and joinder in demurrer.

H. T. Cole, Q. C., in support of the demurrer.

C. Bowen, contra.

BLACKBURN, J. I think the only question which it is necessary to decide is, whether the plaintiff, the grantee of the rent-charge, is entitled to compel the terre-tenants to pay it by a personal action. I may remark that the indenture may be regarded as containing a grant in fee of a rent-charge under the Statute of Uses, and that a rent having been duly created, debt will lie. Under the old law the remedy to recover a freehold rent was by real action, and as long as the freehold continued, debt could not be maintained; but when the freehold estate came to an end, then, inasmuch as a real action could no longer be brought, debt would lie at the suit of the person entitled to the rent-charge. Thus, where a rent was granted for life the only remedy was by real action, but when the life had dropped, debt was maintainable. Leving's Case, cited in a note to Fitzherbert, Natura Brevium, p. 121, is a distinct authority that where a rent-charge for life had been created, issuing out of a manor which was afterwards conveyed to an assignee, and the rent-charge became in arrear, an action of debt would lie against the assignee of the manor upon the expiration of the life estate, when, according to the old law, a real action could no longer be brought to recover the arrears. Leving's Case is important, as showing that the action of debt is maintainable against an assignee, and it is precisely in point in the present case, where the plaintiff seeks to recover the rent-charge against the assignees of the land. If the present case had occurred before the passing of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, the rent-charge being in fee, the plaintiff would have been driven to a real action to recover it. But the Legislature having by that Act abolished real actions, we have to consider the question, whether we must not apply the principle of the common law to the present case. The principle was, that, when the estate for life had terminated, an action of debt for arrearages would lie. It seems to me to follow, upon a similar principle, that when the real action has been abolished, the grantee of a rent-charge in fee may maintain an action of debt against the terre-tenant; and this was the opinion of Pollock, C. B., in Varley v. Leigh, 2 Ex. 446; 17 L. J. Ex. 289, though that opinion was not necessary to the decision, and Rolfe, B., did not concur. The authorities brought before us, however, were not cited. I think that, real actions being now abolished, debt will lie; and that the authorities show that it will lie against the assignee of the land as well as against the original grantor.

This is not a question of a covenant running with the land, but whether, where there is a rent in fee issuing out of land, the owner of the rent may not sue the terre-tenant in debt, although the terre-tenant was not the original grantor. It seems to me that, according to authority, reason, and justice, he may maintain the action.

QUAIN, J. I am of the same opinion. The distinction in the old books appears to be this: If a rent were granted for years, debt would lie, but if it were granted in tail, or for life, debt would not lie for arrears until after the freehold had determined; but when the freehold had determined, then debt would lie, and the reason assigned was that the freehold remedy must be pursued, because the law did not suffer a real injury to be remedied by an action merely personal. Putting aside the remedy by real action, would debt have lain against an assignee who is in possession of the same estate in the land as the grantor of the rent? That appears to be decided in Sir W. Loringe's Case, cited in Ognel's Case, 4 Co. Rep. at f. 49 b, thus: "A man was grantee for life of a rent out of a moiety of a manor, of which moiety a man was seised in right of his wife; the rent was in arrear when the grantee died, and the executors brought an action of debt against the husband only for the arrears. It was resolved: 1. That by the death of the grantee for life, the grant for life was turned into nature of debt. 2. Forasmuch as the husband took the profits of the land charged with the rent when it was arrear, he only, without his wife, should be charged with an action of debt." The action was against the person who is called the pernor of the land, provided he had the same estate as the grantor. I apprehend that the reason is that the land is the debtor, as is stated by Wilson, J., in Mills v. Avriol, 1 H. Bl. at p. 445. If a man comes into possession of land as tenant in fee, he is the pernor of the profits of the land, and was liable to a real action for the non-payment of a rent-charge created by a former tenant in fee; if this be so, since real actions are abolished, an action of debt will lie.

I agree it is not necessary to go into the question whether the covenant runs with the land.

ARCHIBALD, J. I also agree in thinking there is no necessity to consider the question in what cases covenants run with the land. It seems to me to be a question of remedy. When we enter into the reasons why debt would not lie for the recovery of the arrears of a freehold rent-charge, it is clear that there was no oversight in abolishing real actions without providing for cases of this kind. The reason why debt did not lie was that the law did not suffer the right injured to be amended by an action merely personal. It is clear from Leving's Case that where no real action could be brought, debt would lie; and inasmuch as the abolishing of real actions has removed that remedy, I quite agree with my Brothers Blackburn and Quain that in the present case the action of debt is maintainable, and therefore our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

SECTION II.

APPORTIONMENT, SUSPENSION, AND EXTINGUISHMENT.

LIT. § 222. Also, if a man hath a rent charge to him and to his heirs issuing out of certain land, if he purchase any parcel of this to him and to his heirs, all the rent charge is extinct, and the annuity also; because the rent charge cannot by such manner be apportioned. But if a man, which hath a rent service, purchase parcel of the land out of which the rent is issuing, this shall not extinguish all, but for the parcel. For a rent service in such case may be apportioned according to the value of the land. But if one holdeth his land of his lord by the service to render to his lord yearly at such a feast a horse, a golden spear, or a clove, gilliflower, and such like; if in this case the lord purchase parcel of the land, such service is taken away; because such service cannot be severed nor apportioned.

Co. LIT. 147 b. The reason of this extinguishment is, because the rent is entire, and against common right, and issuing out of every part of the land, and therefore by purchase of part it is extinct in the whole, and cannot be apportioned. But by act in law it may, as hereafter shall be said.¹

¹ "A rent is an incorporeal hereditament, and susceptible of the same limitations as other hereditaments. Hence it may be granted, or devised, for life, or in tail, with remainders or limitations over. But there is this difference between an entail of lands and an entail of rent: that the tenant in tail of lands, with the immediate reversion in fee in the donor, may, by a common recovery, bar the entail and the reversion; whereas the grantee in tail of rent de novo, without a subsequent limitation of it in fee, acquires, by a common recovery, only a base fee, determinable upon his decease, and failure of the issues in tail; but if there is a limitation of it in fee, after the limitation in tail, the recovery of the tenant in tail gives him the fee simple. This was resolved in the cases of Smith v. Farnaby, Carter, 52; Sid. 285, and 2 Keb. 29, 55, 84; Weekes v. Peach, 2 Lutw. 1218, 1224; and Chaplin v. Chaplin, 3 P. Wms. 229. The reason of this difference is, that it would be unjust that the conveyance of a grantee of a rent should give a longer duration or existence to the rent, than it had in its original creation. It is true, that the barring of an estate tail in land is equally contrary to the intention of the grantor. But a rent differs materially from land. The old principles of the feudal law looked upon every modification of landed property, which was considered to be against common right, with a very jealous eye. Now, a rent-charge was supposed to be against common right, the grantee of the rent-charge being subject to

Co. Lit. 148 a. But yet a rent charge by the act of the party may in some case be apportioned. As if a man hath a rent charge of twenty shillings, he may release to the tenant of the land ten shillings or more or less, and reserve part; for the grantee dealeth only with that which is his own, viz., the rent, and dealeth not with the land, as in case of purchase of part. And so was it holden in the Common Place, Hil. 14 Eliz., which I myself heard and observed. So if the grantee of an annuity or rent charge of twenty pound grant ten pound parcel of the same annuity or rent charge, and the tenant attorn, hereby the annuity or rent charge is divided.

Id. So likewise if the lessor granteth part of the reversion to a stranger, the rent shall be apportioned; for the rent is incident to the reversion. So it is if tenant by knight's service by his last will and testament in writing deviseth the reversion of two parts of the lands, the devisee shall have two parts of the rent.

Co. Lit. 148 b. This is intended of a fee simple, for if there be a lord and tenant of forty acres of land by fealty and twenty shillings rent, if the tenant maketh a gift in tail, or a lease for life or years, of parcel thereof to the lord, in this case the rent shall not be apportioned for any part, but the rent shall be suspended for the whole: for a rent service (saith Littleton) may be extinct for part, and apportioned for no feudal services, and being a burden upon the tenant who was to perform them. Upon this principle the law, in every instance, avoided giving by implication a continuation to the rent, beyond the period expressly fixed for its continuance. Thus if a tenant in tail of land die without issue, his wife is entitled to dower for her life out of the land, notwithstanding the failure of the issue; but the widow of a tenant in tail of rent is not entitled to her dower against the donor. So if a rent is granted to a man and his heirs generally, and he dies without an heir, the rent does not escheat, but sinks into the land. It is upon this principle that when there is not a limitation over in fee, a tenant in tail of rent acquires, by his recovery, no more than a base fee. But if there is a limitation in fee, after the particular limitation in tail, the grantor has substantially limited the rent in fee; and therefore, it is doing him no injustice that the recovery should give the donee, who suffers it, an estate in fee simple. The case of Chaplin v. Chaplin was, that Lady Hanby, the grandmother of Porter Chaplin, being seised in fee, conveyed divers lands, to the use and intent that the trustees named in the deed, should receive and enjoy a rent-charge of £30 per annum to them and their heirs, with power to distrain for it, and to enter and hold the land on non-payment for forty days; and then the rent was declared to be to the use of Porter Chaplin in tail: remainder to the use of the same person who had the land in fee. It is stated to have been afterwards disclosed to the court, that the legal estate of the rent in fee was in the trustees. But it is worthy of the attention of the reader, that it was not necessary that any new matter should be adduced to disclose this to the court, as it appears on the face of the deed; for a conveyance to A. and his heirs, to the use and intent that B. and his heirs may receive a rent out of the estate, gives B. the legal fee of the rent; so that if it is afterwards declared, that B. and his heirs are to stand seised of the rent to uses, the intended cestuis que use take only trust or equitable estates. If, therefore, it is intended to limit a rent in strict settlement, it is necessary to do it by way of grant at common law, to some person and his heirs, to the uses intended to be limited. This gives the grantee the mere seisin to the uses, and the uses declared upon it will be executed by the Statute. See note on uses 271, b. VII. 3." — Butler's note to Co. Lit. 298 a.

the rest; but a rent service cannot be suspended in part by the act of the party, and in esse for other part. So it is if the lessor enter upon the lessee for life or years into part, and thereof disseise or put out the lessee, the rent is suspended in the whole, and shall not be apportioned for any part. And where our books speak of an apportionment in case where the lessor enters upon the lessee in part, they are to be understood where the lessor enters lawfully, as upon a surrender, forfeiture, or such like, where the rent is lawfully extinct in part.

LIT. § 224. Also, if a man hath a rent charge, and his father purchase parcel of the tenements charged in fee, and dieth, and this parcel descends to his son who hath the rent charge, now this charge shall be apportioned according to the value of the land, as is aforesaid of rent service; because such portion of the land purchased by the father cometh not to the son by his own fact, but by descent and by course of law.

THRE'R v. BARTON.

[Reported Moore, 94 pl. 232.]

A MAN made a lease for a hundred years, and the lessee made a lease for twenty years, rendering rent, with a clause of re-entry; and afterwards the first lessor granted the reversion in fee, and attornment was had accordingly. The grantee purchases the reversion of the term; he will have neither the rent nor the re-entry, for the reversion of the term, to which it was incident, is extinct in the reversion in fee. And this was adjudged at the Assizes between Lord Thre'r and Barton who was lessee, as Stephens relates. And Plowden and others agreed to it; but Popham took this diversity: If a man makes a lease for life, rendering rent, and the lessee for life makes a lease for years rendering rent, and afterwards the lessee for life surrenders to him in the reversion in fee, he will not have the rent of the lessee for years, nor an action of waste, because the tenant for life who surrendered could not punish the waste in this case. So if the tenant purchases the reversion in fee, he will not have an action of waste during his own life. But otherwise is it if a man makes a lease for years rendering rent, and afterwards grants the reversion for life, or for years, and he in reversion surrenders to him, he will have the rent or waste, because it was once a rent incident to the reversion, and so it was not in the other. But Plowden and Ipseley said that all is one as to the action of waste.

CIBEL AND HILL'S CASE.

COMMON PLEAS. 1588.

[Reported 1 Leon. 110.]

A LEASE was made of a certain house and land rendering rent, and another sum, Nomine pœnae; and for the Nomine pœnae the lessor brought an action of debt. The lessee pleaded, that the lessor had entered into parcel of the land demised, upon which they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff; and now the lessor brought debt for the rent reserved upon the same lease; to which the defendant pleaded, ut supra, scil. an entry into parcel of the land demised: And issue was joined upon it; And one of the jury was challenged, and withdrawn, because he was one of the former jury: And the issue now was, whether the said Cibel, the lessor, expulit et amovit et adhuc extra tenet, the said Hills. And to prove the same, it was given in evidence on the defendant's part, that upon the land demised there was a brick-kiln, and thereupon a little small cottage, and that the lessor entered, and went to the said cottage and took some of the bricks and untiled the said cottage: But of the other side it was said, that the lessor had reserved to himself the bricks and tiles aforesaid, which in truth were there ready made at the time of the lease made, and that he did not untile the brick-kiln house, but that it fell by tempest, and so the plaintiff did nothing but came upon the land to carry away his own goods: And also he had used the said bricks and tiles upon the reparation of the house. And as to the extra tenet, which is parcel of the issue, the lessor did not continue upon the land, but went off it, and relinquished the possession: But as to this last point, it seemed to the court, that it is not material if the plaintiff continued his possession there or not, for if he once doth anything which amounts to an entry, although that he depart presently, yet the possession is in him sufficient to suspend the rent, and he shall be said, extra tenere the defendant the lessee, until he hath done an act which doth amount to a re-entry. And afterwards to prove a re-entry, it was given in evidence on the plaintiff's part, that the defendant put in his cattle in the field where the brick-kiln was, and that the cattle did estray into the place where the defendant had supposed that the plaintiff had entered. And by ANDERSON, Justice, the same is not any re-entry to revive the rent, because they were not put into the same place by the lessee himself, but went there of their own accord. And such also was the opinion of Justice PERIAM.

CARREL v. READ.

QUEEN'S BENCH. 1595.

[Reported Cro. El. 374.]

Covenant. Lessee for years covenants to drain such water out of land before such a day. He pleads, that before the day the lessor entered, and continued in possession until after the day: and it was thereupon demurred. — Adjudged to be no plea, because it is a collateral act to be done by him; unless he had said, that the lessor held him out, and disturbed him to do it.

CLUN v. FISHER.

KING'S BENCH. 1612.

[Reported Cro. Jac. 309.]

Debt for fifty pounds rent reserved upon a lease for years. The case upon demurrer was, That Anne Breedon, tenant for life, made a lease for fifty years, if she lived so long, rendering annually during the term two hundred pounds quarterly, at Michaelmas, Christmas, the Annunciation, and Midsummer, by equal portions, or within thirteen weeks after every of the said feasts. She dies after Michaelmas, and within the thirteen weeks, and for the rent due at Michaelmas before her death this action was brought; and all this matter being disclosed in the count, the defendant demurred in law.

The sole question was, Whether this rent were due, she dying after Michaelmas, and before the end of the said thirteen weeks?

It was argued by Hedley for the defendant, and Yelverton for the plaintiff; and, after argument at the bar,

Fleming, Chief Justice, and Williams delivered their opinion, that this rent was not due; for the reservation being in the disjunctive at the four feasts, or within the thirteen weeks after every of the said feasts, nothing is due until the end of the thirteen weeks, but there is only an election given to the lessee to pay it at the feasts, if he will, but until the end of the thirteen weeks he cannot demand it by distress or action of debt, and therefore is not any duty; and if the ancestor make such a lease, and die after Michaelmas, before the end of the thirteen weeks, this rent shall go to the heir, and not to the executor: and if the lessor release all actions and demands after Michaelmas, before the end of six months, this rent is not released; but peradventure by a particular release, with precise words, it may be released: and if the lessee make a forfeiture, and the lessor enter therefore in the interim, betwixt Michaelmas and the end of the thirteen weeks, no rent is due to the lessor. And there is a difference betwixt this case and the case of Barwick v. Foster, Cro. Jac. 233, where a lease made for twenty-one years rendering annually at Michaelmas, or within forty days, such rent, the lease beginning at Michaelmas shall end there; and the rent was due for the last year, although the year expired before the forty days; for the reservation being annually during the term, at the said feasts, or within forty days, it shall be expounded according to their contract at the end of every forty days during the term: but the term ending at Michaelmas, so as there cannot be forty days after during the term, the law rejects that forty days at the last feast; for that cannot be, and then it is due at the feast, according to the contract of the parties: but here the term being uncertain, depending upon the life of the lessor, the law respects the thirteen weeks as the feasts; and as if she die before the feasts, it is not due; so if she die after the feasts, and before the thirteen weeks end, it is not due by the contract: and if there be an eviction by elder title betwixt Michaelmas and the thirteen weeks, there is not any rent due; for the reservation is at such days during the term.

CROKE, Justice, to the contrary; for the rent is reserved payable annually, and is a duty at the said feast, otherwise it is not annually reserved, nor payable: and the addition, "or within thirteen weeks," is but an enlargement of the day of payment, for the case of the lessee at his election: and he denied the law to be so in the cases put of the death of the ancestor after Michaelmas, where the eviction is after Michaelmas; for he held, that the rent is due to the executor, and not to the heir, and is due notwithstanding the eviction after Michaelmas; for otherwise the intent of the parties to have an annual reservation is destroyed, if the rent be not due until a year and a quarter after. Et adjournatur.

NOTE.—Afterwards it was adjudged for the defendant. See Dyer, 142, and the case of Smith v. Bustard.¹

DORREL v. ANDREWS.

[Reported Hob. 190.]

ACTION of debt was brought by Mrs. Dorrel against Andrews, a knight, upon a lease made by her to him in trust for Trussel, for seventy-five pounds, a quarter's rent, and declared of a demise de toto illo mes-suagio capitali maner. et domo mansionali, cognit. per nomen de Causton infra parochiam de Dunchurch, ac omnia horrea ter. tene-menta, &c., scitut. in Causton. The defendant pleads an entry and expulsion out of the garden house, and well, though parcel of the tene-ments, &c.: whereupon issue; and the venue was de Causton. infra parochiam de Dunchurch, and the plaintiff had judgment, notwithstanding exception taken to the venue.

PARADINE v. JANE.

KING'S BENCH. 1647.

[Reported Aleyn, 26.]

IN debt the plaintiff declares upon a lease for years rendering rent at the four usual feasts ; and for rent behind for three years, ending at the Feast of the Annunciation, 21 Car., brings his action : The defendant pleads, that a certain German prince, by name Prince Rupert, an alien born, enemy to the king and kingdom, hath invaded the realm with an hostile army of men ; and with the same force did enter upon the defendant's possession, and him expelled, and held out of possession from the 19 of July, 18 Car., till the Feast of the Annunciation, 21 Car., whereby he could not take the profits ; whereupon the plaintiff demurred, and the plea was resolved insufficient.

1. Because the defendant hath not answered to one quarter's rent.
2. He hath not averred that the army were all aliens, which shall not be intended, and then he hath his remedy against them ; and Bacon cited 33 H. 6, 1 e, where the jailer in bar of an escape pleaded, that alien enemies broke the prison, &c., and exception taken to it, for that he ought to show of what country they were, viz. Scots, &c.
3. It was resolved, That the matter of the plea was insufficient ; for though the whole army had been alien enemies, yet he ought to pay his rent. And this difference was taken, that where the law creates a duty or charge, and the party is disabled to perform it without any default in him, and hath no remedy over, there the law will excuse him. As in the case of waste, if a house be destroyed by tempest, or by enemies, the lessee is excused. Dyer, 33 a ; Inst. 53 d, 283 a ; 12 H. 4, 6. So of an escape. Co. 4, 84 b ; 33 H. 6, 1. So in 9 E. 3, 16, a supersedeas was awarded to the justices, that they should not proceed in a cessavit upon a cesser during the war, but when the party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, if he may, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract. And therefore if the lessee covenant to repair a house, though it be burned by lightning, or thrown down by enemies, yet he ought to repair it. Dyer, 33 a ; 40 E. 3, 6 h. Now the rent is a duty created by the parties upon the reservation, and had there been a covenant to pay it, there had been no question but the lessee must have made it good, notwithstanding the interruption by enemies, for the law would not protect him beyond his own agreement, no more than in the case of reparations. This reservation then being a covenant in law, and whereupon an action of covenant hath been maintained (as Roll said), it is all one as if there had been an actual covenant. Another reason was added, that as the lessee is to have the advantage of casual profits, so he must run the hazard of casual losses, and not lay the whole burden of them upon his lessor; and Dyer 56, 6, was cited for this purpose, that though the land be surrounded or gained by the sea, or made barren by wild-fire, yet the lessor shall have his whole rent: And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

ROPER v. LLOYD.

KING'S BENCH. 1678.

[Reported T. Jones, 148.]

IN covenant on articles of agreement, the breach was assigned for non-payment of rent reserved in a lease for years of a messuage, &c., by the plaintiff to the defendant, which rent the defendant covenanted to pay. The defendant pleaded that, after the articles, the plaintiff had separated, pulled down, taken and carried away a penthouse, fixed and annexed to the said messuage, and part of the premises demised, and detained it before the rent became due, et adhuc detinet; judgment whether the action lay. On this the plaintiff demurred, and judgment was given for him, for this was no suspension of the rent, but a trespass for which the defendant may have his action.¹

COLBORNE v. WRIGHT.

KING'S BENCH. 1679.

[Reported 2 Lev. 239.]

DEBT for arrears of rent as executor, and also as administrator durante minore aetate of his co-executor, and declares, that the testator made the plaintiff and others his executors, and that J. D. seised of a rent of £20 per annum, devised it to three persons in equal parts in common, and that all the three devisees levied a fine of one moiety thereof to the wife of the testator in fee, and of the other moiety to the use of a stranger in fee, and that the stranger granted his moiety to the wife of the testator in fee, that the testator had issue by her, and after the wife died, whereby the testator became seised of the whole by courtesy of England, and that the rent grew due to the testator, who made him and the other co-executors, and that he solely proved the will, and administration was granted to him during the minority of the co-executor, who is still under age. To this declaration the defendant demurred, and two things were now insisted on for the defendant: 1.

¹ Hunt v. Cope, Cowp. 242, accord. See Bennet v. Bittle, 4 Rawle, 339.

That this being a rent-charge which is against common right, it cannot be divided only to make tertenant subject to several distresses without his consent, and there is no attornment, Co. Lit. 148 a; aliter of a rent-service or such things as are of common right, Hob. 25. Grantee of a rent gives part thereof by fine, the tenant is not bound to attorn, therefore the devise and the fine to uses thus divided is not good. He agreed, that to a devise or a fine to uses there needs no attornment; but the devise or fine in such case of things not dividable, can't be divided, but the devise and the fine itself are void. 2. Both the executors ought to join in the action, though only one of them prove the will, and an executor and administrator to the same person are inconsistent; for where there is an executor, the ordinary hath no power to grant administration. 9 Co., Hensloe's Case; Yelv. 130, Smith v. Smith; and Cunningham's Case, lately adjudged in this court. To which it was answered by the counsel of the plaintiff, and resolved by the COURT: 1. That by these conveyances of devise and fine to uses, the rent may be divided without the assent or attornment of the party, because his assent or attornment is not necessary to the perfection of these conveyances. 2. Where one of the executors is an infant, and cannot prove the will, administration durante sua minoritate may be granted to the other, who must sue solely, and it is not inconsistent to have administration in such case, for it is not granted in this case, as it is upon a dying intestate; for here the will is proved but only to enable him to sue solely, because the other is not capable of proving the will, nor to join with him, and he cannot sue solely; and cited Hatton and Mascal's Case, entered in this court, Mich. 15 Car. 2, B. R. Rot. 703, the roll whereof was brought into court, and appeared to be so adjudged. But where both executors are of full age, though the will be proved by one only, the action must be brought in both their names.

So judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Holt, junior, for the plaintiff.

Levinz, for the defendant.¹

And whereas where any lessor or landlord, having only an estate for life in the lands, tenements, or hereditaments demised, happens to die before or on the day, on which any rent is reserved, or made payable, such rent, or any part thereof, is not by law recoverable by the executors or administrators of such lessor or landlord; nor is the person in reversion entitled thereto, any other than for the use and occupation of such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, from the death of the tenant for life; of which advantage hath been often taken by the under-tenants, who thereby avoid paying any thing for the same; for remedy whereof, be it enacted by the authority

ROCKINGHAM v. PENRICE.

CHANCERY, BEFORE SIR JOHN TREVOR, M. R., 1711.

[Reported 1 P. Wms. 177.]

SIR JAMES OXENDEN before marriage, and in consideration of £10,000 portion, settled an estate upon his lady (the plaintiff, the Lord Rockingham's sister) for her life for her jointure, with a power for himself to make leases at the usual rent.

Accordingly Sir James made leases pursuant to the power, of several parts of the land comprised in this settlement, reserving the rent at Lady Day and Michaelmas, and died upon Michaelmas Day between three and four in the afternoon and before sunset. And one of these several lessees, to whom the leases were made, paid his rent (being £18), unto Sir James Oxenden in the morning of the said Michaelmas Day; but the other tenants had not paid their rent, the arrears whereof came to about £500.

Hereupon the sole question was, Whether these arrears did belong to the defendants, the executors of Sir James Oxenden the lessor, or to the jointress?

For the former it was insisted, that when Michaelmas Day came, the rent was due on that day, and therefore, according to Chun's Case, 10 Co. 127 b, if on Michaelmas Day, being the rent day, the tenant pays the rent in the morning to the lessor, who dies before noon, this payment, though voluntary, is a good payment against all but the King; so that it is not material that the payment was not compulsive, or that there was no remedy for it by debt or distress: in regard it appears by that book, that the payment, though voluntary, is notwithstanding good against the heir. And the case in 1 Saunders, 287, of Baskerville v. Mayo, was by the counsel denied to be law, where it is said to be the opinion of Hale, C. J., that if one leases for years, rendering rent, and dies on the rent day after sunset and before midnight, this rent shall go to the heir, and not to the executor, for that (as it is there said) though a convenient time before sunset is the proper time to demand the rent, yet it is not due until “the end of the day, videlicet, twelve of the clock at night,” which they objected was not law; since at furthest the rent was due from the tenant to the lessor at sunset; for a convenient time before sunset, for the telling the money, was the time for the landlord to demand his rent; upon non-payment of which the lease might be avoided.

But it would be absurd to say the lessee should forfeit the lease for non-payment of the rent before it was due; and a case was cited betwixt Bellasis and Cole at the Assizes at Durham before Mr. Justice Tracy, where one granted a rent-charge for life, payable at Lady Day and Michaelmas; the grantee died on Michaelmas Day after sunset; and the question was, Whether the executor of the grantee should have the rent? And for that the grantee lived until after sunset, which was the legal time for demanding the rent, though he died before twelve of the clock at night, yet it was held by that judge, that this rent should go to the executor. Besides, it was observed that according to the other construction, if the jointress, in the present case, should live but one half year after the death of the husband, she might have a whole year's rent, which would be unreasonable.

But on the other side it was argued, and solemnly decreed by the MASTER OF THE ROLLS, that the lessor, in the principal case, dying before sunset, and there being no remedy for the lessor against the lessee, before his [the lessor's] death, to compel the payment of this half year's rent; and upon the authority of Clun's Case, the half year's rent reserved payable at Michaelmas should, upon the death of the lessor before sunset, go to the jointress, who then had the reversion.

But that as to the £18 rent paid by one of the tenants to the lessor upon Michaelmas Day in the morning, this was a good payment as to the lessee the tenant, and he should not be compelled to pay the same over again; but that the executors of Sir James, that received this half year's rent, should pay and account for the same unto Lady Oxenden the jointress.

Q. As to the last point; for if the £18 rent was a good payment at law (as certainly it was according to Clun's Case), why must it not be so in equity?

See the case of Lord Strafford v. Lady Wentworth, where Sir Henry Johnson, tenant for life, remainder to his wife, Lady Wentworth, for life, made a lease at will rendering rent; and died on Michaelmas Day betwixt three and four in the afternoon, and before sunset; and Lord Strafford, as administrator to Sir Henry Johnson, claiming the rent,

Lord Chancellor Macclesfield held Lord Strafford well entitled thereto; and cited the above-mentioned case of Cole v. Bellasis, and said there was a diversity between a rent incident to a reversion that must go somewhere (if not to the executor, then to the heir), and where the rent was to go nowhere, unless to the executor; in the latter case, if the lessor lived to the beginning of that day, at which time a voluntary payment of the rent might be made, this would be sufficient to entitle the executor or administrator to the rent, rather than that it should be lost; for it would be strange if the tenant should pay the rent to none; and as that case was, the person in remainder (viz. the jointress) could have no pretence to the rent, it being a lease at will, and consequently such as could have no continuance with respect to her.

JENNER v. MORGAN.

CHANCERY. BEFORE LORD COWPER, C. 1718.

[Reported 1 P. Wms. 391.]

THE father being tenant for life, remainder in tail to the son the plaintiff, the father was indebted by several judgments, and his land extended by J. S. a judgment creditor, who leased the same to the defendant, rendering £160 per annum payable quarterly.

March 6, 1710, the father the tenant for life died, and the defendant the tenant continuing in possession until after the Lady Day following;

It was insisted for the plaintiff that the Lady Day's rent (being £40) ought to be paid to the plaintiff by the defendant the tenant, for that the defendant, by his holding over, showed his election to continue tenant at will to the plaintiff the son; and that this could be no hardship on the tenant, since in all events he ought to pay his rent to some person, and J. S. the judgment creditor could have no pretence to the Lady Day's rent; and though, in this case, the tenant for life died 6 March, the reason had been the same, if he had died the day after Christmas Day.

LORD CHANCELLOR. There are several remedial Statutes relating to rents, but this is casus omissus; the law does not apportion rent in point of time, and I do not know that equity ever did it; this is an accident which the judgment creditor might have guarded against by reserving the rent weekly; so that it is his fault, and becomes a gift in law to the tenant.

Whereupon the COURT held, that as to the profits from the end of the last quarter to the death of the tenant for life, the tenant should pay nothing; but for the profits, from the death of the tenant for life, the tenant the under-lessee was to account to the plaintiff; and with regard to the notion that the tenant's remaining in possession showed his election to continue at the old rent; this, the COURT said, only showed his election from that time, and not from the end of the preceding quarter day.

WEBB v. RUSSELL.

[Reported 3 T. R. 393.]

THIS was an action of covenant. The declaration stated an indenture of 26th October 1780, by which William Stokes, and R. Webb who was described to be the mortgagee of the premises in question, demised them to the defendant for 11 years, from the 29th September then last, at the yearly rent of £200 payable to Stokes or his assigns; in which were contained covenants on the part of the defendant with Stokes and his assigns (inter alia) to pay the rent, and to keep the premises in repair. It then stated that R. Webb at the time of the lease was possessed of the premises for the residue then to come and unexpired of a term of 99 years, commencing on the 24th of June 1770, subject to an equity of redemption by Stokes on payment of a certain sum with interest to R. Webb. That the defendant entered on 26th October 1780, and became possessed for the term of 11 years, the reversion thereof for the term of 99 years belonging to R. Webb, subject to such equity of redemption, and the further reversion in fee belonging to one G. Medley. It then stated that by indentures of lease and release of the 23d and 24th March 1781, Medley granted the reversion in fee, expectant on the determination of the term for 99 years, to Stokes and Morgan Thomas; who, by indentures of lease and release, dated 26th and 27th March 1781, and made between Stokes and Thomas of the first part, R. Webb of the second part, and Makepeace Thackeray of the third part, granted it to Thackeray his heirs and assigns in trust for R. Webb his heirs and assigns, subject to a proviso for redemption on payment of a certain sum of interest by Stokes to R. Webb on a day therein mentioned and since past. That on the 30th May 1785 R. Webb died, having first made his will; by which he bequeathed to the plaintiff all his worldly estate, and appointed her sole executrix; that she proved the will, took upon herself the burden of the execution of it, assented to the said bequest, and claimed to have the reversion of the premises for the residue of the term of 99 years (subject to Stokes's equity of redemption), and the money thereupon secured to R. Webb, as legatee; and by virtue of that bequest, assent, and claim, she became possessed of the said reversion for the residue of the term of 99 years, subject, &c. That by indentures of lease and release, dated 12th and 13th February 1787, and made between Thackeray of the first part, Stokes of the second part, and the plaintiff of the third part, Thackeray and Stokes granted and released to the plaintiff the reversion of the premises in fee, freed and discharged from all right and equity of redemption whatsoever; by virtue whereof she became and was and still is seised in fee of the reversion of the premises, immediately expectant on the determination of the term of 11 years. The declaration concluded with setting forth two breaches of covenant; the one for non-payment of one year and one quarter's rent, due at Lady Day 1788; and the other for not keeping the premises in repair.

To this there was a general demurrer; and joinder.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD KENYON, C. J., now delivered the opinion of the judges then in court.

I cannot conceive why the plaintiff has introduced into her declaration many facts there stated. If there were no other objection against the plaintiff's recovering in this action, the pleader has raised some difficulty to himself by stating that the plaintiff, who was executrix, assented to the legacy to herself, and took the term in her own right; for in some views of this question, the action possibly might have been sustained, if the plaintiff had sued as executrix; because nothing is clearer than that a term which is taken in alieno jure is not merged in a reversion acquired suo jure.

It is extremely well settled at common law, without referring to the Statute 32 H. 8, c. 34, that covenants which run with the land will pass to the person to whom the land descends. And that Statute enacted, for the benefit of the grantees of reversions, that they should have the like advantages against the lessees, their executors, &c. by entry for non-payment of the rent; and should have and enjoy all and every such advantages, benefits, and remedies, by action only for not performing other conditions, covenants, or agreements, contained in the leases, against the lessees, as the lessors or grantors had. The Statute also contains a clause, giving the lessees the same remedy against the grantees of the reversion which they might have had against their grantors. Therefore under this Statute the grantees or assignees stand in the same situation, and have the same remedy against their lessees, as the heirs at law of individuals, or the successors (in the case of corporations), had before the Statute. It becomes therefore necessary to inquire whether this action of covenant could have been maintained by the heirs of the person from whom the plaintiff derives her title. I have already observed upon the introduction of one fact into this case, which might have been omitted; there is also another, which deserves some observation here. It is stated that Stokes was only a mortgagor, who had parted with his whole term to the mortgagee; and the declaration goes on to state that the whole interest which was vested in him he had transferred to the mortgagee. Therefore, in point of law, I cannot conceive how this covenant made with Stokes can be said to run with the land; for Stokes is stated in the declaration to have no interest whatever in the land, and yet both the implied covenant, arising from the "yielding and paying," and also the express covenants are entered into with Stokes. It is not sufficient that a covenant is concerning the land, but, in order to make it run with the land, there must be a privity of estate between the covenanting parties. But here Stokes had no interest in the land of which a court of law could take notice; though he had an equity of redemption, an interest which a Court of Equity would take notice of. These therefore were collateral covenants. And though a party may covenant with a stranger to pay a certain rent in consideration of a benefit to be derived under a third person, yet such a covenant cannot run with the land.

But even supposing that these covenants had been entered into (not with Stokes but) with Webb, who had an interest in the land, the subsequent transaction, which is stated in the declaration, puts an end to this question. It appears that the person entitled to the reversion of the 99 years term, expectant on the determination of the 11 years term created by the lease, afterwards acquired in her own person the absolute inheritance of the land; in consequence of which the reversion attendant on the lease granted to the tenant no longer existed. Another estate, totally different, arose by the extinguishment of the intervening estate. Many cases were cited on this subject; one of which, Moor. 94, is very applicable. There a person made a lease for 100 years, and the lessee made an underlease for 20 years, rendering rent, with a clause of re-entry; afterwards the original lessor granted the reversion in fee, and the grantee purchased the reversion of the term; and it was held that the grantee should not have either the rent, or the power of re-entry; for the reversion of the term, to which they were incident, was extinguished in the reversion in fee. And though this case was only determined at the Assizes, yet it was afterwards recognized in the court.

Considering then that these are covenants entered into with a stranger that do not run with the land, considering also that the rent is incident to the reversion out of which the term is carved, and that that reversion is gone, it seems to me, with all the inclination which we have to support the action (and we have hitherto delayed giving judgment in the hopes of being able to find some ground, on which the plaintiff's demand might be sustained), that it cannot be supported. The defence which is made is made of a most unrighteous and unconscious [unconscious?] nature: but unfortunately for the plaintiff the mode which she has taken to enforce her demand cannot be supported; and consequently there must be

NISI PRIUS. 1814.

ASSUMPSIT for the use and occupation of a house and garden. Plea, the general issue.

It appeared, that after the defendant had agreed to take the premises at an entire rent, and possession had been delivered to him, the plaintiff railed off a part of the garden, and built a privy upon it, for the use of a number of his other tenants. The defendant thereupon returned the keys to him.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH ruled, that this amounted to an eviction from part of the demised premises; which, the taking being single, and the rent entire, he considered a complete answer to the action.

ASSUMPSIT for use and occupation.

The defendant being tenant to the plaintiff of premises in Worcester-shire at £130 per annum, under-let the premises to Badger and several other under-tenants; during this tenancy and the under-tenancies, the plaintiff gave notice to Badger and the other under-tenants to quit, and Badger had in fact quitted, and the premises occupied by him worth £60 per annum remained unoccupied for one year; at the expiration of the year Phelps again under-let them to another tenant; and he still continued in possession of the whole by his under-tenants; the defendant had paid into court a sum which covered all the rent claimed except the £60, which he insisted upon was not due to the plaintiff.

LORD ELLENBOROUGH was of opinion, that under the circumstances

Covenant. The declaration stated that by indenture made between Peter Paige, the testator, of one part, and the defendant of another, it was agreed that the defendant should retain in his hands a certain sum of £300 in the indenture mentioned during a certain term created by lease of the 16th of July, 1818; and that if P. P. should during that term pay the rent reserved by the lease, and fulfil the covenants therein, the defendant would pay interest on the £300 to P. P.; and after the expiration of the said term, or the extinguishment of a certain indenture of lease of the 1st of December, 1759, by surrender or otherwise, and the payment by P. P., his executors, &c., of the before-mentioned rent, down to the time of such extinguishment, he, the defendant, would pay over to P. P., his executors, &c., the said sum of £300. Averment, that before any of the rent became due, to wit, on, &c., all the residue of the term granted by the lease of 1759 legally came to the defendant, who was then seised in fee of and in the reversion of the premises demised by that lease expectant on the determination of the term thereby granted, whereupon and whereby the residue of the said term became merged in the said inheritance of the defendant, and utterly extinguished; and that until that time P. P. kept all the covenants in the indenture of 1818 on his part to be performed. Breaches, that the defendant did not pay the interest, and that although the residue of the term granted by the lease of 1759 became merged and extinguished as aforesaid, the defendant did not pay the £300. There was another count stating particularly the manner in which, as it was alleged, the residue of the term became merged in the defendant's estate in fee. Pleas, non est factum, and a special plea, among others, denying that the residue of the term in the lease of 1759 became merged or extinguished as stated in the declaration. There was also a plea of set-off for moneys paid, &c. At the trial before Park, J., at the Exeter Spring Assizes, 1831, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of this court on the following case:—

By indenture dated 1st of December, 1759, certain premises were demised to three parties therein named for ninety-nine years, if William Hicks, Philip Hicks, and Mary Hicks should so long live, subject to certain rents, &c. The term so created passed by an indenture subsequently made, to William Hicks, Philip Hicks, and John Hicks. By indenture bearing date 16th of July, 1818, between these three last-mentioned persons of the one part, and Peter Paige, the testator, of the other, it was witnessed that, for the considerations therein mentioned, the three Hickses did demise, lease, set and to farm let unto Paige the said premises (then in the possession of W. and J. Hicks and of the said Paige) excepting as in the original lease was excepted, to hold from the 25th of March, 1821, for sixty-two years thence next ensuing if the right and interest of the Hickses should so long continue, at the yearly rent of £63 as therein mentioned. The indenture (which, as well as the deeds after-mentioned, was to be taken as part of the case) contained covenants for payment of rent to the Hickses, and of heriots, for repairing, for keeping all the covenants in the original lease, so that the same might not be forfeited, for payment of taxes, &c., then payable or thereafter to be imposed, and for re-entry by W., P., and J. Hicks, in case the rent should be unpaid, or the covenants in that and in the original lease not performed.

By indentures of lease and release bearing date the 3d and 4th of May, 1810, James Barry, in whom the fee in the premises then was, conveyed the said fee to Paige to the uses, and upon the trusts, and in the manner therein mentioned; and in 1817 Paige demised the premises to one Chapman for one thousand years from the day preceding the demise, as security for £1000.

By lease and release, bearing date the 24th and 25th of August, 1820, between Peter Paige of the one part, Chapman of another part, and the defendant of another part, reciting the indentures above mentioned, and that W., P., and J. Hicks had become entitled to the premises for the remainder of the said term of ninety-nine years, determinable on the deaths of William and Philip Hicks; reciting, also, an assignment by Philip (executed just before the present lease and release) of his share in the premises during the remainder of the term to Paige, so that (as was alleged) Paige then had the fee-simple and inheritance of the premises, subject to the payment of £42 per annum to William Hicks and John Hicks during the said term: reciting, also, that the defendant had agreed for the purchase of the fee-simple and inheritance in possession of the said hereditaments and premises for £2245, and that Chapman had been applied to, and had agreed, to join in the conveyance on being paid his £1000, and to surrender his term of one thousand years to the intent after mentioned: and further reciting that it had been agreed between the said Peter Paige and the defendant, that £300, part of the said sum of £2245, should be retained by the defendant as after mentioned: It was witnessed, that in consideration of £1000 then paid by the defendant to Chapman, and £945 to Paige, and of the £300 so to be retained, Paige conveyed the premises to the defendant in fee, and Chapman assigned to the defendant the said term of one thousand years and the interest created by the said indenture of mortgage, in order that such term and interest might absolutely vest in the defendant, and merge in the inheritance conveyed to him by Paige. It was further declared and agreed that the defendant should retain the £300, upon trust, that if Paige, his heirs, executors, &c., should pay the rent and perform the covenants mentioned in the lease of 1818, and save the defendant harmless therefrom, then the defendant should pay five per cent per annum interest thereupon, and after the expiration of the said term, or extinguishment of the said lease of 1759 by surrender or otherwise, pay over the said £300 to Paige, his executors, &c. Evidence was given on behalf of the defendant, to show that he had paid the £42 a year to the Hickses during the life of Paige, with his consent, and, after his death (which happened in 1826), with the consent of the plaintiff.

Upon these facts, if the court should be of opinion that, by the operation of the deeds of July 16th, 1818, and August 24th and 25th, 1820, the term created by the deed of 1759 became extinguished in the reversion in fee, and the entire freehold passed from Paige to the defendant, and that the defendant, therefore, was bound to pay the £300 to Paige, and interest upon it until payment, the verdict was to stand for such sum as the plaintiff should appear entitled to; if not, a nonsuit to be entered. This case was argued¹ on a former day of the term by Follett, for the plaintiff.

R. Bayly, contra.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD TENTERDEN, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the court. This cause came before the court upon a special case; the question being whether a term of years granted in the year 1759 had become merged in the fee and inheritance of the land thereby demised.

The action was covenant on an indenture made in August, 1820. (His Lordship then stated the pleadings which are set out above.) By the special case it appears that the lease of 1759 was for a term of ninety-nine years, if three persons of the name of Hicks should so long live. This lease afterwards became vested in two of those persons, and another of the same name; and in the year 1818, the persons in whom it was so vested, executed a deed purporting to be a demise of the land to Peter Paige for the term of sixty-two years, if their right and interest should so long continue, at the yearly rent of £63, payable in equal third parts to each of those three persons; the habendum being from the 25th of March, 1821. Before the date and execution of this deed, Peter Paige had become the purchaser of the fee of the demised land, and had mortgaged it for a thousand years to one Joseph Chapman as a security for £1000.

In 1820 Peter Paige sold and conveyed the land to the defendant by the indenture on which the action was brought. To this indenture the Hickses were not parties, but Joseph Chapman was a party and received his mortgage money, and assigned his term to the defendant, that it might be merged in the inheritance. The deed executed by the Hickses to Paige was recited in this conveyance to the defendant, and it is obvious that all the parties to that conveyance considered the instrument to be a good lease, and the rent of £42 (Peter Paige having purchased the share of one of the Hickses) to be a charge upon the land, and provision was made for indemnifying the defendant against it. It was so considered during the life of Peter Paige, and the £42 a year was paid for some short time after his death.

But it was now contended that the instrument executed by the Hickses in 1818 was not a lease, but operated in law as an assignment of the entire residue of the term granted by the lease in 1759: and that although that term might not be merged in the inheritance immediately by reason of the intervening term of years then vested in Chapman, yet that it did become merged by the operation of the conveyance in 1820 as soon as the term came in esse, if not before, and consequently the £42 a year was no longer a charge upon the land.

We have reluctantly come to that conclusion, by reason of the prejudice to the Hickses; but the principles of the law on this subject are plain, and the authorities quoted by Mr. Follett are unanswerable.

The deed of 1818 left no reversion in the Hickses; their entire interest passed by it; and when that takes place, the deed operates as an assignment, whatever be the form of words used in it.

That entire interest, having thus become vested in Peter Paige, passed by his conveyance to the defendant: the intervening term of one thousand years was merged, and the term created by the lease of 1759 became merged also.

On the behalf of the defendant, however, it was urged that no entry being stated in the case, the term was not vested, but the defendant had only an interesse termini. It is not necessary to consider what might be the effect of such an interest, because it is not usual to aver an entry in a special case, whatever may be necessary on a special verdict, and the facts stated furnish sufficient evidence of an entry, because the £42 was paid for some time after the 25th of March, 1821, and at least on one occasion by the defendant himself.

WRIT of error on the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, reported
2 C. M. & R. 84.

Bompas, Serjt., for the plaintiff.

Cleasby, for the defendant.

LORD DENMAN, C. J.¹ This is an action of trespass for entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house, and taking his goods.

The declaration is dated the 25th of April, 1834. The defendant, on the 24th of May, 1834, pleaded that he, being seised of the dwelling-house and certain other premises, demised the same to the plaintiff for one year from the 25th of June, 1833, at the rent of £70, payable quarterly; that the plaintiff accepted the lease, and, by virtue of the said demise, entered into and upon the said demised premises, and thereupon became and yet was possessed thereof for the said term so granted to him as aforesaid; and, until the 25th of December, 1833, and from thence until and at the time when, &c., held and enjoyed the dwelling-house and premises by virtue of the said demise; that on the said 25th of December, 1833, £35 of the rent was in arrear, wherefore the defendant entered and made a distress for the same.

The plaintiff, on the 6th of December, 1834, replied that one Adam Charlton, before the demise in the plea mentioned, and from thence and still was in possession of eight acres of land of the said demised premises, under and by virtue of a demise theretofore made by the defendant to him, which demise was then and from thence had been and still was in full force and undetermined, whereby the plaintiff did not and could not enter into the possession of, or hold or enjoy the said last-mentioned land, so being parcel of the demised premises in the plea mentioned; and although he had been willing and desirous of entering, he had been kept out of possession by Adam Charlton by virtue of the demise to him, and the plaintiff had been prevented from holding and receiving the profits.

The rejoinder alleges that the plaintiff, at the time of his entering on the demised premises, had notice that Adam Charlton was in possession of the eight acres as tenant to the defendant, under a demise for a term then unexpired.

To this rejoinder there is a special demurrer, for inconsistency with the plea and departure therefrom.

The question to be determined is, whether the replication be an answer to the plea.

It has been argued that the impediment to the plaintiff's obtaining possession of the eight acres demised to Adam Charlton by the defendant previously to the demise made to the plaintiff, is in the nature of an eviction. On one side it is contended that it is analogous to an eviction by title paramount, the right of Adam Charlton being prior to the demise made by the lessor, and to the title acquired under that demise by the lessee; and on the other side, that it is analogous to an eviction by the tortious act of the lessor, since the impediment arises from the wrongful act of the lessor himself in demising land which he had already parted with; and is not to be distinguished in principle from the case of an entry upon the lessee under a demise made by the lessor to a stranger immediately after possession taken by the lessee.

If the former of these views be adopted, the rent will be apportionable, and the distress justified by the plea: for it is clear that a person may distrain for apportionable rent; and, if the defendant was entitled to distrain at all, the action of trespass cannot be maintained. If the latter view be correct, the defendant was not entitled to distrain at all, so long as the plaintiff was kept out of possession of any part by his wrongful act.

But, we are of opinion that the impediment to the plaintiff's taking possession in this case, is not analogous to an eviction: for it appears to us that no interest in the eight acres previously demised to Adam Charlton passed to the plaintiff by the demise subsequently made to him. The demise to Adam Charlton covered the whole time during which the rent distrained for accrued.

But it has been supposed, that notwithstanding the demise to Adam Charlton, by which the defendant had parted with his right of possession in the eight acres, the plaintiff by his subsequent lease took an interesse termini in these eight acres for the period of his own lease, viz., one year, so as to give him a right to a term for all that period, and to the possession on the determination of the prior lease by efflux of time, or by any other lawful mode, whenever and in whatever way it should be determined; and that the existence of the prior demise being the impediment by which alone the plaintiff was prevented from obtaining possession under the demise to him, the case must be governed by the same principle as that of an eviction by title paramount: and, if any interest in the eight acres did pass to the plaintiff under the demise to him, we might possibly be disposed to accede to this view of the case; considering that eviction by title paramount means eviction by a title superior to the titles both of lessor and lessee; against which neither is enabled to make a defence.

It appears to us, however, upon authority which we do not feel ourselves at liberty to dispute, that the demise to the plaintiff of the eight acres in question was wholly void.

It has been already observed that the demise to Charlton made previously to the demise to the plaintiff, covers the whole of the plaintiff's term; or at least the whole period for which the distress was made. Now, it is expressly laid down in Bacon's Abr. Leases (N.), (which is to be considered as the language of Lord Chief Baron Gilbert) as follows: "If one make a lease to A. for ten years, and the same day make a parol lease to B. for ten years of the same lands, this second lease is absolutely void, and can never take effect either as a future interesse termini, or as a reversionary interest, though the first lessee should forfeit or otherwise determine his estate, or though the first lease were on condition, and the condition broken within ten years; neither shall the lessor have the rent reserved upon such second lease, but such second lease is absolutely void, as if none such had been made. The reason whereof is, because the first lease being made for ten years, the lessor during that time had nothing to do with the possession, or to contract with any other for it; and the second lease being made the same day, and for no longer term than the first ten years, would not pass any interest as a future interesse termini certainly; for the first lessee had the whole interest during that time; and his forfeiture or determination of it sooner, which was perfectly contingent and accidental, shall never make good the second lease as a future interesse termini, when at the time of making thereof it was absolutely void for want of a power in the lessor to contract for it; and as a reversionary interest it cannot be good for want of a deed." And a little further on, "But now, if such second lease had been made for twenty years, then it had been good as a future interesse termini for the last ten years, and void for the first ten years for the reasons before given, but for the last ten years it had been good; because, when the first ten years were elapsed, the second lessee might then execute and reduce into possession by entry as well as if it had been at first made in possession; for, it had been good for the whole twenty years if the first lease had not stood in the way, and that can stand in the way no longer than it continues, and therefore, by its termination, lets in the second lease; but, as a grant of the reversion such second lease could not be good for want of a deed, for the reasons before given, neither could any attornment help it or let in the second lease, till the first ten years ran out by effusion of time." And afterwards it is said that if, after a lease for ten years, a second lease by deed poll were made for twenty years, it might take effect with attornment as a grant of the reversion, or, if no attornment could be had, "yet it would inure as a future interesse termini for the last ten years, and would be absolutely void for the first ten years, as much as if it had been made by parol."

It has been remarked that the doctrine here laid down is derived from the argument of counsel in the case of Bracebridge v. Clouse, in Plowd. 421; but it may be answered, that although the matter introduced into Bacon's Abridgment is first distinctly found in the argument set forth at length in Plowden, it now stands upon the authority of Lord Chief Baron Gilbert. Moreover, the point immediately under consideration in this case is confirmed by the opinion of Gaudy, J., in Dove v. Willcot, Cro. Eliz. 160, who says: "If a lease be made for two years, and after the lessor let the land for four years, this is but a lease for two years, although the first lessee surrender, for he had no power to contract for the first two years at the beginning; but otherwise when the estate is determinable upon an uncertainty;" and cites Plowd. Comment. Smith and Stapleton's Case, which is the case where the argument is fully stated, — fo. 432.

It may be remarked also that in Comyns's Digest, title Estates (G. 13), it is said that a lease which cannot take effect in interest, except by possibility, if it be not an estoppel, shall be void; as, if tenant in fee leases by parol to A. for nine years, and the same day to B. for nine years, the lease to B. shall be void. For this he cites Plowden, 432; and though this statement be only part of the language of the apprentice who argued the case of Smith v. Stapleton, Chief Baron Comyns, by introducing it in this general way, must be considered as adopting it in some degree at least as authority; in what is said by Gawdy, as referred to in Cro. Eliz. 160, there is afterwards added Smith v. Stapleton, Plow. 426, though it is not clear whether this be his language or that of the reporter.

This same doctrine, as far as regards a second parol lease for years after a former lease for years, appears to have been treated as clear law in various books; though the effect of such a lease made after a prior lease for life, has been the subject of discussion. See Bro. Abr. Lease, pl. 35, 48; Plowden, 521, note of the reporter. Welchden v. Elkington, Plowd. 521; Plowden's Quæries, 122 and 161; Sir Hugh Cholmondeley's Case, Moore, 344, in the argument of Cook, Attorney-General. So, in Watt v. Maydewell, Hutton, 105: "If a man make a lease for twenty-one years, and after makes a lease for twenty-one years by parol, that is merely void; but if the second lease had been by deed, and he had procured the former lessee to attorn, he shall have the reversion." Edward v. Staler, Hardr. 345, arguendo. So, Sheppard's Touchst. 275 b.: "If the second lease be for the same or a less time, as, if the first lease be for twenty years, and the second lease be for twenty or for ten years, to begin at the same time, these second leases are for the most part void;" but if the second lease be by fine, deed indented, or poll, it may pass the reversion with attornment when attornment is necessary, and without, if not necessary. But if the second lease be by word of mouth, it is otherwise. . . . And if the second lease be by fine, or deed indented, then it may work by way of estoppel both against the lessor and the lessee; so that, if the first lease happen by any means, as, by surrender or otherwise, to determine before it be run out, then the second lessee shall have it."

Upon these authorities, therefore, we feel ourselves obliged to hold that the lease to the plaintiff was utterly void, so far as regarded the eight acres demised to Charlton.

If that be so, we are unable to distinguish the case in principle from that of Gardiner v. Williamson, 2 Barn. & Adolph. 336, where the tithes of a parish, together with a messuage used as a homestead for collecting the tithes, having been demised by parol at a rent of £200 per annum, and a distress made for arrears, the Court of King's Bench held that an action of trespass would lie, because the demise of the tithes, being by parol, was void. There was no valid demise, it was said, of the whole subject-matter, nor any distinct rent reserved for that part of it upon which there might have been a legal distress. That case was the stronger, because it was contended that the whole rent must be taken to be issuable out of the corporeal hereditament, upon which alone a distress could be made. And accordingly, in a case of a lease by indenture, Dyer is reported to have held (Moore, 50), that, if lands at common law and copyhold lands are leased by indenture rendering rent, all the rent is issuing out of the lands at common law; for the lessor had no power to make such a lease of copyhold, wherefore as to this the lease is utterly void; but it is added, that if a man lets lands, parcel of which he is seised of by disseisin, then the rent is issuing out of all the land, and by the entry of the disseisee the rent shall be apportioned, because the lease of this was not void but voidable. In this last case the tenant took an interest, and enjoyed all the lands demised till the time of his being evicted from a parcel thereof by the disseisee, and was therefore liable in respect of such interest and enjoyment to a portion of the rent. In the case before the court, which is not the case of a demise by indenture, the rent is reserved in respect of all the land professed to be demised, and to be issuing out of the whole and every part thereof; and as the plaintiff, as to a portion of the land comprised in the demise (which might be great or small, as far as the principle is concerned), has taken no interest, and had no enjoyment, and is not bound by any estoppel, we are of opinion that the distress made by the defendant is not justifiable, either in respect to the whole rent reserved or any portion of it.

It may further be observed, that even supposing the plaintiff to have taken an interesse termini in the eight acres, capable of being executed by entry in case the demise to Charlton should happen to be forfeited or surrendered, yet, as that demise to Charlton was in force at the commencement of the plaintiff's tenancy, and continued during the whole period, in respect of which the distress has been made, no demise of those eight acres to the plaintiff ever took effect; and, consequently, no right to any rent in respect of those eight acres has ever come into existence. And we are not aware of any case where an entire rent reserved has been held to be apportionable, in which the tenant has not been at some period subject to the entire rent by virtue of the demise. Here, the right of apportionment is not founded upon any eviction, or other matter occurring subsequently to the demise, but upon an original defect in the demise itself by which the entire rent was reserved. In this respect it is strictly analogous to Gardiner v. Williamson.

In the case of Tomlinson v. Day, 5 Moore, 558, which has been referred to, the landlord did not claim an apportioned part of an entire rent, either by avowry for a distress or by action for the rent. It was an action for use and occupation, in which he was allowed to make use of an agreement for a lease (according to the express provision of the Statute 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, § 14), "as evidence of the quantum of damages to be recovered;" and, as the defendant had been interrupted in the full enjoyment of what had been agreed for, the plaintiff was held "entitled to recover a reasonable compensation for the property enjoyed by the defendant as an equivalent for rent." The interruption to the defendant's right of exclusive sporting was indeed compared by Lord Chief Justice Dallas and Mr. Justice Richardson to an eviction; but, if it was an eviction, it was clearly an eviction by title paramount. The agreement for exclusive sporting was not void on account of the landlord having made a prior agreement to let it to some other person; but it was defeated, because other persons interfered who had a right superior to that of the landlord. Supposing the circumstances, therefore, to amount to an eviction, it would be a case of apportionment according to the acknowledged rule; and would not assist the argument in favor of the defendant.

Upon the whole, therefore, we are of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Exchequer ought to be reversed.

Judgment reversed.¹

MORRISON v. CHADWICK.

COMMON PLEAS. 1849.

[Reported 7 C. B. 266.]

COLTMAN, J., delivered the judgment of the court.²

This was an action by a landlord against his tenant, founded on a promise to use the demised premises, during the continuance of the tenancy, in a tenant-like manner. The breach alleged, is, that, during the continuance of the tenancy, he used them in so untenant-like a manner that they became ruinous, &c. There was also a count for use and occupation, and there were the money counts.

To the first count of the declaration, the defendant pleaded, — secondly, that the plaintiff, during the continuance of the tenancy, and before any breach, entered into a certain part of the demised premises, to wit, the shed, and ejected, expelled, and put out the defendant from the possession thereof, whereupon the defendant, before any breach, and whilst he was so expelled, &c., wholly quitted, abandoned, and gave up to the plaintiff the residue of the demised premises, and the possession thereof, and the plaintiff has from thenceforward had the same, and the possession thereof.

To this plea the plaintiff demurred, insisting that it amounted only to an argumentative denial of the allegation that a breach was committed during the tenancy.

² The pleadings are stated in the opinion.

For the defendant, it was said, that the plea was a good plea in confession and avoidance: for, it was insisted, that, when the plaintiff entered on his tenant, and evicted him from a part of the premises, the tenant was justified in relinquishing the possession of the remainder, and was no longer bound to perform the agreement he had entered into on becoming tenant. But we are of opinion that this proposition cannot be supported.

An eviction by a landlord of his tenant from a part of the premises, creates a suspension of the entire rent during the continuance of the eviction, until the tenant re-enters and resumes possession: see the authorities cited in 1 Wms. Saund. 204, n. (2). But there is no authority for holding that the tenancy is thereby put an end to, or the tenant discharged from the performance of his covenants, other than the covenant for the payment of rent.

It may be urged, that the landlord may have evicted the tenant from the possession of a part of the demised premises, the possession of which part was the main inducement to him to enter into the covenants of the lease, and therefore that he ought not any longer to be bound by them. But it is to be borne in mind, that, in addition to the suspension of the rent, the lessee may maintain his action against the lessor for the eviction; by which, it is to be presumed that he will obtain satisfaction for any inconvenience or loss which he may suffer.

If the eviction of a part by the landlord will not discharge the tenant from the performance of the covenants of his lease, other than the covenant to pay rent, will the relinquishing the possession of the land, and the landlord's taking possession, have that effect? We think it will not; for the allegations do not show a dissolution of the tenancy by mutual consent. The tenancy, therefore, continues; and whilst the tenancy continues, the obligation to perform the covenants continues.¹ We think, therefore, the plea is bad.

The third plea alleges a surrender of the tenancy before any breach, by operation of law,— by the defendant's quitting possession of the lands demised, with the consent of the plaintiff, with the intention of putting an end to the tenancy, and by the plaintiff's accepting such possession, with the intention of putting an end to the tenancy.

It was contended, on the part of the plaintiff, that this plea was bad, on the ground that the agreement stated in the plea, would not constitute a surrender by act and operation of law; and that the plea, unless it showed a surrender, furnished no answer to the declaration. And we agree that this is so; for the breach is admitted; and, if the tenancy continued, no answer is given to it.

If, however, it ought to be held — agreeably to what is said in Grim-

man v. Legge, 8 B. & C. 324; 2 M. & R. 438 — that the plea shows a surrender by act and operation of law, we think the plea is bad, on special demurrer, as amounting only to an argumentative denial that any breach had been committed during the continuance of the tenancy.¹

Judgment for the plaintiff.

M'LOUGHLIN v. CRAIG.

QUEEN'S BENCH, IN IRELAND. 1856.

[Reported 7 Ir. C. L. 117.]

THE summons and plaint claimed a sum of £150 for one and a half year's rent due out of certain premises demised by the plaintiffs and others deceased, to one William Boyd, on the 15th of July, 1833, for a term of three lives still subsisting, and renewable forever; which premises, it was alleged in the plaint, had vested in the defendant by assignment, and that since said assignment the said sum of £150 had accrued due.

To this the defendant pleaded as to £75, part of said sum of £150, that before and at the time of making the said indenture of 15th July, 1833, one Matilda M'Loughlin was by herself and her under-tenants, and still is, in possession of a portion of said premises in plaint mentioned; and that being so in possession, the plaintiffs and William Boyd in his lifetime instituted proceedings in ejectment against the said Matilda M'Loughlin, for recovery of said portion, and that Matilda M'Loughlin had recovered judgment in said ejectment against the plaintiffs and William Boyd, and before any portion of said sum of £75 became due, and has since retained and continued in possession of the said portion of the premises; and that, by reason thereof, the said William Boyd in his lifetime, and the defendant since his death, and from thence and before the time of the accruing of said sum of £75, were kept out of the possession and enjoyment of said portion of the premises, and neither he nor the said William Boyd had, since making said indenture, or since said judgment in ejectment, any use, possession, or enjoyment of the said portion. To this defence the plaintiff demurred.

LEFROY, C. J. In this case we are of opinion that this demurrer must be overruled. It is plain that, upon an eviction by title paramount, the lessee may either give up the lease or hold the part of which he remains in possession, at an apportioned rent. That is well settled. Then the question in this case is, Are the matters stated on the defence, by which the defendant says he was disabled from getting possession of a portion of the lands, equivalent to an eviction by title paramount; that is, has enough been shown to satisfy the court that the lessee was prevented, by title paramount in Matilda M'Loughlin, from getting possession of the entire of the land demised by the lease? The defence alleges that Matilda M'Loughlin was in possession of part of the premises previous to the lease being made; and that she continued in possession up to and after the making of the lease; and that subsequently an ejectment was brought by the lessor and lessee in that lease, and that they failed to disturb her possession. It must be assumed that she showed title against both parties, against the lessor antecedent to the lease, and against lessor and lessee after the lease; and that ever since, during the accrual of the rent, she continued in possession. The question then is, whether that is a substantial averment of matters whence the law deduces what may be called a presumptio juris, that, de jure, she was in possession by title paramount? When the landlord made the lease, he must have known in what condition the property stood at the time he let it; it was his duty not to make a lease to a stranger, save of what he had to demise; a stranger could not know that Matilda M'Loughlin was in possession by title paramount. He had no muniments of title; had nothing to do with the land before the lease was made to him. The lease imports that the title went with the possession; there is no recital in it of any outstanding lease, or that there was any in reversion. It was incumbent on the landlord, therefore, when he seeks to enforce the entire rent, to show his right, to establish that Matilda M'Loughlin was in possession as a sub-lessee, or in some way under him; whereas it is averred, in the defence, that the lessee never had any benefit or enjoyment under the lease of the portion of the premises in question. If anything were shown to establish that a rent had been received for this portion from Matilda M'Loughlin, by the defendant getting the reversion to which that rent was incident, that would not be inconsistent with the right of the landlord to recover the entire rent; but that averment ought to have come from the plaintiff. This defence amounts in substance to an eviction by title paramount; and as in such case the lessee is entitled to hold the remaining portion of the premises, paying a proportionate part of the entire rent, or to abandon all, so here the defendant is entitled to a similar election. This demurrer, therefore, must be overruled.

CRAMPTON, J. I do not dissent from the judgment pronounced by my Lord Chief Justice, although I feel some difficulty on the points suggested. It has never been decided that the position of a lessee, taking a lease at an entire rent from a landlord, who had power to demise a portion only of the thing demised, not having power to demise the residue, is equivalent to an eviction by title paramount. I do not think that has yet been decided, although the case cited, of Doe v. Meyler, comes near it. A party there made an underlease of premises, over part of which he had a power, and over another portion of which he had no power. It was held in that case that there must be an apportionment, and that the tenant must pay the apportioned rent for the portion the landlord had power to demise. There is another question on which I also have some difficulty; that is, as to the meaning of that portion of the plea which alleges a possession in Matilda M'Loughlin, and nothing more. It is consistent with that plea that Matilda M'Loughlin may have been in a temporary possession, or she may have been a tenant of the lessor; and if that were so, the whole rent is payable to the landlord, and there is no apportionment. It is said, however, that there are statements in the plea contradictory of the presumption that Matilda M'Loughlin was in as tenant to the lessor. I feel some difficulty on these two points; but if the landlord allege she had only a temporary interest, the court will not prevent his now replying that matter, upon payment of the costs of the demurrer.

PERRIN and MOORE, JJ., concurred with the Chief Justice.

Demurrer overruled.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSIONERS v. O'CONNOR.

QUEEN'S BENCH IN IRELAND. 1858.

[Reported 9 Ir. C. L. 242.]

ACTION to recover three half-yearly gales of rent reserved by an indenture of demise dated the 24th of April, 1846, whereby the plaintiffs demised to the defendant a certain messuage, lands, and premises, with the appurtenances, for three lives, and a concurrent term of 999 years, at the yearly rent of £400, payable half-yearly. The first defence alleged that, prior to the making the demise in the plaint mentioned, the plaintiffs had demised two roods, parcel of said demised premises, to Captain Wynder, which prior demise was still in force, whereby the defendant was kept out of possession of said parcel of the demised premises, although always desirous of entering thereon, whereof the plaintiffs had due notice; whereby the defendant was prevented from having all the profit and advantage he otherwise would have thereout. The second defence alleged a prior demise, still in force, of two roods of land, parcel of the demised premises, to one Patrick Murray and one Timothy Murray, and in other respects was in the same terms as the first defence.

Demurrer to the first defence, upon the following grounds: Because the said defence does not disclose any matter whereby the demise made by the plaintiffs to the defendant, as in the summons and plaint alleged, is shown to have been, wholly or as to any part of the premises thereby purporting to be demised, void or ineffectual, or whereby the rent reserved became or was wholly or in part extinguished or suspended; and because the said demise made by the plaintiffs to the defendant, as in the said summons and plaint alleged, was effectual to pass the reversion of the said parcel of the said demised premises occupied by the said Captain Wynder; and because the said defence is pleaded to the whole of the said first cause of action, although, at best, only an answer to part thereof; and because it does not appear that the said Captain Wynder has, or ever had, any greater estate or interest in the said parcel of the said demised premises than that of tenant from year to year; and because it does not appear that the said defendant ever gave a proper and legal notice to quit to the said Captain Wynder, or otherwise used legal means to determine his tenancy; and because it is not shown by the said defence what estate or interest the said Captain Wynder has or had in the said parcel of the said demised premises; and because it is not alleged by the said defence that the said defendant is not in receipt of the rent payable by the said Captain Wynder in respect of the said parcel of the said demised premises; and because, consistently with the said defence, the said Captain Wynder may have always been, and still be, in occupation of the said parcel of the said demised premises, by the consent or default of the defendant himself.

The grounds of demurrer to the second defence were in similar terms to those of the first defence,¹ substituting the names of Patrick and Timothy Murray for that of Captain Wynder.

M. Morris (with him G. Fitzgibbon), contra.

LEFROY, C. J. We are all very clearly of opinion that this defence is not a good answer to the claim for the whole rent. It would certainly be a very strange state of the law if, upon the facts which are here presented to us, we were compelled to hold it to be a legal defence, that because two roods of the demised premises were lawfully in the possession of an under-tenant at the date of the demise, that circumstance is to operate as a suspension of the entire rent of £400 a year, duly reserved and fully secured by sufficient covenants. We were, however, told that such was the law, as settled by the case of Neale v. Mackenzie. But it turns out that the case of Neale v. Mackenzie, instead of being an authority in support of the present defence, is, for the very reasons given by Lord Denman, when delivering the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber, an authority for upholding this demurrer; for the distinction there taken was, that the second lease, made by the defendant in error, was utterly void, inasmuch as, with respect to eight acres, part of the demised premises, no interest at all passed to the lessee, — not even a reversion, which can only be granted by deed under seal; whereas the second lease in that case was not under seal. In the present case, however, it appears that the plaintiffs, who were seised of these lands, and made this lease, were, at the time of this demise, in possession of the great body of the property; but about two roods of it (taking the facts from the pleadings) were then in the possession of some one else, under a former lease. As to these two roods, therefore, the plaintiffs had nothing but a reversion. Under these circumstances, the plaintiffs demise the entire premises by a lease under seal, reserving an entire rent for the whole. The first question then is, What was the operation of that instrument? It was a lease in possession of all the land of which the lessors had the possession at the time of the demise; and, in point of law, it was a lease of the reversion of that part of the lands of which the lessors had not the possession. Where a person has only a reversion expectant on a lease, with a rent incident thereto, he may make a lease by deed of that reversion for any term, and reserve a rent thereout; he may deal with it as if it were an interest in possession, and he cannot be said not to have a title to such rent. He cannot, it is true, recover it by ejectment, and there may be a difficulty in the way of his distraining for it; but he can recover it either by an action upon express covenant, or by an action of debt upon the implied contract which arises upon the deed between the parties. Are we to be told then that an action for the entire rent will not lie? I am happy to find that the law, so far back as I have been able to trace it, still continues to be unchanged in this respect, and that the reasons assigned by Lord Denman, in pronouncing the judgment of the Exchequer Chamber, in Neale v. Mackenzie, the case which was said to have interfered with the law as I have stated it, were, on the contrary, in perfect harmony with it, established, as it has been, by the high authority of Chief Baron Gilbert, unaffected by any subsequent case. Upon these grounds, therefore, we feel quite authorized in maintaining that state of the law which is consistent as well with common-sense and justice, as with an uninterrupted current of legal authority down to the present time. We, therefore, allow the demurrer.¹

SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK. 1825.

[Reported 4 Cowen, 581.]

COVENANT for rent upon a lease dated October 15th, 1818, given by the plaintiff to the defendant, for the term of two, three, five, or eight years, but not for a less term than two years, of two rooms, or the whole of the second floor, and two rooms chosen by the defendant on the third floor of a certain house or store in Beaver Street, corner of William Street, in the city of New York, at a rent of $425 per annum, which the defendant covenanted to pay, and entered into possession of the demised premises.

The defendant pleaded, 1st, Non est factum.

2. That before any of the rent became due, to wit, on, &c., the plaintiff entered upon the demised premises, and ejected, expelled, put out, and amoved the defendant, and kept and continued him so ejected, expelled, and amoved from thence hitherto.

Replication, denying the expulsion and issue.

The cause was tried at the New York Circuit, June 19th, 1823, before Edwards, C. Judge.

On the trial, the counsel for the defendant produced receipts for rent to the 1st February, 1820, and offered to prove that about that time the plaintiff introduced into the house demised, lewd women or prostitutes, and continued this practice from time to time and at sundry times, keeping and detaining them in there all night for the purpose of prostitution; that such women would frequently enter the house in the day-time, and, after staying all night, would leave it by day-light in the morning; that the plaintiff sometimes introduced other men into the house, who, together with him, kept company with the lewd women or prostitutes during the night; that on such occasions, the plaintiff and the women, being in company in certain parts of the house not included in the lease, but adjacent and in the plaintiff's occupation, were accustomed to make a great deal of indecent noise and disturbance, the women often screaming extravagantly so as to be heard throughout the house, and by the near neighbors; and frequently using obscene and vulgar language, so loud as to be understood at a considerable distance; that such noise and riotous proceedings being frequently continued all night, greatly disturbed the rest of persons sleeping in other parts of the house, and particularly in the parts demised; that these practices were matter of conversation and reproach in the neighborhood; and were of a nature to draw, and did draw, odium and infamy upon the house as being a place of ill-fame, so that it was no longer reputabile for moral or decent persons to dwell or enter there; that all these practices were by the procurement or permission and concurrence of the plaintiff. That the defendant, being a person of good and respectable character, was compelled by the repetition of these practices to leave the house, and did leave it for that cause, about the beginning of March, 1820; and did not return. That a respectable man by the name of Fox, to whom part of the house had been underlet, left it for the same cause.

This evidence was objected to, and overruled by the judge as inadmissible upon the issue; and the defendant's counsel excepted. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages $362.52.

J. A. Dunlap, contra.

CURIA, PER SUTHERLAND, J. Eviction of the whole or any part of the demised premises, is a good plea in bar to an action either of debt or covenant for the rent. In this all the authorities agree. Cruise, Dig. tit. 28, Rents, chap. 3, Woodfall, 412-13; 1 Saund. 204, n. 2, and cases there cited. The plea in this case is unexceptionable in point of form. It is according to the established precedents. Salmon v. Smith, 1 Saund. 203, 4, n. (2). It states that the plaintiff (who was the defendant's lessor) entered into and upon the demised premises, and ejected, expelled, put out, and amoved the said defendant from the possession thereof, and kept and continued him so ejected, expelled, &c., from thence hitherto. The only question in the case is, whether the evidence offered by the defendant, and which was rejected by the judge who tried the cause, supported the plea, or was of a character which ought to have been submitted to the jury, for them to decide whether it made out the fact of eviction or not. No actual ouster or turning out of possession is pretended. The proof offered does not show an entry by the lessor upon the premises. It does not make out even a trespass. The acts complained of as amounting to an eviction, were committed in a different part of the same house, with which the demised premises had no connection, except that the approach to each was by a common entrance. They operated not upon the physical safety of the tenant, or the physical condition of the demised premises; but upon the moral sense and feeling of the defendant. The acts were most exceptionable in themselves; and, if they could not be abated, the defendant had not only a moral right, but it was his moral duty, to abandon the scene of riot and prostitution. But they could have been abated. The law afforded a prompt and sufficient remedy. The police of the city, upon the complaint of the defendant, would have instantly taken the plaintiff and his associates into custody, and punished them by fine and imprisonment as often as the offence was repeated. There was no moral necessity, therefore, for abandoning the premises. Suppose the plaintiff had been in the habit of exhibiting himself either in the common passage or in the street opposite the premises in question, in indecent attitudes, or in a state of offensive nakedness, so that the defendant and his family could not leave his house without witnessing the disgusting exhibition: would this cause have supported a plea of eviction? They would both stand upon the footing of nuisances, which the plaintiff or any other citizen might cause to be abated. But if, instead of taking that course, he should abandon his house, it must be considered a voluntary and not a compulsory act.

But I apprehend there can be no eviction, without an actual entry. Such is the form of the plea, and the proof must sustain it. The very definition of the term "eviction" is an expulsion of the lessee out of all or some part of the demised premises; and Serjeant Williams says, that to occasion a suspension of the rent, the plea must state an eviction or expulsion of the lessee by the lessor, and a keeping him out of possession, until after the rent became due; otherwise it will be bad.

1 Saund. 204, n. (2). If a constructive expulsion, without entry, may constitute an eviction, which will operate as a suspension of the rent, why is the averment of an entry contained in all the precedents, and why do all the cases agree, that without such averment the plea would be bad? Thus, in Timbrell v. Bullock, Styles, 446, it is said that, to make a suspension of rent reserved upon a lease for years, the lessor must oust the lessee of part of the thing let, at least, and hold him out until after the day on which the rent is made payable by the lease; and if the lessee re-enters, the rent is revived. A re-entry presupposes an actual ouster or expulsion. So in Page v. Parr, Styles, 432, which was an action of covenant for rent, the defendant pleaded in bar, that the plaintiff entered into a part of the land demised, before the rent became due, and so had suspended his rent. The plaintiff replied that the defendant re-entered and so was possessed as in his former estate. To which replication there was a demurrer. And Rolle, C. J., held the demurrer well taken, on the ground that the replication did not state that the defendant, after re-entry, continued in possession until the rents were due; and judgment was given for the defendant. According to the case of Salmon v. Smith, 1 Saund. 204, and n. (2), the plea would now be held bad for omitting to state that the defendant was kept out of possession until the rent became due. But this case also clearly contemplates an actual entry or ouster by the lessor, as necessary in order to suspend the rent. So in Reynolds v. Buckle, Hob. 326, which was an action of debt for rent, the defendant pleaded that before rent due, the plaintiff entered upon him; but did not say that he did expel him or hold him out; and the plea, on that ground, was declared to be of itself an insufficient bar. But in that case it was cured by the verdict. Bushell v. Lechmore, 1 Lord Ray. 369, also decides that a mere entry or trespass without an eviction will not suspend the rent. Upon this point all the cases concur. Hunt v. Cope, 1 Cowp. 242, is a strong case. There the defendant pleaded that the lessor, with force and arms, entered upon the demised premises and demolished a summer-house (being a part of the premises), by means whereof the tenant had been deprived of the use of the summer-house, &c. This plea was held to be bad, because it did not aver an actual eviction or expulsion of the lessee. The defendant's counsel urged that the facts in the plea amounted to an eviction, on the ground that an actual entry was stated, and a destruction of a portion of the premises; and if an eviction could be constructively pleaded, this would seem to be good. But all the court held it bad, and Aston, J., says, all the cases in the books suppose the lessee to be put out of possession. Therefore, merely saying that he was deprived of the enjoyment of the premises is not sufficient. If it is necessary to state, in terms, that the lessee was turned out of possession, in order to make a good plea of eviction, it would seem to follow that the proof in support of the plea must be substantially of the same character. Lord Mansfield, in Hunt v. Cope, says that the facts there stated, might have been sufficient for the jury to have found for the defendant under a good plea of eviction. But there, it will be recollect, an actual entry, and a physical destruction of a portion of the premises are averred; and if an actual ouster can be inferred from circumstances, it surely might in that case; yet Lord Mansfield considers it as matter of doubt.

In the case before us, there was not only no actual entry, but no assertion, either express or implied, of a right of entry on the part of the lessor, or of any other right or control over the demised premises. The disturbance suffered by the lessee was the consequence of conduct on the part of the lessor which partook of the nature of a nuisance, and which he had the power of abating at pleasure. He was not, therefore, constrained by any necessity, either moral or physical, to abandon the premises; and, in judgment of law, so far as this action is concerned, his abandonment must be considered voluntary. The evidence offered was properly rejected by the judge. The motion for a new trial must be denied.

New trial refused.¹

¹ This case was carried to the Court for Correction of Errors (8 Cowen, 727), and judgment was reversed by a vote of sixteen to six. The opinion of SPENCER, Senator, for reversal, was as follows:—

SPENCER, Senator. It seems to be conceded that the only plea which could be interposed by the defendant below, to let in the defence which he offered, if any would answer that purpose, was, that the plaintiff had entered in and upon the demised premises, and ejected and put out the defendant. Such a plea was filed; and it is contended on the one side, that it must be literally proved, and an actual entry and expulsion established; while on the other side it is insisted, that a constructive entry and expulsion is sufficient, and that the facts which tended to prove it, should have been left to the jury. It is true, that "pleading is the formal mode of alleging that on the record, which would be the support or defence of the party on evidence," as defined by BULLER, J., in 1 Term Rep. 159; and the same learned judge immediately after draws the correct distinction: "whether the evidence in each particular case is a sufficient foundation for that support or defence, is a question that does not arise upon pleading, but upon the trial of the issue afterwards." In pleading, the legal effect of the facts is stated, not the facts themselves. The form of the plea, therefore, does not determine the kind of evidence necessary to establish it. To support a plea that the defendant never promised, he may prove a payment, or a performance of his undertaking, or some matters which excused him from its performance. A very familiar case is presented in the action of trover, which has been partly alluded to on the argument. The plaintiff alleges, that he casually lost the chattel, which the defendant found and converted to his own use. It is very questionable whether, if this were strictly proved precisely as alleged, it would support any action. The proof, however, to sustain it, is either that the defendant tortiously took the chattel, which is itself evidence of a conversion (and directly contrary to the allegation of finding), or that the defendant came legally into the possession of the article, and subsequently, on a demand made, refused to restore it to the owner. From this a conversion is implied. But it is plain it is not proved. So in an action against the indorser of a note, the averment of a demand of payment and of notice of non-payment, is supported by evidence of due diligence without actual demand. Again, a promise by the indorser, to pay a note, dispenses with the necessity of proving a demand and notice. There are many similar cases, where the proof of one fact justifies the legal conclusion of another fact. This, then, is a question of principle, whether the evidence offered by the defendant below tended in any manner to establish a constructive entry and eviction by the plaintiff; for if it did, it should have been left to the jury to decide on its effect.

To determine this, it seems only necessary to inquire what are the conditions,

M'MURPHY v. MINOT.

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUDICATURE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE. 1827.

[Reported 4 N. H. 251.]

THIS was an action of covenant broken on an indenture made the 12th July, 1811, by which the plaintiff demised to Seth Daniels, a certain tract of land to hold during her natural life, and the said Daniels covenanted with the plaintiff to pay her, on the first day of May, annually, a rent of $30.

The action was brought against the defendant, as assignee of express or implied, on which the defendant was to pay the rent. The agreement set forth in the plea contains a covenant that the defendant shall have "peaceable, quiet, and indisputable possession" of the premises. This is, in its nature, a condition precedent to the payment of rent; and whether the possession was peaceable and quiet, was clearly a question of fact for the jury. Such conduct of the lessor as was offered to be proved in this case, went directly to that point; and without saying at present, whether it was or was not sufficient to establish a legal disturbance, it is enough that it tended to that end, and should have been received, subject to such advice as the judge might give to the jury.

The opinion of the Supreme Court proceeds upon the ground that there must be an actual, physical eviction, to bar the plaintiffs; and in most of the cases cited, such eviction was proved; and all of them show that such is the form of the plea. But the forms of pleading given, and the cases cited, do not establish the principle on which the recovery of rent is refused, but merely furnish illustrations of that principle, and exemplifications of its application. The principle itself is deeper and more extensive than the cases. It is thus stated by Baron Gilbert, in his essay on Rents, p. 145: "A rent is something given by way of retribution to the lessor, for the land demised by him to the tenant, and consequently the lessor's title to the rent is founded upon this: that the land demised, is enjoyed by the tenant during the term included in the contract; for the tenant can make no return for a thing he has not. If therefore the tenant be deprived of the thing letten, the obligation to pay the rent ceases, because such obligation has its force only from the consideration, which was the enjoyment of the thing demised." And from this principle, the inference is drawn, that the lessor is not entitled to recover rent in the following cases: 1st. If the lands demised be recovered by a third person, by a superior title, the tenant is discharged from the payment of rent after eviction by such recovery. 2d. If a part only of the lands be recovered by a third person, such eviction is a discharge only of so much of the rent as is in proportion to the value of the land evicted. 3d. If the lessor expel the tenant from the premises, the rent ceases. 4th. If the lessor expel the tenant from a part only of the premises, the tenant is discharged from the payment of the whole rent; and the reason for the rule why there shall be no apportionment of the rent in this case as well as in that of an eviction by a stranger, is, that it is the wrongful act of the lessor himself, "that no man may be encouraged to injure or disturb his tenant in his possession, whom, by the policy of the feudal law, he ought to protect and defend."

This distinction, which is as perfectly well settled as any to be found in our books, establishes the great principle that a tenant shall not be required to pay rent, even for the part of the premises which he retains, if he has been evicted from the other part by the landlord. As to the part retained, this is deemed such a disturbance, such an injury to its beneficial enjoyment, such a diminution of the consideration upon which the contract is founded, that the law refuses its aid to coerce the payment of any rent. Here, then, is a case, where actual entry and physical eviction

Daniels, for the said rent from 1st May, 1817, to the 1st May, 1825, and was submitted to the decision of the court upon the following statement of facts.

The indenture was made as stated in the declaration, and Daniels are not necessary to exonerate the tenant from the payment of rent; and if the principle be correct as applied to a part of the premises, why should not the same principle equally apply to the whole property demised, where there has been an obstruction to its beneficial enjoyment, and a diminution of the consideration of the contract, by the acts of the landlord, although those acts do not amount to a physical eviction? If physical eviction be not necessary in the one case, to discharge the rent of the part retained, why should it be essential in the other, to discharge the rent of the whole? If I have not deceived myself, the distinction referred to settles and recognizes the principle for which the plaintiff in error contends, that there may be a constructive eviction produced by the acts of the landlord.

An eviction cannot be more than an ouster; and we have the authority of Lord Mansfield for saying that there may be a constructive ouster. In Cowper, 217, he remarks: "Some ambiguity seems to have arisen from the term actual ouster, as if it meant some act accompanied by real force, and as if a turning out by the shoulders were necessary; but that is not so: a man may come in by rightful possession, and yet hold over adversely without a title," &c.

I think the same principle governed an ancient case stated in 1 Rolle's Abridgment, 454, of which the following is a translation: "If the lessee for years of a house, covenant to repair it and leave it in as good plight as he found it, and afterwards certain sparks of fire come from a chimney in the house of the lessor, not very distant, by which the house of the lessee is burned, that shall excuse the performance of the covenant; and the lessee is not bound to rebuild, because it came of the act of the lessor himself." The analogy between the covenant to repair and that to pay rent, is sufficiently strong to justify the application of this case to the latter; and if so, it establishes the doctrine that other acts of the landlord going to diminish the enjoyment of the premises, besides an actual expulsion, will exonerate from the payment of rent.

That is precisely the principle contended for by the plaintiff in error in this case. It is a just and equitable doctrine, and has been so applied in analogous cases. In Hearn v. Tomlin, Peake's N. P. Cases, 192, which was an action for use and occupation of a wharf (depending on the same principles as an action on a lease for rent), the defendant had agreed to purchase the wharf under a representation of the plaintiff that he had a lease of it for 13 years, and entered into possession; but on discovering that the plaintiff had a lease for only 3 years, he refused to complete the purchase. Lord Kenyon held, that to maintain the action, it must appear that the occupation had been beneficial to the defendant, and that it appearing to have been injurious, the plaintiff could not recover.

We regard cases as containing the evidence of the law, as evincing the rule of decision; and they are consulted to ascertain the principle on which that rule is founded. The review of the cases now made, shows that the principle on which a tenant is required to pay rent, is the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, unmolested in any way by the landlord. It is a universal principle in all cases of contract, that a party who deprives another of the consideration on which his obligation was founded, can never recover damages for its non-fulfilment. The total failure of the consideration, especially when produced by the act of the plaintiff, is a valid defence to an action, except in certain cases, where a seal is technically held to conclude the party. This is the great and fundamental principle which led the courts to deny the lessor's right to recover rent where he had deprived the tenant of the consideration of his covenant, by turning him out of the possession of the demised premises. It must be wholly immaterial by what acts that failure of consideration has been produced; the only inquiry being, has it failed by the conduct of the lessor? This is a question of fact, and to having entered under it, afterwards conveyed all his estate to one Gilman Dudley, who, on the 3d April, 1822, conveyed the land to the defendant in fee and in mortgage. Dudley remained in possession and took the profits until his death in October, 1822, and after his decease his administratrix remained in possession, taking the profits until April, 1824. On the 16th April, 1824, a tenant entered upon part of the land under an agreement with the defendant to pay rent to him in case the land was not redeemed.

establish it, the proof offered in this case was certainly competent. I do not feel called upon to say that those facts would have been alone sufficient. Of that the jury were to judge, at least in the first instance; and the question whether they amounted to a full and complete legal defence, might have been presented in another shape. The only question for our decision is, whether that testimony ought to have been received at all? Believing that it tended to establish a constructive eviction and expulsion against the consent of the tenant; that it tended to prove a disturbance of his quiet possession, and a failure of the consideration on which only the tenant was obliged to pay rent,—I am of opinion that it ought to have been received; and that therefore the judgment of the Supreme Court should be reversed, with directions to issue a venire de novo.

I cannot omit the opportunity presented by this case, of observing, that it appears to me to be one of those within the view of the framers of our Constitution, in the organization of this court. When this court, of last resort, was declared to consist of the senators, with the chancellor and judges, it must have occurred, that the largest proportion of its members would be citizens not belonging to the legal profession. And it must, therefore, have been intended to collect here, a body of sound practical common-sense, which would not overthrow law, but which would apply the principles and reasons of the law according to the justice of each case, without regard to the technical refinements and arbitrary and fictitious rules, which will always grow upon professional men. And herein I conceive, is the great excellence of this court,—that whenever it perceives a rule established by the inferior courts, pushed to such an extent as to produce positive injustice, it is within its power, as it most certainly will always be its disposition, to rescind or modify such rule. Several signal examples of the exercise of this power might be cited in the decisions of this court. Were this, then, a case in which the law was considered settled by the Supreme Court, that nothing but a physical turning a tenant out of possession would exonerate him from the payment of his rent, it would be precisely such as would require and justify the interposition of this court to correct it,—not, by making law, but by applying its familiar and elementary principles to a new case. Suppose the landlord had established a hospital for the small-pox, the plague, or the yellow fever, in the remaining part of this house; suppose he had made a deposit of gunpowder, under the tenant, or had introduced some offensive and pestilential materials of the most dangerous nature: can there be any hesitation in saying that if, by such means, he had driven the tenant from his habitation, he should not recover for the use of that house, of which, by his own wrong, he had deprived his tenant? It would need nothing but common-sense and common justice to decide it. No man shall derive benefit from his own wrong. The idea that the tenant has some other remedy to remove the evil, does not reach the case where the injury is already inflicted. Besides, it has been entirely exploded on the argument of this cause. For, in the very case where it is admitted the tenant would be exonerated from the payment of rent, where there had been an actual eviction and physical expulsion by his landlord, he has an adequate and effectual remedy under the Statute to prevent forcible entries.

But as has been before remarked, even the cases admit that the tenant may be exonerated from rent without a physical expulsion; and there is no necessity to call upon this court to establish the law of a new case. It is already established in conformity with what appears to me the plainest dictates of justice.

On the 23d April, 1825, the administratrix of Gilman Dudley conveyed to the defendant the right in equity to redeem the land mortgaged as aforesaid, and the defendant's said tenant has been in possession of the whole tract from that time to the commencement of this action, on the 22d March, 1826.

All the interest which the plaintiff ever had in the land was an estate for her own life, and the reversion was in Daniels.

Bell, for the plaintiff.

Upham, for the defendant.

RICHARDSON, C. J. It has been urged in behalf of the defendant in this case that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything, because the rent was never demanded of Minot. The law on this point is well settled. When a lessor proceeds for a forfeiture or to enforce a penalty he must show a demand of a rent on the very day it was payable. But in an action of covenant no demand is necessary. 18 Johns. 447, Remson v. Conklin; Com. Dig. Rent, D. 4; 2 N. H. Rep. 163, Coon v. Brickett.

We are therefore of opinion that this objection to the action cannot prevail.

It has also been urged that this action cannot be maintained, because the particular estate and the reversion having become united in the same person, the particular estate is merged and the rent extinguished. Had the rent in this case been incident to the reversion, it is clear that this action could not be maintained. 2 N. H. Rep. 454, York v. Jones. But it is well settled that the rent is not inseparably incident to a reversion. Co. Lit. 143 and 47 a; 2 Bl. Com. 176.

Rent may be reserved upon a grant of a man's whole estate, in which case there can be no reversion.

The case of Webb v. Russell, 7 D. & E. 393, which has been cited by the defendant's counsel does [not] apply in this case. It was there held that where rent is incident to a particular reversion, when that particular reversion is merged, the rent is extinguished. But in this case the rent was never incident to the reversion. The plaintiff granted her whole estate reserving a rent, and she had no reversion to which it could be incident.

In order to maintain this ground it must be shown that when he who has a reversion takes a lease of the particular estate and covenants to pay rent, such rent is extinguished by the union of the particular estate and the reversion. But this proposition cannot be sustained by any reason or authority, and we are of opinion that this ground of defence fails altogether.

But it is further contended on the part of the defendant that being only a mortgagee he cannot in any event be held liable for the rent until he took possession under the mortgage, and the case of Eaton v. Jaques, Doug. 438, is cited as an authority. But that decision has been long questioned, 7 D. & E. 312, and in 1819 the question came before all the judges of England, and a great majority were of opinion that when a party takes an assignment of a lease by way of mortgage as a security for money lent, the whole interest passes to him and he becomes liable on the covenant for the payment of rent, though he has never occupied or become possessed in fact. 1 Brod. & Bing. 72, Williams v. Bosanquet et al.

In this State it has been repeatedly decided that a mortgage in fee vests in the mortgagee the whole legal estate; the necessary consequence of which seems to be that such a mortgagee must be liable for the performance of covenants running with the land. And we think in this case the defendant is liable for any rent that became due after his mortgage was executed.

In considering this case, the question occurred to us whether the liability of the defendant could be affected by the circumstance that the rent was reserved upon a grant of the freehold, while the conveyance to him was in fee. But we find that it has been decided that covenant will lie against the assignee of part of an estate for not repairing his part, for it is devisable [divisible], and follows the land. Cro. Car. 222, Congham v. King; 2 East, 580.

And we are not able to discover any reason why he who takes a larger estate should not be bound by a covenant running with a less estate which is parcel of the larger.

On behalf of the plaintiff it has been argued that the defendant is liable in this action, not only for the rent which has become due since he became owner of the land, but the rent which became due before that time.

The cases which have been cited by the defendant's counsel seem to show that the law is not so.

It is another argument in favor of the defendant, that when the action is against an assignee, it is usual to allege in assigning the breach of the covenant, that the breach happened after the assignment. 2 Chitty's Pl. 191; Lilly, 134; 6 Johns. 105, Dubois v. Van Orden; Carthew, 177; 2 Ventris, 231.

It is said in Woodfall, 274 and 338, that an assignee is liable for arrearages of rent incurred before, as well as during his enjoyment; but he cites no case in which it has been so decided, and offers no argument in support of the propositions, and we are of opinion that this is not law, and there must be judgment for the plaintiff for the rent which has become due since the 3d of April, 1822.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

LEWIS v. PAYN.

SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK. 1830.

[Reported 4 Wend. 423.]

THIS was an action of replevin, tried at the Rensselaer Circuit in July, 1828, before the Hon. William A. Duer, then one of the circuit judges.

The declaration was in the usual form for taking goods and chattels of the plaintiffs. The defendant put in two avowries, substantially alike, acknowledging the taking of the goods and chattels as a distress for six months rent in arrear, due 1st October, 1828, on a lease in fee of certain real estate, bearing date 1st April, 1818, executed by him to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs replied non tenure and riens in arrere.

On the trial the defendant proved a counterpart of a lease in fee of certain premises, executed by the defendant as lessor and the plaintiffs as lessees, bearing date 1st April, 1818, reserving an annual rent of $700, payable in equal portions on the first days of May and October in each year; in which lease was a reservation of all rents then due or thereafter to become due, on certain leases before then granted to three individuals, viz. A. Van Buren, W. Bissell, and B. Yale. By an indorsement on the lease dated 4th March, 1818, the four first payments of rent were each reduced $100, and by a subsequent indorsement, dated 7th June, 1821, it was agreed that the deduction of $100 should continue to be made upon the accruing rent. The plaintiffs produced and proved the lease in their possession, which contained a reservation of the rents due on the leases to Van Buren and others, at the date of the lease to the plaintiffs, but not of the rents thereafter to become due. Witnesses were examined on both sides as to the state of the lease and counterpart at the time of the execution of the same, in reference to the variance in relation to the accruing rent and as to the subsequent acts and declarations of the parties on the same subject. The plaintiffs also proved that after the execution of the lease to the plaintiffs, the defendant distrained property upon the premises demised to Van Buren, Bissell, and Yale, or some of them, for rent accrued upon those premises subsequent to the execution of the lease to the plaintiffs. This evidence was objected to as not amounting to an eviction; but if so, as inadmissible under the pleadings in the cause. It was received, subject to the opinion of this court.

The judge submitted to the jury the questions, whether the lease in Payn's possession had been fraudulently altered, and whether the defendant had distrained for rent accrued on the premises demised to Van Buren, Bissell, and Yale, subsequent to the execution of the lease to the plaintiffs. The jury found both questions against the defendant, and a verdict was accordingly entered for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the court.

M. T. Reynolds, for the defendant.

D. Buel, Junior, for plaintiffs.

SAVAGE, C. J. When this cause was formerly before the court (8 Cowen, 71), we had occasion to consider the effect of a fraudulent alteration of a deed by a party to be benefited by it, and we then held that such alteration avoids the deed; but as in this case there were two leases executed, both of which were originals, we held that the fraudulent alteration of one deed did not avoid the other, and that the lessor therefore was entitled, as the case was then presented, to recover the rent due, if any remained unpaid; and a new trial was accordingly ordered, the jury having found for the plaintiffs.

Upon the new trial, the question whether a fraudulent alteration of one of the leases had been made was again submitted to the jury upon testimony on both sides, and has been again decided against the defendant. On the former trial we thought the jury would have been justified in finding a verdict either way upon that question. I am of the same opinion in relation to the last trial. The evidence is nearly balanced, but the jury have placed the most reliance upon the plaintiff's witnesses, or have considered the circumstances strongest against the defendant; and under such a state of facts the verdict ought not to be disturbed as contrary to evidence.

The principal questions now to be decided are, 1st. Whether under the pleadings the plaintiffs were at liberty to prove an eviction by the lessor of part of the premises? 2d. Whether proof of the lessor's disclaiming for the rents upon the leases to Van Buren and others was sufficient evidence of an eviction? and 3d. Whether such an eviction bars the landlord from recovering his rent?

1. As to the question upon the pleadings. The evidence clearly showed that there was a holding by the plaintiffs under the defendant, and that there was rent in arrear. The defendant is therefore entitled to judgment, unless under the plea of riens in arrere, the plaintiffs are at liberty to prove an eviction. It is said that if the plaintiffs have been evicted by the defendant, such an eviction has concluded the tenancy, and that consequently no rent can be in arrear. The general principle is, that anything may be given in evidence under the general issue, which shows that no right of action ever existed; and in some cases facts may be shown which prove that no right of action existed at the commencement of the suit, though it be conceded that a right of action had once existed. In the action of debt for rent, the defendant, under the plea of nil debet, may show an eviction by the plaintiff. 1 Mod. 35, 118; 1 Ld. Raym. 370; 1 Saund. 204, n. 2. But in an action of covenant for non-payment of rent, an eviction cannot be proved, unless pleaded. Probably the reason of the distinction is, that in the action of covenant there is, strictly speaking, no general issue. The plea of non est factum has been considered the general issue for the purpose of attaching to it a notice of special matter; but it puts in issue only the execution of the instrument declared on; it does not impose upon the plaintiff the necessity of proving the breaches alleged. In the case of Horn v. Lewin, 1 Ld. Raym. 641; 12 Mod. 354, it is said by the court that riens in arrere is the general issue to an avowry. If an eviction may be shown in an action of debt for rent upon the plea of the general issue, I can see no reason why it may not in replevin upon the plea of the general issue to the avowry. Had there been a general issue in covenant, the same defence should, upon general principles, be received in that action upon the same plea. I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiffs were at liberty, under the pleadings, to show an eviction by the defendant of all or any part of the demised premises.

Where the lessor enters wrongfully into part of the demised premises, the tenant is discharged from the payment of the whole rent, till he be restored to the whole possession; and this that no man may be encouraged to injure or disturb his tenant in his possession. 6 Bac. Abr. 49; Co. Lit. 148 b. If the lord or lessor disseises or ousts the tenant or lessee of any part, the whole rent is suspended as it is held in Arcough's Case, 9 Coke, 135. In Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cowen, 728, this principle is recognized and adopted as correct. In that case it was said that such a defence could be given in evidence under a plea of eviction only; that, however, was an action of covenant, in which there is no general issue. In the case of Watts v. Coffin, 11 Johns. R. 499, it was said by Van Ness, Justice, that an eviction to produce an apportionment or a suspension of the rent, must be of part or the whole of the thing demised.

Did, then, the distress upon the lots held under the prior leases amount to an eviction? Hunt v. Cope, Cowp. 242, was an action of replevin in which the defendant avowed for rent, to which the plaintiff pleaded, 1. No rent in arrear; and 2. That before the distress, the defendant (the lessor) unlawfully entered into a garden, part of the demised premises, and pulled down a summer-house. To this plea there was a demurrer and joinder, and judgment was given for the plaintiff (the tenant). But upon a writ of error to the King's Bench, the judgment was reversed; and the only question argued was, whether the facts amounted to an eviction. Lord Mansfield said that the question turned upon the pleading; that the rule of law was clear; that to occasion a suspension of the rent, there must be an eviction or expulsion of the lessee, but this plea merely stated a trespass; that the lessee should have pleaded an eviction, and then the facts which were stated might have been sufficient for the jury to have found a verdict in his favor. And in Dyett v. Pendleton it seems to be held that any obstruction by the landlord to the beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, or a diminution of the consideration of the contract by the acts of the landlord, amounts to a constructive eviction. The acts of the landlord in this case are, distraining for rent due on the prior leases, after he had conveyed all his interest in them to the plaintiffs in this suit. This, under the decisions which have been made, amounts to something more than a constructive eviction, and is sufficient to cause a suspension of the rent.

It is contended, however, that an ouster by the landlord which suspends the payment of the rent, must be not only an entry upon the demised premises (for instance, the act of distressing), but there must be a continuance in possession, so that the tenant is deprived of the occupancy; and that as the distress complained of took place before the accruing of the rent for which the distress was made, which is the foundation of the suit, the court are to presume that the tenants have subsequently had the full enjoyment of all the demised premises. In the absence of proof on that subject, the legal presumption is that the tenant, having been ousted of a part of the premises, continues out of possession; and such presumption can only be rebutted by evidence of their having been subsequently restored. But when it is recollect ed that the very gist of this action is, the right to the rents of which the defendants were ousted by the distress complained of, to presume a restoration of the premises, would be presuming contrary to the allegations of the defendant himself.

The defendant, therefore, is not entitled to recover any rent of the plaintiffs until he restores to them the entire possession of the premises demised, and the plaintiffs are entitled to judgment.

FOLTS v. HUNTLEY.

SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK. 1831.

[Reported 7 Wend. 210.]

ERROR from the Onondaga Common Pleas. Folts sued Huntley in a justice's court, and declared in covenant on certain articles of agreement, bearing date 7th June, 1814, executed under seal by the parties, which, after reciting that Huntley, for the benefit of a saw-mill erected by him, had diverted the water of the Limestone Creek, along the bank thereof, on the land of Folts, proceeded as follows: "Now therefore, in consideration and upon condition of the payment of the rent herein-after mentioned, on (the part of) the said Huntley (to be paid), the said George Folts doth hereby for himself, his heirs and assigns, lease and demise to the said Timothy Huntley, his heirs and assigns, the use of the water in said creek, with so much of the bank as may be necessary to continue the diversion of the water as aforesaid, with the privilege of digging gravel in the bank of the said creek, for the purpose of repairing and improving his dam and water-works, for such term of time, and upon the express condition, that if he, the said Timothy Huntley, his heirs or assigns, shall pay, or cause to be paid to the said George Folts, his heirs or assigns, annually and every year, on the first day of March, the sum of six dollars, from and after the first day of March, 1813; and shall also, for the accommodation of the said Folts, his heirs and assigns, make and keep in repair a bridge across the said Huntley's upper flume, and a road from thence through the bank to the flat lands; and shall also keep in repair a good fence on the bank the whole length of the said race-way on the said Folt's land; and shall build his dam across the said creek against and at the place where the upper flume now stands, and shall not so build his dam as to raise the water more than two feet above low-water mark. And the said Timothy Huntley doth hereby, for himself, his heirs or assigns, covenant and agree to and with the said George Folts, his heirs and assigns, to pay the rent above reserved, to build," &c., covenanting to perform all and singular, the premises above specified on his part to be performed. The plaintiff's declaration was for breaches of the several covenants contained in the agreement above set forth. The defendant pleaded the general issue, and attached to his plea a notice of various matters intended to be given in evidence on the trial. The justice gave judgment for the plaintiff for $13 damages, and the defendant appealed to the Common Pleas. On the trial in the Common Pleas, the plaintiff claimed to recover damages only for such breaches of the agreement as had happened since 1st March, 1828, and proved that since that time Huntley had not maintained the bridges, or kept the road and fences in repair specified in the agreement, and gave evidence of the amount of damages sustained by him by reason thereof. The omissions of Huntley were proved by his admissions; and in the same conversation he said that the State had taken away his water, and he did not consider himself under any obligation to keep the bridges, road and fences in repair; that the mill had run for two or three years after the Canal Commissioners took the water, but did not do much business, and that for two years it had not run at all. The plaintiff proved an admission of Huntley, that he had sold his privilege to the State, and proceeded to inquire as to the amount received by him, but the evidence was objected to, and overruled, and it subsequently appearing that the transfer made by Huntley was in writing, the court decided that the writing must be produced, and that the evidence of the admissions of a transfer must be excluded from the consideration of the jury. The plaintiff then offered in evidence a copy of a receipt, purporting to be signed by Huntley, certified by the Deputy Comptroller of the State, under the seal of office of the Comptroller, as being on file in the Comptroller's office, by which, under date of December 9, 1825, Huntley acknowledged the receipt of $1,000 of one of the Canal Commissioners, in full for the water of the Limestone Creek, taken to feed the Erie Canal, whereby his saw-mill was deprived of water, and rendered useless. This evidence was objected to, and overruled. It appeared that the water of the Limestone Creek was in 1825 taken to feed the Erie Canal, above where Huntley was to take it, and that since the 1st March, 1828, his mill had been useless. The plaintiff having rested, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the grounds, 1st. That the contract was conditional, and that when Huntley ceased to pay rent the contract was at an end; and 2d. That the water of the creek having been appropriated by the Canal Commissioners, the Statute under which it was thus taken disannulled the lease or agreement, and discharged Huntley from the performance of his covenants. The court sustained these objections, and nonsuited the plaintiff; judgment was entered for the defendant, and the plaintiff sued out his writ of error.

BY THE COURT, NELSON, J. The first question in this case is whether the defendant could avoid the lease by refusing to fulfil the covenants; or, in other words, whether the performance of the covenants were at his option. The intention of the parties, to be gathered from a view of the whole agreement, the criterion by which to give a construction to any part, giving effect, if consistent and reasonable, to the whole (1 Selw. 339); and if there be any ambiguity, such construction must prevail as is most strong against the covenantor, for he might have expressed himself more clearly. The principle has been applied to the construction of leases. Webb v. Dixon, 9 East, 15.

Now yielding to the interpretation urged by the defendant, there would be no mutuality in the agreement, or consideration to the plaintiff, for the benefit would be all on one side, and the obligation on the other; and though this might not make a covenant void ab initio, Shubricks v. Salmon, 3 Burr. 1637; Lowe v. Peers, 4 Id. 2225, it will at least require strong and express provisions to induce the court to come to that conclusion. I have no doubt that it was the intention of both parties, as well from the subject-matter and nature of the agreement as from a reasonable sense of the words themselves, that each was to be bound. The agreement was inartificially drawn; but the true reading is, that Folts covenants to lease to Huntley the use of the waters in Limestone Creek, with so much of the bank, &c., for the time and upon the condition that Huntley pays the rent, keeps in repair bridges, &c.; and then follows an express covenant on the part of Huntley, his heirs, &c., to Folts, his heirs, &c., to pay the rent, build and keep in repair the bridges, &c.

The true construction of this agreement is given in the case of Canfield v. Westcott, 5 Cowen, 270, and the cases in the note (a), to wit, that on a failure to pay rent, or to build and keep in repair bridges, &c., on the part of the defendant, the plaintiff might consider the lease forfeited, and re-enter by action of ejectment, or waive the forfeiture and sue, as he has done here, upon the express covenant.

There can be no doubt the lease is a perpetual one. It is by Folts, his heirs, &c., to Huntley, his heirs and assigns, for such time as he shall pay the rent and fulfil other stipulations. So long, then, as Huntley, his heirs or assigns, pay the rent and comply with these stipulations, they are entitled to all the rights and privileges under it; and we have shown that Folts can enforce the payment of rent, &c., upon the express covenant of Huntley, and that it is not at the election of the latter to put an end to it. It therefore necessarily follows that the lease continues until put an end to by the mutual agreement of the parties to it, or till the plaintiff may elect to claim a forfeiture in the default of the lessee to pay, &c.

In the next place, it is contended that the diversion of the Limestone Creek by the Canal Commissioners, to be used as a feeder to the Erie Canal, being under the authority of law, is to be considered in the nature of an eviction by paramount title, and therefore a bar to the suit for rent, or for the breach of any other covenant; and so the court below decided. The term demised in the lease undoubtedly implied a covenant of quiet enjoyment, at least during the life of the lessor (Woodfall, 243; Shep. T. 160); and eviction under a superior and lawful title of the whole or any part of the demised premises, would constitute a valid defence. 1 Selw. 390; Cro. Eliz. 214; Johns. Dig. 440, tit. Covenant (c); Pendleton v. Dyett, 4 Cowen, 581. It is obvious, however, for many reasons, that this act of the Canal Commissioners, though lawful, is not an eviction within the meaning or spirit of the term, and can afford no defence to this suit. It was not inconsistent with, but entirely independent of a perfect right and title in the plaintiff to lease the demised premises, and rested upon great public considerations, paramount to all and every title to the property. Nor is the reason upon which this defence is founded applicable, to wit, that rents shall not be paid after the premises demised are gone. It is a fundamental principle that private property cannot be appropriated to public purposes without a just compensation; and accordingly the Statute empowering the Commissioners or their agents "to enter upon and use all and singular any lands, waters, and streams necessary for the prosecution of the improvement," &c., provided compensation for any injury produced to any individual by the exercise of this power. If the defendant has not already obtained his remuneration (which he probably has), the law affords him a perfect remedy, to the extent of the injury which his property has sustained by the diversion of the stream; he, and not the plaintiff, can pursue it. On another ground, it is not in the power even of the Legislature to impeach or disannul the covenants in this case. Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheaton, 122, 192, 209; Mather v. Bush, 16 Johns. R. 233.

LAWRENCE v. FRENCH.

SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK. 1841.

[Reported 25 Wend. 443.]

THIS was an action of replevin, tried at the Albany Circuit in June, 1839, before the Hon. John P. Cushman, one of the circuit judges.

The plaintiff, on 12th December, 1835, took a lease of the defendant of a building in the city of Albany called the Exchange Coffee-House, for the term of one year from the first day of May, 1836, at an annual rent of $1,050, payable quarterly. He had, since May, 1834, been in possession of the whole of the premises demised, except one room in the corner of the building, which was occupied by one Candy. On the first day of May, 1836, Candy, under a prior lease from the defendant, at an annual rent of $400, continued in the occupation of the room; and the plaintiff continued to occupy all the residue of the building, until 17th January, 1837; when the defendant issued a distress warrant, claiming $487.50, to be due to him from the plaintiff for three quarters' rent, estimating the rent by deducting $400 from the annual rent reserved in the lease to the plaintiff; thus charging the plaintiff with an annual rent of only $650, for three fourths of which sum the warrant was issued. The property of the plaintiff was distrained to the amount of $487.50; and the plaintiff sued out a writ of replevin. It was conceded by the plaintiff that $650 per annum was a fair price for the use of that portion of the premises occupied by him; but he insisted that the defendant, not having put him into possession of the whole of the demised premises, had no authority by law to distrain for the rent reserved, or any part thereof; and so requested the judge to charge the jury. The judge refused so to charge; and on the contrary, instructed the jury that the defendant had a lawful right to make the distress for the sum demanded, and was entitled to their verdict. The jury accordingly found a verdict for the defendant, with six cents damages and six cents costs; found the rent to be $487.50, and the value of the property at the same sum; and assessed the damages of the defendant at $10, for the detention of the property. The plaintiff having excepted to the charge of the judge, moved for a new trial.

BY THE COURT, NELSON, C. J. It is a familiar rule of law, that if the landlord enter wrongfully upon, or prevent the tenant from the enjoyment of, a part of the demised premises, it suspends the whole rent until possession is restored. His title is founded upon this, that the land leased is enjoyed by the tenant during the term; if, therefore, he be deprived of it, the obligation to pay ceases. The rule is otherwise where a part is recovered by title paramount to the lessor's; for, in that case, he is not so far considered in fault, as that it should deprive him of a return for the part remaining. The law, therefore, directs an apportionment of the rent, 6 Bacon's Abr. 44, tit. Rent, L.; Gilbert on Rents, 173; Comyn's Land. and Ten. 214-219; Bradby on Dist. 24-30. But as between lessor and lessee, an eviction from part by the former, or any person claiming through him, will operate a suspension of the whole, Comyn's Land. and Ten. 524; 2 Saund. Pl. and Ev. 630. There are some cases illustrating this principle to which I will refer.

A mere trespass, by the lessor, will not suspend the rent, as where he entered and destroyed a building, Cowp. 242; but where he railed off a part of the premises, the act had that effect, 3 Camp. 513. So where he gave notice to an under-tenant to quit, and he did accordingly, it was held to amount to an eviction, 1 Stark. R. 94; also in case of a demise to another after the tenant had left the premises, 5 Barn. & Cres. 332.

The case of Ludwell v. Newman, 6 T. R. 458, in principle comes near the present one. It was an action on a covenant of quiet enjoyment in a lease. The breach was, that the plaintiff could not obtain the possession; that he applied to the tenant to attorn, who refused; an action of ejectment was brought, and defeated by a previous lease of the defendant, given the month before; by reason of all which the plaintiff was prevented from enjoying the term, &c. The second count was like the first, except it omitted the application to attorn, and proceedings in ejectment. Defective pleas were put in to each count, to which there were demurrers. One objection taken to the pleas was this: they stated the plaintiff might lawfully have enjoyed during the first half year; when it appeared by the declaration, that he could not have entered at any time on account of the prior lease. The court held, that the defendant's covenant of quiet enjoyment meant a legal entry and enjoyment, without the permission of any other person; which could not take place on account of the prior subsisting lease granted to R. See Platt on Cov. 327. The case decides that the lessee is not bound to test his right of entry by suit, as the only legal evidence of a breach of the covenant; nor need he commit a trespass by an actual entry. Platt on Cov. 327; Hob. 12; 2 Bacon, 66, B.

In Tomlinson v. Day, 2 Brod. & Bing. 680, the defendant took a farm under an agreement, by which the plaintiff stipulated that he should enjoy the exclusive right of sporting over the manor in which the farm lay, and should occupy the glebe land of the parish; rent, £450. The agreement, though acknowledged and recognized by the defendant, had never been signed by him; but he occupied the farm for some time. The chief inducement in taking it was the privilege of sporting; but it turned out the plaintiff had no power to grant the privilege, and the defendant was in fact warned off by the occupiers of the manor. Neither did he get possession of the glebe. In an action for use and occupation, the court held that an eviction of a part of the subject-matter of the demise had been proved, and allowed a recovery for no more than the annual value of the farm. Though the rule for a time seems to have been inflexible, that in these cases the whole rent should be suspended till possession was restored, the last case referred to shows that if the tenant occupies part, he may be charged for such occupation upon a quantum meruit.

In Smith v. Raleigh, 3 Camp. 513, 514, n., the defendant had agreed to take the premises at an entire rent, and possession was delivered; after which the plaintiff railed off a part of the garden, and the defendant thereupon returned the key. Lord Ellenborough held, that this amounted to an eviction from part of the demised premises, and a complete answer to the action. This case was afterwards recognized by Dallas, J., in Stokes v. Cooper, in which the rule was laid down, that after an eviction from part, the lessor cannot recover upon the original contract; and the tenant, by giving up possession of the residue, is entirely discharged; but if after the eviction he continues, he shall be liable on a quantum meruit. Comyn's Land. and Ten. 217, 452; 15 Mass. R. 268.

The result of all these cases, I think, shows that the defendant here has deprived himself of the remedy by distress. The eviction from part of the demised premises, by means of his prior lease, defeated the contract; and though the tenant is still liable by reason of his occupation of the residue, the holding is not strictly under the original agreement, but an implied obligation arises to pay the worth of them at the times specified therein. No fixed rent is due, and therefore distress is not the appropriate remedy. It would be unjust to allow it here, as the party himself has put it out of the power of the tenant to tender the amount. His rights will be sufficiently protected by allowing the usual redress, where no specific rent has been agreed on. 5 Barn. & Ald. 322.

New trial granted.

OGILVIE v. HULL.

SUPREME COURT OF NEW YORK. 1843.

[Reported 5 Hill, 52.]

ERROR to the New York Common Pleas, where Ogilvie sued W. and J. C. Hull, in debt, to recover the last year's rent claimed to be due upon a lease of a store in the city of New York. The lease was executed by one Brantingham to the defendants for the term of seven years from May 1st, 1834, and contained a covenant by the lessees to pay an annual rent of $700. In the month of March, 1835, the lease was assigned to the plaintiff, and he took a conveyance in fee of the demised premises.

The defence was, an eviction by the plaintiff. The evidence in respect to the eviction was substantially as follows: During the years ending in 1838, 1839, and 1840, one Utter occupied the premises as tenant of the defendants; and, on the 1st of February, 1840, the plaintiff called on Utter to ascertain if he desired to continue in the occupation of the store for another year. Utter informed him that he did, and, in reply to an inquiry of the plaintiff, said he was willing to pay $600 rent. The plaintiff refused this proposition, and soon after posted a bill on the store announcing that it was "to let." Some three weeks afterwards the plaintiff again called on Utter, and offered to let him have the store for $700 and taxes. Utter was dissatisfied with the price, and the negotiation between him and the plaintiff ceased. About a week before Utter's term expired, the plaintiff told him that, on looking over his papers, he found the defendants' lease did not expire till May, 1841, and that he had therefore nothing to do with the store. This information was immediately communicated by Utter to a clerk of the defendants, but not at the plaintiff's request. It further appeared that, in February, 1839, Utter was told by one of the defendants' clerks that the lease in question expired on the 1st of May, 1840; and from such information, in connection with the plaintiff's subsequent acts, Utter was induced to believe that the plaintiff had control of the premises, and therefore did not apply to the defendants for a new lease. Before he was advised of his mistake he had rented another store. It did not appear that the defendants attempted to rent the store for the last year, or that they took any interest in the matter. The court, in charging the jury, submitted to them whether the acts of the plaintiff, between February and May, 1840, did not amount to a constructive eviction. They remarked that, if the plaintiff entered upon the premises with intent to exercise his control as landlord, and had done so, it might amount to a constructive eviction, although the tenant in possession held under the defendants and had paid rent to them up to the 1st of May. They added, that, if the landlord interfered with the defendants' tenant, or the demised premises, in such a manner as to cause the tenant to move away, and by reason thereof the premises remained vacant for the following year, it would amount to a constructive eviction. The plaintiff's counsel excepted to the charge, and the jury rendered a verdict for the defendants. After judgment, the plaintiff sued out a writ of error.

J. M. Martin, for the plaintiff in error.

W. C. Wetmore, for the defendant in error.

BY THE COURT, NELSON, C. J. No case, I apprehend, has carried the doctrine of constructive eviction to the extent laid down by the court below. The most that can be made out of the facts are these: The landlord (wilfully, if you please, though it was evidently through mistake) undertook to let the premises himself, before the expiration of the lease to the defendants and at the usual time for leasing in the city, by negotiating with the sub-tenant; and, on failing to agree with him, posted a bill on the premises, which continued till some short time before the year expired, when he abandoned all further interference. There was no interference by the landlord, or by any one claiming under him, with the actual use or occupation of the premises. The lessees had the undisturbed possession by their sub-tenant, until his term expired, and they might have had it till the expiration of their lease. The only ground for saying there has been an eviction, is the possible injury to the defendants, arising out of the mistaken or ill-advised interference of the plaintiff in the several attempts to lease the premises himself. This may, indirectly and remotely, have embarrassed the letting by the defendants, though it does not appear in the case that they interested themselves in any manner with a view to re-letting, or that they complained of or protested against the conduct of the plaintiff in the matter. They appear to have been perfectly passive and silent throughout.

Now, no general principle is better settled or more uniformly adhered to than that there must be an entry and expulsion of the tenant by the landlord, or some deliberate disturbance of the possession depriving the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, to operate a suspension or extinguishment of the rent. The cases are collected and well considered by Mr. Justice Kennedy in Bennett v. Bittle and Another, 4 Rawle, 339, and they establish the proposition stated beyond all manner of doubt. It would be a work of supererogation to go over them again, after the full and satisfactory review there taken. Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cowen, 727, decided in the Court for the Correction of Errors, shows only an application of the doctrine to an extreme case. That adjudication is not to be regarded as introducing a new principle, nor as establishing an exception to the general rule. There, the grossly lewd and immoral conduct of the landlord in the adjoining premises (another part of the same dwelling) was so offensive to common decency, and accompanied with such riotous and outrageous disturbances, as effectually to destroy the quiet occupation and beneficial enjoyment of the demised tenement, and render it uninhabitable by respectable people. This was considered such a disturbance and destruction of the reasonable use and occupation of the premises, as amounted to a virtual expulsion of the tenant.

I admit, a wrong may have been committed in this case against the lessees, by interfering with the right of renting the demised premises, which belonged exclusively to themselves; but I am unable to see how it can be said, within any rule of law that has ever been established, that here has been such an invasion of their possession and enjoyment as will bar an action for the rent. Slander of their title by the landlord would embarrass and prejudice the letting; but no one would think of attaching to it the consequences contended for in this case. The law has provided a different remedy. So of a trespass committed upon the premises by the landlord. Bennett v. Bittle and Another, 4 Rawle, 339; Lawrence v. French, 25 Wend. 443, 445.

The case of Burns v. Phelps, 1 Stark R. 94, is much relied on by the defendants; but the decision there made must be confined to the facts upon which it was founded. It might have applied here, if the sub-tenant had quit during his term and left the store vacant, in consequence of any threats or improper interference of the landlord. The latter would not be permitted to recover rent from his lessees for the remaining unexpired term of the sub-tenant, whom he had virtually expelled from the premises. In this case there was no attempt to disturb him during his term. He left at the expiration of it because he could not agree about the rent for the next year. He never sought to lease again of the lessees, nor did they endeavor to lease to him. They must have known, or should have known, that they had the control of the store; and, for aught that appears in the case, they might have rented to Utter for the ensuing year, had they taken any steps for that purpose. The failure is owing more to their own remissness and neglect, than to the interference of the plaintiff.

Judgment reversed.

MORSE v. GODDARD.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1847.

[Reported 13 Met. 177.]

THIS was an action of debt, brought to recover five dollars, the amount of one month's rent of a tenement. At the trial in the Court of Common Pleas, before Washburn, J., on appeal from a justice of the peace, the plaintiff put into the case a lease, made by him to the defendant, dated January 6th, 1846, of a certain tenement, for one year, reserving rent in monthly payments, and stated that the action was brought for the rent of the month ending April 6th, 1846. The defendant admitted that he entered into the tenement, under the lease, and that he was still in possession. But he proposed to show, in defence, that in February, 1846, W. M. Benedict and P. Merrick, being the owners of the tenement, entered into the same, and required the defendant to pay rent to them, and that he, in order to prevent being expelled therefrom, agreed to pay rent to them, after that time. The plaintiff objected to the competency of such evidence; but the court ruled that it was admissible. Thereupon the defendant introduced evidence tending to show that, on the 21st of February, 1846, the attorney of said Benedict and Merrick (in company with two witnesses) met the plaintiff in the street, and informed him that he was going to take possession of that part of the house in which the defendant lived; that said attorney and two witnesses went to the house, and went into the part occupied by the defendant, and told him they had come to turn him out unless he would agree to attorn, and become the tenant of said Benedict and Merrick, and pay rent to them; that the defendant yielded, and agreed so to pay rent; that they went from the house, and found the plaintiff, and told him what had been done, and what the defendant had agreed to do. It did not appear that any evidence was shown to the defendant, at that time, of any title in Benedict and Merrick. In order to prove their title at the trial, the defendant introduced sundry deeds, and other evidence. See Benedict v. Morse, 10 Met. 223.

The judge instructed the jury, that if the defendant bona fide yielded possession of the premises to Benedict and Merrick, to prevent being actually expelled, and the plaintiff then had notice of this; and if the defendant had satisfactorily proved that Benedict and Merrick owned the estate by a good title, and had a right to take immediate possession, at the time when they undertook to turn the defendant out of possession — their title and possession being adverse to those of the defendant and his lessor — such yielding of possession was equivalent to an actual ouster, and was competent evidence in defence to the plaintiff's claim, sued in this action, for rent accruing after such yielding of possession; the burden of proof being upon the defendant.

The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff excepted to the judge's instructions.

Bridges, for the plaintiff.

Randall and Hartshorn, for the defendant.

SHAW, C. J. In a justice action of debt for a month's rent, the defence was, that the defendant had been ousted, by persons having a paramount title, before the commencement of the time for which the rent was claimed.

The defendant offered evidence to show, that persons having a valid title, paramount to that of the defendant and his lessor, the plaintiff, and having an immediate right of entry, and of possession under it, made an actual entry on the premises, and required the defendant to pay rent to them from the time of such entry, or quit the premises. But it is objected to this defence, that a tenant cannot contest the title of his lessor, nor set up a paramount adverse title in a third person. And we think it well settled, that a lessee, taking the estate of his lessor, and entering into possession under it, admits his title, and is estopped from denying that title; or, what is in effect the same thing, is estopped from setting up an outstanding title in a third person. Doe v. Smythe, 4 M. & S. 347; Doe v. Mills, 2 Adolph. & Ellis, 17. But this is not inconsistent with another rule, that where there is an eviction or ouster of the lessee, by a title paramount, which he cannot resist, it is a good bar to the demand for rent, on the plain ground of equity, that the enjoyment of the estate is the consideration for the covenant to pay rent, and when the lessee is deprived of the benefit, he cannot be held to pay the compensation. Bac. Ab. Rent, L. Cruise's Dig. tit. 28, c. 3. It is not enough, therefore, that a third party has a paramount title; but, to excuse the payment of rent, the defendant must have been ousted or evicted under that title. Hunt v. Cope, Cowp. 242; Pendleton v. Dyett, 4 Cow. 581.

But an eviction under a judgment of law is not necessary. An actual entry, by one having a paramount title and present right of entry, is an ouster of the tenant. He cannot lawfully hold against the title of such party. He is not bound to hold unlawfully, and subject himself to an action, and is not, therefore, compellable to resist such entry. Hamilton v. Cutts, 4 Mass. 349. So, when an execution creditor is put into possession by the sheriff, under the levy of an execution, he has the actual and exclusive possession, and may maintain trespass. Gore v. Brazier, 3 Mass. 523.

There is a recent case, which seems to us alike in principle. Smith v. Shepard, 15 Pick. 147. A mortgagor in possession made a lease for years, reserving rent. Afterwards, the mortgagee, having a paramount title, entered, as he lawfully might, with right to take the rents and profits. In a suit by lessor against lessee for rent, such entry under a paramount title was held to be an ouster, and a good bar to the action.

It is to be understood, that when a tenant thus relies on an ouster in pais, without judgment, he has the burden of proving the validity of the elder title, the actual entry under it, and that he acted in good faith, and without collusion with the party entering.

The instruction to the jury was, that if the defendant, bona fide, had yielded possession of the premises to Benedict and Merrick, to prevent being actually expelled; that the plaintiff had notice of this; and that, upon the evidence, Benedict and Merrick had a good title, paramount to that of the defendant and his lessor, and the right of immediate possession; their entry was equivalent to an actual ouster, and was a good defence to the action for rent. This direction, we think, was right; and the jury, by returning a verdict for the defendant, affirmed these facts.

Exceptions overruled.

CHRISTOPHER v. AUSTIN.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1854.

[Reported 11 N. Y. 216.]

APPEAL from a judgment of the New York Common Pleas. The action was brought by Thomas Vermilya in that court to recover for the use and occupation of a dwelling-house and three lots of ground from the 1st of May, 1847, to the 1st of May, 1848. The cause was tried before Judge Woodruff, without a jury. He found "that the defendant, by agreement not under seal, hired from the plaintiff the demised premises, from the 1st of May, 1847, to the 1st of May, 1848, at the rent of two hundred dollars, payable quarterly, and entered into the possession thereof under the agreement; that afterwards, and before any rent became payable, the plaintiff entered upon the demised premises and evicted the defendant from a part thereof, which eviction continued during the whole residue of the term ; that notwithstanding such eviction, the defendant voluntarily continued to enjoy, use and occupy the residue of the premises until the expiration of the term on the first of May, 1848 ; that after the first of February, 1848, the plaintiff prosecuted the defendant in an action of assumpsit upon the agreement, to recover the three quarters' rent, due on that day ; in such action the defendant interposed as a defence the eviction of him by the plaintiff from a part of the demised premises, and upon trial of this issue a verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant, upon which judgment was entered." The judge decided as matter of law upon said facts, that such wrongful eviction of the defendant from a part of the premises, suspended the rent, and that the plaintiff could not recover for the use and enjoyment of the residue of the premises while such eviction continued ; and therefore, whether the record and judgment in the former action were or not a bar to a recovery for the use and occupation from May 1st, 1847, to February 1st, 1848, that the eviction having continued during the whole term, this action for a compensation for the use and occupation of the residue of the premises, could not be sustained ; and directed judgment in favor of the defendant. On an appeal by the plaintiff, the Court of Common Pleas, at General Term, affirmed the judgment. The plaintiff appealed to this court.

During the pendency of the suit, Vermilya, the plaintiff, died, and the suit was continued in the name of Christopher, his executor.

A. S. Garr, for the appellant.

M. G. Harrington, for the respondent.

PARKER, J. The judge found the fact that after the leasing of the premises for one year, viz., from the first day of May, 1847, to the 1st of May, 1848, by a written lease, not under seal, at a rent of $200, payable quarterly, and after the defendant had entered into possession under such agreement, before any rent had become payable, the plaintiff entered upon the premises and evicted the said tenant from a part thereof, which eviction continued during the whole residue of the term of the hiring.

It is contended by the plaintiff's counsel, that although such an eviction would be a bar to an action on the agreement to pay rent, yet that it is no bar to an action under the Statute to recover a reasonable sum for the use and occupation, if the tenant continue to occupy a portion of the premises after such eviction from a part. There is no reason for such a distinction, nor can it be sustained by authority. The rule is, that if the landlord enter wrongfully upon or prevent the tenant from the enjoyment of a part of the demised premises, the whole rent is suspended till the possession is restored. The Fitchburg Corporation v. Melven, 15 Mass. R. 268. Nelson, C. J., said in Lawrence v. French, 25 Wend. 445, "his (the landlord's) title is founded upon this, that the land leased is enjoyed by the tenant during the term : if, therefore, he be deprived of it, the obligation to pay ceases." And Spencer, Senator, in Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cowen, 731, states as the reason for the rule, "as to the part retained, this is deemed such a disturbance, such an injury to its beneficial enjoyment, such a diminution of the consideration upon which the contract is founded, that the law refuses its aid to coerce the payment of any rent." It would be a palpable evasion of the rule and of the penalty the law imposes upon the landlord for a wrongful eviction, to hold that he may recover for use and occupation on a quantum meruit, when he is not permitted to recover on the agreement itself.

The exception to the rule is where a part is recovered by title paramount to the lessor's; for in that case he is not so far considered in fault, as that it should deprive him of a return for the part remaining. Lawrence v. French, 25 Wend. 445; 8 Bac. Abr. 514, tit. Rent, L.; Gilbert on Rents, 173. And where the tenant enters, but is prevented from obtaining the whole of the premises, by a person holding a part under a prior lease executed by the landlord, it has been placed upon the same footing as an eviction by title paramount, and the landlord has been permitted to recover for use and occupation on a quantum meruit. Lawrence v. French, 25 Wend. 443; Ludwell v. Newman, 6 Term R. 458; Tomlinson v. Day, 2 Brod. & Bing. 680.

I know the rule has been laid down in some of the elementary books, Story on Cont. § 657; Taylor, Lan. & Ten. 443, to be that when the rent is entire and the landlord evicts the tenant during his term out of part of the premises, he may abandon the residue, and is not chargeable for the occupation of any part; but that if the tenant still continue to occupy the residue, he is chargeable upon a quantum meruit. The rule has been thus stated on the authority of two nisi prius cases, viz.: Smith v. Raleigh, 3 Camp. 513, and Stokes v. Cooper, a case not reported but referred to in a note to the same case, as having been decided by Dallas, J., at the Worcester Lent Assizes. In Smith v. Raleigh it appeared the tenant abandoned the premises after being evicted from a part, but the decision was not put by Lord Ellenborough on that ground, and I think the tenant would equally have been entitled to judgment, if he had remained in possession of the residue. The only case that can be found favoring the idea that a tenant who remains in possession of the residue during the term, after an eviction from part, is chargeable, is that of Stokes v. Cooper, above cited. And that is not sufficiently reported to enable us to know what were the facts of the case; and if it were so, it would be entitled only to the weight due to a hastily made decision at the circuit. If the decision was what it is claimed to have been, it is at war with the rule of law as it has been generally stated in well-considered cases. The consequence of an eviction from part is not merely a discharge of the tenant from the rent, provided he abandons the residue, but it is a discharge of the tenant from any rent or liability for the occupation of the residue during the term of hiring. In Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cowen, 731, Spencer, Senator, said: "This distinction, which is as perfectedly well settled as any to be found in the books, establishes the great principle that a tenant shall not be required to pay rent, even for the part of the premises which he retains, if he has been evicted from the other part by the landlord ;" and the rule as recognized in other cases and generally stated in the treatises is, that an eviction from part will operate as a suspension of the whole. 24 Wend. 445; Comyn's Land. & Ten. 524; 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 630.

I suppose it is the right of the tenant under such circumstances to remain in possession of the residue during the term, and that he can neither be made liable on the original lease nor in an action for use and occupation, unless he holds over after the expiration of his term.

If I am right in this conclusion, the wrongful eviction of the defendant was a bar to the plaintiff's right of recovery for the use of the premises in any form, and it is not necessary to consider whether, or to what extent, the litigation of the same subject-matter or of three fourths of it at least, in the former action, would have constituted a good defence.

There are no questions properly before us for examination, except those presented by the bill of exceptions. We cannot review the decision of the court below, on the motion to set aside the judgment, on the grounds of surprise and irregularity. These were matters of discretion, and did not involve the merits. I think the judgment of the court below should be affirmed.

GARDINER, C. J., also delivered an opinion in favor of affirmance.

Judgment affirmed.

EDGERTON v. PAGE.

COURT OF APPEALS OF NEW YORK. 1859.

[Reported 20 N. Y. 281.]

APPEAL from the Common Pleas of the city and county of New York. Action to recover one quarter's rent of the first floor of brick building No. 8 Fulton Street in said city, for the quarter ending May 1st, 1855, leased by the plaintiff to the defendant for one year from May 1st, 1854, at a yearly rent of $1,500, payable quarterly on the first days of August, November, February, and May. The defendant in his answer set out a copy of the lease, by which it appeared that the defendant was to have the privilege of renewal for one year at the same rent. The answer alleged that this privilege was one of the main inducements on the part of the defendant to the taking of the lease, and one of the principal causes of its value. The answer further alleged that the plaintiff, between the first days of February and May, 1855, was the occupant of the entire upper part of the building in question, and also of the adjoining building ; that between those days, and while the defendant occupied the demised premises, the plaintiff wantonly, maliciously, and negligently permitted certain water-pipes, coming down through the rear of the building and communicating with a sewer under the demised premises, and which pipes were used for carrying off the waste water from the upper stories of the building, to get out of order and leak ; that the plaintiff, knowing this, maliciously and negligently permitted large quantities of water and filth to flow through the pipes, which leaked therefrom into the demised premises, injuring the property of the defendant, deposited therein, to the amount of $390, interfering with and depriving the defendant of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises ; that the plaintiff could, by ordinary care and prudence, have prevented the injury, and that the defendant requested the plaintiff to repair the pipes or abstain from their use, which he neglected to do ; that the defendant was injured to the amount of $250 in the prosecution of his business during the quarter in question. The answer further alleged, that at divers times during the quarter in question, large quantities of water, filthy and otherwise, were thrown out by the plaintiff and his servants, from the rear windows of the portion of the building occupied by the plaintiff, so negligently and maliciously as to run into the demised premises, by which the defendant was injured to the amount of $150 ; that the defendant was compelled, by the injuries, to abandon the possession of the premises on or about the 1st of May, 1855, thereby losing the benefit and being deprived of the privilege of renewal created by the lease which he intended to avail himself of but for said injuries. The answer insists upon the facts as a defence to the action, and also as a counter-claim. The plaintiff demurred to the answer and assigned several causes, among them that the facts did not constitute a defence nor a counter-claim available to the defendant in the action. The cause was heard at Special Term, and judgment given for the defendant upon the demurrer. The plaintiff appealed ; the court at General Term reversed the judgment, and gave judgment for the plaintiff, from which the defendant appealed to this court.

John Graham, for the appellant.

Winchester Britton, for the respondent.

GROVER, J. The demurrer presents two questions : First, whether the facts alleged in the answer constitute a defence ; second, whether they constitute a counter-claim, available to the defendant by way of recoupment or otherwise in this action. The rule has long been settled, that a wrongful eviction of the tenant by the landlord, from the whole or any part of the demised premises, before the rent becomes due, precludes a recovery thereof until the possession is restored. Christopher v. Austin, 1 Kern. 217. Whether this eviction must be actual by the forcible removal of the tenant by the landlord from the demised premises or a portion thereof, was not settled in this State until the case of Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cow. 728. In that case, the principle was established by the Court for the Correction of Errors, that when the lessor created a nuisance in the vicinity of the demised premises, or was guilty of acts that precluded the tenant from a beneficial enjoyment of the premises, in consequence of which the tenant abandoned the possession before the rent became due, the lessor's action for the recovery of the rent was barred, although the lessor had not forcibly turned the tenant out of possession. Ever since that case, this has been considered as a settled rule of law binding upon all the courts of the State. Such act of the lessor, accompanied by an abandonment of possession by the lessee, is deemed a virtual expulsion of the tenant, and, equally with an actual expulsion, bars the recovery of rent. The reason of the rule is, that the tenant has been deprived of the enjoyment of the demised premises by the wrongful act of the landlord; and thus the consideration of his agreement to pay rent has failed. In case of eviction from a portion of the premises, the law will not apportion the rent in favor of the wrong-doer.

In this case, the answer shows that the defendant continued to occupy the premises for the whole time for which the rent demanded accrued. In this, the case differs from Dyett v. Pendleton, supra. I cannot see upon what principle the landlord should be absolutely barred from a recovery of rent, when his wrongful acts stop short of depriving the tenant of the possession of any portion of the premises. The injury inflicted may be to an amount much larger than the whole rent, or it may be of a trifling character. In all the cases where it has been held that the rent was extinguished or suspended, the tenant has been deprived, in whole or in part, of the possession by the wrongful act of the landlord, either actually or constructively. There is no authority extending the rule beyond this class of cases. It would be grossly unjust to permit a tenant to continue in the possession of the premises, and shield himself from the payment of rent by reason of the wrongful acts of the landlord impairing the value of the use of the premises to a much smaller amount than the rent. This must be the result of the rule claimed by the defendant. The moment it is conceded that the injury must be equal to the amount of the rent, the rule is destroyed. It would then only be a recoupment to the extent of the injury. In Ogilvie v. Hull, 5 Hill, 52, Nelson, C. J., in giving the opinion of the court, says: That no general principle is better settled, or more uniformly adhered to, than that there must be an entry and expulsion of the tenant by the landlord, or some deliberate disturbance of the possession depriving the tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises, to operate a suspension or extinguishment of the rent. The rule contended for by the defendant is a very different one, suspending or extinguishing the rent whenever the enjoyment, in consequence of the tortious acts of the lessor, becomes less beneficial than it otherwise would have been. The true rule, from all the authorities is, that while the tenant remains in possession of the entire premises demised, his obligation to pay rent continues.

The remaining question is whether a counter-claim, arising from the facts contained in the answer, is available to the defendant in this action.

By section 149 of the Code, the defendant is permitted to include in his answer new matter, constituting a counter-claim. Section 150 defines the class of demands which are embraced in section 149, as counter-claims. A counter-claim must be, 1st, a cause of action arising out of the contract or transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim, or connected with the subject of the action; or 2d, in an action arising on contract, any other cause of action arising also on contract and existing at the commencement of the action. The demand of the defendant, set out in the answer, does not arise out of the contract set forth in the complaint. That contract is for the payment of rent, upon a lease of the demised premises. The defendant's demands arise from the wrongful acts of the plaintiff in permitting water to leak and run into the premises, and in causing or permitting it to be thrown upon the premises and property of the defendant. These acts are entirely independent of the contract of leasing upon which the action is brought. The demands are not connected with the subject of the action; that is, the rent agreed to be paid for the use of the premises. The defendant's demands are for a series of injuries to his property deposited upon the premises, and for impairing the value of the possession. It would be a very liberal construction to hold that in an action for rent, injuries from trespasses committed by the lessor upon the demised premises might be interposed as a counter-claim. The acts of the plaintiff in this case are of a similar nature. They are either acts of trespass or negligence, from which the injuries to the defendant accrued. Such a construction could only be supported by the idea, that the subject of the action was the value of the use of the premises. But when there is an agreement as to the amount of rent, that value is immaterial. Unless the acts of the defendant amount to a breach of the contract of letting, they are not connected with the subject of the action. In the case of the Mayor of New York v. Mabie, 3 Kern. 151, it was held by this court that a covenant for quiet enjoyment by the lessor was implied in a lease under seal, for a term not exceeding three years, since as well as before the Revised Statutes; that this covenant was broken by an interference with possession by the lessor under a claim of right; consequently, that damages sustained from such acts might be recovered in an action for rent. It was remarked by Denio, J., in giving the opinion in that case, that it is not, however, every mere trespass by the lessor upon the demised premises which will amount to a breach of this covenant; although the covenantor cannot avail himself of the subterfuge, that his entry was unlawful, and he therefore a trespasser, to avoid the consequences of his own wrong, still, to support the action of covenant, the entry must be made under an assumption of title. For this, the learned judge cites Platt on Covenants, 319, 320. There is nothing in the answer in this case tending to show, that any of the acts of the defendant were done under any claim of right whatever. They did not therefore amount to a breach of the contract created by the lease, and the injuries sustained by the defendant do not therefore constitute a counter-claim connected with the subject of the action. The judgment should be affirmed.

All the judges concurring,

Judgment affirmed.¹

LEISHMAN v. WHITE.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1861.

[Reported 1 Allen, 489.]

CONTRACT. The first count was for use and occupation of a tenement hired of the plaintiff by the defendants. The second count was for one quarter's rent of the same tenement. Another count afterwards filed set forth a lease by the plaintiff to the defendants of a hotel in Medford, near Spot Pond, with the lands adjoining, and an island in the pond, for five years, at the yearly rent of two hundred and fifty dollars, payable quarterly. The answer, among other defences, set forth an eviction of the defendants by the lessor from a portion of the premises.

At the trial in the Superior Court, the defendants offered evidence to prove that the plaintiff had evicted the defendants from a portion of the premises; but Vose, J., ruled that such eviction, if proved, would only bar the plaintiff's claim pro tanto, and that he might still recover a proportionate share of the rent, according to the ratable value of the portion of the premises from which the defendants were not evicted; and a verdict was accordingly returned for the plaintiff, and the defendants alleged exceptions.

C. M. Ellis, for the defendants.

A. V. Lynde, for the plaintiff.

BIGELOW, C. J. This action cannot be maintained if the defendant proves that he has been evicted from a part of the demised premises by the plaintiff. In such case, no recovery can be had on the covenant to pay rent, because the defendant has been deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of a portion of the estate by the tortious act of the lessor, and the covenant, being entire, cannot be severed or apportioned so as to allow the plaintiff to recover a part of the rent reserved by the lease. Shumway v. Collins, 6 Gray, 232.

Nor can an action for use and occupation of the premises be maintained against the defendant. The lease is not terminated by the unlawful eviction of the lessee. He still continues to occupy that part of the estate from which he has not been evicted, under and by virtue of the demise under seal. No implied promise arises to pay for such occupation and enjoyment. The case therefore stands thus: to the claim on the covenant, the answer is the eviction; to the demand for use and occupation, the answer is that the defendant holds under his lease; so that, in neither aspect of the case, can the plaintiff maintain his action. Fuller v. Ruby, 10 Gray, 285.

Verdict set aside.

McCLURG v. PRICE.

SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA. 1868.

[Reported 59 Pa. 420.]

BEFORE THOMPSON, C. J., AGNEW, SHARSWOOD, and WILLIAMS, JJ.
READ, J., absent.

Error to the District Court of Allegheny county: No. 56, to October and November Term 1868.

This was an action of assumpsit, commenced March 26th, 1866, by W. T. McClurg against Mary C. Price and William H. Sims, trading as Price & Sims.

The first count of the declaration averred that the plaintiff, on the 15th day of April 1866, leased to the defendants a warehouse for seven and a half months, at the rate of $1500 per annum, payable quarterly, the first quarter to be computed from April 1st.

The second count averred, that on the 20th of March the defendants were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $900, for the use and occupation of a warehouse. The declaration contained also the common counts.

On the trial, before Hampton, P. J., the plaintiff gave evidence of the occupancy by the defendants of his warehouse and rested. The defendants then called W. C. Robertson, who testified: That a lease was agreed upon between the plaintiff and defendants for the warehouse in question at the annual rent of $1500 per annum for the whole building, payable quarterly; the defendants were to get possession of all but the fourth and fifth stories on the 12th of May 1866, and of the fourth and fifth stories whenever they should want them. There were some old iron, &c., on the premises belonging to the plaintiff, which were to remain in the fourth and fifth stories till "the defendants needed those rooms." The defendants did not get possession of the cellar; it was "lumbered up" with old iron, &c., belonging to the plaintiff. The plaintiff sold the good-will as part of the consideration. Defendants had the privilege of renting for another year on the same terms. John Brisbin testified: The plaintiff occupied part of the second story, with ironware; the fourth and fifth stories were occupied entirely by him. The defendants frequently between May and August told the plaintiff that they wanted the fourth and fifth stories, and would not pay rent unless they got them; plaintiff passed off these requests in a careless way,—did not say much, and did not give possession of those stories; he was there generally every day from morning till evening; he sold some of his goods from the store during the time. The defendants abandoned the premises about the last of November, 1866, for want of room.

The plaintiff requested the court to charge the jury:—

"1. That merely leaving wares and rubbish in portions of the leased building would not be an eviction in law of the lessees, but they would have the right to remove said goods at the expense of the landlord, treating them as they might have done the property of third parties.

"2. That if the jury find from the evidence that the defendants continued in the enjoyment of the larger and more valuable portions of the building, after their alleged demand for possession of the fourth and fifth stories, such conduct is a waiver of any right to treat such possession by the plaintiff as an eviction; and defendants will be liable for a proper rent for the premises actually enjoyed by them."

The points were answered in the charge, and substantially denied.

The defendants asked the court to charge:—

"1. That the facts in evidence showed an eviction in law before any rent had fallen due.

"2. That having made a special contract for the rent of the entire building for a year, plaintiff cannot set that contract aside and bring this action for use and occupation, and recover rent for that part of the building occupied by defendants."

The court affirmed both these points.

The court, after stating the evidence to the jury, charged:—

"These facts, they contend, if proved to the satisfaction of the jury, will constitute a full and valid defence to the plaintiff's action, for the following reasons: 1. Because they constitute an eviction in law, before any rent had fallen due. But if this position be not sustained, then, 2. That the plaintiff refused, after request, to deliver them the entire possession of the demised premises, and as the plaintiff cannot take advantage of his own wrong in refusing to comply with his contract, by apportioning the rent, the law will not do so for him. 3. That having made a special contract for the rent of the entire building for a year, he cannot set that contract aside and bring this action for use and occupation, and recover rent for that part of the building occupied by the defendants.

[“If you find from the evidence that the contract, as testified to by Mr. Robertson, was entered into by the parties, and that the defendants entered into possession under the same; and that the plaintiff was repeatedly requested by them to give them the possession of the fourth and fifth stories, before any rent had fallen due; that he gave them no definite answer, but put them off from time to time, without any positive refusal, leaving them to infer that he would do so; and that they were finally compelled, for want of room to carry on their business, to rent another house, and moved out in the latter part of November; then we instruct you, that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action for use and occupation for the time the defendants occupied a portion of the building, and your verdict ought to be for the defendants.]

“But if there was no such special contract, but the defendants entered merely with the consent of the plaintiff, then they are liable to pay a fair rent for the use of such portions of the building as they occupied."

The verdict was for the defendants. The plaintiff removed the case to the Supreme Court, and assigned for error the disaffirmance of his points and the portion of the charge in brackets.

G. Shiras, Jr., for plaintiff in error.

D. Reed, for defendants in error.

The opinion of the court was delivered, January 4th, 1869, by WILLIAMS, J. The plaintiff's retention of a part of the demised premises, and his refusal to deliver possession thereof to the defendants, on demand, in accordance with the terms of his verbal lease, did not constitute an eviction in law. It is doubtless true that there may be an eviction without an actual physical expulsion; but there can be no eviction, actual or constructive, without an antecedent possession. If this case turned on the question of eviction, the plaintiff might be entitled to recover rent for the portion of the premises actually enjoyed by the defendants. But it does not turn on this point. The evidence shows, and the jury have found, that the plaintiff leased his warehouse to the defendants, at an annual rent of $1500, payable quarterly; that at the making of the contract, he delivered to them possession of the three lower stories, and agreed to give them possession of the cellar and of the fourth and fifth stories, on demand; that he refused to deliver possession thereof, although repeatedly requested; and that the defendants were finally compelled, for want of room, to abandon the premises and to rent another house for the transaction of their business.

Notwithstanding the plaintiff's deliberate and persistent refusal to perform his contract, he claims the right to recover compensation for the use and occupation of the portion of the demised premises actually enjoyed by the defendants, on the ground that they had the right to treat his goods as they would those of a stranger, and to remove them at his expense. But if the right be conceded, it does not follow that the defendants were bound to exercise it to the exclusion of all other remedies which the law gave them for the redress of the plaintiff's breach of his contract, or that their failure to exercise it will prevent them from setting up any defence to his claim for rent which they might otherwise make. But the defendants had no right to remove the plaintiff's goods. The law gave them no such remedy for his refusal to perform his contract. The evidence not only shows that his goods were in the portion of the demised premises which he withheld from the defendants, but that he was in the daily occupancy thereof for the purpose of selling his goods, and that he made sales from time to time, although part of the consideration of the stipulated rent was the good-will of his business. If the defendants had ejected the plaintiff and turned his goods into the street, or removed them elsewhere, they would have been guilty of a trespass for which his breach of the contract would have afforded them no justification. Nor was their continuance "in the enjoyment of the larger and more valuable portion of the building," after their demand for possession of the residue and its refusal by the plaintiff, a waiver of any of their rights under the contract, or of any defence they might have to the plaintiff's demand for rent, arising from his breach of the contract.

The jury have found that when the defendants demanded possession of the residue of the demised premises, the plaintiff gave them no definite answer, but put them off from time to time, without any positive refusal, leaving them to infer that he would comply with their request. And if the jury had not so found, the plaintiff was bound to perform his contract, and is answerable for all the legal consequences of its breach, unless its performance was actually waived by the defendants. Their continuance in the possession of the three lower stories, after the plaintiff's refusal to deliver possession of the residue of the building, did not in itself amount to a waiver of their right to insist upon a strict performance of the contract. They had the undoubted right to retain possession of the three lower stories, and to hold the plaintiff responsible for his failure to deliver possession of the cellar and of the fourth and fifth stories, as required by his contract. The only question, then, under the facts of this case, is: Was the plaintiff entitled to recover any portion of the stipulated rent under the count for use and occupation? He leased his warehouse to the defendants for an entire consideration, and his contract must therefore be regarded as an entirety. If the consideration is single, the contract is entire, whatever the number or variety of the items embraced in its subject. The principle is too well settled to admit of doubt, and too familiar to require the citation of authorities in its support, that for the part performance of an entire contract there can be no recovery, unless complete performance has been prevented or waived by the party entitled to demand it.

If the plaintiff had performed his contract he might have recovered on the count for use and occupation, under the Statute of 11 Geo. II. c. 19, which is in force in this State (Rob. Dig. 237); but having failed to perform it, he was not entitled to recover, either upon a count on the contract of lease, or upon the statutory count for use and occupation.

The learned President Judge of the District Court was therefore clearly right in instructing the jury that, if they found the facts to be as stated in the charge, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in this action for use and occupation for the time the defendants occupied a portion of the building, and their verdict must be for the defendants.

Judgment affirmed.

ROYCE v. GUGGENHEIM.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1870.

[Reported 106 Mass. 201.]

CONTRACT for the rent from March 7 to April 7, 1869, of real estate leased by the plaintiff to the defendant for three years from September 7, 1868, by a lease, dated on that day, which described the demised premises as "the small wooden house and store, now occupied by said Guggenheim and numbered 117 on Eliot Street in Boston," and contained no express covenant on the part of the landlord.

At the trial in the Superior Court, before Rockwell, J., the defendant relied on his eviction from the premises, in defence against the action; and the plaintiff requested a ruling "that, in order to constitute an eviction, whether of a part, or of the whole of said premises, it must be as if closed up actual and entire, there being evidence of some use of the alleged evicted rooms." The judge declined so to rule; but instructed the jury "that if the plaintiff, before the month for which rent was sought to be recovered, had evicted the defendant from two or more of the rooms, he cannot recover for that month's rent; that if the rooms, at the time of the lease and for some time after, had light and air enough to make them fit for use as kitchen and sleeping-chamber, and were thus used, and if, after the erection by the plaintiff of the new building in the back yard, against the house, closing the windows of those rooms, those rooms were made entirely unfit for those purposes, and by reason of that unfitness were abandoned, and this erection was not by the license or consent of the defendant, this was an eviction so as to effect a suspension of the rent, and it was not essential to such eviction that the doors of the rooms should have been closed up by the plaintiff so as to prevent the defendant's entry into the same." The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff alleged exceptions. The bill of exceptions contained no statement of the evidence on the question of eviction, other than appears in the above statement of the instructions given or requested.

GRAY, J. The eviction of a tenant from the demised premises, either by the landlord or by title paramount, is a bar to any demand for rent, because it deprives him of the whole consideration for which rent was to be paid. Gilbert on Rents, 145; Morse v. Goddard, 13 Met. 177. And his eviction by the landlord from part of the premises suspends the entire rent, because the landlord "shall not so apportion his own wrong as to enforce the lessee to pay anything for the residue." Hale, C. J., in Hodgkins v. Robson, 1 Ventr. 276, 277; Page v. Parr, Style, 432; Shumway v. Collins, 6 Gray, 227; Leishman v. White, 1 Allen, 489.

To constitute an eviction which will operate as a suspension of rent, it is not necessary that there should be an actual physical expulsion of the tenant from any part of the premises. Any act of a permanent character, done by the landlord, or by his procurement, with the intention and effect of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the premises demised, or of a part thereof, to which he yields and abandons possession, may be treated as an eviction. Smith v. Raleigh, 3 Camp. 513; Upton v. Townend, 17 C. B. 30.

But no lawful act, done by the landlord upon an adjoining estate owned by him, for the purpose of improving that estate, and not for the purpose of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of any part of the demised premises, can be deemed an eviction. The mere fact that by an act or default of the landlord, not unlawful in itself, nor accompanied with any intention to affect the enjoyment of the premises demised, they have been rendered uninhabitable, is not sufficient. It is now well settled, both here and in England, that in a lease of a building for a dwelling-house or store, no covenant is implied that it should be fit for occupation. Hart v. Windsor, 12 M. & W. 68; Dutton v. Gerrish, 9 Cush. 89; Foster v. Peysier, Ib. 242; Welles v. Castles, 3 Gray, 323. And the English authorities, ancient and modern, are conclusive, that even where the landlord is bound by custom or express covenant to repair, and by his failure to do so the premises become uninhabitable, or unfit for the purposes for which they were leased, the tenant has no right to quit the premises, or to refuse to pay rent according to his covenant, but his only remedy is by action for damages. 14 Hen. IV. 27, pl. 35; 27 Hen. VI. 10, pl. 6; Bro. Ab. Dette, 18, 72. Parke, B., in 12 M. & W. 84; Surplice v. Farnsworth, 7 Man. & Gr. 576; Kramer v. Cook, 7 Gray, 550; Leavitt v. Fletcher, 10 Allen, 119, 121.

In the recent English case of Upton v. Townend, 17 C. B. 30, after elaborate arguments upon the question, all the judges substantially agreed upon the definition of eviction. Chief Justice Jervis said: "I think it may now be taken to mean this: not a mere trespass and nothing more, but something of a grave and permanent character, done by the landlord with the intention of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment of the demised premises." Mr. Justice Williams said: "There clearly are some acts of interference by the landlord with the tenant's enjoyment of the premises, which do not amount to an eviction, but which may be either mere acts of trespass, or eviction, according to the intention with which they are done. If these acts amount to a clear indication of intention on the landlord's part that the tenant shall no longer continue to hold the premises, they would constitute an eviction." Mr. Justice Crowder said: "Eviction, properly so called, is a wrongful act of the landlord, which operates the expulsion or amotion of the tenant from the land. The question here is, whether there has been an eviction as it is popularly called, a putting out or depriving the tenants of the subject-matter of the demise." And Mr. Justice Willes said: "If the plaintiff is liable for what has been done, does it amount to an eviction? I am of opinion that it does, as being an act, of a permanent character, done by the landlord in order to deprive, and which had the effect of depriving, the tenant of the use of the thing demised, or of a part of it." The act of the landlord which was there held, upon a statement authorizing the court to draw such inferences as a jury might, to amount to an eviction, was the rebuilding of the tenements upon their destruction by fire (which the lessor had covenanted to do) in such a manner as permanently to alter the character of the demised premises.

In a still later case, where the tenant, being desirous to underlet, put in a man to show the rooms, and posted in the window a bill stating that they were to be let; and the landlord, being annoyed by this proceeding and by the conduct of the man, turned him out of the house and took down the bill, but left the keys in the rooms; and the tenant did not return, and contended that he had been evicted, and therefore was not liable for the rent,—it was ruled at nisi prius, and affirmed by the Court of Queen's Bench upon a motion for a new trial, that it was a question for the jury, whether the act of the landlord was done with the intention of evicting the tenant, or simply for the purpose of expelling the man whom he had put in; and, the verdict being for the landlord, the court refused to set it aside. Henderson v. Mears, 1 Fost. & Finl. 636; s. c. 28 L. J. N. S. Q. B. 305; 5 Jur. N. S. 709; 7 Weekly Rep. 554.

It was argued for the defendant, in the present case, that even the erection of a building by the landlord upon adjoining land would be an eviction, if it stopped the tenant's windows; and his counsel cited Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cowen, 727, in which the New York Court of Errors held that the creation of a nuisance by the landlord in another tenement under the same roof, by bringing lewd women into it, who made a great noise and disturbance there at night, in consequence of which the lessee and his family left the demised premises, was evidence to go to the jury under a plea of eviction. Upon that case, it is to be observed, 1st. The act of the landlord was an unlawful act, and not a lawful use of his other tenement; 2d. The decision of the Court of Errors was not that the facts in law amounted to an eviction, but only that they should have been submitted to the jury; 3d. That decision reversed the unanimous judgment of the Supreme Court, as reported in 4 Cowen, 581; 4th. It has since been considered, even in New York, an extreme case. Savage, C. J., in Etheridge v. Osborn, 12 Wend. 529, 532. Nelson, C. J., in Ogilvie v. Hull, 5 Hill, 52, 54. Bronson, C. J., in Gilhooley v. Washington, 4 Comst. 217, 219. In Palmer v. Wetmore, 2 Sandf. 316, the Superior Court of the city of New York, consisting of Chief Justice Oakley and Justices Vanderpool and Sandford, adjudged that the mere fact of the erection of a building by a landlord on his adjoining land, so as to obstruct and darken the tenant's windows, was not an eviction. To the same effect is Myers v. Gemmel, 10 Barb. 537. See also the learned opinion of Judge Daly in Edgerton v. Page, 1 Hilton, 320; s. c. 20 N. Y. 281. We cannot, therefore, rest our judgment in the case at bar upon that of Dyett v. Pendleton. Nor is it necessary so to do.

The lease from the plaintiff to the defendant was of a house and shop, and contained no express covenant on the part of the landlord. By the law of this Commonwealth, no easement of light and air exists over adjoining lands unless by express grant or covenant. Collier v. Pierce, 7 Gray, 18; Rogers v. Sawin, 10 Gray, 376; Brooks v. Reynolds, 106 Mass. 31. If the plaintiff had conveyed away the adjoining estate, the grantee might have built thereon so as to stop up the defendant's windows, without affording the latter any right of action for damages, or of suspension or abatement of his rent. And so if the landlord himself erected a building upon any part of the adjoining estate, for the purpose of improving that estate, it was a lawful act, which violated no obligation which he was under to the defendant, and did not constitute an eviction. If, on the other hand, such an act was done by the landlord for the purpose and with the effect of making the defendant's tenement or any room therein uninhabitable, the defendant might perhaps at his election treat it as an eviction, and give up the premises and refuse to pay rent. At any rate he might do so, if the building was erected upon part of the curtilage included in his lease, closing the windows of his dwelling-house so as to make a part of it uninhabitable; because that would be the erection of a permanent structure on part of the demised premises, materially changing the character and beneficial enjoyment thereof; and in such case the landlord would be responsible for the effect of his wrongful act, without further proof of unlawful intent. Upton v. Townend, 17 C. B. 30, above cited.

Applying these principles to the bill of exceptions, we are of opinion that the plaintiff fails to show that he was aggrieved by the instructions given at the trial. Under those instructions, the jury must have found that by the plaintiff's erection of a new building in the back yard against the house, without the tenant's consent, two of the rooms therein, previously used as a kitchen and bedroom, were made entirely unfit for those purposes, and by reason of that unfitness were abandoned. The bill of exceptions does not show that the plaintiff contended that the rooms could have been used for any other purpose after the erection of the new building, or that the back yard was not part of the demised premises, or made any question, or asked for any ruling, as to the intention with which he erected that building.

DE WITT v. PIERSON.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1873.

[Reported, 112 Mass. 8.]

CONTRACT to recover eleven weeks rent for the use and occupation of a tenement, hired of the plaintiff by the defendant, and by him actually occupied from the second of March, 1870, to May 18th, 1870, at six dollars a week.

At the trial in the Superior Court before Scudder, J., there was no denial by the defendant that he occupied the premises during all the time sued for, nor of the correctness of the plaintiff's account, except as to the charge of rent for the first two weeks of the term, which he claimed had been paid, and which was allowed by the jury in their verdict. For the defence, it was shown that the premises, for the use of which rent was claimed, were two rooms situated in a house on Harrison Avenue, in the city of Boston; that during the entire portion of the term declared for, other rooms in the same house directly beneath those occupied by the defendant were leased by the plaintiff to one Mrs. Fletcher, whom one of the witnesses for the defence, formerly a policeman, testified was a person of notoriously bad character; that this woman introduced into the apartments hired by her two other women as lodgers, whom the same witness testified were notoriously of lewd character. One of the witnesses for the defence thought the apartments let to this person were used for the purpose of prostitution, and he testified that, on two occasions, drunken men were seen in their rooms; that the policeman on duty in that section of the city, on several occasions, drove away a crowd of boys who were attracted to the spot by the noise and riot proceeding from the rooms occupied by these women; and the defendant testified that the disturbance caused by the singing of bawdy songs, and the loud talking of the women and their visitors, and the frequent ringing of the door-bell, were a constant source of annoyance to the family of the defendant, which consisted of himself and his wife; that notice of the fact that the defendant was annoyed and disturbed by these things, and of the character of the house and of these women, was given on three several occasions during the term, to the plaintiff's agent, who promised to attend to it; that the defendant, whenever asked to pay his rent, refused to do so, unless these women were removed from the house; that the plaintiff took no notice of the request of the defendant, except to promise by his agent to get the women out, if it could be proved to him that they were of bad character, which the defendant undertook to do, if the agent would call at the house any evening, and named an evening; but the agent replied he had other business to attend to. No other notice than that above mentioned was given to the plaintiff of these facts, but the policeman testified he made four attempts to find the plaintiff to inform him of the character of the house, and left word with a brother of the plaintiff that he wished to see the plaintiff in regard to it. The plaintiff testified he never received the message. Notice to quit was served by the plaintiff on the defendant, and the defendant left the premises two or three days before the notice expired, having, as he alleged, used all due diligence from the time he first discovered the character of the other occupants, to procure other suitable lodgings. It was in evidence that the business of the plaintiff in matters pertaining to his real estate was conducted by an agent.

The presiding judge ruled that the above facts, though proved, constituted no defence to the action. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant alleged exceptions.

J. Willard and C. H. Hurd, for the defendant.

C. H. Drew, for the plaintiff.

ENDICOTT, J. It is well settled in this Commonwealth, that to constitute an eviction there must be either a physical ouster of the tenant by the landlord, or some act done by him on the premises with the intent of depriving the tenant of the enjoyment and occupation of the whole or part of the same to which the tenant yields the possession within a reasonable time, and in either case the rent is suspended. Royce v. Guggenheim, 106 Mass. 201. There was no physical ouster in this case. The only question is whether the evidence offered shows such acts on the part of the plaintiff and the defendant as will constitute an eviction under the above definition. It does not appear on the evidence that the plaintiff let the rooms, the use of which is complained of, with the intent to disturb the defendant in his use and occupation. On the contrary, the rooms were so occupied when the defendant's term began. Nor does it appear that the plaintiff at that time had any knowledge of the alleged use made of the rooms, nor that any proof of such use was at any time given him. Even if an intent to evict may be presumed, as argued by the defendant, from the neglect of the agent to ascertain the facts, when notice was given him, it does not appear when the notice was given, except that it was on three several occasions during the term, which was of eleven weeks' duration. The evidence also fails to show that the defendant was in fact deprived of the use and occupation of his demised premises; he continued in actual use and occupation of the whole, during the eleven weeks, and at last yielded to a notice to quit for non-payment of rent. No evidence was offered that would justify the jury in finding that any act was done by the plaintiff with the intent and effect of depriving the defendant of the use and occupation of the whole or part of the demised premises.

The case of Dyett v. Pendleton, 8 Cow. 727, is relied upon by the defendant. That has been called an extreme case; it has been modified, if not overruled, by later decisions in New York; and this court declined to rest its judgment upon it in Royce v. Guggenheim. But that case was decided upon a very different state of facts, and contained many elements, necessary to constitute an eviction, which are wanting in the case at bar. The defendant there, under a lease for years, had been in more than a year, when the plaintiff, who occupied adjoining rooms under the same roof, himself created the disturbances and nuisances complained of, and the defendant within a month abandoned his tenement. The intent to evict, and actual abandonment, might well have been found; but to hold there was an eviction here, would be to go far beyond that decision.

There having been no eviction from the premises, but the defendant remaining in full occupation, we do not think there was any question for the jury, as to the beneficial value of the premises to the defendant; and it was immaterial whether he had used due diligence in endeavoring to obtain other lodgings. The cases cited by the defendant do not sustain this position. In one, the tenant was excluded from the occupation of a portion of his demised premises; in the other, access to the demised premises was closed, and the occupation thereby limited. Cowie v. Goodwin, 9 C. & P. 378. Boston & Worcester Railroad v. Ripley, 13 Allen, 421.

The doctrine of the recoupment of damages, as established in this Commonwealth, does not apply to this case.

GRABENHORST v. NICODEMUS.

COURT OF APPEALS OF MARYLAND. 1875.

[Reported 42 Md. 236.]

APPEAL from the Court of Common Pleas.

The appellees sued the appellant in the Circuit Court for Baltimore county, to recover the sum of $1,000, as the consideration for the privilege given to him of purchasing a certain distillery and premises, within a time specified; and also the sum of $125 per month rent for the same property. The case, on the suggestion and affidavit of the defendant, was removed to the Court of Common Pleas, where his pleas were filed.

First Exception. The plaintiffs to maintain the issue on their part offered in evidence a lease dated the 15th of February, 1871, whereby they leased to the defendant the distillery and premises described in a deed particularly referred to, for the term of one year, beginning on the day of the date of the lease and ending on the 14th of February, 1872, at the rent of $125 per month, payable monthly on the first day of each month. It was agreed and understood that all repairs and improvements which the lessee might require, he should do at his own expense, and that all repairs, improvements and fixtures and machinery which he should introduce into or put upon the distillery or premises should revert to, and become the property of, the lessors upon the termination of the lease, without cost to them.

The plaintiffs then proved by Charles G. Heim that the defendant entered into possession of the leased premises and remained in possession during the year mentioned in the lease, and had paid no rent therefor. They also offered in evidence an agreement between themselves and the defendant, dated the 15th of February, 1871, the execution of which was admitted, whereby the plaintiffs agreed that the defendant might during the year for which the property was leased, and not afterwards, purchase the same for $5,000, provided the title was satisfactory; and the defendant agreed and bound himself to pay to the plaintiffs for the privilege, the sum of $1,000, at the expiration of the year, if he did not purchase the property for the sum of $5,000. If, however, he should complete the purchase within the year, then the $1,000 was to be considered as included in the said purchase-money of $5,000, and should not be required of him. It was also agreed, that if the defendant should complete the purchase, the rent should cease from the day when the sale should be completed, and the purchase-money fully settled.

The plaintiffs further proved by the witness Heim that the $1,000 mentioned in the agreement had not been paid. On cross-examination this witness proved that the plaintiffs received $5,000 from Mr. John W. Garrett for the property mentioned in the lease. On re-examination the witness proved that the money was paid on or about the 1st of March, 1873. The plaintiffs then offered in evidence an agreement dated the 16th of January, 1873, signed by themselves, certifying that they had sold the property to the defendant for $5,000, provided he paid the sum of $2,000 on or before the 1st of March, 1873, and gave satisfactory security for the balance. There was an indorsement on this paper extending the time of payment to the 7th of March, 1873.

The defendant then to maintain the issue on his part, offered in evidence an agreement made on the 16th of January, 1873, to sell to the defendant the distillery property, and that the plaintiffs did not waive any right to the amount of rent and privilege claimed by them to be due by the defendant under a prior agreement. The defendant then proved by himself that he sold the distillery property to Mr. Garrett for $5,000, but did not receive the money, it was paid to the plaintiffs; he then offered to prove also by himself, subject to exception, that after the time named in the agreement, which gave him the privilege of purchasing the property, had expired, he went to see the plaintiffs and they agreed to extend the time for the purchase of the property by the witness, — they were anxious to sell the property, — and on the last of July, 1873, they told him they would sell the property to him under the agreement. The plaintiffs objected to this evidence, and the court (Garey, J.) sustained the objection; the defendant excepted.

Second Exception. The defendant then offered to prove by himself that at the time when the lease offered in evidence in this cause was executed, the distillery therein mentioned was not in running order; that he promised to repair it, and spent two or three thousand dollars in the repairing thereof; that after such repairs were made he was ready to run the distillery — the plaintiffs refused to sign the consent as owners of the fee which is required by the Internal Revenue Laws of the United States, before the defendant could procure the necessary papers to run the same as a distillery, and in consequence of such refusal he was prevented from running the same as a distillery, and the property therefore continued idle; that the defendant several times applied to the plaintiffs to sign such consent, but they refused so to do.

And also offered to prove by Robert G. King, that he is one of the Assistant Assessors of Internal Revenue for the District, in which is situated the distillery, formerly occupied by the defendant; that sometime in the year 1871 or 1872, the defendant applied to the assessor to furnish him with such papers as were required by law, to allow him to run the aforesaid distillery; that among such papers, was one, by which Jeremiah Nicodemus and others, the owners of the fee, were required to give their consent to the use of the property for distilling purposes, which was never executed by them, and thereupon the necessary papers were never delivered to the defendant.

To the evidence so offered by the defendant, the plaintiffs objected, and the court sustained the objection. The defendant thereupon excepted.

Third Exception. The plaintiffs offered the following prayers: —

1. If the jury shall find the execution by the plaintiffs and defendant of the lease, dated 15th of February, 1871, offered in evidence, and that the defendant entered into possession under the same, and that no part of the rent mentioned in said lease has been paid, then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the rent therein stipulated, together with interest upon each sum of $125, from the time when it was payable.

2. If the jury find the execution by the plaintiffs and defendant of the agreement, dated the 15th of February, 1871, and that the defendant did not purchase the property therein mentioned at any time during the period of one year thereafter, and that he has not paid the sum of one thousand dollars, then the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the said sum of $1,000, together with interest thereon from the 16th of February, 1872.

The defendant offered six prayers, which need not be reported. The court granted the prayers of the plaintiffs, and refused those of the defendant. To this ruling of the court the defendant excepted, and the verdict and judgment being for the plaintiffs, he appealed.

The cause was argued before BARTOL, C. J., STEWART, GRASON, MILLER, and ALVEY, JJ.

Fred. C. Cook and Samuel Snowden, for the appellants.

D. S. Briscoe and William A. Fisher, for the appellees.

STEWART, J., delivered the opinion of the court.

There are two agreements between the parties involved in the case. The one being the lease of the distillery and premises, at a specified rent; and the other, in regard to the offer to sell the same property, under which plaintiffs claim one thousand dollars for the privilege given to defendant to purchase the property within twelve months.

Three exceptions were taken by the defendant to the rulings of the court. The first and second of which raise questions as to the admissibility of testimony, and the third excepting to the granting of plaintiffs' two prayers; and the rejection of the six prayers of the defendant.

The contract between the parties in regard to the claim of the plaintiffs of one thousand dollars, is a distinct agreement for the payment of that sum, for the privilege of purchasing the property; and involves no question of penalty or liquidated damages for its non-performance.

It is not a bargain and sale of the property at $5,000, but a proposition and obligation on the part of the plaintiffs, to sell it to the defendant at that price with the privilege to him to make the purchase or not, as he may determine within the year.

For this option, which was a valuable privilege, he agrees to pay the $1,000 in the event of his declining to make the purchase.

The defendant acquired the right under the contract, to purchase the property for the proposed price.

The plaintiffs had obligated themselves to sell at that price; but the defendant was under no obligation to buy. He merely bound himself to pay the $1,000 for the privilege of buying, and in case he did not buy. It was entirely optional with the defendant to purchase the property or let it alone; whilst the plaintiffs had abandoned the right to make sale to any one else during the year.

That was a sufficient consideration for the defendant's obligation. This we understand, to be the nature of the contract between the parties as to this particular. There is no ground for the theory, that the contract imported a bargain and sale of the property, obligatory as such upon the parties; and that the thousand dollars was provided as the penalty for its enforcement upon the defendant.

Such construction would make a different contract for the parties, from what they have stipulated.

We find no error in the exclusion of the parol proof, offered by the defendant in his first exception.

Such testimony was clearly inadmissible, in the face of the written agreements of 16th January and 25th February, 1873, introduced as evidence by the defendant himself.

In the absence of these agreements, whether the proposed testimony might be adduced to prove waiver, or extension of the time, for performance of the original agreement, notwithstanding the Statute of Frauds requiring the contract as to the sale of lands to be in writing; or the rule of the common law disallowing parol testimony, to contradict, add to, or vary the terms of the written contract, it is unnecessary to decide.

There was error in the refusal of the testimony offered by the defendant in the second exception.

The plaintiffs had rented to the defendant the distillery and premises for one year, at $125 per month.

According to the terms and provisions of the lease between the parties, the property was rented to be used and employed by the defendant as a distillery; the defendant was to repair and improve the property, as he might desire at his own expense, but all such improvements, fixtures, and machinery put upon the distillery or premises rented, to become the property of the plaintiffs at the termination of the lease, without cost to them.

The distillery could not be run and conducted by the defendant except in compliance with the Revenue Laws of the United States, applicable thereto.

This the parties must be presumed to have known. The plaintiffs, having made the lease to the defendant for such purpose, must be considered as having entered into such contract subject to the provisions of the laws regulating that pursuit; and the contract between the parties is affected thereby.

Under the Internal Revenue Acts of Congress (see Revised Statutes, title 35, § 3262), the bond of the defendant as a distiller, renting and not owning the property in fee, was not authorized to be approved, and he could not lawfully carry on the distillery, unless he filed with the collector the written consent of the plaintiffs as the owners of the property in fee.

The plaintiffs having rented their property for such purpose, if they refused to give their consent in writing to the defendant, as required by the law, preliminary to the use of the distillery, it would be unjust towards the defendant for them to undertake to exact rent for the premises, if they had failed to supply him with the necessary legal muniment to enable him to carry on the business.

It is not to be intended that they designed that the defendant should make use of the distillery in violation of the law. The default of the plaintiffs in that particular would amount to "constructive eviction," to all intents and purposes, so far as the legitimate employment of the property is concerned. Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, § 380.

The obligation of the plaintiffs to give their consent as demanded by the law, must be implied as a necessary incident to the lease in question, as fully as if there had been a positive stipulation to that effect.

Although there was no express covenant for the legal employment of the property leased, as a distillery, it is a necessary implication from the circumstances and nature of the lease.

The payment of the rent is to be taken as the equivalent and consideration for the beneficial enjoyment of the premises as a distillery, so far as such consent could contribute to that result; and the lessors had no right to withhold it, and yet expect to be paid the stipulated rent; such act on their part was indispensable to the consummation of the lease between the parties.

They were as much bound, as the owners of the fee of the property, to give their written consent, as to allow the tenant to take possession of the distillery and premises, which, although not mentioned, was an implied covenant affecting the lease.

This contract, like any other, must be expounded to give effect to the intention of the parties, according to the reasonable import of the terms of the instrument, the circumstances affecting it, the character of the property, the purposes for which it was leased, and the employment to which it was to be devoted.

The mutual obligations of the parties growing out of the contract, must be understood and defined with reference to all these considerations.

Where there are no express stipulations upon the subject, such facts furnish sufficient evidence, from which the agreement may be inferred between the parties, quite as controlling as positive stipulations.

Without the written consent of the lessors the lease of the property as a distillery would be a nugatory and incomplete act. See Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, §§ 244-245-247-252.

The lessors having instituted the action for the recovery of the rent, the tenant has the right to recoup damages for any breach or non-performance of duty on their part, to the extent of the rent. Taylor's Landlord and Tenant, §§ 317-374-378.

Such being the view we take of the contract between the parties, and the rulings of the court below, in the first and second exceptions, there was error in the third exception, in the granting of the plaintiffs' first prayer, but their second prayer was properly granted, and the defendant's prayers refused.

Judgment reversed, and new trial ordered.

(Decided 14th April, 1875.)

A motion for a rehearing of the foregoing case was made by the appellees on the 23d of April, 1875. This motion the court overruled, and at the same time filed the following opinion:—

BARTOL, C. J. The motion for a rehearing of this cause having been considered, it is hereby ordered that the same be overruled.

Upon a careful examination of the Acts of Congress to which we have been referred, we find no error in the opinion heretofore filed. The general expression therein, that the appellant "could not lawfully carry on the distillery, unless he filed with the collector the written consent of the plaintiffs as the owners of the property in fee, &c.," is substantially correct; for though the Act provides a mode by which the distillery might have been carried on, without the written consent of the appellees, yet this provision did not secure to him an absolute right which he could have exercised; but it was made entirely dependent upon the will and discretion of the Commissioner.

Motion overruled.

(Decided 24th June, 1875.)

BEAL v. BOSTON CAR SPRING COMPANY.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1878.

[Reported 125 Mass. 157.]

CONTRACT for rent due under a written lease made by Heyer Brothers to the defendant for the term of five years from April 1, 1874, and by Heyer Brothers assigned to the plaintiff.

At the trial in the Superior Court, before Allen, J., it appeared in evidence that the premises described in the lease of Heyer Brothers to the defendant constituted a part of the same premises which Heyer Brothers held under and by virtue of a lease to them for a term of ten years from April 1, 1874, made by the plaintiff, who was the owner of the premises; that on February 7, 1877, when the plaintiff received the assignment from Heyer Brothers of their lease to the defendant, he executed upon the back of the original lease from himself to Heyer Brothers the following instrument: "Boston, February 7, 1877. The within-named lessor, in consideration of the assignment to him of certain underleases made by the within-named lessees of parts of the premises demised in the within lease, and of one dollar to him paid by the within-named lessees, doth hereby release and forever discharge the said lessees, their heirs, executors, and administrators, of and from all claims, demands, and causes of action of and concerning the within lease, and especially all claims by him for rent thereunder; and said lessees do hereby surrender and yield up the said lease and the premises within described to said lessor, and such surrender is hereby accepted by him, but without prejudice to the leases of parts of the premises assigned to him as above mentioned." It further appeared that the terms of this instrument were carried out, and that Heyer Brothers ceased to occupy the premises.

The defendant offered to show that it had not been in the occupation of the premises since February 7. This evidence was objected to as being immaterial, and was excluded.

The defendant contended and asked the judge to rule that if, by the arrangement entered into between the plaintiff and Heyer Brothers, the original lease was on February 7, 1877, given up, discharged or vacated, and the tenancy of Heyer Brothers thereupon ceased, and the plaintiff resumed control of the premises, and Heyer Brothers at the same time assigned and transferred to the plaintiff the underlease before then held by the defendant from them ; and if the defendant, when informed of this, ceased to have anything further to do with the premises, and refused to recognize as longer subsisting or continuing in force the underlease given to them by Heyer Brothers, or to become liable to the plaintiff as assignee thereof in any way, the plaintiff could not maintain his action.

The judge refused so to rule, but ruled that the plaintiff was entitled to recover ; and directed the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant alleged exceptions.

F. A. Brooks and A. S. Hall, for the defendant.

E. W. Hutchins, for the plaintiff.

ENDICOTT, J. The plaintiff, being the owner of the estate, leased the same for the term of ten years to Heyer Brothers ; and they, on the same day, leased a part of the premises to the defendant for a term of five years. It is to be inferred from the subsequent agreement between the plaintiff and Heyer Brothers that other underleases were made. Before the expiration of the underlease to the defendant, Heyer Brothers assigned it to the plaintiff ; who at the same time indorsed on the original lease to Heyer Brothers an agreement releasing them from rent and accepting the surrender of their lease and the premises, " but without prejudice to the leases of parts of the premises assigned to him." This agreement was made in consideration of the assignment to the plaintiff of the underleases by Heyer Brothers.

The intention of the parties is plain. Heyer Brothers having made underleases of parts of the premises which the plaintiff was willing to take, and desiring also to surrender the reversion in these leases to the plaintiff, which he was willing to accept, the underleases were assigned, including the defendant's, and the surrender of the original lease accepted without prejudice to the underleases. They evidently did not intend that the rights of the plaintiff under the assignment, or the estates of the sub-lessees, should be destroyed by the surrender, for the language of the acceptance carefully provides for both. The purpose was to put the plaintiff precisely in the position of Heyer Brothers. This intention, as expressed in the papers they have executed, will be carried out, if consistent with the rules of law, and we are of opinion that it is.

The plaintiff brings this action, as assignee of the lease, to recover upon the defendant's covenant to pay rent ; and it is well settled that when a lease is assigned without the reversion, the privity of contract is transferred, and the assignee may sue in his own name for the rent accruing after the assignment. Kendall v. Carland, 5 CUSH. 74 ; Hunt v. Thompson, 2 Allen, 341. The only objection suggested to the plaintiff's right to recover is the surrender of the lease of Heyer Brothers to the plaintiff ; and the claim is, that the rent due from the defendant is an incident of the reversion in Heyer Brothers, and, the reversion having been extinguished by the surrender, all remedies incident to it are taken away. But rent is not necessarily an incident to the reversion, so that it cannot by the acts or agreements of the parties be separated from it. In a general grant of the reversion, the rent will pass as incident to it. Burden v. Thayer, 3 Met. 76. But the reversion may be granted and the rent reserved, or the rent may be assigned, reserving the reversion, if such is the intention of the parties as expressed in the words they use. Lord Coke says that fealty is an incident inseparably annexed to the reversion, and the donor or lessor cannot grant the reversion and save to himself the fealty; but the rent he may except, because the rent, though it be an incident, yet is not inseparably incident. Co. Lit. 143 a, 151 b; 3 Cruise Dig. 337; Demarest v. Willard, 8 Cow. 206. Heyer Brothers therefore could have granted their reversion, or surrendered it to the plaintiff and reserved the rent accruing upon the underleases. In such a case, their relations to the sub-lessees would not be changed by the grant or surrender of the reversion, and they could have recovered rent of this defendant upon the covenants of its lease. Having that estate reserved in the premises, they could have assigned it to a third party or to the plaintiff, and the assignment would have been good, and the defendant would have been bound to pay to the assignee rent for the estate held under its lease. This form of proceeding was not adopted by the parties, but the same result was accomplished. As the assignments were simultaneous with the surrender, Heyer Brothers did not in terms reserve the rent to themselves, but the plaintiff accepted the surrender in consideration of the assignment, with the express stipulation that it should not prejudice the underleases assigned to him; that is, should not invalidate the assignment, or affect the rights of the parties holding the leases.

The case is not presented, what would be the rights of Heyer Brothers against this defendant; or what would be the rights of the plaintiff, if he had not taken an assignment of the underleases, and had accepted a surrender without qualification. The two cases of Grundin v. Carter, 99 Mass. 15, and Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 393, relied on in support of the proposition of the defendant, have no application to the facts here presented.

Exceptions overruled.

HOEVELER v. FLEMING.

SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA. 1879.

[Reported 91 Pa. 322.]

BEFORE SHARSWOOD, C. J., MERCUR, GORDON, PAXSON, TRUNKEY, and STERRETT, JJ. GREEN, J., absent.

Error to the Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, of Allegheny county : Of October and November Term, 1879, No. 146.

Debt by Elizabeth Hoeveler against William Fleming & Co., to recover a quarter's rent.

In April, 1873, the plaintiff demised to the defendants for the term of five years, the rent payable quarterly, a building in the city of Pittsburgh. The lease contained the usual covenants. The defendants agreed that they would make all alterations and repairs at their own cost, except such ordinary repairs as would make the building tenantable. They also covenanted to deliver up the premises at the end of their time in good and sufficient repair, " reasonable wear and tear and accidents by fire excepted." In March, 1877, the premises were so injured by fire that they were untenantable, and defendants vacated them. The insurance company in which the property was insured, with the assent of the plaintiff and without objection from defendants, employed a contractor to make the repairs, and the key was delivered to him. On account of these repairs the building was not in a condition for occupancy until August, 1877, when the defendants declining to again occupy the premises, and refusing to pay the rent for the quarter during which the repairs were being made, this action was brought to recover it.

At the trial before Collier, J., the plaintiff asked the court to charge that the evidence was not sufficient to warrant the jury in finding an eviction ; that when the insurance company, with the assent of the plaintiff and without objection from defendants, proceeded to repair, the rent was not thereby suspended, and that even if plaintiff had ordered the repairs, the defendants would not be released ; all of which the court refused.

The defendants submitted the following point, to which is appended the answer of the court : —

If the plaintiff, under the provisions of her contract of insurance, directed the insurance companies to proceed to rebuild or repair the premises, and the insurance companies did so proceed and occupy the premises during the three months for which suit is brought, the plaintiff is estopped from recovery in this action.

Ans. "Affirmed, if you believe the entry by the contractor was without the consent of defendants, and that the repairs made were more than the usual, ordinary, and necessary repairs."

Verdict for defendants, when plaintiff took this writ and alleged that the court erred in charging as above.

H. and G. C. Burgwin, for plaintiff in error.

J. Erastus McKelvy and Thomas M. Marshall, for defendants in error.

MR. JUSTICE PAXSON delivered the opinion of the court, November 3, 1879.

It is settled by a current of authority that an eviction of a tenant by the landlord of demised premises suspends the rent. The reason of this rule is well stated by Baron Gilbert in his Treatise on Rents, at page 145: "A rent is something given by way of retribution to the lessor, for the land demised by him to the tenant, and consequently the lessor's title to the rent is founded upon this: that the land demised is enjoyed by the tenant during the term included in the contract; for the tenant can make no return for a thing he has not. If, therefore, the tenant be deprived of the thing letten, the obligation to pay rent ceases, because such obligation has its force only from the consideration, which was the enjoyment of the thing demised."

The modern doctrine as to what constitutes an eviction is, that actual physical expulsion is not necessary, but any interference with the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the demised premises will amount to an eviction in law. Thus in Doran v. Chase, 2 W. N. C. 609, this court affirmed the ruling of the court below, that "A landlord's refusal to allow an under-tenant to enter the premises, under threats of suit, whereby the lessee is deprived of underletting, is such an interruption of the latter's rights as amounts to an eviction." So an eviction of the lessee from any part of the demised premises will suspend accruing rent. Linton v. Hart, 1 Casey, 193. If the landlord claim and use certain privileges upon the demised premises, against the tenant's consent, he must show a reservation of them, or the rent is suspended. Vaughan v. Blanchard, 4 Dall. 124. And I apprehend there might be a legal eviction by confining the tenant to the demised premises, as by closing up a way which was his only means of egress and ingress. Any act of the landlord which deprives the tenant of that beneficial enjoyment of the premises to which he is entitled under the lease, will amount in law to an eviction and suspend the rent.

How far the entry of the landlord to make repairs will work an eviction must depend, to some extent, upon the circumstances of each particular case. When the landlord is bound by the lease to make repairs, and the repairs are merely such as are required by ordinary wear and tear, no difficulty is likely to arise. And where he is not bound to do so, but makes them for the benefit of the property and the convenience of the tenant, the dangers of a contest are equally remote, as tenants are more willing, as a general rule, to have the property put in order than landlords are to incur the expenditure. In Pier v. Carr, 19 P. F.

Smith, 326, where the tenant had been sold out by a constable, under a warrant for taxes, and after the sale, the constable had delivered the key to the landlord, who put a bill "To Let" upon the premises, and proceeded to have some slight repairs made, it was held there was no eviction.

Where, however, the repairs are not ordinary, but are of a character to deprive the tenant of all beneficial enjoyment of the premises, or at least seriously interrupt it while the repairs are in progress, we have a question presented of a different character. The case in hand comes within this class. The lease from the plaintiff to the defendant was in the usual form, with the ordinary covenants for the payment of rent. The tenants were to deliver up the possession at the end of the term, "in good and sufficient repair as when received, reasonable wear and tear and accidents by fire excepted." The tenants were to have the right to make certain specified alterations, with the stipulation that all alterations and repairs were to be made at their own cost, "excepting such ordinary repairs as will make the house tenantable." During the term the demised premises were partially destroyed by fire. The third story was burned, and a considerable portion of the second story. It was conceded the fire rendered the premises untenantable, and that defendants moved out. The plaintiff had an insurance upon the building and refused the settlement offered by the insurance company. Thereupon the company took possession for the purpose of rebuilding, and through their contractor retained the possession from some time in April until about the middle of August. The repairs were necessarily extensive; a division wall between the demised premises and the adjoining building, belonging to the plaintiff, was so far injured as to require it to be taken down and rebuilt. The plaintiff was upon the premises from time to time, and gave directions as to the repairs. The present action was for a quarter's rent, during the progress of the repairs.

There is no evidence that the defendants assented to the occupation of the premises for the purpose of rebuilding. It is clear that by the terms of the lease the defendants were not obliged to rebuild. Accidents by fire were expressly excepted. And I have as little doubt they would have been responsible for the rent during the term if the plaintiff had been content to let the building stand roofless and scarred by fire during that period. The lease contained no exoneration from the rent in case of fire. But the plaintiff, or the insurance company for her, proceeded to rebuild, — wisely perhaps, as the injury to the dismantled building from the storms would have been greater than any probable loss of rent. Having proceeded to rebuild, for her own interests quite as much as for the convenience of the tenants, and having thereby taken the possession of the demised premises to their entire exclusion, without request or even assent on their part, can she hold them for the rent? In the somewhat quaint language of Baron Gilbert, "The tenant can make no return for the thing he has not." In Magaw v. Lambert, 3 Barr, 444, it was held that "if a landlord take possession of the ruins of his premises destroyed by fire for the purpose of rebuilding, without the consent of his tenant, it is an eviction ; if with his assent, it is a rescission of the lease, and in either case the rent is suspended." I am unable to see any substantial distinction between that case and the one in hand. It is true there was a total destruction of the property in Magaw v. Lambert, and only a partial destruction here. But the partial destruction was so great that the tenant had to move. A total destruction could have done no more. But it is said here that the landlord was bound to repair. I do not so understand it. Aside from the lease, there was no duty upon her to do so, and the lease did not impose any. In no part of it does the plaintiff covenant to repair. The most that can be gathered from it is an implication that the defendants were to be allowed the cost of ordinary repairs if they saw proper to make them. Certainly all other repairs and alterations were to be at their own expense. We are of opinion that Magaw v. Lambert rules this case.
